of the claim that the rules of the defendant did not fulfil its legal obligation in the supervision of those trains under the circumstances of the case; i. e. the facts as found. The rules do not require such information to be given, because giving such information in all instances involving like conditions would tend to danger, rather than to safety. A railroad corporation, in operating its road as a quasi public highway, is engaged in a business dangerous to human life, and is exercising for its private benefit a franchise granted by the state, on condition that it transport such members of the public as have lawful occasion to use the highway with every precaution for their safety that public policy, as fixed by legislation or recognized by adjudication, requires. For these reasons, the law imposes upon the corporation a duty to use such precautions. That duty it owes to each person lawfully on its trains; and this, independently of any spe-tracks is not one of the ordinary risks incident to the business in which Lafferty, the brakeman, was engaged."

In the same case the question whether or not the employment of only one watchman to perform that duty, where he is also required to wipe the engines and put them in proper order for service the next day is a reasonable precaution, was held to be one for the jury.

See also Hewitt v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. (1887) 67 Mich. 61, 11. d. supra.

c. Rules to obviate injury from the sudden starting of railway cars.

In an action to recover damages for the death of a workman, who, while engaged in unloading gravel from a car, was thrown off by the sudden movement of the car, as to which he received no warning from the company's representative who ordered the movement, it is error to reject evidence going to prove that a railroad company was guilty of negligence in not having adopted a proper system for giving warning to its employees under such circumstances. Campbell v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1885) 35 Hun, 506.

A coal company which adopts a system of bumping an empty car against a car which has been loaded with coal to start the latter along without special warning to the employee engaged in loading the car, or general rules affording an assurance of protection, is liable for injury to an employee caused thereby. Wenona Coal Co. v. Holmquist (1893) 51 Ill. App. 507.

d. Rules regulating the switching of cars.

A railroad company is under the duty of prescribing definite rules for the making of flying switches. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Taylor (1873) 69 Ill. 461, 18 Am. Rep. 628.

An averment that the defendant negligently omitted to provide rules, signals, or systems in cases of flying switches, or of shunting or kicking cars, states a cause of action. Reagan v. St. Louis, K. & N. W. R. Co. (1887) 93 Mo. 343. There the defendant contended that the joining of the cars for the purposes and in the manner described in the petition was so common, necessary, and frequent, especially in the case of freight trains, that it could not be said to involve any extraordinary risk. But the court said: "We do not agree to the proposition. It is certainly a complex business requiring care, and must be dangerous if not done under proper regulations, at least so far as 43 L. R. A.

other servants are concerned, whose business requires them to be in and out of the cars, liable to be jolted. In these cases of making a flying switch, and of shunting, or kicking of cars, it is feasible and perfectly proper to have some rules and regulations to warn persons liable to be injured."

In Davis v. Staten Island Rapid Transit R. Co. (1896) 1 App. Div. 178, where the injury was caused by several cars running through an open switch on to a siding and coming into collision with other cars standing there, it was held that a railroad company performs its duty to its employees in regard to the opening and closing of switches, by promulgating a rule requiring conductors to look after the switches used by their engines. The court said: "Rule 132, if faithfully executed by the conductor, was ample to provide against such an accident as caused the death of Davis." It imposed upon conductors of trains the duty of looking after the switches. All that could be required from the company was that the rule should impose upon some of the employees the duty of seeing that the switches were closed. That is all that the respondent contends for. If the rule had provided, in the form suggested by the respondent's counsel, that the person who opened the switch should close it, it would in that form have constituted no greater safeguard against danger than the rule in force. The duty would have rested on an individual, just as the present rule imposes it, and it could have been neglected and omitted with as much ease as it was neglected in the instance before us. The proximate cause of the accident was not due to the failure of the defendant to make a proper rule, but to the neglect of a duty imposed by the defendant upon Conductor Sherman. For this neglect the defendant was not liable."

e. Rules as to the manner of loading railway cars.

In Bushby v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1887) 107 N. Y. 374, the defendant was held liable on the ground that it had established no system with regard to the use of side stakes on flat cars, and that it was not absolved from liability merely by reason of the fact that the station agent had, according to his custom, made a casual inspection to see if the load had been properly placed.

In Ford v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1891) 124 N. Y. 493, 12 L. R. A. 454, the same subject underwent an elaborate discussion, the court saying: "In the case before us it was clearly cial duty arising from a contract of carriage or employment. McAdam v. Central R. & Electric Co. 67 Conn. 445, 447. Each person lawfully on a train has a right to the protection of such precaution, and is entitled to damages for any injury done him in violation of this right. In holding that the rules for the supervision of trains under conditions like those attending the trains in question fulfilled the legal duty of the defendant in this respect, and that public policy does not require these rules to prescribe giving telegraphic information in the manner claimed, we necessarily hold that giving such information to these particular trains on the day specified is not a precaution required by public policy, and is not a duty imposed upon the defendant by law, and therefore a failure to give such information did not violate any legal right of the plaintiff's intestate.

But the claim is made that the conditions the duty of the defendant to adopt some system for the loading of lumber upon open cars that would have regard for the safety, not only of the servants and those traveling over its roads, but to the safety of all persons who should be in the vicinity of its cars. The importance and extent of the business and the manifest danger from the falling of heavy sticks of timber from the cars, required this. But there was no rule on the subject. The only rule shown to exist had no particular reference to lumber more than any other freight, and it expressed nothing more than the obligation which the law put upon the corporation, viz.: to take due care that freight was safely loaded and should not fall from the car. But method or system as to loading lumber, there was none. Having furnished a good car and stakes that might be used, the manner of loading lumber was left to the judgment and discretion of its agents and servants. It was not sufficient for the defendant to show that its employees knew that the rule I have quoted applied to lumber, and also knew that the general usage required it to be staked, and that stakes were furnished and available to the men in the particular case before us. All this may be assumed to be true, and yet the fact exists that the use of the stakes was not enjoined upon the servants by any rule of the defendant or by any instruction ever given them. Having furnished the car and the stakes, it was left to the judgment and discretion of the foreman whether to use the stakes or not, and in this particular instance they were not used for the reason that they supposed the lumber would stay on the car over the short distance it was to be carried. And it is because of the failure of the defendant to require the use of the stakes in all cases that the neglect of its servants in this case is imputed to it. There was no rule, and the only method or system was such as the foreman in each particular case should deem the safe and proper one to pursue."

1. Rules as to the operation of trains by schedules or special orders.

1. Duty as to trainmen.

It is obvious that employees operating trains will be in constant danger of injury unless they have some reasonable means of knowing at what time they are to look for particular trains at various places along the line, and that this condition cannot be satisfied unless the movement of the trains upon each division of the road is attended trains 474 and 1411 differed essentially from the conditions in general attending trains moving in the same direction, and differed so essentially as to constitute an exceptional case or emergency, unprovided for by the general rules, and of a character so peculiar to itself as to throw upon the defendant or its vice principal, the train despatcher, the duty of acting, in view of all these exceptional circumstances, as a man of ordinary prudence should act; that the trial court has found that the train despatcher did not so act; and that such a finding can never be reviewed by this court. This, in truth, is the real ground of the judgment, and the very gist of the question before us. We think the conditions attending trains 474 and 1411 did not differ essentially from those in general attending trains moving in the same direction, and did not create an exceptional case or emergency unprovided for by the rules; and that the finding of such controlled by a single person at some convenient point, issuing his directions by telegraph according to a definite system which rests partly upon fixed timetables arranged beforehand and promulgated to the employees affected, and partly upon special orders adopted to meet emergencies for which the timetables have not adequately provided.

It is the duty of a railroad company "to use ordinary care and prudence in making and publishing . . . sufficient and necessary rules for the safe running of its trains." Cooper v. Central R. Co. (1876) 44 Iowa, 134; S. P. Lewis v. Seifert (1887) 116 Pa. 628; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Camp (1895) 31 U. S. App. 213, 65 Fed. Rep. 952, 13 C. C. A. 233.

"A railroad company is bound to regulate the time and manner of running its trains, so as to avoid collisions, and to enable all its servants to know when a train may be expected, and thus avoid danger." Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 693, quoted in Reagan v. St. Louis, K. & N. W. R. Co. (1887) 93 Mo. 348.

The duty of a railroad company to make and enforce regulations for the safety of its servants embraces the duty of knowing where its trains are, and of giving such orders as are reasonably necessary to protect the trainmen. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Smith (1890) 78 Tex. 611.

But "the law does not require a railroad company to direct the movement of its trains by orders from the train despatcher alone, nor does the law require it to adopt any particular form of orders, or any particular system for communicating them; but a company has the right to direct the movement of its trains by train orders alone, or by train orders and signals, or by signals alone, or by time card alone." Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Kanaley (1888) 39 Kan. 1.

In Wright v. New York C. R. Co. (1858) 28 Barb. 80, the question presented was whether it was negligence to require or permit approaching trains to reach a certain station at the same moment. The court said: "This was a question of fact to be solved by experience in running trains. If there is no difficulty in stopping the train at the proper place, and no danger of running by at any time, including the night, then timing the trains in this manner would not be negligence, assuming, of course, that the up train should run on to the side track. But if experience shows that there is danger, especially in a dark night, of the down train running by the east switch, then it would be gross emergency by the trial court is an inference from the special facts found reviewable by this court. The conditions in general attending trains moving in the same direction under the rules, without telegraphic information of their relative position, includes: All trains, regular and extra, made up in all ways, even to a single engine; trains off their regular time, way freights being commonly behind time; stopping places for trains which are used only occasionally and not at regular intervals; trains moving at all times of day and night, and in all conditions of weather and atmosphere; trains moving at various rates of relative speed. The special facts found from which, apparently, the inference of an exceptional case or emergency is drawn, are the following: Train 474 consisted of an engine pushing a snow plow. Train 1411 was upward of an hour behind its schedule time. Train 1411 stopped to attach three freight cars at Kent

Furnace, which is merely a siding where freight trains stop occasionally and at irregular intervals. The rear train, when in motion, moved at a faster rate of speed than the forward train. The day was very cold, and the snow plow threw snow considerably, rendering it difficult for the lookout stationed on the snow plow to see ahead. Just before the accident, the plow was not throwing much snow, and the lookout could see. We think the conditions shown by these special facts, considered by themselves or in connection with all the special facts found, are within the conditions in general attending trains moving in the same direction; do not constitute an exceptional case or emergency unprovided for by the general rules; and did not throw upon the defendant or its train despatcher the special duty of keeping the conductors of those trains informed by telegraph of their relative position. No other inference can be legally drawn from the negligence to provide for the arrival of the trains at the same moment, as there would be great danger of a collision."

No inference of negligence on the part of a railroad company towards its employees arises from its running two trains five minutes apart with orders to pass at a given place. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Leeper (1895) 60 Ill. App. 194.

When schedules are departed from in the operation of trains such orders should be issued by the company as will afford reasonable protection to the trainmen. Lewis v. Selfert (1887) 116 Pa. 628.

"A railroad company," as was observed in a recent West Virginia case, "having prepared and promulgated its schedule, it must adhere to it, and if it makes a change or violates such schedule, it is its positive duty to notify all who may be affected thereby of such change. When, in contravention of its schedule, it sends a 'wild engine' over its track unexpectedly, it is in duty bound to warn all its employees who are rightfully on and using the track about its business, whether in charge of engine, train, or handcar, of the change in the schedule, and if it intrusts this duty to others, by bell, whistle, or otherwise, it makes such others its vice principals to that extent, and if they fail to discharge this duty the company must answer for their negligence unless it be shown that the injured person contributed thereto. . . . The company must protect its employees from all dangers created by itself or its authorized agents or agencies which such employees cannot themselves foresee, or by the use of ordinary prudence avoid. For it must furnish them a safe place to work. To send 'wild engines' and trains without any manner of warning or precaution over tracks already rightfully occupied by other employees is negligence in the highest degree criminal, in utter disregard of human life or limb, and worthy of the severest penalties the law can possibly inflict; and it is made less criminal by the degree of precaution taken to give the necessary warning, and only becomes excusable when the measures adopted are sufficient to protect such employees from threatened danger, provided they are free from fault themselves." Turner v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. (1895) 40 W. Va. 675.

The adoption and promulgation of rules permitting regular trains to be converted into extra trains running without a schedule, and requiring trains of the latter class to take a side track at least five minutes before the arrival of any schedule train at the last station to which it is safe for the extra train to run, exonerates the company from liability for the death of an engineer of a schedule train from a collision between it and such extra train running ahead of its ordinary schedule, owing to the fact that the rule as to the side tracking has not been observed by his conservants in charge of the latter train. Evanville & T. H. R. Co. v. Tohill (1895) 143 Ind. 50. The court said: "The special verdict before us not only fails to find that the appellant had no rule by which the operatives of extra trains were to so run as to protect regular trains from collision, but it is, as we have seen, expressly found that the company maintained rules under which regular trains might be converted into extra trains; that trains of an inferior class should clear the right of way for trains of superior class; by taking a side track at least five minutes before the arrival of any schedule train at the last station to which it was safe for such inferior train to run; that No. 19 wholly failed to act in accordance with said rules, and did not take the side track at Pursell, where No. 20 could have passed in safety, but continued beyond said station to where the collision occurred. Thus it appears that obedience to said rules by No. 19 would have made the passage of No. 20, running by the schedule, entirely safe."

A jury is justified in finding that a railroad company is guilty of negligence in failing to promulgate a rule providing that, in cases where it is desired to give to a wild train the right of way over a regular train, and for that purpose to hold the latter at a certain station, the detaining message received by the operator shall be shown to the conductor or engineer of the regular train, and that a communication shall be sent back from them to the effect that they have received and understood the despatch. Sheehan v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1883) 61 N. Y. 332. There the facts as stated by the court were as follows: The trains which came into collision were denominated on the schedule as Nos. 50 and 337. The former was due at Cayuga from the west on the day of the accident at 4:40 P. M. and was appointed to leave for the eastern points at 4:45. "At 4:46 the superintendent of the road telegraphed from Rochester to the conductor and engineer of the latter train while at Auburn." "Wild cat to Cayuga, regardless of No. 50, 12, G. H. B." It was shown that the numeral "12" at the end of the order, means "Answer how understood," and "G. H. B." were the initials of the superin-facts. A conclusion from conceded facts drawn by a court in the exercise of its legal judgment, and controlled by the assumption that two and two make five, is just as truly an error in law as if it were controlled by the assumption that an ordinary breach of contract calls for exemplary damages. In the present case the error is not of this palatable kind. As a matter of first impression, there is room for hesitation and doubt; but, upon full consideration, it seems to us that the legal inference is clear, and that, in reaching its conclusion, the court below, unless influenced by the error involved in its inference that the rules adopted were inadequate, has failed to apply to the facts those settled principles of sound reasoning whose recognition and application are termed the soul of the law.

The plaintiff relies mainly upon the recent case of Sprague v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 68 Conn. 345, 37 L. R. A. 638. In that case tendent of the road. No similar notice, however, was given to the conductor and engineer of train "50" to hold it at Cayuga, and it was in consequence of this omission that the collision occurred. "The rule of the defendant then in force . . . required this order [such as that sent to the conductor and engineer of train 337] to be first copied by the operator at Auburn in an order book provided for that purpose, and repeated back to the despatcher 'to be sure' (as the rule says) 'it is correct.' After receiving from the despatcher a message 'O. K.' the operator was required to make a copy on a blank for the conductor or engineer, the persons addressed, 'who will' (the rule requires), 'after comparing it with the book and seeing it is correct, sign their names to the book prefixed by the numeral "13." Thereupon the operator must transmit the "13" accompanied by the signatures of the persons addressed, to the despatcher. The numeral "13" signifies 'we understand' and is followed by a repetition of the order. In this instance [the case under discussion] the conductor and engineer of '337' answered 'We understand: wild cat to Cayuga regardless of No. 50.'" This rule was held to be perfectly adequate. "There was" as the court remarked, "full and perfect communication between the parties; nothing was left to the discretion of either the operator or the trainmen, nor was either permitted to exercise an independent judgment as to the meaning of the order or its delivery. Everything was precise and notice brought home to the persons to be affected." The omission to send a similar notification to the conductor and engineer of train 50 was then commented upon as follows: "Having ordered '337' to travel on the time of '50,' the defendant was bound to exercise every reasonable precaution that train '50' should not leave Cayuga before the arrival of '337.' No reason is given for not communicating with the conductor and engineer of train '50' before it reached Cayuga, or at least on its arrival there. The defendant annulled its timetable—made it imperative upon '337' to move in spite of the prearranged right of '50,' and not only omitted as to '50' the exceedingly proper and wise conditions on which alone '337' was permitted to obey, but failed to send any communication whatever to No. '50.' Its omission to do so not only defeated all previous precautions, but converted them into means of destruction. The object should have been to prevent train '50' from running according to the timetable. 42 L. R. A.

the plaintiff's intestate was a servant of the defendant, and was killed in a collision between his train and the train moving in the opposite direction, caused by the misconduct of the conductor of the opposite train. The complaint charged the defendant with liability on account of its violation of its duty as master in employing the conductor at fault to run this train, knowing him to be incompetent. Any other violation of duty on the part of the defendant was inseparably entangled with this, the real ground of the action. The main question considered was one of law as to the use of the admissions of a demurrer overruled upon a hearing in damages. Aside from this, our decision turned wholly upon the question whether, upon the facts as stated, we could find error in the conclusions of the trial court that the conductor was incompetent; that the defendant knew or ought to have known that he was incompetent, and with this knowl-

To secure certainty in that respect, the defendant should have so communicated with its conductor and engineer that these servants would understand the object. It is plain that the mode of communicating, already adopted with '337' was ample and effectual. Two parties only were involved, the master and its servants upon the train, and the only hazard was disobedience or forgetfulness on the part of those servants. In the method adopted another event was introduced, upon which the first was made dependent. Instead of communicating with the engineer and conductor the defendant communicated with a third person—the telegraph operator [at Cayuga] . . . for orders. The train was made subject to his will, and the object in view became dependent upon his memory, and his faithfulness in obeying the order, and the probabilities of its attainment were thereby lessened. It cannot be said, therefore, as matter of law, that the defendant so dealt with the problem before it as not to expose the plaintiff—its servant—to perils against which he might have been guarded by proper diligence on its part, and, as matter of fact, the jury might well find that it did not take such reasonable care to protect him from accident as the exigencies of the situation required. Indeed, the evidence shows that he was needlessly put in a place where injury was made inevitable, by the direct interference of the defendant. It is one thing for the orders of the master to go by report or hearsay to the servant, and quite another when they are received by him directly and without an interverner. In the first they are liable to be conceived wrong, and repeated untruly, as was the case in this instance, while in the last such mistake is at least improbable. The law does not exact absolute certainty, but when life is at stake it demands that care shall be taken to provide as far as possible against all contingencies, and whether the importance of a right understanding of the order, actually given, as to train '50,' required that one mode of communication rather than another should be adopted, was for the jury to say. Among other facts they could consider that the effect of starting train '50' on its prescribed time was as well known to the defendant when it directed '337' to move, as it was after the collision. That event came from no cause of the existence of which it was ignorant, but from one which it might have controlled. The defendant had created the exigency, and was bound, in some practicable way, to adjust the running time of train '50' to it, and edge placed him in charge of the train where his incompetency caused the injury. Here the inference of legal liability from the conclusions of fact as stated was unquestioned. The finding shows that these conclusions were not inferred from subordinate specific facts found, but depended in part upon the weighing of evidence and credit given to witnesses. This sufficiently appears in the opinion, but more clearly in the record, which is not printed in the report. We held that such conclusions were plainly conclusions of fact, within the province of the trial court. No question was presented as to a conclusion from specific facts found where such conclusion is clearly a non sequitur. The defendant claimed that the question of its violation of a legal duty, by reason of the insufficiency of its railroad management, was a pure question of law. In referring to this claim, the opinion holds the question to be irrelevant to the case in hand, and that, for the consequences of the omission of any reasonable act tending thereto, it was liable. It was not enough to tell Kieffer to hold the train. The duty of holding it devolved upon the defendant, and its breach was not excused by showing that it would have been held if Kieffer had performed his duty."

In Dana v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1883) 92 N. Y. 639, involving the same facts as the case just cited, the plaintiff was nonsuited, and the court of appeals set aside the nonsuit for reasons similar to those which had led them to sustain a verdict for the plaintiff in the earlier case. A similar ruling under similar facts was made in Sutherland v. Troy & B. R. Co. (1891) 125 N. Y. 737.

Evidence that a train despatcher, when he required trains to run under special orders, failed to insist on receiving from the local operator to whom his orders were transmitted an assurance that the additional precautions required by the rules in such cases for the prevention of collisions had been taken is sufficient to support a verdict for the plaintiff. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Camp (1895) 31 U. S. App. 213, 65 Fed. Rep. 952, 13 C. C. A. 233.

In Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. McLallen (1876) 84 Ill. 109, the defendant's assistant superintendent telegraphed to the conductor of an extra freight train to leave a certain station and run to the next, ahead of a passenger train then due by the time-table, and the conductor, in complying, was killed by a collision of the two trains. The conductor of the passenger train was not notified of such telegraphic order, and did not restrain speed. It was held that the deceased had a right to expect that the passenger train was behind time, and that his administrator was entitled to recover. The court said: "We think the evidence warranted the jury in coming to the conclusion that necessary prudence in such matters required that . . .

[the freight train] should not have been sent out under the circumstances, without the communication of an order to the passenger train regulating its speed so as to have insured safety against collision; that in this there was negligence on the part of the company in not having a rule requiring such an order in such exigency; or if this be a proper matter to be left to the care of the assistant superintendent in such case, it was want of prudence on the part of the assistant superintendent to order [the freight train] forward . . . without making it certain that the passenger train had an order in 43 L. R. A.

if the principle claimed is sound, it cannot control emergencies which no system of rules can anticipate and provide for. It is in this connection that the language specially relied on, relative to emergencies, is used. The language must be read in this connection, and in view of the circumstances of the case then before us. So read, the language does not establish any principle inconsistent with the views expressed in the present case.

After stating the specific facts found and the conclusions from those facts (which statement is strictly a part of the judgment, specially setting forth the facts on which it is founded), the finding states that the defendant claimed, as a matter of law, "that, upon the facts in evidence, the defendant, having operated its trains under suitable rules and regulations, and having properly equipped said trains, had performed its entire duty towards plaintiff's intestate, and the law imposed no higher degree of care some mode restraining its speed and regulating its movements so as to guard with certainty against collision. . . . It seems more than probable that, if the statement of the operator had been properly understood by the conductor of No. 10, the collision would have been avoided. The liability of mistakes in the delivery of messages by telegraph was known to the company. A rule was in force requiring all orders to be repeated back to the main office and that the repetition should be approved and indorsed 'O. K.' before an order should be acted upon. We cannot say that the jury were wrong in saying that a failure to send such an order in this case was culpable negligence. If so, the negligence consists in the failure of the company to make a rule requiring this in such cases, or the negligence was that of the assistant superintendent to send such an order in the exercise of the discretion left in his hands in the absence of such rule."

Whether a system of operating trains, under which, where trains of the same class are going the same way, neither is notified of the movements of the other, although the one following is to make faster time than the other and must overtake it, is consistent with due care, is a question for the jury. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Neer (1888) 81 Ill. App. 126.

A general rule requiring freight trains to "approach all stations under full control, expecting to find trains using main tracks within station limits" has been considered far more certain to secure employees against rear collisions than a rule requiring the train despatcher to notify each train of the position of those going in the same direction. Enright v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. (1892) 93 Mich. 409.

This case was approved in NOLAN v. NEW YORK, N. H. & H. R. Co. where it is stated that the code of rules under review was substantially the same as that adopted by 90 per cent of the railroad companies of the United States.

A case in which a snow plow is at work behind another train does not present conditions so different from those which in general attend the movement of trains in the same direction on the same track that the company is bound to provide for them, as for an exceptional emergency not covered by its general rules, and to see that the conductors of the two trains are specially notified by telegraph of the relative positions. NOLAN v. NEW YORK, N. H. & H. R. Co.

A railroad company is under the duty of seeing that, at the last telegraph station which ex-than that exercised by it;" and that the court did not pass upon this claim "except to find as a matter of fact, from the evidence submitted, that the defendant did not exercise ordinary care in the operation of these trains, and that ordinary care required additional precautions, by way of special orders, to those provided in the rules for the reasonably safe operation of these trains." The trial court did not err in refusing to sustain this claim of law in the terms in which it is phrased, but it did err in inferring from the specific facts found that it was the legal duty of the defendant to give the telegraphic information mentioned; and, for the purposes of review, this inference is not a conclusion from the evidence, which the finding shows had exhausted itself in producing the conclusions of fact from which the inference was drawn. This error is not raised by the assignment specifying error in the refusal to sustain the claim of law, but is raised by the assignments specifying the reasons why the facts specially set forth do not support the judgment founded upon them. The only function in this respect of that part of the finding reciting the claim of law made is to show that the questions as to the legal inferences from the facts found were distinctly raised at the trial, and decided adversely to the appellant's claims. The real position of the plaintiff is that the trial court has found that the defendant failed to exercise ordinary care under the circumstances of this case; that the legal liability of the defendant consists in negligence; that the failure to exercise such care is negligence; that negligence is a question of fact entirely within the province of a trial court; and therefore the law determining the legal liability of the defendant was properly found as a fact within the exclusive province of a trial court to determine. We have already indicated the mistake involved in this posi-tra trains pass before entering upon a section of the road upon which a construction train is at work, they shall, either by the promulgation of appropriate rules, or by special orders issued as occasion may require, receive a notification that the construction train is ahead of them, and a caution to keep a sharp look out. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Young (1887) 28 Ill. App. 115.

Where the rules for the operation of trains on 58,000 miles of railroad are framed on the theory that it is more conducive to safety to require the men at all times to look out for, and protect themselves against, other trains without notice of their whereabouts and movements, than it is to undertake to give them such notice, a company which has adopted such rules is entitled to an instruction that they are neither unreasonable nor insufficient, although three competent witnesses have testified that such notice should be given. LITTLE ROCK & M. R. Co. v. BARRY.

A special order that a train which is behind time is to follow another train running on its regular schedule at an interval of time, the minimum of which is fixed by the general practice of the road, raises a clearly defined duty on the part of the men on the following train to look out for the one in front. For a collision between the trains, therefore, the company cannot be held liable on the theory that special directions to be on the lookout should have been given to the crews of both trains. Nor, if the interval between the two trains at the last station passed before the collision exceeded that allowed by the rules, can negligence be predicated of the omission to order the agent at that station to hold the following train. As that was in its proper position, there would have been no reason for holding it. Kennelly v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (1895) 166 Pa. 60.

The extent of the duty to provide for the prevention of collisions in the special emergency created by a snow storm was considered in Niles v. New York C. & H. R. Co. (1897) 14 App. Div. 58, where it was held that the fact that a rule requiring that, in foggy weather, when a train cannot be seen at 300 yards, the trackman shall suspend ordinary work and patrol the track acting as signalman to warn trains of danger, had not been extended so as to make it applicable during the existence of unusual snowstorms, does not justify an inference by the jury of negligence by the company rendering it liable for injury resulting from the fact that a train ran past a signal station and struck another which was standing just beyond it. It was contended by plaintiff's counsel that the same necessity for patrolling a track arose when there was a severe storm as when there was a dense fog, and that it was for the jury to say whether the company had not been negligent in failing to provide a rule by which the trackman should be required to act as signalman in both cases. The court, however, after pointing out that during snowstorms the clearing of the track from snow was a matter of paramount importance, and demanded the particular attention of the trackmen, proceeded as follows: "The doctrine imposing liability upon railroad companies for failure to adopt particular rules, the necessity for which was not apparent to them, should not be unduly or unreasonably extended. And since the company has a paramount interest in protecting its property from injury or destruction, and also in avoiding all liability for damages to employees and passengers, and the officers of the company deemed this system of signals and rules for the management and control of the movements of trains to be fully adequate for all purposes, these considerations must have some weight in determining whether the omission to promulgate a particular rule constitutes a neglect of duty, in not being able to foresee certain contingencies. It is true that the trackmen could have been relieved from the work of clearing the tracks by the employment of other men for that purpose, or by the assignment of other employees; but it is significant that Niles himself, an old and experienced employee, and knowing of the dangers to be apprehended from the storm more fully than others, deemed it unnecessary for the protection of his train, though much impeded by the snow, to adopt the precaution of dropping or sending back a trainman to warn any train that might be following. . . . And yet is it urged that the company itself was negligent in not requiring a precaution of that character during a severe snowstorm. Evidently he believed that he was amply protected by the existing system of signals and the rules governing the action, management, and control of any train that might be coming in his rear, and that the engineer would fairly observe them. He supposed, undoubtedly, that the tower signal would protect him, and that the engineer would not attempt to run past it, and especially at a good rate of speed. He relied upon the assumption that the towerman at the Verona tion; but it is a mistake so often made, and so readily fallen into through the use of words expressing different ideas without due attention to the particular idea the word, as used, is intended to express, that we deem it advisable to restate the ground of our decision with special reference to the confusion of ideas that leads to such mistakes.

We are dealing with a practical question of procedure; i. e., Upon the process or record before us, what are the alleged errors that this court can review? The answer is briefly and broadly expressed in the saying: "Errors in law can be reviewed; errors in fact cannot." As we have seen, "fact" is a word of many meanings, and the saying is deceptive unless we keep in mind the particular meaning attached to the word as here used. We have explained that "fact," as here used, denotes those conclusions reached by the trier directly, from sifting testimony, weighing evidence and passing on the credit of witnesses (conclusions which are not within the jurisdiction of this court, and cannot be reviewed or retried on appeal, whatever the process may be), and that it does not denote those inferences drawn by the trial court from the facts ascertained and settled by it as described (inferences which always involve, to some degree, the application of rules and principles of law to adjudicated facts, and may be reviewed whenever the legal process properly presents an alleged error, and we can see that the inference as to which error is alleged is in truth one of this nature). The word, as here used, may possibly have a little broader meaning in some exceptional cases, but this is immaterial to the purpose in hand. We have also explained that the word "fact," as here used, must be distinguished from the same word when used to denote those matters within the province of a jury. In the latter sense it often denotes the whole question of legal tower would observe the rules, and hold the following train at least ten minutes after the departure of his own. A rule easily followed by servants, and, when followed, securing safety to co-servants, is a reasonable compliance with the duty owing by the company to them."

As an employer has a right to conduct his business on the assumption that his employees will discharge a duty which he imposes upon them by his rules, a railroad company operating a single-track road cannot be held negligent in failing to promulgate a rule that the crew of a regular train shall be notified of the position of an irregular train, where there is a rule in force which requires employees in charge of irregular trains to keep them out of the way of regular trains, and forbids, under any circumstance, the occupation of the main track by irregular trains within ten minutes of the schedule time of a regular train. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Becker (1896) 146 Ind. 202.

One court has gone to the length of adducing the doctrine of assumption of risks as a ground for relieving a railroad company of the duty of notifying the men on one train of the movements of another train which had abandoned its schedule time.

In Reilyea v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. (1892) 112 Mo. 86, 18 L. R. A. 817, it was held, without much argument, that a railroad company is not guilty of negligence in ordering a train to run ahead of schedule time without giving the conductor of the forward train notice thereof, provided this is not an unusual course and specials are to be expected at all times. The correctness of this decision appears to be more than doubtful. It virtually lays down the doctrine that a railroad company may without culpability cast upon trainmen the duty of guarding themselves against the approach of special trains, and there is great difficulty in conceding this to be good railroad practice. The accident in question was proximately due to the fact that a section of the forward train was left standing on a grade while some of the cars were being switched on to the siding, and owing to the negligence of a brakeman in not securing them properly got under way and running down the incline came into collision with the train which was ahead of its proper time. The actual decision, therefore, may be referred to the doctrine of common employment, and this seems to be the sole ground on which it can be based.

An instruction stating the duty of a railway company in regard to the promulgation of rules 43 L. R. A.

calculated to secure the safe operation of its trains is not improper, where the complaint alleges generally that the company's mode of operating these trains when the plaintiff was injured was negligent. Cooper v. Central R. Co. (1876) 44 Iowa, 184.

2. Duty as to employees working on or near tracks.

The manner in which the principles which dominate the above cases have been applied where the employees needing protection are persons whose work brings them into positions where they are liable to be struck by passing trains is shown by the following decisions.

A railroad company engaged in preparing or altering its tracks, so as to render them dangerous, owes the duty to its trainmen of providing rules and regulations to protect them against such danger. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Topliff (1895) 2 Ohio Dec. 522. This duty includes the duty of providing the repairmen with adequate means of keeping themselves informed as to time at which trains will arrive. Thus, where a railroad company employs men to make repairs to the track without interfering with the running of the regular trains the hours for which were well known, it is the duty of the company to see that the men are furnished with an accurate timepiece; and if there is evidence that the foremen were left to procure and regulate their own watches without any attention to the subject on the part of the company's officers, the question whether the company was negligent is for the jury. Matteson v. New York C. R. Co. (1892) 62 Barb. 364.

It is the duty of a railroad company to notify employees working on or near its tracks of a change in the running time of its trains. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Whittington (1878) 80 Gratt. 805.

In the absence of any rules requiring section men to guard against irregular trains, or of any care to notify them of the approach of such a train, proof of the death of a section man, while going with a hand car on a special order, through a collision with a wild train, creates a prima facie case of negligence on the part of the company. Cincinnati, I. St. L. & C. R. Co. v. Lang (1888) 118 Ind. 579. The court said: "It [the defendant company] was bound to know the nature of the service it had ordered him to perform, the place where it was required to be performed, and, with this knowledge, it had no right to put him in peril by sending out liability, which, by the law of jury trials, must in certain cases be settled by a general verdict; and so far as it may be used, in connection with jury trials, to denote inferences from evidence as distinguished from inferences from adjudicated facts, it is, of necessity, used with an imperfect or uncertain meaning. The trial judge, in instructing a jury upon inferences of law, cannot ordinarily know what the inferences from evidence may be, and in all such cases must give his instructions hypothetically, and is limited in this by the consideration that the law of jury trial forbids his giving instructions upon the law in such manner as in truth to invade the province of the jury in drawing inferences from evidence. Whereas, in a trial to the court, the judge first adjudicates all the facts (i. e. inferences drawn from the evidence), and puts upon record those facts. The inference from those facts of legal liability, or of the conclusions essential to legal liability, present to us, in a lawful process for that purpose, the questions of law, free from the limitations which hamper a trial judge in instructing a jury upon the same question. And it must be remembered that while there is in theory a distinction of a fundamental nature between the judicial function exercised in ascertaining facts from evidence, and that exercised in applying to conceded facts the rules of law for the purpose of inferring logical conclusions and legal liability, yet the two functions are essential to the one judicial act of passing judgment, and the precise line of distinction has little, if any, practical importance, except when the exercise of judicial power is divided between two branches of one court, as in a trial by jury, or is divided for the purpose of establishing an appellate court with a jurisdiction pertaining to the judicial function exercised in applying to conceded facts the rules of law, as in an irregular train without in some way giving notice that its train had been sent out, or by so regulating its speed and management as to prevent injury to those engaged in the service required of them by the special order. By the order of the appellant the special duty in which the intestate was engaged was enjoined upon him, and having thus required him to perform the duty, it had no right to send over its road a train which the employees, engaged as was the intestate, had no reason to expect would make obedience to the special order unusually perilous. It may be true that the intestate was bound to know of the danger from regular trains, running according to time tables or rules, and yet not be true that he was bound to know that a wild or irregular train would be run over the road, and so run as to bring about a collision. The peril from the wild train he was not bound to anticipate, for the reason that, from the assurance impliedly contained in the special order assigning a designated duty to him, he had a right to assume, in the absence of countervailing facts, that, if he himself exercised care and diligence, the company would not send out a wild train without exercising ordinary care and diligence to prevent injury to him while traveling in the usual way to the place where he was called by the duty assigned him, and while performing that duty at the place designated."

The operation of the principles upon which the foregoing cases were decided is largely qualified by the doctrine that, as regards some employees, the fact that they have received a general warning or have in some other way acquired knowledge that they are to be exposed to constant danger from the irregular movements of trains, is sufficient to let in defense of assumption of risks as respects the general condition of the work, or of contributory negligence as respects the servant's failure to govern his conduct as a prudent man would have done in view of the possible perils to which the rules have called his attention. Thus it has been held not to be negligence on the part of a railroad company to send out a wild train without previous warning to a gang of section men, where its rules, known to such men, provide that the train preceding the wild trains shall carry a red signal, but that if it is impossible for those running the wild train to see that the train preceding carries such signals they must run at a slow rate of speed around all curves. Shepard v. Boston & M. R. Co. (1893) 158 Mass. 174. 43 L. R. A.

There, Holmes, J., after quoting the rules mentioned, proceeded thus: "Stopping at this point it is plain that the defendant had a right to send trains over its tracks at whatever times it saw fit, and the rules on their face gave notice that it intended to exercise its right. The rules also gave notice on their face that while the signal ordered would be a warning when it was seen, in some cases no such warning could be given, and therefore that all persons interested must look out for themselves. The moment a man has notice that a train may come along a track without warning at any hour, if he is run down by such a train when he is traveling on the track the other way, it is impossible for him to escape the imputation of negligence merely by showing that such trains were few and the chance of their coming small. Furthermore the plaintiff implies that they knew the train was coming by his testimony that they did not know when it was coming. On the other hand, despatching a wild train without signal is not necessarily negligence in the defendant."

Compare Criswell v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. (1888) 30 W. Va. 798, where the correctness of the same doctrine appears to have been assumed by the court, though the case really turned upon whether a foreman held to be a vice principal had neglected any of the duties imposed upon him by the rules. (See X. infra.)

In Olson v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. (1888) 38 Minn. 117, where the plaintiff was traveling on a handcar which came into collision with a snowplow it was held that he assumed the risk of injury from this cause. The court said: "The evidence tended to show that a quarter or more of the trains sent out are special or extra,—despatched without notice,—and that such is the uniform practice of the defendant; and that during the month of February, 1884, to the date of the accident, such trains over that section of the road averaged one or more each day, and also that the exigencies of the business and the impracticability of notifying section men in advance, owing to the nature of their work, extending over miles of track, and often remote from telegraph stations, obviously rendered it necessary to dispense with notice, and to adopt the present uniform practice in conformity with rule 70 (i. e., that no notice would be given of the passage of extra trains). And this fact itself, and the nature of the employment, would naturally the correction of errors in law by this court. In such cases the necessary line of division, although based on a natural distinction in the character of judicial power exercised for the different purposes, may become, as in this case, a practical question of procedure.

Again, it must be remembered that the rule defining the erroneous conclusions of a trial court which this court can review is, and must be, of universal application. There is not a different rule for each class of actions. Actions in tort as well as actions in contract, actions to recover damages resulting from intentional wrongs, as well as to recover damages resulting from wrongs not intentional, are all subject to the same rule; and actions of tort or contract, wherein questions of negligence arise, are subject to the same rule. The mistake in question is largely due to overlooking this, in the confusion caused by a failure to distinguish, when the word "negligence" is used, the precise one of its many meanings intended to be expressed through the particular use. "Negligence" is frequently used to express the cause of action where a party seeks redress for injury from an unintentional wrongful act. In the nomenclature of the common law, this is called a "cause of action enforceable by the action of trespass on the case,"—"trespass," as signifying a passing over or beyond our right, i. e., a transgression or wrongful act (Bacon Abbr. ad verb.); "trespass on the case," as signifying a form of action devised to cover all cases where an actionable wrong is claimed under the particular circumstances of the case stated. "Negligence," so used, is a comparatively modern term of art, denoting a class of actions grouped under one head for the purpose of study and treatment. It covers the injury received; the act done, positive or negative; the proximate relation of the act to the injury; the legal rule of liabilsuggest the importance of extra caution on the part of the men, and a reason for the rule. We think, therefore, there was evidence for the consideration of the jury tending to prove that the deceased had notice of the usage of the company, and that it was error of the court to refuse the defendant's first request to charge the jury to the effect that, if they should find that the deceased knew of such usage and practice of the company, he could not recover."

In Turner v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. (1895) 40 W. Va. 675, also, the court implies in its argument (p. 689) that a railroad company has discharged its whole duty in regard to the protection of a section foreman traveling on a handcar, when it has expressly instructed him to be on the lookout for special trains, and, as a matter of precaution, to flag around curves and through cuts.

g. Rules prescribing means for warning employees of the proximity of moving trains or cars.

As to car-repairers see VIII. a, supra.

Cases involving the extent of a railroad company's obligation to see that means shall be provided for warning employees of the approach of trains or cars under circumstances in which time-tables are an inadequate notification, or in which it would be impracticable to regulate the movements of the trains by time-tables, turn upon considerations which are fundamentally the same as those which underlie the decisions reviewed in the preceding section, and may conveniently be grouped upon parallel lines.

Whether a railway company is negligent in omitting to provide a rule for the purpose of warning a trackman of the approach of trains where his work requires him to assume such a position that he cannot, without interrupting the work, see any considerable distance along the track, is a question for the jury. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Murphy (1893) 50 Ohio St. 135.

Evidence that a trackman was run over by a train at a place where there was a double curve rendering it impossible to see an approaching train until it was close at hand; that there were several public crossings which the trains had to cross in approaching the place; that the neighborhood was a thickly-settled one within the limits of a city; that no signal of the train's approach was given by bell or whistle either at the crossing or in approaching the curve; and that the train which caused the injury was engaged in a brisk race with another train on a parallel road, the pace maintained being, so far as appeared, in strict accord with the rules of the company,—is sufficient to take to the jury the question of the company's negligence in failing to provide regulations for the purpose of warning persons working at such places of the approach of trains. Dick v. Indianapolis, C. & L. R. Co. (1882) 38 Ohio St. 389.

A railroad company is not, as matter of law, guilty of negligence towards section hands who have occasion to travel by a handcar when it runs a train around a curve at the rate of from 25 to 32 miles an hour. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Arias (1895) 10 Tex. Civ. App. 190.

A railroad company cannot be found negligent in having failed to establish rules for the giving of notice of the approach of shunted cars in a yard where there is no evidence that such rules would be useful or feasible. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Carruthers (1896) 56 Kan. 309.

In other cases the theory of an assumption of risks has been relied on as absolving the company from liability under circumstances where strangers could have held it responsible.

Thus, a railroad company is not bound, for the protection of its car repairers when going to or from their places of work in moving cars in its freight yards, to have upon such cars a light, or man to handle it, or to require a man to precede each car to announce its approach. Crowe v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1893) 70 Hun, 37.

The court said: "Great care and precaution are required on the part of railroad companies when they are moving cars in places where the general public have a right to pass, to in some manner announce their approach; but a different rule obtains in the companies' yards, where cars are being distributed and trains made up. The employees about such yard understand the situation; they know the manner of doing the business therein, that cars frequently pass along without a notice of their approach, and they assume the risks incident to the business thus conducted. Whether the foreman left the work when it was completed or a few minutes before, is not important. It was completed when Crowe left, and he understood the situation. The men were properly protected while the work was progressing by the two lighted lanterns heretofore mentioned. It is suggested that the work was not completed until the men had arrived at the tool house with ity applicable to the case stated, and the application of that rule. The numerous definitions of "actionable negligence" attempt to state briefly and comprehensively the conditions essential to all of this group of actions. So used, "negligence" has no more relation to the question before us than if the meaning denoted were expressed in the older language of the common law,—those causes of action where the appropriate remedy is an action of trespass on the case to recover damages for an unintentional injury. Related to this meaning, and sometimes confused with it, "negligence" is used to denote the conception of moral blame or fault imputed to a person legally liable for the consequences of an unintentional act. This conception of the moral blame which should make one liable for the consequences of his acts is the foundation of our law of tort, and, in a wider sense, of our whole system of jurisprudence. In the very early stages of English law this element of moral blame, in cases where the conception seemed too subtle for the times, was overlooked, and the innocent cause of a condition resulting in injury was held liable for damages to the innocent victim. But the true theory, that moral blame is an essential element of legal wrong, was soon fully recognized, largely through the potent and unacknowledged influence of the Roman law. Dolus (i. e., injuria quam quis sciens volensque commisit) aut culpa (i. e., omnis protervitas, temeritas, inconsiderantia; dissidia, negligentia, imperitia, quibus citra dolum, cui nocitum est), as used in the Lex Aquilia, and as approximately expressed in our common law by the terms "intention or negligence," describe the two phases of the moral blame or fault essential to make the one causing damage legally liable. 2 Austin, Jur. 109. The body of our law has been developed through the application of this conception to an infinite variety of facts or their tools, and that until then they were entitled to some special protection to which they might not be entitled perhaps when engaged in other business about the yard. No reason is suggested for such a rule and none occurs to us. They were entitled when going to the tool house to the same protection and care on the part of the company to which they were entitled when moving about the yard performing their ordinary daily business."

Upon similar grounds, it has been held that the mere fact that in a railroad company's private yard, where cars are loaded and unloaded and trains made up, such cars are permitted to move along the tracks unattended by a brakeman, cannot be held negligence as matter of law, as against the company's servants employed in such yard. Kelley v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1881) 53 Wis. 74. The court said: "A court would probably be justified in declaring, as a matter of law, that it was negligence in a railroad company to permit its cars, or even a single car, to move along its track in a public place, such as a street crossing, or, perhaps, at its passenger depots, where the public are permitted to be upon and travel across its tracks, without having someone on the same to control its movements; but the question presented by this case is an entirely different question. The cars which were permitted to go along its tracks unattended, were in the private yards of the defendant, where no persons were expected to be present except its servants and agents, many of whom were present solely for the purpose of moving the cars on the tracks, without being upon the same as brakemen. If it was negligence to permit the cars to run unattended in the defendant's yard, where cars are loaded and unloaded and moved about for the purpose of making up trains, such negligence is not so apparent that a court may pronounce upon it as a matter of law. At most, it might be a fact to go to the jury upon the question of negligence."

In Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Donahue (1874) 75 Ill. 106, where a switchman was run over, the evidence showed that a watch or lookout was kept from the engine, but none from the rear car, and according to a special verdict, the train had on it the usual number of hands and none of the persons in charge was guilty of negligence in discharge of his particular duty. The question therefore was presented, whether the company was guilty of negligence in not providing rules whereby a switchman should have been kept on the rear end of the train that produced the injury. The court said: "Whatever might be the duty of the company in this regard, so far as the public are concerned, where its track crosses a public highway, we are not prepared to hold it is under any such obligation to its own employees operating trains on its own private grounds. They are presumed to contract against the hazards incident to the service, and we do not understand it is the duty of the company to place one employee on the lookout to warn others of approaching danger, and that it is necessary for them to observe due care. It is their duty without warning to observe such care. This is a part of their undertaking, and any omission is at their peril."

So, also, the supreme court of Missouri in holding that neglect of duty by a railroad company toward a section hand cannot be predicated of its failure to have a brakeman on the end of a car pushed by a switch engine in the railroad yard, pointed out that the case was distinguishable from those in which the absence of some such precaution has been held to be negligence in regard to strangers having occasion to cross the track. Loring v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. (1895) 128 Mo. 349.

Yet in Sobieski v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. (1889) 41 Minn. 169, the doctrine is laid down that, independently of the rules prescribed by the company, it owed a duty to its yard switchmen to give a signal of the movement of an engine, where such has been the custom.

And another court has declared that, "Irrespective of a statute . . . the starting or running of a switch engine in a switch yard filled with a network of tracks, upon which cars [and engines] are constantly moving, and in which yard men are at work, without the ringing of a bell or the blowing of a whistle, is evidence of negligence." Union P. R. Co. v. Elliott (1898) 54 Neb. 209.

It has also been held that the risk that an engine which is believed to be on its way to the repair shops will in a few minutes back towards the place at which a yard clerk has just alighted from it, not only without signals, but without any lookout, is not one which is assumed by such clerk. St. Louis & T. H. R. Co. v. Eggmann (1895) 60 Ill. App. 291. Here, however, the special ground relied upon is evidently the wholly unexpected nature of the occurrence. The movement of the car being quite abnormal the employee was entitled to the benefit of the general principle that he could not be said to events. It has its origin in the accepted law of ethics, and the unfolding of its meaning as a legal maxim is confided to the court. Indeed, the highest function of a judge is exercised in holding to a steady and definite course in the application of such a maxim to ascertained facts, whether their conjunction be novel or not. In the exercise of such a function, our system of jurisprudence develops under the control of fixed maxims and prior authorities. It is this control of the element of discretion inherent in the application of a general principle to each new state of facts that distinguishes the justice administered by a common-law judge from that of an oriental cadi. Whether this primary conception of moral blame is vague or not in itself, the principle of legal liability which in theory it justifies is certain. The legal liability is not wholly coincident with the moral blame. It depends upon the law, however derived; and that law consists mainly in rules of public policy defining and limiting the rights and duties pertaining to person and property. These rules are ordinarily intended to square with the highest theory of ethics,—an intention not always realized. But it is the law, and not the theory, which determines legal liability. No principle of legal liability which is, in the legal sense, uncertain,—which is derived, not from settled maxims and authority that must govern every case, but from the unrestrained will of a single man, or a dozen men, which can govern no other case,—is a legal principle. "Ubi jus incertum, ibi jus nullum." "Negligence," with the meaning under discussion, is a convenient term for denoting the conception of legal blame in a certain class of causes of action for the purpose of investigating the theory underlying the law which determines liability in such cases. It is a term more useful to the jurist, in seeking the theoretical sources of the law, have taken a risk which he had no reason to anticipate.

In Dick v. Indianapolis, C. & L. R. Co. (1882) 38 Ohio St. 389, it was thought unnecessary to consider whether the act of 1872 (69 Ohio Laws, 49) by which railroad companies were made liable in damages for injuries occasioned by a failure of the engineer to sound the whistle and ring the bell at a public crossing on the same level with its tracks, was for the protection of travelers on the public way only, or extended to persons working upon the track, and held that, even in the absence of such a statute, it was the duty of the company to make and enforce reasonable rules and regulations to guard against danger at such crossings and in dangerous places.

But in another state it has been declared that such a statute is not enacted for the protection of employees. Union P. R. Co. v. Elliott (1898) 54 Neb. 299.

So, also, the refusal of a railroad company to make a regulation requiring engineers of trains approaching a quarry to sound their whistles before reaching it, for the protection of workmen at such quarry, is not unreasonable where another rule is established requiring the workmen to give signals to approaching trains when there is any reason for slowing up or stopping the trains, and it does not appear that the proposed regulation would have afforded protection to the workmen. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Hammond (1894) 58 Ark. 324. The court said: "The rule suggested by appellee as a proper one could under no circumstances possess any virtue except in cases of persons near enough to the quarry, and the sound of the whistle there, to hear it, and yet far enough away to have more time to get off the track than they would have after the train comes in view and sounds the whistle, as is the rule in vogue, or as was done in the present case. It is impossible to say how far or near, then, persons must be to hear the whistle in any case, and still more so, when they are on a running hand car, in a rugged and hilly country, where the transmission of sound is obstructed and the sound itself is lost in the more immediate noise of the running car. Sounding the whistle at the quarry, or at any other point, would, of course, afford no protection to persons out of hearing, and yet so far from their destination as that they will be overtaken. The positive evil of the rule suggested is made apparent, for, having taken the place of a better rule, perhaps, it is nevertheless, of itself, in that case useless. The suggested rule, therefore, would only be applicable to special instances, and its application, if attempted to be extended beyond these special instances, might interfere with the application of more salutary general rules. We are unable to say that the refusal of the company to have the regulation suggested by the appellee was unreasonable. At all events, it was error to submit the question to the jury."

IX. Illustrative decisions as to the sufficiency of rules framed for the protection of servants in miscellaneous employments.

It is the duty of a lumber company to provide rules by means of which servants working at the foot of a chute down which heavy logs are constantly being thrown shall receive warning that a log is about to fall. Hartvig v. Northern P. L. Co. (1890) 19 Or. 522.

In McGovern v. Central Vermont R. Co. (1890) 123 N. Y. 280, a case in which a servant sent into a grain bin was buried under a mass of grain which had adhered to the sides, the court was of opinion that it might properly have been left to the jury to determine whether the omission to make rules and regulations prescribing the conditions under which servants should be required or permitted to enter the bins at the bottom was or was not a neglect of such reasonable care and precaution as a master engaged in such business was bound to take under the circumstances of this case.

In Eastwood v. Retsof Min. Co. (1895) 86 Hun, 91, the court in discussing the necessity for rules under the circumstances disclosed by the evidence, said: "In the case at bar it is evident that if a man were in the bin at work, standing upon the salt, he might very easily be engulfed so as to be unable to extricate himself if the chutes below were suddenly opened. Starting from that fact, which is undisputed, the inference might very well be drawn that a well devised set of rules, giving warning to the men who are in the bin, or forbidding the drawing off of salt when anyone was in the bin, would conduce greatly to the safety of the men who had occasion to be there. There is nothing in the evidence which would lead the jury to believe that such a rule was impossible or even difficult to enforce, and it is quite clear that such a rule might be of great use in insuring the safety of the men who had occasion to be in the bin. For these reasons I think that it was proper for the jury to consider upon the question of the de-than to the judge in applying positive law to conceded facts. Used in this sense, "negligence" is largely synonymous with the "law of liability," in this class of actions (although it hardly covers the whole law of liability in such cases), and denotes a principle which is essentially compound, i. e. one which includes a variety of maxims and rules, any or all of which may be involved in its application to particular cases. This use of the word might not have produced the confusion it has led to, were it not that one of the rules covered by the term "negligence," and one most frequently invoked in actions of this character, involves the use of "negligence" with the primary meaning of the word; and so the considerations peculiar to this single rule have been easily commingled with those applicable when the same word is used, not with its primary meaning, but as a term of art signifying the whole principle of legal liability. "Negligence," thus used, is scarcely distinguishable from "heedlessness," and may be shown in omitting to do an act, or in doing an act. When the law says a person whose conduct is negligent (in this sense), the other conditions of liability existing, is liable for damages caused by his conduct, the meaning of "negligent," like the meaning of any material word used in stating a rule of law, is a question of law, to be settled by the courts, whose province it is to declare the law; and, where the rule is intended to apply to an indefinite variety of events, the meaning of the rule in its application to each group of events is a question of law for the court. So it has been held in cases of "reasonable" notice to take a deposition (Sharp v. Lockwood, 12 Conn. 155, 159; Sing Cheong Co. v. Yung Wing, 59 Conn. 535, 543); "reasonable" time for presenting a note for payment (Lockwood v. Crawford, 18 Conn. 361, 372); "reasonable" or "diligent's negligence, the failure to make rules for the government of its employees in this regard."

X. Relation between the doctrine of common employment and the duty of a master to promulgate rules.

a. Duty of making rules, assignability of.

It is obvious that there is no room for the application of the doctrine of common employment where the evidence shows that none of the plaintiff's fellow employees were chargeable with negligence in the discharge of the duties allotted to them, and the only question is whether the master himself has failed to use proper care in protecting the plaintiff from danger. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Watts (1885) 63 Tex. 549.

It is equally clear that, upon the plainest grounds of justice and logic, the act of a fellow servant should, for the purposes of legal liability, be esteemed non-negligent, where it was done in accordance with the ordinary routine of the work, even though it would be considered negligent if it had been done without reference to any prevailing custom. This is the rationale of the decision in Sword v. Cameron (1839) 1 Dunlop, B. & M. Sess. Cas. 493, where the master was held to be liable to a quarryman who was injured by the firing of a blast before he had time to reach a place of shelter, the evidence being that the shot was fired in accordance with the usual and inveterate practice of the quarry. This case was cited in Bartons-hill Coal Co. v. Reid, 3 Macq. H. L. Cas. 266, 289, in support of the proposition that the doctrine of common employment was unknown to the law of Scotland, but Lord Cranworth pointed out that the decision did not turn upon the negligence of the fellow workmen who fired the shot, and expressly stated that it was justifiable, on the ground that "the injury was evidently the result of a defective system not adequately protecting the workmen at the time of the explosion." A similar construction was put upon the case by Lord Chelmsford in Bartons-hill Coal Co. v. McGuire (1858) 3 Macq. H. L. Cas. 310.

As was observed by the court, in discussing the evidence in Doling v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. (1897) 151 N. Y. 579, "if the men were acting without any known rule or regulation, and simply following a dangerous practice sanctioned by time and custom, the result might be imputed to the neglect of the defendant in omitting to change the method of doing the work and adopting a safer one." See also the cases cited passim in the preceding subdivisions.

But the employer's duty in respect to rules may have the effect of rendering him liable for the act of a fellow servant even if it was undoubtedly negligent, for, among the absolute, positive, or nonassignable duties of a master is the duty of making proper rules, or establishing a proper method for the conduct of his business. Ford v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1891) 124 N. Y. 493, 12 L. R. A. 454. The court, after stating (see the passage quoted in I. supra) that a want of care on the master's part may appear from various derelictions of specific duties among which is the duty to make proper rules, said: "These are the master's duties and responsibility cannot be evaded by their delegation to agents. As to such acts the agent occupies the master's place and the latter is deemed present and liable for the manner in which they are performed."

To the same effect, see Northern P. R. Co. v. Peterson (1896) 162 U. S. 346, 40 L. ed. 994; Dana v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1883) 92 N. Y. 639; Sheehan v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1883) 91 N. Y. 332; Lewis v. Seifert (1887) 116 Pa. 628. (See also the cases cited in X. c. infra.)

The "cases make it plain that, whenever the act is that of the master, or the duty to be performed is particularly his duty, the liability resting upon him for the proper performance of the act or duty is not shifted by the adoption of rules or regulations providing for the performance of the act or duty by the agent of the master." Hankins v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1894) 142 N. Y. 416, 25 L. R. A. 396.

Hence a master cannot relieve himself from liability for an injury to an employee, resulting from a failure on his part, through his agents, actually to use such care for the safety of employees as the law makes it necessary for him to use, by any regulations, however stringent and however completely enforced, which do not actually result in the use of such care by his agents. Missouri P. R. Co. v. McElyea (1888) 71 Tex. 386, 1 L. R. A. 411.

Liability, therefore, may be imputed to a master where a vice principal fails to comply with rules which require him to acquire certain information which will promote the safety of his subordinates and govern his arrangements accordingly. Thus, if one of the rules of the railroad company, furnished to a section foreman for his guidance, provides that "extra gent" search for a lost document (Kelsey v. Hammer, 18 Conn. 311, 317); and the principle may be illustrated in other ways. This is elementary law. Were it not so, the growth of any stable system of jurisprudence would be far less practicable. No difficulty can arise where the group of events calling for the application is clear and certain. But where, as sometimes happens, the group of events in respect to which the meaning of a word must be declared are of a nature insusceptible of clear statement, then, while the function of ascertaining facts from testimony, and that of applying the law to the facts, should be separately exercised by the trial judge, yet any adequate separate statement by him, in the record, of the results (i. e. the facts ascertained, and the application of the law to those facts) may be impracticable. Dilemmas of a similar nature account for most of the troublesome questions relating to the instruction of a jury by the court. In a trial to the court, where the two functions are united, there is no difficulty, so far as the disposition of that case is concerned; but, inasmuch as a statement of the facts is impracticable, the application of the law is not apparent, and the case cannot serve as a precedent, and cannot be reviewed for error in law by an appellate court. In a large number of cases the material question is whether the ascertained conduct of a person is in law negligent, in the sense last indicated. Often the ascertained conduct cannot be formulated into a series of adjudicated facts. It consists of a single impression produced in the mind of the trier by the whole mass of relevant testimony. That impression cannot be stated in words. It is a mental view which language is not luminous enough to photograph. Is that conduct negligent in law? Clearly, the conclusion of the trier that it is or is not must be, quoad the trier, a conclusion of law.

trains may pass over the road at any time, without previous notice, and the foreman [of a gang of trackmen] must be always prepared for them," and another rule provides that "he must run the hand cars with great caution, and he must not permit them to be used unless he accompany them;" and another rule requires him "to compare his time each day with the clock at the nearest telegraph office, or with the conductor on the train," these rules, as well as the law, require him to use the opportunities thus daily afforded, or any other opportunities, to ascertain what trains are expected to run over his section of the track by previous arrangements and when, so that he may be prepared for them as well as he can be, and thus diminish the risk of a collision of extra trains with the handcar. If he neglects this duty, and, without any fault of one of the laborers under him, his handcar comes in collision with an extra train, which, had he performed his duty, would not have occurred, and the laborer on the handcar is killed or injured, the railroad company will be liable for the damages so sustained. Criswell v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. (1888) 30 W. Va. 798.

A master is also liable for the negligence of an employee to whom is deputed the performance of the one special act without which a rule prescribed with a view to making the place of work safe would be wholly inefficacious. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Holcomb (1894) 9 Ind. App. 198, where a railroad company was held liable for the injuries received by a car repairer in consequence of the negligence of a brakeman who was directed to notify him, in accordance with a rule of the company, that an engine was about to enter upon the track where he was working.

Similar principles are controlling where the master undertakes to delegate the performance of a nonassignable duty to another person not an employee. In Bushby v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1887) 107 N. Y. 374, where the plaintiff was injured through the defective loading of a railroad car, the defendant relied upon its "system," which was to let the shipper load and stake, while, as to inspection, its evidence only tended to show that if, in the general performance of the duties of their employment, the station agent found anything out of the way, he should correct it, or if the conductor or brakeman saw a defect, he should report it to the station master. No special duty was imposed on either in regard to inspection, nor direction given as to its manner. The court said: "The . . . proposition of the defendant is, that 'it is not necessary in this case to decide whether the stakes in question were or were not appliances or machinery within the meaning of the rule invoked by the supreme court at the general term' . . . 'for the reason that the system under which they were furnished, inspected, and employed was perfectly well known to the plaintiff, and he took the risks of the consequences of that system.' There was no system as to this matter. If the evidence shows that such practices had obtained before, it merely shows that the defendant chose to delegate a duty to the shipper which the corporation should have performed. It is equally responsible for his negligence; his negligence is its negligence."

In England the doctrine of vice principalship, after being exploded by the decision in Wilson v. Merry (1868) L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. App. Cas. 326, 19 L. T. N. S. 30, was restored by the provisions of the employers' liability act of 1880. This aspect of that statute was thus recently referred to by Lord Watson in a passage which is quite pertinent to the subject of the present note: "The main, although not the sole, object of the act of 1880 was to place masters who do not, upon the same footing of responsibility with those who do, personally superintend their works and workmen, by making them answerable for the negligence of those persons to whom they intrust the duty of superintendence as if it were their own. In effecting that object the legislature has found it expedient in many instances to enact what were acknowledged principles of the common law. Section 1, subsec. 1, provides that the employer shall be liable in cases where a workman is injured by reason of any defect in the condition of the ways, works, machinery, or plant connected with or used in the business of the employer. I see no reason to doubt that an arrangement of machinery and tackle which, although reasonably safe for those engaged in working it, is nevertheless dangerous to workmen employed in another department of the business constitutes a defect in the condition of the works within the meaning of the subsection. Sometimes (as in the present case), when the danger is not constantly present but recurs at intervals, the defect may be cured by giving the workmen timely warning of its approach. The employer may in such cases protect himself, either by removing the source of danger, or by making provi-

Whether it be considered as an inference from many facts, or as the declaration of the meaning of a rule of law in relation to a single fact, it is the inference of a legal wrong from ascertained fact, and that is essentially a conclusion of law. Equally clearly the conclusion of the prior must be, quoad the power of this court to review his inference, a conclusion of fact. Not because the inference is not one of law, but because the fact or facts from which the inference is drawn cannot, by any process known to the law, be transferred from the mind of the prior to the mind of the appellate court. When such a question comes before us, we say we will not attempt to review the conclusion; it is one of fact; and this notwithstanding the trial judge has conscientiously tried to give in his finding a word picture of a mental impression that cannot be painted in words. He has not succeeded. He cannot succeed. The precise legal inference he has drawn must remain unknown. It cannot, therefore, be reviewed, and is practically a conclusion of fact. Now, this condition may arise in any kind of action, and is not peculiar to actions of negligence; using the word as a term of art describing a certain class of actions.

The mistake of the plaintiff arises mainly from confusing an ascertained fact,—where the fact is conduct claimed in law to be negligent,—incapable of transference from the mind of a trial court to that of an appellate court, with the legal inference drawn by the trial court from that fact, and which cannot be reviewed because the appellate court cannot have the fact from which the inference is drawn before it, and then applying the practical result of such a condition to the inference of liability in all actions classed under the term "actions of negligence." And this confusion arises mainly from the fact that the word "negligence," as used in respect to sion for due notice being given. Should he adopt the latter course, he will still be exposed to liability if injury results from failure to give warning through the negligence of himself or of his superintendent." Smith v. Baker [1891] A. C. 325, 354.

b. Duty to publish the rules, assignability of.

The duty of framing suitable rules being certainly nonassignable, it would seem to be a necessary inference that the subsidiary duty of publication without the performance of which the framing would be an idle formality must also be nonassignable. The authorities upon the subject, however, are in conflict.

Thus we find it held, on the one hand, that a section foreman on whom is devolved the duty of informing his hands of the contents of a rule that extra trains may be expected at any time without notice, is pro hac vice the representative of the company. Olson v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. (1888) 38 Minn. 117.

Similarly a master cannot escape liability for injuries to a servant temporarily employed, upon the ground that he had furnished suitable materials and appliances the use of which would have prevented the injury, where the servant was not aware that they had been furnished, and the master had not adopted any rules or regulations requiring or directing his agents in charge of the work to advise servants temporarily employed of their existence. Tully v. New York & T. S. S. Co. (1898) 10 App. Div. 463. There the plaintiff, owing to there being no light between the decks of a ship, fell into an uncovered hatchway, and it was contended, in behalf of the defendant, that as it had provided sufficient lamps for the use of employees, the want of light was attributable, not to its negligence, but to theirs. But the court said: "There is evidence tending to prove that, when a vessel arrives at the dock, men appearing about there are employed to take off the cargo and to reload it with freight, and that they may have had no experience in the work they are called upon to perform in that service. They, unadvised, may not know of the facilities which can be afforded them when circumstances render their use and application desirable for safety. Conditions like that which caused the failure of the plaintiff to avoid the danger which he encountered, it may be assumed, are liable to arise and be produced in like manner. It would, therefore, seem to be reasonably incumbent upon the defendant to have some system by way of rules or regulations. The availability of protective means and appliances to the workmen is not necessarily of any benefit to them unless they are advised of it. It may be that, if the defendant had provided rules which required those in charge of the work to advise the workmen of the precautionary means of protection which could be had, the plaintiff's misfortune might not have occurred. . . . It does not appear that the defendant had, by any rules or regulations whatever, required or directed the agents to advise workmen temporarily employed to work upon the steamships, in loading and unloading, of any precautionary means which it might, for their safety, be or become desirable to use. For this reason we think that the question whether the defendant was chargeable with negligence was for the jury."

On the other hand, the court, in Oliver v. Ohio River R. Co. (1896) 42 W. Va. 703, quotes with approval the following passage from a recent textbook: "It is not required that the master should see to it personally that notice comes to the knowledge of all those to be governed thereby. If there is due care and diligence in choosing competent servants to receive and transmit the necessary orders, the negligence by them in the performance of it is a risk of the employment that the coemployee takes when he enters the service." Bailey, Master's Liability for Injuries to Servant, p. 77.

The learned author considers that "after the person whose duty, on the part of the master, it is to promulgate rules, or to communicate them to those engaged in the service, has performed his duty, by communicating them to a servant, who in turn is to observe them, or communicate them to another, then the omission or neglect of such other is the omission or neglect of a fellow servant, to the same extent as his disobedience of an order or rule, after receipt of knowledge, . . . would be such an act." P. 85.

Yet at the same time he declares that, "as to those orders or rules relating to the appliances and ways, it being the absolute duty of the master to see that such appliances and ways are reasonably safe, the master should be held to a strict liability to see that they were actually received and known." P. 85.

With due deference, it is submitted that the distinction here relied on is logically unsound, and wholly inconsistent with the theory which makes the duty of protecting the servant by suitable rules an independent obligation co-ordinate with the obligations of seeing that the mathe same general subject, has entirely distinct, although closely-related, meanings, dependent on the particular purpose for which it is used. A similar confusion arises from the use of "ordinary care," which is used sometimes in reference to actual conduct under circumstances, as found by the trier, incapable of being so formulated in a finding as to state the facts really adjudicated, and show the inference actually drawn, and sometimes as indicating the rule of legal liability under any given state of facts. As used in the latter sense, it may denote the ultimate ground of every cause of action.

In the present case we hold that the inference of legal liability drawn by the trial judge is reviewable, because the events upon which the cause of action arises are of such a nature that they can all be fully and clearly found by a trial court as adjudicated facts, and have been so found, and properly appear before us in the record; that the conclusion of the trial court of an "emergency" which required of the defendant a line of conduct appropriate only to the single transaction in question is reviewable, because this subordinate conclusion is drawn from adjudicated facts fully and clearly found in compliance with existing law of procedure, and the trial court, in reaching the conclusion,—unless the law defining such an emergency was misapplied,—has plainly mistaken those rules of sound reasoning whose observance is essential to the validity of an inference from admitted facts.

In stating our conclusion, we have not sought to lay down a binding rule, but have merely endeavored to explain, as far as the infirmities of language will permit, the test of our decision in this case. We believe that such a test, if applied (with discrimination as to the circumstances of each case) to the whole line of our decisions where the question of reviewability of errors alleged in interial substances which compose the instrumentalities themselves come up to the required standard. (See I. supra.)

If the master is bound at all to prescribe a certain system for the guidance of his servants, it surely can make no difference whether the object aimed at is that the instrumentalities shall be of a certain quality or that they shall be used in a certain way. In either case the obligation is referable to the general principle that he must use proper care to secure the safety of his servants, and it seems impossible to argue, with any show of reason, that one obligation arising out of that principle can be less absolute than the other. The true doctrine, we take it, is that the duty of bringing the rules to the knowledge of the servants is equally non-assignable, whatever the subject-matter may be, and that the question whether it has been performed is to be determined, not by considering the rank or number of subordinates through whom they are transmitted to the persons concerned, but by considering whether the steps taken are such that the servants, if they exercise ordinary care, cannot fail to ascertain that the rules have been framed, and that obedience to them is expected. (See XI. c. infra, and compare the standpoint taken in Conway v. Belfast & N. C. R. Co. (1877) Ir. Rep. 11 C. L. 345, Affg (1875) Ir. Rep. 9 C. L. 498, the substance of which is noted in IV. supra.)

a. Position of employees vested with power to suspend general rules by special directions.

It is clear that the master cannot be bound by the act of an employee who undertakes to suspend a rule, unless such employee is a vice principal in respect to the work which the rule was designed to regulate. For an examination of the general principles upon which the dividing line between a mere servant and a vice principal is traced, reference must be had to treatises and to former notes in this series. The scope of the present note does not require anything more than a citation of the decisions which deal with the temporary abrogation of rules by special directions emanating from some superior officer. Far the larger part of the decisions upon this point deal with the right of an employee of a railroad company to recover for injuries resulting from the negligence of a fellow employee who, having been intrusted with the function of seeing that the trains are safely operated has thought fit to meet a special emergency by directing some of them to run at times different from those prescribed by the regular schedule. By most of the courts in which this question has been discussed it has been treated with reference to the consideration that, as a variation from a general timetable is but a special timetable, the same duty rests upon the company in regard to bringing the latter as the former to the notice of the servants affected by it, and any employee whom he deposes to act in his stead is his agent pro hac vice. Slater v. Jewett (1881) 85 N. Y. 61, 29 Am. Rep. 627.

Agreeably to this theory, it has been held in Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. McLallen (1876) 84 Ill. 109, that, as between the conductor and the company, the assistant superintendent to whose order the trains are all subject is the representative of the company, and that, as his orders to the conductor of a train are essentially the orders of the company, it must answer for his neglect to issue a necessary order. Compare Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Henderson (1882) 87 Ohio St. 549.

So, the effect of certain rules as to running trains by special orders, by one of which it is provided that all orders shall be given by a superintendent, or by a despatcher under the direction of a superintendent, and by another that superintendents are supreme in their own divisions, and responsible only to the management for such orders as they may give, is to delegate to the train despatcher the whole power of the corporation in respect to moving the trains safely, and therefore to make him the representative of the company in that regard. Darrigan v. New York & N. H. R. Co. (1884) 52 Conn. 285, 52 Am. Rep. 590. The court said: "It is the duty of a railroad corporation to prepare a time-table and adjust the running of its trains so as to avoid collisions. It must also devise some suitable and safe method by which to run special and irregular trains, and regular trains when off their regular time. That cannot be done by general rules. Emergencies will arise which no system of rules can anticipate and provide for, in which the company must act, and act promptly and efficiently. In this case the scheme devised was to have these trains controlled by one who knew the position and movement of every train on the road liable to be affected by them,—a train despatcher acting in the name and by the authority of the superintendent. Is there not a wide and manifest difference between the duty of such an agent and the duty of a locomotive engineer?"

ference of trial courts has arisen, will reconcile those cases, as resting on a ground substantially the same in all. This question was very carefully considered in Farrell v. Waterbury Horse R. Co. 60 Conn. 239. The opinion of Judge Torrance in that case touches cum au the root of the difficulty; and has been our main guide in subsequent decisions. The underlying principle was there considered with special reference to contributory negligence, where the ascertained fact could not be stated in the finding, and so the inference of the trial court could not be reviewed, and remained, for all practical purposes, a conclusion of fact. In this case we consider the same principle with special reference to the question of legal liability where the adjudicated facts can be, and are, fully set forth. And the task of testing the principle is now of a somewhat different nature, and easier than it was then, by reason of further changes in procedure, and our decisions upon the effect of such changes in enlarging the facilities for the full exercise of our jurisdiction in correcting the erroneous inferences of a trial court.

We allude to some matters suggested by the record merely to avoid any implication from a failure to mention them. It is claimed that one or two of the facts stated as found from the evidence are in reality nothing but deductions from the rules, or from other facts found, and as such erroneous. The facts referred to have too slight a relation to the controlling question to call for particular comment. As a whole, the finding is exceptionally full and clear, and furnishes proper facility for its correction in the matters complained of, were such correction necessary. It is claimed that the court erred in its conclusion that the injury resulted from the combined negligence of the brakeman, Hall, and the defendant. The Massachusetts case of Hayes v. Western R.

Darrigan v. New York & N. E. R. Co. (1884) 52 Conn. 285, 52 Am. Rep. 590.

A leading case to the same effect is Lewis v. Selfert (1887) 116 Pa. 628, where the rationale of the situation is explained very clearly in the following passage: "It is very plain that it was the duty of the defendant company, as between said company and its employees, to provide a reasonably good and safe road, and reasonably safe and good cars, locomotives, and machinery for operating its road. It is equally clear that it was its duty to frame and promulgate such rules and schedules for the moving of its trains as would afford reasonable safety to the operatives who were engaged in moving them. This is a direct, positive duty which the company owed to its employees, and for the failure to perform which it would be responsible to any person injured as a consequence thereof, whether such person be a passenger or an employee. It would be a monstrous doctrine to hold that a railroad company could frame such schedules as would inevitably, or even probably, result in collisions and loss of life. This is a personal, positive duty, and, while a corporation is compelled to act through agents, yet the agents, in performing duties of this character, stand in the place of and represent the principal. In other words, they are vice principals. If it be the duty to provide schedules for the moving of its trains which shall be reasonably safe, it follows logically that when the schedules are departed from, when trains are sent out without a schedule, such orders should be issued by the company as will afford reasonable protection to the employees engaged in the running of such trains. I am not speaking now of collisions caused by a disobedience of orders on the part of conductors and engineers, but of collisions or other accidents the result of obeying such orders. At the time of the collision referred to, Wellington Bertolette was the general dispatcher of the defendant company, and from his office in Philadelphia had the general power and authority of moving the trains. In this he was not interfered with by the company or anyone else. For the purpose of sending out the trains, he wielded all the power of the company. He could send a train out on schedule time or he could hold it back. He could change the schedule time or make new schedules as the exigency of the case required. He could send a train out without schedule, and direct its movements from his office in Philadelphia. When he issued an order the train was bound to move as he directed. The engineer and conductor had but one duty, and that was obedience."

The same view has been adopted in New York, where a railroad company has been held liable for the negligence of a train dispatcher, the reasoning of the court being as follows: "In this case the evidence would seem to be quite conclusive that the defendant had fully discharged the duty which it owed its employees in the way of establishing and promulgating appropriate and sufficient rules and regulations for the government and operation of the various trains upon its road and its furnishing general timetables pertaining thereto. Whether the train dispatcher violated one or all of such rules is not material in the view we take of the case, because the defendant had not performed its whole duty in promulgating rules, nor is a defense made out when it is shown that, if the train dispatcher had obeyed the rules, the accident would not have occurred. If the defendant owed a duty as master to give correct orders to these trains, or at least to take due and reasonable care to give them, the failure to perform that duty is the failure of the master in his character as such, although he intrusted the performance of the duty to the train dispatcher. These trains were being run without regard to their ordinary timetables; they were several hours late, proceeding in opposite directions, and each was approaching the other in entire ignorance of the other's whereabouts. Both were necessarily dependent upon the special orders they received from Hornellsville. As was said in Slater v. Jewett (1881) 85 N. Y. 62, 29 Am. Rep. 627, the master had the right to vary from the regular time schedules laid down for these trains. It was part of the details incident to the operation of the road, but when a variation, or, in other words, when a special timetable is made out for two trains by which they are to run, it is the duty of the master, not alone to take reasonable care that the alteration shall be made known to the parties interested, but also to take reasonable care that the variation ordered, and by which the trains are run, shall not necessarily or probably lead to disaster when obediently carried out. Reasonable care in originating and formulating the order is necessary, and is the duty of the master. When the train dispatcher originates and promulgates such orders as were given in this case, he is acting as the master, or, as it is said, his alter ego, and the master is liable for the negligence of the agent he has employed to do his, the

Corp. 3 Cush. 270, apparently supports this claim. As we hold that the court erred in finding the defendant negligent otherwise than by reason of the fault of its brakeman, the question is not material, and we do not pass upon it. The court finds that "the employees of the defendant occasionally violated this rule [the one whose violation by the brakeman caused the collision], and the conductor in charge of 1411 knew this." If there were other facts in connection with this clearly showing that the rule was not enforced through the neglect of the defendant, a different question would arise in respect to its liability. The duty imposed by law upon the defendant is not fulfilled by merely adopting adequate rules. The law imposes upon it a duty in respect to the enforcement of rules necessary for the protection of the public. This question was considered in Gerrish v. New Haven Ice Co. 63 Conn. 9, 16, and is discussed in Kansas City, Ft. S. & M.

R. Co. v. Hammond, 58 Ark. 324, 332. It is not raised in this case. The judgment under review is controlled by the conclusion that the collision in which Nolan was killed was caused by the legal negligence of the brakeman, Hall, in conducting the business of the defendant, and that the defendant escapes liability solely on the ground that Nolan, the victim of the wrong, as well as Hall, through whom the injury was done, was its employee. The rule which produces such a result is too firmly established as law by a multitude of decisions to be now reversed or seriously modified by any exercise of the power vested in courts.

There is error. The judgment of the superior court is set aside, and the case is remanded for assessment of nominal damages.

The other Judges concur.

NOTE.—The rule of coemployee is one deduced by a process of analogy from decisions rendered master's, particular work." Hankins v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1894) 142 N. Y. 416, 25 L. R. A. 396.

A train despatcher in devising a temporary timetable which, in a sudden emergency, is to take the place of the regular timetable, and in issuing telegraphic order for the operation of the trains under the new schedule, acts as a vice principal, but a telegraphic operator who merely transmits to the trainman the directions he receives from the train despatcher as to the movements of the trains is a fellow servant of the engineer. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Camp (1895) 31 U. S. App. 213, 65 Fed. Rep. 952, 13 C. C. A. 233.

The doctrine of these cases has also been applied in Phillips v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1885) 64 Wis. 475; Hunn v. Michigan C. R. Co. (1889) 78 Mich. 51, 37 L. R. A. 700; Little Rock & M. R. Co. v. Barry (1893) 58 Ark. 198, 25 L. R. A. 386; Madden v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1886) 28 W. Va. 610, 57 Am. Rep. 695; Smith v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. (1887) 92 Mo. 359; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Clark (1893) 16 U. S. App. 17, 57 Fed. Rep. 125, 6 C. C. A. 281 (superintendent and train despatcher); Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Arispe (1893) 5 Tex. Civ. App. 611; Washburn v. Nashville & C. R. Co. (1859) 8 Head, 638, 75 Am. Dec. 784; McChesney v. Panama R. Co. (1892) 49 N. Y. S. R. 148; Laaky v. Canadian P. R. Co. (1891) 83 Me. 461 (where stress was laid on the fact that the train despatcher habitually issued orders for the running of the trains, in the absence of the superintendent, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the company's controlling officers); Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Young (1887) 26 Ill. App. 115 (train despatcher not in the same line of employment as the trainmen); McKune v. California Southern R. Co. (1885) 60 Cal. 302; Oregon Short Line & U. N. R. Co. v. Frost (1896) 44 U. S. App. 606, 74 Fed. Rep. 965, 21 C. C. A. 188.

Robertson v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. (1881) 78 Ind. 77, has sometimes been cited as an authority for the doctrine that the train despatcher is a fellow servant of the trainmen, but the opinion thus expressed has been recently repudiated quite emphatically by the supreme court of Indiana itself, Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Heck (1898, Ind.) 50 N. E. 988, which holds that a train despatcher's disregard of a rule prescribing that an extra train despatched after a work train has already gone out on the road shall be notified to protect itself against such work train is such negligence as will render the company liable for injuries caused by a collision between the two trains.

Hogan v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. (1895) 88 Tex. 679, is a ruling to the same specific effect as to the relation between trainmen and telegraphic operators, but the precise grounds of the decision are not stated.

The same general principle has also been applied to a different set of facts in Moore v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. (1885) 85 Mo. 588, where it was held that the servant of a railway company may rely on the vice principal's promise to protect him while at work on a side track, notwithstanding the existence of a rule of the company requiring servants to protect themselves by putting out flags while engaged in such work.

The decisions in which superintendents and train despatchers have been held to be mere co-servants of trainmen, are either rulings by courts in which the general doctrine of common employment was relied on and the effect of the distinction between the master's assignable or nonassignable duties was not adverted to or discussed (Robertson v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. (1881) 78 Ind. 77 [overruled, as noticed supra]; Millsaps v. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. (1891) 69 Miss. 423; Wonder v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (1870) 32 Md. 411, 8 Am. Rep. 143); or are cases in which the negligence alleged had no relation to the operation of trains (Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Hoover (1894) 79 Md. 253, 25 L. R. A. 710); or are cases which turned upon some special grounds, as that the plaintiff did not offer evidence tending to show that no co-service existed. Blessing v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. (1883) 77 Mo. 410. (Smith v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. (1887) 92 Mo. 359, expresses the view actually adopted in Missouri.)

The conflict between the courts, therefore, is much less important than if it were the result of a deliberate choice of antagonistic doctrines. But in any case the weight of authority is overwhelmingly in favor of the doctrine that a train despatcher is a vice principal.

By some rules it is expressly stated that they may be suspended by the special order of some specified agent of the employers. See Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Henderson (1882) 37 Ohio St. 549, where the rule under discussion, which regulated the movements of freight trains, provided for its suspension by the company's super-under a state of society very different from that of to-day, and the crystallization of such analogies into a binding rule is of comparatively modern origin. It first appeared in England in Priestley v. Fowler, 3 Mee. & W. 1, and in 1850 was applied to the employees of railroad companies in Hutchinson v. York, N. & B. R. Co. 5 Exch. 343. In 1841 it was formulated in South Carolina (Murray v. South Carolina R. Co. 1 McMull. L. 385, 36 Am. Dec. 268), and in 1842 in Massachusetts, in the leading case of Forwell v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 4 Met. 49, 38 Am. Dec. 339. The very able opinion of Chief Justice Shaw in the last case has largely dominated the law on the subject during the past fifty years, and contains the most plausible statement that can be given of the grounds supporting the public policy which compels a workman entering the service of a master to assume the whole risk of any injury that may be done him by the master through the misconduct of a fellow servant. The vigorous language of this statement, however appropriate it may have been at that time, has a touch of grim irony when read in the light of existing conditions in the employment of labor. In England in 1880 the rule was changed by the employers' liability act, and is now practically abolished, as to large classes of workmen, by the workmen's compensation act, passed during the present year. The rule has been dealt with by legislation in several of our sister states. It was first formally recognized in this state in Burke v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 34 Conn. 474, 479, with a strong protest against the sufficiency of the grounds for a principle deemed too firmly settled in other jurisdictions to be differently treated here. In Darrigan v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 52 Conn. 285, 52 Am. Rep. 500, the application of the rule was somewhat modified, and possibly cases may arise where the legitimate exercise of the duty of the court in applying established principles to novel conditions may involve some limitations of its apparent reach. But the evil is too deep-seated to be remedied by judicial action. It needs radical treatment through wise legislation.

W. H.

intendent and for the precautions to be observed during such suspension.

The right to rely implicitly upon the propriety of a special order from a train despatcher cannot be extended to cases in which the circumstances are such that a prudent man would feel bound to seek some further information as to the reason why the regular routine of the business has been in this instance departed from. In Westcott v. New York & N. E. R. Co. (1891) 153 Mass. 460, the conductor of a train was held to be negligent in starting a train, when he knew that, under the rules, he had no right to do so until the arrival of a certain train, without inquiring of the despatcher on that section of the road whether he had received any special information which would make it safe to leave the station.

The court said that, even supposing that it was ordinarily his duty to obey the orders of the despatcher, even if they were in violation of the rules of the road, this particular order was so obviously wrong, and was likely to involve such dreadful consequences, that it was manifestly negligent to act upon it without inquiring the reason for it.

But, where a rule requires trainmen to run in strict accordance with their written orders, the mere verbal statement of a telegraph operator that there is a worktrain on the track over which an extra freight is about to be run will not supersede an unqualified direction of the train despatcher worded in such terms that the engine of the freight train is justified in running on the assumption that the track is clear. The company, therefore, cannot absolve itself from the charge of having failed to notify the crew of the freight train as to the presence of the work train on the track by the plea that the employees in control of the former train were the parties whose negligence was responsible for a subsequent collision between the two trains,—especially when there is another rule of such a tenor that those employees were justified in supposing that an order had previously been sent to the freight train to report at some designated place for instructions. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Heck (1898, Ind.) 50 N. E. 988.

The accepted doctrine in the majority of the American courts is that the mere possession of that authority to manage a train, with which conductors and (sometimes) engineers are invested, does not imply the possession of authority to make or unmake rules for the control of employees. Overby v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1893) 37 W. Va. 524.

In Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Finley (1894) 25 U. S. App. 16, 63 Fed. Rep. 228, 12 C. C. A. 595, an instruction implying that an engineer in temporary control of a train, in the absence of a temporary conductor, had power to waive a rule forbidding couplings to be made without coupling sticks, was held erroneous, the court saying: "There is too great a tendency to clothe subordinate employees with the power and duty of vice principals, and then to conclude that they represent the master in every respect, and as fully as if he were present. . . . Be this as it may, whatever may be the authority of a person, himself an employee on a train, over other coemployees on the same train, he and they are bound to respect and obey the general rules and regulations of their common master, whose orders press equally upon each of them, coming with the highest sanction, and each of them must know that the other cannot rescind them. The learned judge has invested the substitute of a substituted conductor with all the powers held by the highest officer of the railroad system. If this engineer, accidentally and temporarily in charge of a train, could rescind or waive or suspend a fixed rule of the company, a rule impressed in the most formal way upon a very large class of employees,—the class engaged, or likely to be called upon to engage, in coupling cars,—as a part of the contract and a condition precedent to their employment, he could revoke all rules, and govern himself and control his train at his own will, and at the risk and responsibility of his employer. Granting that, within the scope of his agency, he represents his employer, it can scarcely be supposed that it is within the scope of the agency of an engineer, or even of a conductor, to rescind the standing rules of the company, or to cancel a contract made by his employer with one of his servants antecedent to and as a condition for his employment. When the plaintiff in the action below followed the suggestion of the engineer, he knew the risk he was taking, knew that he had contracted not to take it under any circumstances, knew that the engineer could not make him take it, and he assumed the risk himself. He was injured on May 14, 1890. He had been in this same service from October 12, 1889. When he entered it, he fully understood that the rules of the company positively forbade brakemen, and him among them, from coupling and uncoupling cars except with a stick, that not only brakemen, but all other per-

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

LITTLE ROCK & MEMPHIS RAILWAY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

G. F. BARRY.

(56 U. S. App. 37, 84 Fed. Rep. 944, 28 C. C. A. 644.)

1. Telegraphic information is not, as matter of law, required to be given to those in charge of trains moving in the same direction on a single-track road as to the respective position of the trains, where the rules which have been generally adopted by railroads to govern such cases do not require it, but place the duty of looking out for the other train upon the train crews, and the rules are not shown to be palpably unreasonable or insufficient.
2. Rules adopted by railroad companies to govern the movement of trains cannot be regarded as unreasonable or insufficient in the absence of proof that they are so.

3. One taking service without objection or protest with a railroad whose rules to his knowledge require employees on trains out on the road to look out for other trains moving in the same direction assumes the risk incident to the operation of trains under such rules.
4. The reasonableness of rules adopted by a railroad company for the movement of trains is a question of law for the court.
5. Failure of a railroad company to notify those in charge of two trains moving in the same direction of the relative position of the trains is not the proximate cause of a collision between them where the crews in charge of them took no precautions to look out for and prevent a collision with the other train as required by the rules of the road.

(January 31, 1898.)

sons, must not go between cars, under any circumstances, for the purpose of coupling, uncoupling, or for adjusting pins, etc., when an engine is attached to such cars or train. In consideration that the company would employ and would continue to employ him, he bound himself to obey this rule, and assumed all results, not only of disobedience, but also of the infraction of the rule. When, therefore, the engineer on the engine attached to the train suggested to him to go between the cars to couple, he knew that under no circumstances, even an order from a superior, could this be done without an assumption of risk by himself; and he knew, also, that he had waived in advance any liability of the company for this infraction of the rule. He had dealt with his master immediately, and had from him his instructions in writing. He had no right to permit the suggestion of a subordinate to reverse or annul his master's express direction, a direction for the government of his conduct under all circumstances."

In Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Reesman (1894) 19 U. S. App. 596, 60 Fed. Rep. 370, 9 C. C. A. 20, 23 L. E. A. 768, the court refused to concur with the doctrine that, "if the plaintiff [a brakeman] disobeyed the rules of the company, and such disobedience contributed directly to the injury, he may nevertheless recover, and cannot be held guilty of contributory negligence providing that such disobedience was with the knowledge and consent of the conductor of the train, or, in other words, that, if the conductor failed to enforce the rules of the company, the employee may knowingly disregard them, and yet in no manner be barred from recovering for injuries which would not have resulted but for such disobedience."

In Russell v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (1891) 47 Fed. Rep. 204, the court declined to say that the disregard of their duty by conductors could render obsolete a regulation of the company, "nor that a conductor so far represents the company as to be authorized to rescind rules made by the corporation for his guidance, and for that of the train hands."

It will be observed that these decisions virtually amount to a declaration that the status of vice principal which was attributed to conductors in Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 28 L. ed. 787, is predicated only of the acts which he does in directing his subordinates during the ordinary routine of his usual duties, and is not to be extended so as to make him for all purposes the alter ego of the company within his own particular sphere.

The fact that a brakeman in uncoupling cars in violation of a rule requiring the use of a coupling stick was acting under the order of the conductor, who had "the right to control or direct his services," within the meaning of § 193, Miss. Const. 1890, will not enable him to recover, since he was under no obligation to obey an order to violate a rule binding on all employees, including the conductor. Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Rush (1894) 71 Miss. 987. The court accordingly held that it was error either to instruct the jury that the company was liable, notwithstanding the existence of the rule, if the conductor knew of and acquiesced in plaintiff's violation thereof and occasioned the injury by negligently signaling the train to start, since, even if the conductor is the superior officer of the brakeman, he could not dispense with any general rule, or to instruct them that the company was liable if the conductor ordered plaintiff to go between the cars to uncouple, having first taken from him his coupling stick, and, without knowing that he had come out, negligently signaled the engineer to move, thus causing the injury.

Sometimes, however, a rule conferring a special power upon a conductor may reasonably be construed as conferring by implication a power to relax another rule dealing with the same subject-matter as the former. Thus, in a case where the defense was that the plaintiff (a brakeman) had violated a rule forbidding him to ride on an engine, it appeared that a rule instructed conductors of freight trains to "require all of their brakemen to be on top of the train . . . while descending or ascending grades." The evidence showed that the night was intensely cold, and tended to prove that the conductor had directed plaintiff on this occasion to ride in the cab of the engine. It was held that, under the rule, the conductor had authority to direct the plaintiff in respect to his duties in being on top of the train, and that plaintiff could not be charged with contributory negligence for riding in the engine descending a grade, if he did so in obedience to directions of the conductor. Hurlbut v. Wabash R. Co. (1895) 130 Mo. 657.

The promise of a foreman of car repairers to protect a car repairer binds the company although a rule provided to secure the safety of such an employee has not been observed but dis-

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Arkansas to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Before Sanborn and Thayer, Circuit Judges, and Philips, District Judge.

Messrs. U. M. Rose, W. E. Hemingway, and G. B. Rose, for plaintiff in error:

The sufficiency of rules is a question of law for the court, not a question of fact for the jury.

Kansas & A. Valley R. Co. v. Dye, 36 U. S. App. 23, 70 Fed. Rep. 27, 16 C. C. A. 604;

Vedder v. Fellows, 20 N. Y. 126; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Whittemore, 43 Ill. 420, 12 Am. Dec. 138; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Adcock, 52 Ark. 406; Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Hammond, 58 Ark. 334; Louisville, N. & G. S. R. Co. v. Fleming, 14 Lea, 128; Tracy v. New York & H. R. Co. 9 Bosw. 396; Hoffbauer v. Davenport & N. W. R. Co. 52 Iowa, 342, 35 Am. Rep. 278.

The mere happening of a collision raises no presumption of negligence in a suit by a servant against his master.

Smith v. Missouri P. R. Co. 113 Mo. 70; Stewart v. Ohio River R. Co. 40 W. Va. 188; Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Godfrey, 155 Ill. 78; Kansas P. R. Co. v. Salmon, 11 Kan. 83; Short v. New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. 69 Miss.

pensed with. Moore v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. (1885) 85 Mo. 588. The court said: "It being conceded, as it must be, that the company owed a duty to the men under the car to provide for their safety, can it be that the foreman had no authority in an emergency to use any other means than those adopted by the company? That the red flags, and nothing but the red flags, was the means he was to employ? If for any reason that would clearly, in a given case, have been insufficient as a warning, can it be possible that the foreman would be restricted to the use of the red flags? Or if, in such case, he had had the red flag set up, and one of the men was injured, in consequence of its insufficiency to give the warning, that the company would not be liable to the injured party? Has it discharged its duty by simply adopting a means of protection ordinarily sufficient, when the person in charge of the work knows that, in the particular case, it is not a sufficient warning? If the foreman has authority in such an emergency, that authority results from his general authority to perform the duty of the company, in protecting the employees under his control in the performance of a dangerous work for the company, and he was authorized to make the promise to the plaintiff for the company, and undertook to set out the red flags in his possession, or to adopt any other means necessary to secure the safety of the men, thereby absolving them from the duty of setting out the flag, or setting the watch."

XI. Duty of the servant in regard to the rules promulgated by his employer.

a. Generally.

As to the effect of the violation of a mere custom of the employees themselves, see III. supra (sub finem).

The duty of the servant to comply with the rules which the master has published for his guidance may be referred to the broad principle that the rules, if reasonable, may be assumed to indicate the methods of work which experience has shown to be calculated to furnish the best chance of safety, under the circumstances, both to the servant himself and to his fellow employees, and that a breach of those rules must, by consequence, charge him with that culpability which the law infers from the doing of a certain act in an unnecessarily dangerous manner.

Such seems to be the conception underlying statements like these: Where a servant fully encounters dangers which have been pointed out to him, and does not avail himself of the rules and regulations which the master has provided to avoid and avert such danger, the master is not responsible for an injury occasioned thereby. Davis v. Nuttallsburg Coal & C. Co. (1890) 84 W. Va. 500.

"It would be most unreasonable and unjust, after imposing upon the master the duty of promulgating a rule for securing the safety of his servant, to permit the servant to recover from the master damages for injuries which the observance of the rule would have prevented. As the master is bound at his peril to make the rules, the servant should be equally bound at his peril to obey them. In such case the disaster is brought upon the servant by his own voluntary act, and he, and not the master who has discharged his duty, should bear the consequences. So it has been uniformly ruled." Francis v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. (1892) 110 Mo. 387.

"If the employee knowingly and intentionally disobeys a reasonable rule or regulation established for his safety, unless he does so under the influence of fear produced by the appearance of sudden danger, and the act of disobedience is the proximate cause of the injury complained of, he cannot recover." Gulf, W. T. & P. R. Co. v. Ryan (1888) 60 Tex. 665.

Or the duty may be rested upon the more special ground that an agreement on his part to obey the rules may be implied from his acceptance or continuance of the employment with a knowledge of their provisions. See Pennsylvania Co. v. Whitcomb (1887) 111 Ind. 212.

Compare that class of cases which hold a servant to be guilty of contributory negligence, if he disobeys a verbal command of his superiors. O'Brien v. Staples Coal Co. (1896) 163 Mass. 435; Lendberg v. Brotherton Iron Min. Co. (1898) 97 Mich. 443; Lyon v. Detroit, L. & L. M. R. Co. (1875) 31 Mich. 429.

In Lowe v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. (1893) 89 Iowa, 420, it was assumed in the argument that the servant, "by receiving a copy of the rules and entering the company's service . . . became bound by contract and under obligation to obey the rules."

Compare also the language used in Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Rush (1894) 71 Miss. 987, to the effect that "for injury sustained through its violation an employee who knew the rule and contracted with reference to it cannot recover."

It will often happen that the servant's failure to follow the course prescribed by the rule may imply the doing of an act which may reasonably be held negligent independently of the rule itself. In this case the master may still make a successful defense, even if he cannot prove that the servant knew of the rule. But his position will then be less advantageous, for if the rule is left out of account, the question of the servant's contributory negligence must usually be left to the jury, while disobedience to a known rule 348; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Maloy, 77 Ga. 237; Campbell v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (Pa.) 24 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 427; Kincaid v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. 22 Or. 35; Johnson v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 36 W. Va. 73; Murray v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. 11 Colo. 124.

Where regulations for the running of trains out of time, proper and suitable with a view to the safety of employees, are prescribed, obedience to these regulations by those having charge of a train is a matter of executive detail; and for a disobedience of them, which causes injury to a coemployee, the master is not liable.

Slater v. Jewett, 85 N. Y. 62, 29 Am. Rep. 627; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Hall, 78

Tex. 657; Rose v. Boston & A. R. Co. 58 N. Y. 217; Wright v. New York C. R. Co. 25 N. Y. 562; Corcoran v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 126 N. Y. 673.

The court in instructing that in sending out special or extra trains due and sufficient notice of the movements and whereabouts of all other trains and locomotives which are liable to be met or overtaken by the special, or extra, should be given to the officers or servants in charge of such trains, not only invaded the province of the jury, but disregarded the evidence.

Illinois C. R. Co. v. Neer, 26 Ill. App. 360; Relyea v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. 112 Mo. 86, 18 L. R. A. 817; Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Hammond, 58 Ark. 324; conceded to be reasonable and expressed in definite terms must necessarily be negligence as a matter of law. Georgia P. R. Co. v. Propst (1887) 83 Ala. 518; Gleason v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. (1896) 43 U. S. App. 89, 78 Fed. Rep. 647, 19 C. C. A. 636.

Proof having been given of the servant's knowledge of the rule and of its violation by him, the only question left open and to be submitted to the jury is whether or not such negligence was the proximate cause of the injury, or concurred with the negligence of the master in producing the injury. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Craig (1897) 47 U. S. App. 647, 80 Fed. Rep. 488, 25 C. C. A. 585, disapproving instruction which proceeded on the theory that the contract to observe the rule did not make the case different from what it would be if treated as controlled by general principles unaffected by contract.

Where a rule peremptorily requires that brakemen before making a coupling shall know that their signals are understood and obeyed by the engineer, a brakeman who is injured by a sudden and unexpected increase in the speed of the engine cannot excuse his violation of the rule on the ground that, at the time he prepared to make the coupling, the speed was not such as to endanger a person who used ordinary care. Deeds v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1887) 74 Iowa, 154.

It is not necessary that a plea setting up the defense that a servant caused his injury by disobeying a rule should aver that he "negligently" violated the rule. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mothershed (1895) 110 Ala. 143.

It is error to leave the question of the plaintiff's negligence to the jury, when the undisputed evidence shows that he was in the cab of an engine, contrary to instructions which had been given him. Connors v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. (1888) 74 Iowa, 383.

Yet in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Foley (1893) 94 Ky. 220, it was said arguendo, that a written agreement by which the plaintiff stipulated that he would observe a rule requiring him to use a coupling stick was not binding on him, unless such an implement was in fact indispensable, or at least clearly necessary for security of brakemen against the danger incident to coupling cars, since the defendant had otherwise no right to require the plaintiff to use the stick, or to make habitual use of it a condition of his right to maintain an action for personal injury received while he was engaged in coupling cars.

This principle is, however, subject to a necessary modification in cases where the rule alleged to be violated is couched in terms which necessitate testing the quality of the plaintiff's acts by the standard of the general law of negligence.

Whether certain conduct on the part of a 43 L. R. A.

servant is negligence as being a violation of rules is a question of fact where the rules relied upon do not command the doing or not doing of a particular act or acts, but simply impose upon him in general terms duties calling for the exercise of judgment, skill, and diligence. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Parker (1890) 131 Ill. 557, affirming 33 Ill. App. 405.

Where a rule simply forbids the coupling of cars while they are moving at a dangerous rate, it is for the jury to say whether the rule was violated under the circumstances in evidence. Denver, T. & Ft. W. R. Co. v. Smock (1897) 23 Colo. 456.

In Horan v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. (1893) 89 Iowa, 328, the court expressed a doubt whether, in view of the ordinary practice of coupling by hand, a rule requiring coupling sticks to be used ought to be held obligatory.

In Texas the necessity for taking the opinion of the jury would seem to be the same whether the duty exists apart from the rule or not. A trial court is in that state forbidden to charge the jury, in the absence of a statutory declaration, that any particular act or omission constitutes negligence, and this principle, it has been held, justifies a refusal to give an instruction which, in effect, includes the proposition that it is negligence per se to run a train at a greater speed than that permitted by the rules of the company. Fort Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Thompson (1893) 2 Tex. Civ. App. 170.

But even in Texas it was held that a verdict for the plaintiff should be set aside where evidence not contradicted except by witnesses who contradicted themselves, shows that the injury was caused by the plaintiff's violation of a rule. Southern P. Co. v. Ryan (1895, Tex. Civ. App.) 29 S. W. 527.

Where a rule is reasonable and susceptible of two constructions, a servant who in good faith attaches a certain meaning to it, and receives an injury in consequence, is not precluded from recovery as a matter of law. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Leighty (1895) 88 Tex. 604.

On the other hand, a railroad company is not liable for the death of an engineer in a collision occasioned by the misconstruction and consequent disobedience, by himself and the train conductor, of orders given, which, taken in connection with the general rules well known to both, were plain, and not misleading. Harris v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. (1892) 16 Va. L. J. 149.

(Cases in which the question whether the servant's right of action is barred depends upon the meaning of a rule received, are noted in VII. supra.)

The breach of a rule, like other kinds of contributory negligence, will preclude a minor from maintaining an action, where he may be presumed to have the capacity for comprehending

Shepard v. Boston & M. R. Co. 158 Mass. 174; Enright v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. 93 Mich. 409.

The mere fact that a servant is careless in the particular case raises no presumption that he is incompetent.

Hathaway v. Illinois C. R. Co. 92 Iowa, 337; Gravelle v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 10 Fed. Rep. 711; Davis v. Detroit & M. R. Co. 20 Mich. 105, 4 Am. Rep. 364.

The mere fact that he had never served as conductor before does not establish his incompetency. If it did, the company would be the absolute guarantor of the safety of everyone the first time any man was set to discharge the duties of a new position.

the danger resulting from his disobedience. E. S. Higgins Carpet Co. v. O'Keefe (1897) 51 U. S. App. 74, 79 Fed. Rep. 900, 25 C. C. A. 220, where a boy of fifteen was denied a remedy for an injury received in consequence of his disobedience of a rule forbidding the cleaning of machinery while it was in motion.

The fact that a fellow employee who had the right to control the plaintiff observed, prior to the time when the act which caused the injury was done, that the plaintiff was not provided with the necessary appliances for doing that act in the manner prescribed by a rule, and nevertheless suffered him to proceed without those appliances, is no excuse for a violation of that rule. Port Royal & W. C. R. Co. v. Davis (1894) 95 Ga. 292, where a conductor failed to stop a brakeman who, to his knowledge, was attempting to couple cars without a stick.

Where a complaint alleges that a railroad company was guilty of a breach of duty in failing to provide cars that could be coupled by hand, an answer that the contract between the employee and the company was embraced in a rule that the company would not assume any liability on account of injuries received in coupling by hand presents at least a prima facie defense which demands a replication from the plaintiff. Pennsylvania Co. v. Whitcomb (1887) 111 Ind. 212.

It is not necessary to plead rules of the company or any usage as to the manner of the performance of duty in order to authorize their introduction in evidence. These rules and usages are mere evidence bearing upon the question of negligence of the defendant or its employees, and the care and diligence of the plaintiff. Henry v. Sioux City & P. R. Co. (1885) 66 Iowa, 52; Alcorn v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (1891, Mo.) 16 S. W. 229.

In Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Tatman (1895) 10 Tex. Civ. App. 434, the admission of certain rules was objected to by appellant on the ground that they had no application to such work as was being done at the time deceased was killed. Most of them from their own terms appeared to have no such application; and all of the witnesses testified that none of them had reference to the work in which the injury was received. The court said: "The purpose in thus introducing the rules may have been: First, to show the absence, as alleged, of any provision such as ought to have been made to guard against such casualties as that in which deceased lost his life; or, second, to show that one or more of the rules did apply, and had been violated by the servants of appellant, and that they were thus guilty of negligence; or, third, to develop that, if none of the rules applied specifically to the situation existing when Tatman was killed, still provision was made for others, wherein the risk was similar, which, by proper care and

East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. McKenoy (Tenn.) 1 S. W. 500; Gulf, O. & S. F. R. Co. v. Compton, 75 Tex. 667; Hayes v. Western R. Corp. 3 Cush. 270; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 37 L. ed. 772; Campbell v. Wing, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 431; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Coniff, 90 Ky. 560; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Wiesener (Tex.) 2 S. W. 667; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Dunn, 138 Ind. 18; Brown v. Southern P. R. Co. 7 Utah, 288; Brasil v. Western N. O. R. Co. 93 N. C. 313; Relyea v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. 112 Mo. 86, 18 L. R. A. 817.

The negligence charged against the defendant is that it did not embody in its train order an admonition to look out for No. 5, and foresight, ought to have been made to apply to such states of fact as that in question. If none of the rules made such provision against the risk imposed upon Tatman as the company, in the exercise of ordinary care, should have made, the omission could be made to appear by production of the rules, though the more direct and simpler mode of showing the absence of a rule is usually found in the testimony of those acquainted with the subject. On the other hand, if, when the rules were in evidence any of them appeared to relate to such a situation as that under investigation, it was competent for either party to show that in fact it did not so apply, or that it was adequate or inadequate for the purpose. And if, by any of the rules, safeguards were provided against the dangers arising from conditions similar to those existing when Tatman was killed, which could have been extended so as to apply to the latter, this was a fact for the jury to consider in determining what could and what should have been done by the company to protect its employees, when engaged as Tatman was when killed. We think, therefore, it was proper to inquire into all of the rules which bore upon the issues, as suggested, but in the trial below many of them were dwelt upon which seem to us to throw no light upon the questions under investigation."

In other words, a servant is not debarred from recovering by the fact that, at the time his injury was received, he was acting in intentional violation of the master's rules, unless the injury was due, in whole or in part, to such violation. Ford v. Fitchburg R. Co. (1872) 110 Mass. 240, 14 Am. Rep. 598.

b. Violation of rule by plaintiff not a bar to recovery unless shown to be proximate cause of injury.

The general principle that contributory negligence is not available as a defense unless it is shown to have been an efficient cause of the plaintiff's injury has frequently been applied in cases where the servant is alleged to have violated a rule.

On this ground it has been held that the violation by an employee of a rule of the employer forbidding employees to change their clothes before quitting time did not, under the circumstances, prevent a recovery for his death caused by the bursting of a grindstone turning at an excessive rate of speed.  Helfenstein v. Medart (1896) 136 Mo. 595, Affirmed in Banc in 37 S. W. 829, Affirmed on Rehearing in 38 S. W. 294.

An instruction which predicates contributory negligence upon the existence of a certain rule prohibiting a particular course of action is of course properly refused where none of the defendant's rules can be construed in such a sense as to cover the circumstances in evidence.

In Western & A. R. Co. v. Bussey (1894) 95

that when it found that No. 5 had not reached Forrest City, it should have stopped the extra at Edmondson, and either held it there or given it further admonitions.

Granting that to be true, the accident would not have happened had the engineer of the extra not run recklessly through the cut, and had No. 5 not failed to send back a flagman. The causal connection was broken by the action of responsible agents, and their acts alone must be regarded as the proximate cause.

Washington v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 17 W. Va. 190; Wharton, Neg. §§ 134 et seq.; Shearm & Redf. Neg. § 26; Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. v. Elliott, 12 U. S. App. 381,

55 Fed. Rep. 949, 20 L. R. A. 582, 5 C. C. A. 347; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Bennett, 32 U. S. App. 621, 69 Fed. Rep. 525, 16 C. C. A. 300; Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 475, 24 L. ed. 259; Louisiana Mut. Ins. Co. v. Tweed, 7 Wall. 52, 19 L. ed. 67; New York C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Perriguy, 138 Ind. 414; Relyea v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. 112 Mo. 86, 18 L. R. A. 817; Harvey v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 32 N. Y. S. R. 817; Whittaker v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 49 Hun. 400; Mars v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 54 Hun. 625; Gould v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 66 Iowa, 590; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Commercial Union Ins. Co. 139 U. S. 237, 35 L. ed. 158; Hofnagle v. New

Ga. 584, complaint was made that the court erred in refusing to charge the jury, at the request of the defendant's counsel, as follows: "If you believe from the evidence that . . . the engineer in charge of the train violated a rule of the defendant which was in force and effect at the time of the accident, of which . . . [he] had knowledge, which provided that, while passing switches, the speed of the train should be slackened, and this collision was occasioned in whole, or at least in large part, from his not observing this rule, and that from such collision Bussey received injuries from which he subsequently died, the plaintiffs cannot recover, although the defendant may have been negligent in not having the switches properly set." But the court said: "This request was properly refused, we think, for the reason that there was no evidence in the record to justify the instruction therein contained. The only rule of the company in which we find the expression 'slacken the speed' employed at all is rule 35, which was introduced in evidence, and which provides that 'all trains will run with great care after rains, and slacken their speed when the track is in bad order, while passing switches, and when crossing long bridges and trestle work, and, when practicable, shut off steam.' There was no evidence submitted, so far as we have been able to gather from the record, that there had been recent rains, or that the track of the railroad company was in bad order. Indeed, the contrary of the latter condition seems to be established by the evidence in the case."

A negligent disregard of rules by the superior servant who was in immediate control of the plaintiff cannot be imputed to him, but he will be debarred from recovery if he voluntarily joins his superior in breaking the rule. Thus a section man who, without hesitation or objection, gets on a hand-car after a remark of the foreman which does not amount to a command, but is a mere suggestion, put interrogatively to ascertain if the men are willing to take the car without taking the precautions prescribed by the rules to guard them against the regular trains, becomes a participator in the breach of such rules, and cannot recover for injuries caused by a collision with a special train which would have been avoided if the rules had been observed. McGrath v. New York & N. E. R. Co. (1885) 15 R. I. 95.

So, also, where a rule of the company prohibits generally the use of intoxicating liquors by its officers and employees, the use thereof by an employee who sues for personal injuries will not defeat a recovery, unless such use contributed in some appreciable degree to producing the injury sustained. That the violation of such rule might have done so, if it did not in fact so contribute, will not defeat a recovery. 43 L. R. A.

Western & A. R. Co. v. Bussey (1894) 95 Ga. 584.

So, also, breach of a rule requiring employees to use a safety coupler will not prevent recovery by one who, while about to couple cars, is struck by a car owing to defects in the engine which prevent the engineer from controlling its movements properly, and is thereby caused to throw his hand between the deadwoods. Wabash & W. R. Co. v. Morgan (1892) 182 Ind. 480.

The violation of a rule requiring employees to examine the coupling apparatus before making a coupling is not the proximate cause of an injury received by a brakeman through being struck in the eye by a sliver of iron which the shock of the collision between the drawheads detached from one of them, where the uncontradicted evidence shows that immediately before the accident he had in fact ascertained that the coupling could not be made, and had desisted from the attempt to make it. Denver, T. & Ft. W. R. Co. v. Smock (1897) 23 Colo. 456.

In Brown v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (1895) 111 Ala. 275, the court used the following language: "Notice is not in such cases the equivalent of knowledge. A brakeman would have notice of a rule forbidding him to uncouple moving cars if he had information that his employer had adopted and promulgated a set of rules for the conduct of employees. This would put him on inquiry which, if pursued, would lead to a knowledge of the particular rule. Still, until the inquiry has been made and the knowledge gained, his conduct as to care or negligence cannot be measured by the rule,—a factor which did not operate upon him in the act done. He might be negligent in not pursuing the inquiry, but such negligence would be only a remote cause of the injury suffered by doing the act in a manner forbidden by the unknown rule." But this argument seems to be wholly irreconcilable with the general principle that constructive is legally equivalent to actual knowledge: (And see XI. e. infra.)

Upon general principles it is of course evident that the question of proximity of cause must, in cases of this type, be determined by considering whether the event which produced the injury was one of those which might reasonably have been expected to result from the servant's disobedience to the rule.

The violation of a rule requiring car repairers to put out a signal flag when they are at work is not the proximate cause of an injury received through the cars being struck by an engine which would have been brought to a standstill before reaching the car, if the lever had been in good order. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Wynne (1893, Tex. Civ. App.) 22 S. W. 1064.

A brakeman is not guilty of negligence in coupling cars without using a stick, although

York O. & H. R. R. Co. 55 N. Y. 608; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kelsey, 89 Ala. 287; Seale v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. 65 Tex. 274, 57 Am. Rep. 602; Williams v. Woodward Iron Co. 106 Ala. 254.

In order to warrant a finding that negligence, or an act not amounting to wanton wrong, is the proximate cause of an injury it must appear that the injury was the natural and probable consequence of the negligence or wrongful act, and that it ought to have been foreseen in the light of the attending circumstances.

Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 475, 24 L. ed. 259; Scheffer v. Washington City, V. M. & G. S. R. Co. 105 U. S.

252, 26 L. ed. 1071; Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. v. Elliott, 12 U. S. App. 381, 55 Fed. Rep. 949, 20 L. R. A. 582, 5 C. C. A. 347; Finalyson v. Utica Min. & Mill. Co. 32 U. S. App. 143, 67 Fed. Rep. 512, 14 C. C. A. 492; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Bennett, 32 U. S. App. 621, 69 Fed. Rep. 525, 16 C. C. A. 300.

All the employees on each train were the fellow servants of plaintiff.

Northern P. R. Co. v. Peterson, 162 U. S. 346, 40 L. ed. 994; Central R. Co. v. Keegan, 160 U. S. 259, 40 L. ed. 418; Balch v. Haas, 36 U. S. App. 693, 73 Fed. Rep. 974, 20 C. C. A. 151.

The disposition in his fellow servants to become careless is one of the risks which a the rules of the railroad company require it, when the cars and coupling are in such a position and condition that the stick would be useless. Berrigan v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1891) 37 N. Y. S. R. 414, Reversed in (1892) 181 N. Y. 582, but not as to this point.

An engineer's violation of a rule fixing a maximum for the speed of trains will prevent recovery for an injury caused by a collision at a place which he would not have reached if that maximum had not been exceeded. Sutherland v. Troy & B. R. Co. (1891) 125 N. Y. 787, on second appeal in supreme court (1893) 74 Hun, 162.

Failure of an engineer to take a position on the inside of a curve on approaching it, as required by a rule of the company, will not, as a matter of law, prevent a recovery for his injuries received in a collision with another train. Park v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1895) 85 Hun, 184.

It is for the jury to say whether there is a causal connection between the breach of a rule which required that employees who entered the blow-pit of a pulpmill for the purpose of washing the pulp should shovel the pulp off the plank walk on which they stood while doing the washing, and an injury which one of such employees received through being forced off the walk into the pulp by a jet of steam from the blow pipe which would have been cut off by the time he came opposite the pipe if he had proceeded in the first place to shovel off the pulp. Fickett v. Lisbon Falls Fibre Co. (1898) 91 Me. 268.

A brakeman who, without protesting against or reporting the infraction of a known rule requiring east-bound trains to enter a certain siding from the west end, alights for the purpose of opening the eastern switch, at a distance from it much greater than that at which he would, in the ordinary course of things have alighted, if the train had been stopped before reaching the western switch, cannot recover for injuries received from falling into an open culvert at the place where he steps off the car. West v. Southern P. Co. (1898) 56 U. S. App. 823, 85 Fed. Rep. 398, 29 C. C. A. 219.

In Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Craig (1896) 87 U. S. App. 654, 73 Fed. Rep. 642, 19 C. C. A. 681, where a brakeman who had, in violation of a rule, attempted to couple cars while in motion, caught his foot in an unblocked frog, and was run over, the court said that the question presented was, whether the intervention of the unblocked frog was, as distinguished from the original negligence of Craig in going between the moving cars, so new and independent a cause of the injury, that it was the sole proximate cause, and proceeded thus: "Much reliance was placed by the defendant in error on the case of Smithwick v. Hall & U. Co. (1890) 59 Conn. 261, 12 L. R. A. 279. In that case a workman had been warned not to go to the end of an unfenced platform, because of the danger of slipping on the ice which was there, and of falling off to the ground below. He went there, nevertheless, and while there the wall of an adjacent building fell on him and he was injured. The supreme court of errors of Connecticut held that his negligence in not heeding the warning was not contributory to the injury which happened to him. The case is easily distinguished from the one at bar. There the injury which happened proceeded from a manifestly different cause from that which he [the plaintiff] had been warned against, and, while he might have assumed the risk from the one, he did not assume the risk from the other. Here, if the jury were to find that the accident, as it happened, by the catching of the foot in the frog, was entirely different in its character from that which the plaintiff might have expected by falling over any obstruction, or by slipping, they would be at liberty to do so, and to find that his negligence in going between too rapidly moving cars was not a proximate cause of the accident. All that we hold is that the jury might reasonably have found, from the evidence in this case, that danger from the frog was not substantially different from the dangers which he had reason to anticipate, and therefore, that his negligence did contribute to the accident, as a proximate cause. Hence the question of proximate cause should have been submitted to the jury."

In Gleason v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. (1896) 43 U. S. App. 89, 73 Fed. Rep. 647, 19 C. C. A. 636, where a rule similar to that discussed in the case last cited had been violated, it was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that, even if the course which plaintiff took was negligence, it was not the proximate cause of the accident, because he did not know of the presence of the grade stake over which he stumbled. But the court said: "The obstruction offered by the grade stake was not different from that which was offered by the cross ties and the cross rails. It was exactly of the same character and it was of the class of dangers which the plaintiff had every reason to anticipate in going in between the rails and in front of the moving car under the circumstances. It seems to us clear, as a matter of law, therefore, that his negligence was the proximate cause of his injury."

In Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Ward (1894) 18 U. S. App. 688, 61 Fed. Rep. 927, 10 C. C. A. 166, the rules of the company required that coupling sticks be furnished to employees of certain classes, and the coupling of cars by hand was strictly forbidden. The defendant in error admitted his knowledge of the rules in this respect, and testified that he had been supplied with a coupling stick, that he did not use it, and that when he was hurt he was attempting to make the coupling by hand. Upon these facts the trial judge was asked, but refused, to instruct that if the plaintiff was injured by reason of his neglect to use the coupling stick he could not recover. The contention of the plaintiff was that the cases laying down the rule as to the consequences of a violation of a rule were not applicable for the reason that, under the charge which the court gave, the verdict necessarily meant that the accident was caused solely by a hole in the track, into which the servant had stumbled, and that the coupling stick was in no way connected with it. The court, however, said: "While the court did instruct to the effect that, to entitle the plaintiff to recover, it should appear that the hole or depression between the ties was the sole cause of the injury, it is impossible to say that, if the further instruction asked had been given, the jury would not have found that the plaintiff's neglect to use the coupling stick, and his undertaking to effect the coupling by hand, were efficient contributory causes. The instruction asked should have been given, and if there were considerations of which, however, no suggestion has been made here tending to show that in this instance the failure of the plaintiff to comply with the rules of the company was not culpable, or did not contribute to the injury, they should have been submitted to the determination of the jury."

man assumes in going into the service of a railroad company.

Kennelly v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 166 Pa. 60; Cincinnati, I. St. L. & C. R. Co. v. Darling, 130 Ind. 376; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Conkling, 15 Ill. App. 157; Illinois O. R. Co. v. Neer, 31 Ill. App. 126, 26 Ill. App. 356; McGrath v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 15 R. I. 95; Wright v. New York O. R. Co. 25 N. Y. 569; Enright v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. 93 Mich. 409; Kansas & A. Valley R. Co. v. Dye, 36 U. S. App. 23, 70 Fed. Rep. 24, 16 C. C. A. 604; Kansas & A. Valley R. Co. v. Waters, 36 U. S. App. 31, 70 Fed. Rep.

The question whether the breach of the rule was the proximate cause of the injury has sometimes been discussed with reference to the consideration whether the method of doing the work prescribed by the master was really such as tended to lessen the risk of accident.

In Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Foley (1893) 94 Ky. 220, the court, after stating that the decisive issue in the case was whether, but for plaintiff's failure to use the coupling stick at the time of the accident, it would not have occurred, proceeded thus: "It is proved that although a coupling stick was, at the time plaintiff signed the writing, delivered to him, the conductor who delivered it told him the written undertaking was required as mere form. It is further shown that in order to use the stick it is necessary for a brakeman to carry it about his person in a belt, which causes more danger of falling and being injured while running on top of a car, or climbing hurriedly on or off it, than is compensated for by any advantage or security against injury it may be. Besides, the coupling stick is proved to be generally discarded, and not used at all by brakemen on freight cars of the defendant, which fact is not only proper to be proved, as was done on trial of this case, but tends strongly to show the coupling stick does not answer the purpose for which it was apparently designed. For the opinion of brakemen in regard to utility of an implement such as a coupling stick, which they only have use for, and must necessarily know more about 28, 16 C. C. A. 609; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Parker, 131 Ill. 557.

Messrs. J. M. Moore and W. L. Terry, for defendant in error:

It is the duty of a railway company to know where its trains are, and to inform its servants, and warn them of what is necessary to avoid collision.

Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Smith, 76 Tex. 611.

A railway is not negligent toward its servants if it varies from its regular timetable in running its trains, provided it gives to its servants reasonable notice of any than any other class of persons, is of course entitled to great weight, because their knowledge is derived from actual experience, and after an anxious effort to properly test its value; and no evidence could speak more decisively against the value of a coupling stick than the general disuse of it by brakemen. But it is competent for the jury in every case like this to consider the merit of the coupling stick in determining the question of contributory negligence, as was doubtless done on trial of this case, and we need not, therefore, consider the question further."

An instruction that if the failure to use a coupling knife contributed to the plaintiff's injury he could not recover, is rightly refused, where there is no evidence in the case to show what a coupling knife is; how it is used; whether or not the defendants had an established rule requiring it to be used; whether or not such a rule would be a reasonable rule; whether the failure to use it would have been negligence under the circumstances in this case; nor whether the failure to use the coupling knife contributed to the injury. Bonner v. Hickey (1893, Tex. Civ. App.) 23 S. W. 85.

A rule forbidding employees to enter between moving cars to uncouple them is irrelevant where there is no evidence that the plaintiff did enter between the cars while they were moving. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Pitts (1897, Tex. Civ. App.) 42 S. W. 255.

A servant who is shown to have been acting, at the time the injury was received, in violation of a rule, has the burden of proving that his breach of duty was not an efficient cause of the injury. Prather v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (1888) 80 Ga. 427.

It is proper, therefore, to give a charge to the effect that, if the plaintiff violated the rule in question, the presumption would arise that such violation contributed to produce the collision, and the burden of proof was on him to show that it did not so contribute, directly or indirectly. Western & A. R. Co. v. Bussey (1894) 95 Ga. 584.

An instruction to the effect that, if the plaintiff was running his engine at a forbidden rate of speed when it was derailed and injured him, he cannot recover, is erroneous both on the ground that the trial judge cannot, in Texas (see XI. a, supra), declare that any act or omission constitutes negligence, and on the ground that it allows the jury to find for the plaintiff irrespective of whether the excessive speed was the cause of the injury. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. John (1895) 9 Tex. Civ. App. 842.

A car repairer cannot recover for an accident due partly to his own violation of a rule promulgated to secure him from injury from moving trains, and partly to the negligence of a car inspector in failing to keep a lookout as he had promised to do. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Winslow (1894) 56 Ill. App. 462.

From the principle that an employer cannot, change, which if unknown to them might endanger their safety.

Northern P. R. Co. v. Poirier, 29 U. S. App. 583, 67 Fed. Rep. 890, 15 C. C. A. 52; Sheehan v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 91 N. Y. 332; McLeod v. Gintner, 80 Ky. 399.

Negligence is the failure to do what a reasonable and prudent person would ordinarily have done under the circumstances of the situation; or doing what such person under the existing circumstances would not have done.

Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Jones, 95 U. S. 441, 24 L. ed. 507.

by any form of contract, shield himself, directly or indirectly, from liability for the consequences of his negligence, it follows that the mere failure of a railroad brakeman to comply with his express contract to use a coupling knife in coupling cars will not prevent his recovery for an injury sustained by being caught between dead-woods, if the use of the knife would not have removed the danger. Bonner v. Bean (1891) 80 Tex. 152.

The breach of a rule requiring an engineer to stand in "close places" is the proximate cause of an accident caused by the fact that his engine got out of his control on a high trestle, and ran over the stop block at the end. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Stutts (1894) 105 Ala. 368.

c. Servant not bound by rules not known to him.

1. General principles stated.

To whichever of the two principles suggested at the commencement of this subdivision the duty of the servant to observe the rules is referred, it is manifest that, in so far as his negligence is predicated merely from his failure to perform that duty, he must be shown to have had knowledge of a rule before he can be held culpable on the ground of his not having obeyed it.

In other words, a servant "cannot be negligent in respect of an act which is only improper because forbidden by a rule [of the master], unless he knows of the rule." Alabama Midland R. Co. v. McDonald (1895) 112 Ala. 216.

This doctrine is a corollary of the general principle that "negligence can only be affirmed in respect of circumstances and conditions known to the party to whom it is imputed." Brown v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (1895) 111 Ala. 275.

In the case of a rule promulgated by a private person there can evidently be no presumption indulged like that which, in the case of a public statute, charges the persons affected by it with knowledge of its provisions. Gregory v. Ohio River R. Co. (1893) 37 W. Va. 806.

For other cases recognizing the general doctrine, see Fay v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. (1893) 30 Minn. 231; Little Rock, M. R. & T. R. Co. v. Leverett (1886) 48 Ark. 333; Georgia P. R. Co. v. Davis (1890) 92 Ala. 300; Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Ryles (1889) 84 Ga. 420; Covey v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1887) 27 Mo. App. 170; Pleart v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1891) 82 Iowa, 148; La Croy v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1890) 57 Hun, 67, Reversed in (1892) 132 N. Y. 570, but merely on the ground that the evidence showed that the plaintiff had knowledge of the rule which he violated; Sprong v. Boston & A. R. Co. (1874) 58 N. Y. 56; Gregory v. Ohio River R. Co. (1893) 37 W. Va. 618; Turner v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. (1895) 40 W. Va. 675; Louisville, E. & St. L. Consol. R. Co. v. Uts 43 L. R. A.

The railroad company was remiss in its duty in sending a special train out in the charge of a new conductor, who was making his first trip.

Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Guyton, 115 Ind. 450.

In America it would seem that a question of negligence is always a question for the jury.

Whittaker's Smith, Neg. p. 40; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 18; Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 745; 2 Thomp. Trials, p. 1208.

If the negligence of the company had a (1892) 133 Ind. 268; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Hinsie (1891) 82 Tex. 623; Bonner v. Moore (1893) 3 Tex. Civ. App. 416; Georgia P. R. Co. v. Propst (1887) 83 Ala. 518; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Perry (1888) 87 Ala. 392; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hawkins (1890) 92 Ala. 241, sustaining a demurrer to a plea which did not aver knowledge on the servant's part.

The rules of the master, therefore, are not admissible as evidence on the issue of the servant's negligence in violating them, unless there is also testimony going to show that he had knowledge of them. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Plunkett (1881) 25 Kan. 188; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Berkey (1893) 136 Ind. 181.

In Parker v. Georgia P. R. Co. (1889) 83 Ga. 539, the court approved of the admission of a rule-book as evidence, there being sufficient testimony to show that it contained the rules in force when the plaintiff was injured. The court took the ground that, as the question whether he had knowledge of them or not was one not going to their admissibility, but to their binding effect upon his conduct, there could be no objection to introducing them as one step in the defendant's case. Their verification would be a subsequent matter. But the mere fact that the plaintiff denies all knowledge of the rule which he is charged with violating is not sufficient to prevent its being put in evidence. Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Askew (1890) 90 Ala. 5.

A rule which relieves the employer of the obligation to give the employee notice of dangers similar to those against which rules are commonly promulgated as a safeguard stands on the same footing as any other rule. Thus, where a railroad company in an action for injuries caused by a collision with a "wild" train admits that it was run without any precaution or notice in advance that such a train was to be expected, and in order to rebut any presumption of negligence on the premises, relies upon a rule dispensing with such notice, the defense will not be allowed, unless it shows that its employees were duly informed of the rule, or had such knowledge of its usage and practice in the premises as would be equivalent to actual notice of the dangers arising from the particular occurrence which the rule was designed to obviate. Olson v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. (1888) 38 Minn. 117.

So far as regards the binding effect of a rule, it is immaterial how it has come to the knowledge of the employee. "Knowledge either express or such as the law will imply, without reference to the means by which it is imparted, binds the employee to compliance. Therefore a request to charge to the effect that, if the rules be written or printed, each employee should either be furnished with a copy or advised as to where he can read or hear them read, and which leaves out of the consideration all other means of acquiring knowledge, should have been denied, and the court in giving such share in producing the injury, the company is liable, even though the negligence of a fellow servant was contributory.

Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Cummings, 106 U. S. 700, 27 L. ed. 266; St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Triplett, 54 Ark. 300, 11 L. R. A. 773; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Henderson, 37 Ohio St. 549; Coppins v. New York O. & H. R. R. Co. 122 N. Y. 557.

Having, without proper safeguards, and even with misdirection, set machinery in motion that naturally resulted in injury to one of his servants because other servants did not exercise diligence to prevent it, the master ought not to be shielded by the fact that, believing they would exercise such diligence, he could not foresee such injury.

Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Smith, 76 Tex. 611; Mather v. Rillston, 156 U. S. 398, 39 L. ed. 470.

Sanborn, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

At about 2 o'clock in the afternoon on October 26, 1890, engine No. 5 of the Little Rock & Memphis Railroad Company ran into the rear of a freight train on the railroad of that company; and G. F. Barry, the de-instruction erred." Port Royal & W. C. R. Co. v. Davis (1894) 95 Ga. 292.

Whether a servant knew of a particular rule is of course generally a question of fact for the jury. Pleart v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1891) 82 Iowa, 148; McNee v. Coburn Trolley Track Co. (1898) 170 Mass. 288.

2. When a servant is deemed to have knowledge of a rule.

In La Croy v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1892) 132 N. Y. 570, the court assumed that, if the rules of the company had been put in possession of the employees concerned, with instructions to read and observe them, the plaintiff could not have recovered.

In the above case the plaintiff's knowledge was inferred from his own testimony that, although he had not been furnished with a book of the rules, nor required to read it, he had had access to it and had actually read it.

As to the circumstances under which knowledge of the rules will be imputed to the servant the essential point to be remembered is that a servant is in this regard under a duty which is reciprocal to that of the master with respect to the promulgation. Francis v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. (1892) 110 Mo. 387 (where the court approved a change to the effect that "it was the duty of the switchmen engaged in the service to use due care and diligence in order to acquaint themselves with such orders, rules, and regulations, if placed or posted at the usual place or places, where such orders are posted as the company had promulgated to govern, control, and regulate their conduct, and to instruct them as to the manner in which they could perform their duties") (1895) 127 Mo. 658 (where the doctrine was categorically laid down that a rule which had been duly posted in the yard and the roundhouse was admissible in evidence).

In an earlier case the same court remarked: "It would be impossible for employees properly to discharge their duties without becoming conversant with the rules relating to their obligations of service to the company. In numerous instances it has been held that passengers must equip themselves with a sufficient knowledge of the regulations of the common carrier which transports them from place to place (Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Rosensweig, 118 Pa. 519), and sound reasoning would seem to lay an employee under a greater stress of necessity and of duty of becoming acquainted with rules, the observance of which would promote, not only his own safety, but as well those with whom he jointly labors, and that, having sufficient opportunity therefor, the inference should be drawn that he did not remain ignorant of that which the highest promptings of duty and self interest demanded he should know; and so the point has been ruled." Alcorn v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (1891, Mo.) 16 S. W. 229. 43 L. R. A.

In this case the court followed the doctrine laid down in Alexander v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (1886) 83 Ky. 589, where it was said that the fact of the plaintiff's not having been furnished with a copy of the printed rules and being ignorant of their existence did not constitute sufficient reason for rejecting them in this case, and they were properly admitted; for it was his duty to acquaint himself with those rules which manifestly he might have done by the use of ordinary diligence.

In all cases where the testimony falls short of showing that the servant received either from his master or his master's representatives direct information as to the contents of that particular rule, the knowledge of which constitutes a material issue, the essential question to be decided is whether the servant had a reasonably sufficient opportunity to make himself acquainted with them.

Where an employee contracts with express reference to the rules of the company, there can of course be no question as to their operations upon him. Matchett v. Cincinnati, W. & M. R. Co. (1892) 182 Ind. 334, 340.

In one case it has been held that, in the absence of proof to the contrary, it will be presumed that the master notified the servant of the rules by which he was to be bound. Pilkinton v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. (1888) 70 Tex. 226. But this decision is scarcely reconcilable with the others cited in this subdivision.

The ordinary mode of promulgation is by the distribution of printed copies of the rules among the employees whom they concern with instructions to study their provisions. If this course has been adopted there will naturally be very little room for a dispute as to the fact of the servant's knowledge, and, as a matter of fact, in the great majority of cases the servant's knowledge is not a serious issue.

In Corcoran v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. (1891) 126 N. Y. 673, one of the rules provided that "every employee must acquaint himself with these rules and directions and keep a copy of them in his possession. New rules are made from time to time as occasion requires. Notice of them is given on the bulletin boards of the company at Buffalo, East Buffalo, Elmira, and Binghamton. Employees must keep themselves informed of new rules by examining these bulletin boards." It was shown that the rules were printed on the back of the timetables, and were kept for distribution at all points where the men could get them. They were kept for distribution in the office of the master mechanic and yardmaster at East Buffalo where the plaintiff was at work. Upon this state of the evidence no suggestion was made that the rules had not been properly published.

In Sutherland v. Troy & B. R. Co. (1893) 74 Hun, 102, it was assumed by the court that an engineer had knowledge of a rule which had been posted on one of the regular bulletins.

fendant in error, who was the fireman on this engine, leaped from it, and was injured. He sued the company for damages, and alleged that he was injured by its negligence in employing an incompetent conductor upon the train his engine drew, and in failing to give notice to its servants in charge of engine No. 5 of the whereabouts and movements of the freight train, and in failing to give notice to its servants in charge of the freight train of the whereabouts and movements of engine No. 5. The plaintiff in error, the railroad company, answered that its conductor was not incompetent, and that it was not its duty to give the conductor and engineer of either of the trains which collided notice of the movements or whereabouts of the other. Upon these two issues the testimony was conflicting, and the jury found for the defendant in error. These facts, however, were uncontradicted: The railroad of the plaintiff in error extends from Hopefield, a town opposite Memphis, in the state of Tennessee, westward to Little Rock, in the state of Arkansas. The first telegraph station west of Hopefield is Edmondson, 15 miles distant, and the second is Forrest City, 47 miles distant. Argenta is a station still further west, near the city of Little Rock. The freight train was a regular train. It had left Hopefield at 3:50 A. M.; was due at Edmondson at 5 A. M., but had been so delayed that it did not leave that station until 9:40 A. M., four hours and forty minutes later than its schedule time; and while it was standing on the main track, on a curve in a deep cut outside the yard limits, about  $\frac{1}{2}$  mile east of Forrest City, at about 2 o'clock in the afternoon, engine No. 5 crashed into

In Brennan v. Michigan C. R. Co. (1892) 98 Mich. 157, the servant's knowledge of a particular rule was proved by a writing in which he acknowledged over his signature that he had received a copy of the rules, and promised to make himself familiar with them.

In Frits v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. (1895, Tex. Civ. App.) 30 S. W. 85, no question as to the servant's knowledge was raised, where his attention had recently been called to the violated rule by a special bulletin.

In Darracott v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1887) 83 Va. 288, the servant's knowledge of the rule was proved by the fact that he had received for a copy.

In another case: no question was raised as to the servant's knowledge where he had subscribed the rules. Ward v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1894) 39 W. Va. 46.

So, in Finley v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (1893) 59 Fed. Rep. 429, (1894) 25 U. S. App. 16, 63 Fed. Rep. 228, 12 C. C. A. 595, the plaintiff's knowledge was assumed where he had signed an agreement waiving all and any liability of the company to him for the results of an infraction of the rule. A like assumption was made in Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Craig (1897) 47 U. S. App. 647, 80 Fed. Rep. 488, 25 C. C. A. 585, where the servant at the time he accepted employment acknowledged the receipt of the rules and agreed carefully to study and abide by them.

Where an employer has taken the precaution of requiring an employee to sign a written statement to the effect that he has read and understands the rules, it seems clear on general principles that the employee, in the absence of evidence tending to show that his subscription was procured by fraud, cannot allege ignorance of those rules as an excuse for his violation of one of them.

In Sedgwick v. Illinois C. R. Co. (1887) 73 Iowa, 158, an action by a brakeman for personal injury received while attempting to uncouple cars in motion, it appeared that a contract had been signed by him in which he acknowledged that he had been made acquainted with a rule of the company, strictly forbidding any attempt to uncouple moving cars, and in which he also agreed to assume all risks of the forbidden act, and hold the company harmless for any injury he might sustain while doing it. The trial court excluded the paper on plaintiff's objection, on the ground that it was incompetent and immaterial, and was in conflict with the provisions of the statute (Code, § 1307), and in contravention of public policy. This exclusion the supreme court held to be erroneous, saying: 43 L. R. A.

"It may be that, regarding the instrument simply as a contract between the parties, some of its provisions could not be upheld; but we do not have occasion to go into that question; for, aside from its character as an agreement, there are grounds upon which we think it very clear that defendant was entitled to have it admitted in evidence. It is the agreement upon which Oakes entered its service, and it contains specific directions as to the manner in which he was expected to perform the duties of his employment. It advised him that it was regarded as a dangerous act to attempt to uncouple when the cars are in motion, and that he was expressly forbidden to attempt to do that. The article signed by him is an admission by him that he knew of that prohibition, as well as an agreement that he would assume all the risks of the forbidden act, and hold the company harmless for any injury he might sustain while doing it. . . . The fact that he contracted to hold it harmless is quite immaterial. The defendant had the right to introduce the paper in evidence, then, because it showed, not only the existence of the rule, and that it constituted one of the conditions of the employment, but that its existence was known to Oakes."

But where the express agreement simply binds the servant to ascertain the provisions of the employer's rules, it will not be construed as referring to any rules except those which the master has taken some active steps to bring to the servant's knowledge. The undertaking of an employee, entered into in writing as one of the terms of his employment, to "study the rules governing employees, carefully keep posted, and obey orders," does not extend to any unknown rules not promulgated to him. Carroll v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. (1889) 82 Ga. 452, 6 L. R. A. 214.

The following decisions will indicate the views which the appellate courts have taken in regard to the sufficiency or insufficiency of the evidence to establish the fact of the servant's knowledge under different circumstances.

Whether certain rules have been duly promulgated is a question for the jury where they are not included in the general printed schedule of rules, and the testimony upon which the defendant relies as showing that they were published by posting on blackboard is quite vague and indefinite. Doig v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. (1897) 151 N. Y. 579.

In Seese v. Northern P. R. Co. (1889) 39 Fed. Rep. 487, the question of the servant's knowledge of a rule was held to have been rightly submitted to the jury, where a witness testified for the defendant that the rule was in force the rear of it. The engineer in charge of this engine had passed this freight train at Edmondson at 9:30 that morning, on his way east to Hopefield, and he knew it was late. When the superintendent of the company delivered the order, under which the train drawn by engine No. 5 was operated on this day, to its conductor, he told him to look out for this freight train, as it was still in the bottom between Edmondson and Forrest City; and the conductor repeated this warning to the engineer when he communicated the order to him before leaving Hopefield. In the early part of this day a military company, which arrived at Memphis too late for the regular passenger train, engaged of this railroad company an extra train to take it to Little Rock, and the engineer and fireman of engine No. 5 were directed to draw this train with their engine. The freight train was, as we have said, a regular train, and it was known as "No. 5." This was the order under which the extra ran:

Little Rock & Memphis Railroad.
Telegraphic Train Order No. 5 81
Memphis, Oct. 26, 1890.

To C. & E. of Eng. 5, Hopefield
C. & E. No. 5 at Forrest City
C. & E. Eng. 4 & No. 6 Brinkley Engine 5 will run from Hopefield to Argenta extra when No. 5 is overtaken pass and run ahead of them meet No. 6 and Eng. 4 at Brinkley, do not pass Brinkley
Unless Eng. 3 is there.

A. J. W.

at the time that plaintiff received his injury, that it was one of those made for the information of the employees in the operating department, and that these rules were sent and distributed to the different heads, but could not testify positively that they were sent to the heads of the management of the yards at the place where the accident occurred, while, on the other hand, the plaintiff, in rebuttal, testified that the rule had never been enforced while he was at that place, and that he "never knew anything about rules whatever."

The long-continued existence of a rule or custom may be shown in order to lead up to the inference that an employee was not ignorant of it.

Thus where a brakeman is injured in trying to couple cars in motion, it is error to refuse to admit in evidence a rule forbidding this to be done, where testimony has been introduced by the defendant going to prove that it had been in force several years, that it was printed on the back of the timetables distributed to employees; and that a special copy was posted in all particularly public places along the road. Alcorn v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (1890) 14 S. W. 942; (1891) 108 Mo. 81.

A railroad company is responsible for an injury caused by the servant's ignorance of rules where his superior officer has failed to comply with his repeated requests to furnish him with a copy of them. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Kiziah (1893) 4 Tex. Civ. App. 356.

One who has acted as assistant station agent for eighteen months will be presumed to know the rules of the company pertaining to the duties of that position. Helm v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (1895) 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1004.

On the other hand, a baggage master is not presumed to know whether the rules and schedules provided for the running of the defendant's trains on its road were defective or ambiguous, inasmuch as it was not his business to run the defendant's trains, or either of them. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Rhodes (1876) 56 Ga. 645.

So, a servant is not affected with notice of a rule printed on the back of a timetable which is nailed with its face outward upon the wall of the office of the department to which he belongs. Mackey v. Baltimore & P. R. Co. (1890) 8 Mackey, 282.

It cannot be held, as a matter of law, that a servant had constructive notice of a rule which the evidence fails to show was posted during the term of his employment. Francis v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. (1892) 110 Mo. 387.

Knowledge of a standing order not included 43 L. R. A.

among the printed rules cannot be presumed from the fact that it had been posted at some previous time, where there is no evidence going to show whether it had been torn down, or was still up during the servant's term of service. Wooden v. Western N. Y. & P. R. Co. (1892) 46 N. Y. S. R. 77.

In Shenandoah Valley R. Co. v. Lucado (1880) 86 Va. 390, the court, after quoting one of the defendant's rules, said: "These rules were in force, and had been for several years, when the accident occurred, although they had not been formally promulgated by the receiver after his appointment. They are printed, and copies of them had been duly furnished to section foremen, Jennings among the number, for the guidance of themselves and the men under their charge. The deceased had been in the employ of the company as a section hand for many months prior to the accident, and the presumption is that he was acquainted with the rule above quoted. At all events, the fair inference from the record is that he had reasonable opportunity to become acquainted with it, which, for the purposes of the present case, is equivalent to actual knowledge."

Where plaintiff has denied all knowledge of a rule requiring the use of a coupling stick, it is competent for the defendant to prove, as bearing upon the fact of the plaintiff's knowledge, the fact that he had frequently seen other employees using such sticks, but not the mere fact that the rules were frequently referred to by the employees generally in the discharge of their duties. Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Askew (1890) 90 Ala. 5.

The knowledge of a foreman of a gang that there is a certain rule is not imputed to his subordinates. Covey v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1887) 27 Mo. App. 170.

d. Validity of rules as regards employees.

The question whether particular rules are binding on employees has been discussed from two standpoints, (1) that of public policy; (2) that of reasonableness.

1. Public policy.

The rules in regard to which the consideration of public policy is material are those which purport to relieve the employer of some responsibility which the law would otherwise impose upon him. According to the weight of authority in the United States this object cannot be effected by rules any more than by the separate contracts which have sometimes been resorted to for the same purpose.

The rules of the company made this extra train inferior in grade to the regular freight train, under this order, and imposed upon its conductor and engineer the duty to keep out of the way of that freight train, which they knew was somewhere upon the single track in front of them. These rules also required the crew of the freight train, when it stopped and stood, as it did, for three quarters of an hour before the accident occurred, on the curve, in a deep cut,  $\frac{1}{2}$  mile east of Forrest City, to immediately station and maintain a flagman ten or twelve telegraph poles in the rear of its train, and to place torpedoes on the track, not less than fifteen telegraph poles behind it, for the purpose of warning and stopping approaching trains which might follow it. These rules gave the employees of the company notice that it proposed to use its railroad for the passage of trains at any time it chose, and that they must protect themselves against their approach. The engineer of the extra train, however, did not keep his engine under control, so that he could stop it when he saw the freight train, but he drove it on with such speed that it was impossible for him to prevent the collision after he came in sight of

So it is held that the duty of a master to furnish reasonably safe machinery, being nonassignable, cannot be shifted to his servants merely by the promulgation of a rule requiring them to inspect the appliances handled by them. Ford v. Fitchburg R. Co. (1872) 110 Mass. 240, 14 Am. Rep. 598 (decision as to a rule requiring that the driver of an engine should be held responsible for the condition of his engine, and must be sure that it is in good working order).

So, a railroad company cannot escape liability for injuries caused by the defective quality of the slide stakes of a lumber car by the plea that, according to its system, the duty of loading and adjusting the stakes was imposed on the shipper. Bushby v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1887) 107 N. Y. 874.

The fact that there is an express statute fixing the liability of railroad companies for negligence causing death or injury to their employees has been emphasized as furnishing a particularly strong reason for declaring invalid a rule which requires an employee "to look after and be responsible for his own safety." Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Orr (1890) 91 Ala. 548.

This decision was followed in Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Jones (1890) 92 Ala. 218, where the employee had agreed especially to be bound by certain rules, one of which ran as follows: "The conditions of employment by the company are that the regular compensation paid for the services of employees shall cover all risks incurred, and liability to accident from any cause whatever, while in the service of this company. If an employee is disabled by accident or other cause, the right to claim compensation for injuries will not be recognized. Allowances, when made in such cases, will be as a gratuity, justified by the circumstances of the case, and previous good conduct of the party. The fact of remaining in the service of the company will be considered acceptance of these conditions. All officers employing men to work for this company will have these conditions distinctly understood and agreed to by each employee, before he enters the service of the company."

The effect of these decisions, however, has been somewhat circumscribed by two more recent rulings.

Commenting on the effect of a contract similar to that referred to in the case last cited, the court said: "So far as rule 140 or any other rule militates against liability imposed upon the employer or master under § 2590 [of the Code], or contravenes the principle of law which requires the employer or master to furnish and maintain suitable material and appliances for the safe prosecution of its business, and the right of the employee to presume that this has been done, will be regarded as wholly inoperative and afford no protection to the employer or master; but so far as rule 140 imposes the duty upon employees to examine for their own safety the condition of the cars, engines, and machinery, etc., before using them or exposing themselves on or with the same so as to ascertain as far as reasonably can be done their condition and soundness, it is reasonable and proper. It cannot be expected of car conductors or brakemen to make the same careful examination, and to be able to discover defects to the same extent, as that expected and required of the employer or master, or persons intrusted generally with this duty for the public safety or safety of employees; but the character of the general duties to be performed by conductors or brakemen is such that they necessarily become more or less familiar with the appliances and machinery constantly in their use and under their supervision, and know to some extent when they are not in proper condition for safe use. To the extent of their information, and the opportunities afforded to make such examination consistently with their other duties, and the circumstances attending, they should observe and obey the rule." Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Graham (1891) 94 Ala. 545.

In Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Pearson (1892-93) 97 Ala. 211, this passage was cited with approval, and it was held that a rule of this tenor imposed, within the limits there laid down, a duty upon the servants.

The following cases, in which contracts of the above description entered into without reference to any rules have been declared invalid, may be consulted for general principles in addition to those just cited: Kansas P. R. Co. v. Peavey (1883) 29 Kan. 169, 44 Am. Rep. 630; Johnson v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (1890) 86 Va. 975; Rose v. Des Moines Valley R. Co. (1874) 39 Iowa, 246; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Spangler (1886) 44 Ohio St. 471; Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Eubanks (1886) 48 Ark. 460; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Wood (1896, Tex. Civ. App.) 85 S. W. 879.

Some courts, however, seem to lean towards a doctrine which, if followed to its logical conclusion, would have the effect of completely overturning the just and salutary principle that certain duties of the master are nonassignable. Thus, it has been laid down that a rule requiring brakemen to examine and know for themselves that the brakes, ladders, etc., which they are to use are in proper condition, and, if not, to put them in good condition or report them for repairs, does not add materially to the duties imposed upon them by the law, though it was also conceded that they are relieved of this duty of inspection, in so far as it is imposed on them by such a rule, where the company does not furnish them with either the appliances or the opportunities necessary for making the required inspection. Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Fry (1891) 131 Ind. 819.

In the recent case of Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Carroll (1898) 52 U. S. App. 442, 84 Fed. Rep. 772, 28 C. C. A. 207, the court expressed its the regular train; and the crew of the freight train failed to give warning to the approaching extra of the presence of their train, either by torpedo or by flagman. In short, these fellow servants of the defendant in error were guilty of gross negligence, without which it is highly improbable, if not impossible, that the accident could have occurred.

One of the rules of the company, however, required all orders to be given in writing, where practicable; and counsel for the defendant in error insisted that the company was negligent because it did not insert in the written order to the men in control of the extra train a statement that the freight train was delayed east of Forrest City, and an admonition to beware of it, and because the train despatcher did not stop the extra train at Edmondson, as it passed there, and notify its crew again that the freight had not reached Forrest City. In support of their view, three witnesses for the defendant in error, who had had experience in railroading, testified that in their opinion this course should have been pursued. On the other hand, it appeared by the evidence that this railroad was operated under the standard rules, which were prepared some years ago opinion that a rule of the same purport as that reviewed in the Indiana case was valid, and stated as the dilemma in which the servant was placed by his disregarding it, that if an inspection of car couplings made in compliance with such a rule of which a brakeman had knowledge would have disclosed the defective character of the link, from which his injuries resulted, and he failed to make the prescribed examination, he cannot recover; while, if the defect was latent so that a proper inspection would not have disclosed it, his recovery is also barred, as the accident was an assumed risk of the service.

In another state court the position has been taken that, as an employee cannot be relieved of his duties and obligations by the fact that other employees have failed to do their duty, and a rule requiring brakemen to inspect brakes to ascertain if they are in proper condition for use imposes upon them no higher duty than is imposed by the law itself, the company is not entitled to an instruction that, if its officers in charge of freight trains habitually caused them to be made up and sent out without affording brakemen an opportunity to examine the brake that will not excuse the brakemen for their failure to perform the duty of inspection. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Bragonier (1886) 119 Ill. 51.

The sinister significance of such decisions as these is, however, considerably lessened if they are construed with strict reference to the circumstances reviewed, and to the nature of the inspection which was probably that contemplated by the courts. The true meaning of the Indiana ruling is apparent from a later case which lays it down that a brakeman's contract to observe rules requiring him to inspect the appliances placed in his especial charge charges him only with knowledge of defects such as are open to view or discoverable upon an ordinary inspection, though it may be that other classes of employees are subject to a more onerous responsibility in this regard. Matchett v. Cincinnati, W. & M. R. Co. (1892) 132 Ind. 334, 340.

The doctrine of the circuit court of appeals was enunciated in regard to a foreign car, as to which the cursory inspection made by employees en route is, as was said "about the only inspection practicable."

In the Illinois case the context shows that nothing more is meant than that the brakeman was still bound to perform his duty of inspection so far as was practicable, and that the lack of opportunity for such inspection before the starting of a train would not excuse him for failing to make a due examination of the brakes while the train was on the road.

The divergence between these cases and those cited above is, therefore, probably more apparent than real. But, however this may be, it is obvious that the recognized obligations of the master to conduct his business upon a safe system would very soon become the veriest fiction 43 L. R. A.

If the courts once broke in upon the principle which requires him to conduct that business in such a manner that the servant shall be able to take the precautions prescribed by the rules.

This principle alone prevents rules from being made mere provisions against the liability of the master, instead of their being, as they ought to be, regulations for the purpose of securing the safety of the servant—a consideration which points directly to the conclusion that any rule conflicting with this principle should be pronounced contrary to public policy and void. See the language of the court in Holmes v. Southern P. Co. (1898) 120 Cal. 357, holding that an employer is not entitled to an instruction that, provided the plaintiff would not have been injured if he had followed a certain rule, then the mere fact that such rule was impracticable or not observed will not excuse him for not following it.

In Georgia where the accepted doctrine is that a railroad company may limit by an express contract its liability for injuries caused by its own negligence (Western & A. R. Co. v. Bishop (1873) 50 Ga. 465; Western & A. R. Co. v. Strong (1874) 52 Ga. 461; Galloway v. Western & A. R. Co. (1876) 57 Ga. 512; Cook v. Western & A. R. Co. (1883) 72 Ga. 48; Fulton Bag & Cotton Mills v. Wilson (1892) 89 Ga. 318), the distinction is taken that the principle under which a rule is binding upon an employee whenever it is actually or constructively known to him is not applicable where the rule requires him to waive certain rights not connected with his duties as an employee. To bar his rights it must be shown that he expressly agreed to that particular rule. The mere fact that he kept a copy of the rules in his possession and remained in the service will not disable him from recovery. Georgia P. R. Co. v. Dooley (1890) 86 Ga. 294, 12 L. R. A. 342.

No exceptions on ground of public policy can be taken to a rule which provides that no notice will be given to trackmen of the passage of extra trains, and that they must govern themselves accordingly. Where they knew of the rule they must be taken to have assumed the risk of the passage of such trains without blowing a whistle or ringing a bell. Jolly v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co. (1892) 98 Mich. 370.

Nor is a paper signed by a railroad employee, by which he "waives all liability of the company to him for any results of disobedience or infraction of a rule," a contract against public policy. It is merely a declaration on his part that the company will not be liable to him for the consequences of certain acts which the company forbids him to perform. Russell v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (1891) 47 Fed. Rep. 204.

2. Reasonableness.

A railroad company "has the right to make such reasonable rules as to the manner in which the operation of its trains shall be conducted by experienced railroad men chosen for the purpose by the officers of various railroad companies, and that they had been subsequently so generally adopted, as the best in use, that, in 1888, 58,000 (and at the time of the trial many more) miles of railroad were governed and operated under them. Three witnesses of skill and experience in the operation of railroads, who were familiar with these rules, and the practice of railroads under them, testified, in effect, that in their judgment, and in the judgment of those who had prepared and adopted them, they were the best and the most conducive to safety of any rules in use in this country; that it is more conducive to the safety of the operation of railroads to require the men in charge of a train to look out for, and protect themselves at all times against, other trains and engines, without notice of their whereabouts and movements, than it is to undertake to give them notice of these movements and whereabouts, and this for the reason that if men receive, and come to expect, notice of approaching trains, they will invariably relax their vigilance, and rely upon the notice, rather than upon their own watchfulness, for their safety, and that in the long run as are necessary either for its own protection or for the safety of its employees." Sedgwick v. Illinois C. R. Co. (1887) 73 Iowa, 158.

Hence, when the consequences of a servant's violation of a rule are in question, its reasonableness is always a preliminary issue in the case. In most instances the rules are so obviously calculated to secure the servant's safety that this issue is not directly discussed, the decision that the servant's action is barred on account of his violation of a rule being an implied declaration that it is reasonable. (This remark is applicable to the cases cited X. 5, infra.) But in some cases the courts have rendered specific decisions as upon the reasonableness of the rule under review as a step towards the final conclusion that its breach disabled the servant from recovering damages. Thus, the following rules have been expressly held valid:

A rule setting apart a special time for the wiping of machinery, and forbidding employees to wipe it while it was in motion. Shanny v. Androscoggin Mills (1876) 66 Me. 429.

A rule prohibiting the coupling or uncoupling of cars by going in between them while they are in motion. Lowe v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. (1893) 89 Iowa, 420.

Rules providing that extra trains may pass over the road at any time without previous notice, and that the foreman of gangs of track repairers must be always prepared for them, and requiring him to take various appropriate precautions for the safety of his subordinates, were held reasonable. Criswell v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. (1888) 80 W. Va. 798.

A rule of a railroad company requiring coupling and uncoupling of cars to be done by means of a stick, and forbidding employees to go between cars when a locomotive is attached. Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Rush (1894) 71 Miss. 987.

A rule which prohibits jumping on a switch engine while it is in motion by standing in the middle of the track, and stepping on the foot-board. Francis v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. (1892) 110 Mo. 887.

Rules by which it is directed that section foremen shall "carefully flag their truck and hand cars against special and extra trains or engines, which may be run at any time day or night, without previous notice to them," and that "special care must be taken in running hand cars and truck cars on all sections of the road where, by reason of fogs, sharp curves, or other circumstances, risk or danger is involved," and that "[hand] cars must always be protected by a flag when a clear track cannot be seen for a safe distance." Kansas & A. Valley R. Co. v. Dye (1895) 86 U. S. App. 23, 70 Fed. Rep. 24, 27, 16 C. C. A. 604.

A regulation by which it is made the duty of a track foreman to protect himself against all trains, regular and extra, and by which he is entitled to no notice of their movements, is unreasonable. 43 L. R. A.

A rule by which a servant is required to do work in a more dangerous way than is necessary ought, it would seem, to be invalid upon general principles. Yet it has been held, as a matter of law, that a master is not negligent in requiring, in accordance with a universal practice in cotton mills, a loom to be fanned for cleansing purposes while it is in motion, where by such method time is saved and the work facilitated, to the benefit of an employee who works by the piece, and no similar accident has occurred although the process has to be repeated sometimes over twice a day. Gideon v. Enoree Mfg. Co. (1895) 44 S. C. 442.

This decision is, we venture to think, erroneous. One purpose of rules is to protect the employees against the consequences of their own imprudence, and it is hard to see how a master can be excusable, as a matter of law, for framing a rule which is a direct inducement to employees to take additional risks for the sake of slightly increasing their earnings. The universal practice of employers in any line of business is merely one of the facts to be considered in determining whether the defendant was negligent in the particular instance (II. a, supra). It should, therefore, have been left to the jury to say whether the customary method of cleansing the loom was so dangerous that a prudent man would not have prescribed it.

Whether the reasonableness of a rule is a question for the court or the jury is one as to which there is much apparent conflict between the authorities. In some cases language is used which implies that it is always for the court; the reason assigned for this view being that it would otherwise be impossible to secure a uniformity of view, or to insure that a rule pronounced reasonable in one case by a jury might not be pronounced unreasonable by another jury in a subsequent case. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Hammond (1894) 58 Ark. 325; Pittsburg, Ft. W. & C. B. Co. v. Powers (1874) 74 Ill. 341. To the same effect see Louisville, N. & G. S. R. Co. v. Fleming (1884) 14 Lea, 128; State v. Overton (1854) 24 N. J. L. 435, 61 Am. Dec. 671; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Wysox, (1886) 82 Va. 250. (Cases in which a passenger was the plaintiff.)

In LITTLE ROCK & M. R. Co. v. BARRY the doctrine was laid down broadly and emphatically that, when a railroad company adopts certain rules for the operation of its trains, the reasonableness and sufficiency of such rules is always a question of law for the court. Thayer, J., dissented on the ground that judges could not arrogate to themselves the power of determining such a question in a case where competent witnesses expressed different opinions upon the matter, without denying suitors their constitutional right to a trial by jury. The mere fact that greater uniformity would be secured by taking the issue out of the hands of juries did not, he thought, justify such a practice. It was also pointed out by the

they will be caught in danger more frequently, and more accidents will happen at times when it is impossible or impracticable to convey notice to them, than would occur if they were spurred to constant watchfulness by the knowledge that a train was liable to come upon them at any time without notice. These witnesses testified, in substance, that this was the theory upon which the standard rules were based, and that they did not require the superintendent or train despatcher to give the men in charge of either of these trains notice of the whereabouts or movements of the other. They also testified learned judge that all the cases cited to show that the reasonableness of rules was a question of law were, with one exception, cases in which no testimony was introduced to show whether the rule was or was not reasonable, and that the decisions were simply to the effect that, under such circumstances, the court could properly determine the reasonableness of a rule.

On the other hand, in the following cases the question is declared to be one for the jury: International & G. N. R. Co. v. Hall (1890) 78 Tex. 657; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Echols (1894) 87 Tex. 330.

See also the passenger cases. South Florida R. Co. v. Rhodes (1889) 25 Fla. 40, 3 L. R. A. 733; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Whittemore (1887) 43 Ill. 420, 12 Am. Dec. 138.

Other courts have enunciated an intermediate theory which seems to be more in harmony with general principles, viz., that the reasonableness of a rule is a mixed question of law and fact except in plain cases. Bass v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1874) 38 Wis. 459, 17 Am. Rep. 495 (a passenger case); Avery v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1890) 121 N. Y. 31 (a passenger case); Day v. Owen (1858) 5 Mich. 520, 72 Am. Dec. 62.

In Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Henderson (1882) 37 Ohio St. 549, the court said: "Whether a rule of a railroad company is or is not a reasonable rule is in many cases a question of law; but in this case it cannot be affirmed as a matter of law that the special order made by superintendent Barrett was reasonable. On the contrary, whether such order was reasonable or unreasonable was a question of mixed law and fact, proper for the determination of the jury in view of the circumstances under which the order was to be executed and under proper instructions as to the law. The jury found that the order was unreasonable under the circumstances, and we are not prepared to say that the finding was wrong."

In Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Lyon (1889) 123 Pa. 140, 2 L. R. A. 489 (a passenger case), it was contended that certain instructions were erroneous for the reason that they withdrew from the consideration of the jury the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the regulation under consideration, and disposed of it as a question of law. The court said: "While this position is not without the sanction of respectable authority, the better opinion appears to be that the question is generally a mixed one of law and fact. So far as the reasonableness of a given rule depends upon the existence of particular facts and circumstances, it is necessarily a question for the jury, under proper instructions from the court; but if the facts are undisputed the question is a proper one for the court."

As between a master and a servant, who has deliberately entered into his contract of employment with full opportunities for ascertaining all his duties and the rules he may be required that in their opinion neither the duty of the company, nor the safety of its servants, required that the crew of either train should have notice of the movements or whereabouts of the other, or that the extra train should be stopped at Edmondson, and its conductor or engineer informed that the freight was still between that station and Forrest City, where they knew it to be when they started. In this state of the evidence, it is assigned as error that the court charged the jury: "In sending out special or extra trains due and sufficient notice of the movements and whereabouts of all other trains and lo-to comply with, and who is at liberty to withdraw from the service at any time that he finds it objectionable, it is neither for the court nor the jury to determine the reasonableness of a rule. Wolsey v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1877) 33 Ohio St. 227.

Whether an order suspending a rule by which the running of certain classes of trains is reasonable or unreasonable is a question of mixed law and fact in view of the circumstances under which the order was to be executed. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Henderson (1882) 37 Ohio St. 549.

e. Illustrative cases with regard to the violation of rules by the servant.

Most of the cases in which the defense adduced is a violation of a rule by the servant present no feature of special interest, as they usually involve only questions of the weight of evidence in relation to the general principles reviewed in the preceding sections. For the purposes of the present note, therefore, it will be sufficient to tabulate the decisions under headings which indicate the nature of the rules, the breach of which was alleged to be negligent. All distinctive features of special importance will be noticed in passing.

1. Disobedience to rules respecting signals.

Rule requiring car repairers or car inspectors to put out signals while at work. Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Roach (1895) 110 Ala. 266; Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Kitchens (1889) 83 Ga. 83; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Winslow (1894) 56 Ill. App. 462.

It is no excuse for the violation of such a rule that the car repairer agrees with a conductor that the latter shall not permit any of the cars in the train to come upon the repair track. Johnson v. Cleveland, L. & W. R. Co. (1896) 11 Ohio C. C. 553.

Rule requiring section men to guard their hand cars by certain precautions against the approach of special and wild trains. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Markee (1893) 103 Ala. 160; Kansas & A. Valley R. Co. v. Dye (1895) 86 U. S. App. 23, 70 Fed. Rep. 24, 18 C. C. A. 604 (held to be a clear case of "special danger" requiring compliance with a rule prescribing the use of a flag where such danger existed, the collision between the hand car and the train having occurred at a place where there was a sharp curve lined with timber which obscured the view and on a heavy downward grade, and where on account of a strong wind which was blowing towards the train, the sound of an engine whistle could not be heard at any great distance).

Failure of trackmen running a hand car around a curve to follow oral instructions and a general custom to flag all curves regardless of the grade is in law equivalent to a disobedience of the rules of the company, although the printed rule merely requires them to flag all comotives which are liable to be met or overtaken by the special or extra should be given to the officers or servants in charge of such trains. And due notice of such special or extra train should, in like manner, be given to the servants in charge of such other trains, as far as may be necessary to guard against and prevent accident. And if, from any cause, it is impracticable to give such notice, then such other precautions as are reasonably adapted to prevent danger of collision or accident should be taken. If the jury believe from the evidence that the defendant, through any default or neglect on its part, failed to perform the aforesaid duties, and that the collision was caused by such failure, and that thereby plaintiff sustained the injuries complained of, the defendant is liable in this action."

This instruction is a plain declaration that the theory which the wisdom and experience of many of the most careful and intelligent railroad operators have deemed most conducive to the safety of their employees, their passengers, and their property, is unsound, that the rules based upon it are unreasonable, and that the operation of a railroad in accordance with it is negligence. Such a curves in "going up grades." Southern P. Co. v. Ryan (1895, Tex. Civ. App.) 29 S. W. 527.

Rules requiring employees traveling on hand cars to flag trains. McGrath v. New York & N. E. R. Co. (1885) 15 R. I. 95.

Rule requiring employees to keep a constant lookout for signal lights on trains. Ward v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1894) 39 W. Va. 46 (failure to look out led to a collision with the second section of a train).

Rule that imperfect display or absence of signal shall be regarded as a danger signal. Chicago & W. I. R. Co. v. Flynn (1895) 154 Ill. 448.

Rule requiring an employee when coupling cars to know that the signal which he has given to the engineer has been understood and obeyed before he places himself in a position of danger relying upon such obedience. Strong v. Iowa C. R. Co. (1895) 94 Iowa, 380; Deeds v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1887) 74 Iowa, 154.

The conductor of a train is guilty of negligence if he relies on a signal which is not given in accordance with the rules of the company, and if he does he cannot recover for an injury received by him in consequence. Columbus & W. R. Co. v. Bridges (1888) 86 Ala. 448.

See also XI. c, 3, infra.

2. Disobedience to rules regulating the work of coupling cars.

Rule requiring the use of coupling stick. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Briggs (182, Va.) 14 S. E. 753; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Rush (1894) 71 Miss. 987; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Finley (1894) 25 U. S. App. 16, 63 Fed. Rep. 228, 12 C. C. A. 595; Sloan v. Georgia P. R. Co. (1890) 86 Ga. 15; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Pannill (1893) 89 Va. 552; Horan v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. (1893) 89 Iowa, 328; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Free (1892-93) 97 Ala. 231; Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Maltby (1892) 90 Ga. 630; Zumwalt v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (1889) 35 Mo. App. 667.

Rule prohibiting coupling by hand, when it is practicable to use a stick or pin for guiding the link. Gleason v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. (1896) 43 U. S. App. 89, 73 Fed. Rep. 647, 19 C. C. A. 636.

Rule prohibiting the coupling or uncoupling of cars when in motion. Baltzer v. Chicago, M. & N. R. Co. (1892) 88 Wis. 459; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Smith (1890) 89 Tenn. 114; Darracott v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1887) 83 Va. 288; Schaub v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1891) 106 Mo. 74; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Thomason (1892) 99 Ala. 471; Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Ritchie (1895) 111 Ala. 297; Johnson v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1893) 38 W. Va. 206; Lockwood v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1892) 55 Wis. 50; Gleason v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. (1896) 43 U. S. App. 89, 73 Fed. Rep. 647, 19 C. C. A. 43 L. R. A.

636 (in this case the act of the plaintiff was especially culpable, as he had had an opportunity of uncoupling the cars while they were at rest): Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Beagan (1895) 96 Tenn. 128; Grand Michigan C. R. Co. (1890) 83 Mich. 564, 11 L. R. A. 402 (recovery denied although the accident was directly caused by the brakeman's foot catching in an unblocked switch, and there was a statute requiring the blocking of switching).

Where the rules of the company allow the coupling of moving cars, the coupler is merely required to use ordinary care. A brakeman is not, as matter of law, guilty of contributory negligence in going between cars for the purpose of coupling them while they are moving at a rate of 3 or 4 miles an hour, which, according to the testimony of experienced railroad men, is a reasonably safe rate of speed, even though it was not necessary for him to do the coupling while the cars were moving. Hollenbeck v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1897) 141 Mo. 97.

In Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Craig (1896) 37 U. S. App. 654, 73 Fed. Rep. 642, 19 C. C. A. 631, a positive rule forbidding the coupling of cars while in motion was violated, but it was also decided, on general grounds, that one who goes between cars running about 5 miles an hour to uncouple them on a dark night when the ground is frozen with snow upon it, at a point where the tracks interlace and the ties project above the ground, which is usually moist and likely to be slippery,—especially when he has just given his signal to the engineer for a hard kick of the cars,—is not, as matter of law, free from contributory negligence which may prevent his recovering damages for injuries received.

Rule forbidding employees to go between cars when a locomotive is attached to them. Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Rush (1894) 71 Miss. 987; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Finley (1894) 25 U. S. App. 16, 63 Fed. Rep. 228, 12 C. C. A. 595; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Pannill (1893) 89 Va. 552.

Rule forbidding an employee to go on the track in front of a moving car for the purpose of coupling it to another. Pryor v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (1889) 90 Ala. 32.

Rule requiring brakeman, before entering upon the track in front of a moving train to look and see that the track is clear. Loranger v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1895) 104 Mich. 80 (brakeman, while walking sideways, and attempting to reverse a crooked link stumbles against a pile of ashes lately dumped on the track).

3. Disobedience to rules regulating the operation of trains.

Rules fixing the maximum rate of speed at which trains may be run between stations. Sutherland v. Troy & B. R. Co. (1891) 125 N. Y. 737, second appeal before supreme court (1893) declaration of the law ought not to be made without clear and convincing proof, nor without the most careful and deliberate consideration. The theory upon which these rules are based, the rules themselves, and the operation of railroads in accordance with them have all received the sanction of respectable authority. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Neer, 26 Ill. App. 356, 360, 31 Ill. App. 126, 134, 139; Kennelly v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 166 Pa. 60; McGrath v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 15 R. I. 95, 97; Wright v. New York C. R. Co. 25 N. Y. 562, 569. It does not seem unreasonable to suppose that men who are warned that other trains will pass over the railroad on which they are operating without notice to them, and that they must watch for and protect themselves against them at all times, would operate their trains with more care and fewer accidents than they would if an attempt were made to notify them of the whereabouts and movements of all trains, in view of the fact that the expectation of such notice might relax their vigilance, and that they would often be in locations where it would be impossible to give them the no-

74 Hun, 162 (collision caused through train's reaching a point where it would not have been if the proper speed had been kept); Conger v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. (1891) 86 Mich. 76.

Rule prescribing the speed at which trains shall approach bridges. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Williams (1892) 89 Va. 165.

Rule prescribing slackened speed in running trains over bridge. Rittenhouse v. Wilmington Street R. Co. (1897) 120 N. C. 544.

Rule requiring engineers to slacken speed when approaching switches. Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Thomas (1875) 51 Miss. 637; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Kane (1893) 92 Ga. 187, 22 L. R. A. 315.

Rule requiring engineers to run at a slower rate of speed than that specified by the time card if the track was not in good repair. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Patterson (1879) 93 Ill. 290.

Express command to run a train slowly at a certain curve, the consequence of disobedience being that the engine was derailed. Robinson v. West Virginia & P. R. Co. (1895) 40 W. Va. 583.

Rules requiring engineers to know absolutely what trains had passed at a certain station. Frits v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. (1895, Tex. Civ. App.) 30 S. W. 85 (result of disobedience was a premature starting of the train and a collision).

Rule requiring conductors not to start their trains from certain stations before the arrival of other trains as indicated by the schedule. Weacott v. New York & N. E. R. Co. (1891) 153 Mass. 460.

Rule requiring the sounding of a whistle and a certain rate of speed when a train is running round a curve in an obscure place. Southern P. Co. v. Ryan (1895, Tex. Civ. App.) 29 S. W. 527.

Rule requiring an engineer who stops his train in a cut to blow his whistle as a signal to brakemen to post themselves where they can flag approaching trains. Culpepper v. International & G. N. R. Co. (1897) 90 Tex. 627.

Rules requiring that, in case a train stops, the following train should be flagged. Smith v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1895) 88 Hun, 468.

Rule regulating the passage of trains over single tracks. Wert v. Kelm (1888, Pa.) 12 Cent. Rep. 381.

Rule requiring engineer to stand, instead of sitting, while his engine is passing "close places." Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Stutts (1894) 105 Ala. 368.

Rule prohibiting the shifting of cars down grade without the control of the engine. Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Dudley (1893) 90 Va. 304.

Rule forbidding the operation of an engine by a fireman unless the engineer is on it. Barry v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1888) 98 Mo. 62.

4. Disobedience to rules in regard to switching.

Rule forbidding flying switches. Pilkinton v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. (1888) 70 Tex. 226. 43 L. R. A.

A rule having reference to the switching of cars on grades is inadmissible in evidence where the accident occurred on a level track. Henry v. Sioux City & P. R. Co. (1885) 66 Iowa, 52.

5. Disobedience to rules regulating the manner of getting on or off railway cars.

Rule prohibiting employees from getting on or off trains while in motion. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Wallace (1890) 76 Tex. 636; Gulf, W. T. & P. R. Co. v. Ryan (1888) 69 Tex. 665; Francis v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. (1892) 110 Mo. 387; Elgin, J. & E. R. Co. v. Docherty (1895) 66 Ill. App. 17; Overby v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1893) 37 W. Va. 524.

Rule forbidding employees to step on the front of approaching engines or cars. Gleason v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. (1896) 43 U. S. App. 89, 73 Fed. Rep. 647, 19 C. C. A. 636.

Rule forbidding employees to jump on or off trains or engines at high speed. Ibid.

6. Rules directing employees to do or not to do in particular places.

Rule forbidding trainmen to be on the pilot of a moving locomotive. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Wilson (1890) 88 Tenn. 316.

Rule forbidding members of wrecking crews to travel on the engine. Abend v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. (1884) 111 Ill. 202, 53 Am. Rep. 616; Huribut v. Wabash R. Co. (1895) 130 Mo. 657.

Rule requiring brakemen to be at their posts while their train is running. Sprong v. Boston & A. R. Co. (1874) 58 N. Y. 56.

Rule requiring trainmen to be on the top of the car while the train is in motion. Central Trust Co. v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. (1888) 60 Fed. Rep. 353 (plaintiff injured by striking against coal chute while on the side of a car).

Evidence that it was customary for a conductor, and sometimes his duty, to be on top of a box-car will not excuse him for violating a rule which prohibited him from taking such a position on a train which was passing through a tress bridge, where it is also in evidence that his duty only required him to be in that position when it became necessary to assist in braking, coupling, and signaling, or in making switches at stations. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Wallace (1890) 76 Tex. 636.

Rules forbidding railroad employees to walk between the rails. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Maney (1894) 55 Ill. App. 588.

7. Disobedience to rules prescribing that appliances shall be inspected.

Rule requiring brakeman to test hand brakes before his train starts. La Croy v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1890) 57 Hun, 167 (1892) 132 N. Y. 570.

Rule requiring brakeman to inspect couplings. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Reagan (1896) 96 Tenn. 128.

tices. If experience has proved this supposition to be in accordance with the fact, and has led to the adoption of rules which do not require, but discountenance, such notices, because the habit of giving them has been found to increase the number and danger of accidents, as the adoption of these standard rules by so many railroad companies, and the testimony of the experienced witnesses who are operating railroads under them, tend to show, it cannot be said that it was the duty of the defendant to give these notices, nor that its failure to give them was negligence. The fact is not forgotten that the defendant in error produced three witnesses who testified that such notices should have been given. But in our opinion their testimony is insufficient, in the face of the evidence of three witnesses of equal credibility who testified to the contrary, so clearly to establish the vice of the theory, and the unreasonableness of the rules and practice which companies operating more than 58,000 miles of railroad have adopted as the best and most conducive to safety, as to warrant a court in so declaring as a matter of law. The skilled and experienced railroad operators who seem to have developed this theory

Rule requiring a brakeman to examine the cars and satisfy himself as far as he reasonably can that they are in good order. Karrer v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. (1889) 76 Mich. 400 (case of defective drawhead which the plaintiff could have at once observed if he had taken the trouble to look at the car when it was approaching).

Rule prohibiting going between cars to make a coupling "unless the drawhead and other coupling appliances are known to be in good order." St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Rice (1888) 51 Ark. 467, 4 L. R. A. 173.

If, by the rules of a railroad company, the duty of inspecting foreign cars is thrown upon the conductor, he cannot recover for injuries caused by a failure to make such an inspection. Fort Wayne, C. & L. R. Co. v. Gruff (1892) 132 Ind. 18.

8. Disobedience to rules requiring servant to report dangers.

Rule requiring brakeman to test brakes and either report the defects found therein or himself make the proper repairs. Beall v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. (1893) 38 W. Va. 525.

Rule requiring miners to report dangerous places in tunnels. Davis v. Nuttallsburg Coal & Coke Co. (1890) 34 W. Va. 500.

9. Disobedience to rules regulating the manipulation of machinery.

Rule forbidding servants to wipe machinery while it is in motion. Shanny v. Androscoffin Mills (1876) 66 Me. 429.

Rule requiring cotton loom to be fanned for cleansing purposes while it is in motion. Gideon v. Enoree Mfg. Co. (1894) 44 S. C. 442.

10. Disobedience to rules regulating personal habits of servants.

Rule forbidding use of intoxicating liquors. Gulf, W. T. & P. R. Co. v. Ryan (1888) 69 Tex. 665; Western & A. R. Co. v. Bussey (1894) 95 Ga. 584.

1. Waiver of rule habitually disregarded.

1. Doctrine of waiver stated.

The following statements will show sufficiently the scope of the doctrine of waiver enunciated in its most general form. "There is no doubt that a person or company having authority to establish rules for the government of employees may, in any particular instance, waive obedience to the rules, or may knowingly acquiesce in a disregard of the rules so continuously and for such a length of time as to justify the inference that they are no longer in force, and that obedience will not be required." Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Roach (1895) 110 Ala. 266.

"Abrogation of a rule . . . may be presumed when it is frequently and openly violated 43 L. R. A.

for such a length of time that the company [employer] could, by the use of ordinary care, have ascertained its nonobservance." Texas & P. R. Co. v. Leighty (1895, Tex. Civ. App.) 82 S. W. 790.

"Where a rule of the employer . . . has been habitually disobeyed since its inception, or for a long period of time, in the presence or to the knowledge of the employer, without an attempt to enforce it, or has been disregarded in such a manner and for such length of time as to raise a presumption that it was done with his knowledge and approval, the rule will be regarded as abrogated or waived." Wright v. Southern P. Co. (1896) 14 Utah, 383.

"A railway company cannot escape liability by showing a violation of rules which are never enforced, and which are habitually disregarded with the knowledge and apparent acquiescence of officers whose duty it is to enforce them." Spaulding v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co. (1896) 98 Iowa, 205.

A railroad company cannot plead violation of rules by an employee where the work was being done in the manner in which it had been done for years. Eastman v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1894) 101 Mich. 597.

A waiver of a rule may arise from constant violations of it acquiesced in by the employer. Lowe v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. (1893) 89 Iowa, 420. There the court said: "There is a conflict in the cases, some of them holding that a usage or custom cannot be shown as against a rule or contract like that under consideration, but we think it is clear that it is competent to show a usage or custom on the part of the employees of defendant at variance with, and in violation of, such a rule, when the defendant has, through its proper officers, knowledge of its violation, and their conduct shows that they acquiesced in such violation.

. . . If rules are made in good faith, and for the protection of the company's employees, that protection can best be obtained by compelling their observance while the party is alive for whose benefit they are made. The defendant cannot shield itself from liability by relying upon a rule which, under the evidence, it should know has been constantly violated, and where it may be properly assumed that it acquiesced therein."

An employer cannot be permitted to set up as a valid defense against injury to an employee, through his negligence, the latter's violation of a rule which the employer has knowingly permitted to be practically abandoned. Northern P. R. Co. v. Nickels (1892) 4 U. S. App. 369, 50 Fed. Rep. 718, 1 C. C. A. 625. where the court in commenting on the evidence said: "But in the case at bar the utter and total disregard of this rule was proved to be known to the very officer who, if any was, must have been charged with the enforcement of this rule on his division of this railroad. The disregard and formulated these rules are undoubtedly more competent than jurors or judges to select and prepare rules most conducive to the safe, economical, and prosperous operation of railroads. The interest of the owners of these railroads, the interest and ambition of those who operate them, alike prompt them to select and use the best; and, unless the rules they adopt are clearly shown to be palpably unreasonable or clearly insufficient, railroad companies ought not to be charged with negligence on account of their adoption and use. Vedder v. Fellows, 20 N. Y. 126, 133; Enright v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. 93 or violation of the rule was not merely habitual, customary: it was complete. The evidence of the witnesses is that none of them ever saw one instance in which the rule was complied with on the defendant's railroad. To hold that this defendant company could make this rule on paper, call it to plaintiff's attention, and give him written notice that he must obey it and be bound by it on one day, and know and acquiesce, without complaint or objection, in a complete disregard of it by the plaintiff and all its other employees associated with him on every day he was in its service, and then escape liability to him for an injury caused by its own breach of duty toward the plaintiff because he disregarded this rule, would be neither good morals nor good law. Actions are often more effective than words, and it will not do to say that neither the plaintiff nor the jury was authorized to believe from the long-continued acquiescence of the defendant in the disregard of this rule that it had been abandoned, that it was not in force. The evidence of such abandonment was competent and ample, and the ruling and charge of the court below on this subject were right."

It is competent to show what was usually and habitually done in the running of trains, because, if the company permits a certain course of conduct, it should not be allowed to hold its employees to the very letter of its rules in order to shield itself from liability for what it had tacitly permitted. Hunn v. Michigan C. R. Co. (1889) 78 Mich. 526, 7 L. R. A. 500.

In Little Rock, M. R. & T. R. Co. v. Leverett (1886) 48 Ark. 333, an instruction was approved which told the jury that an employee is not bound by a rule of the company not brought to his attention, or which is habitually violated with the knowledge of his superior officers, and without any effort on their part to enforce it, or where the usage and practice of the company would tend to mislead him in a violation of the rule.

An employee in a paper mill is not, as matter of law, guilty of contributory negligence in attempting, on a direction by a superior, to pull the broken paper off a press at night while the lights are out, so as to prevent a recovery for an injury caused by the unexpected breaking of the paper and his failure to catch hold of a hand rail to prevent his falling, notwithstanding an order to stop the presses at night when the paper broke while the lights were out, where such order had been previously disobeyed by others. Sawyer v. Rumford Falls Paper Co. (1897) 90 Me. 354. The court remarked that the servant "was under no obligations to obey an order to remove broken paper while the press was in motion in the darkness, but he evidently believed that he was expected to do it, if requested by the machine tender."

To the same effect, see Hayes v. Bush & D. Mfg. Co. (1886) 41 Hun, 407; Louisville & N. 43 I. R. A.

Mich. 409. In our opinion, there was no such proof in this case; and at the close of the trial the court should have instructed the jury that the system of rules, and practice under them, which the company had adopted, was neither unreasonable nor insufficient. The defendant in error and the other servants of the company were familiar with these rules, and the theory upon which they were based. By taking service under them without objection or protest, they assumed the risks and dangers of the theory that every employee who operates trains must beware of other trains moving in the same direction,

R. Co. v. Reagan (1896) 96 Tenn. 128; Newport News & M. V. Co. v. Campbell (1894) 15 Ky. L. Rep. 714; Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Flynn (1897) 51 U. S. App. 258, 80 Fed. Rep. 483, 25 C. C. A. 579; Georgia P. R. Co. v. Davis (1890) 92 Ala. 300; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Slattery (1896) 57 Kan. 499; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Sly (1895) 41 Kan. 729; Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. v. Kier (1889) 41 Kan. 661; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Hinsie (1891) 82 Tex. 623; White v. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. (1894) 72 Miss. 12; Chicago & W. I. R. Co. v. Flynn (1895) 154 Ill. 448; Boess v. Clausen & P. Brewing Co. (1896) 12 App. Div. 366 (conductor on a freight elevator, not as matter of law negligent in allowing other employees engaged with him in handling freight to go upon the elevator, notwithstanding a notice that riding on the elevator without permission is strictly forbidden, there being evidence that employees had frequently ridden with the knowledge and consent of the employer).

A custom in violation of a rule known and acquiesced in by the employer or his representatives amounts to an abandonment of the rule to the extent to which the custom infringes the rule. Barry v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1888) 98 Mo. 62.

But it need scarcely be said that there can be no recovery where the only custom which the plaintiff succeeds in establishing by his evidence is one which he appears to have been disregarding equally with the rule itself. Central Trust Co. v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. (1888) 69 Fed. Rep. 353 (principle also assumed to be correct in Alexander v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (1886) 84 Ky. 589).

In Wilson v. Michigan C. R. Co. (1892) 94 Mich. 20, the court (p. 28) considered that the doctrine which predicates a waiver of rules from the master's knowledge of their repeated violation applies only to strangers, and limits the cases in which an abrogation of rules by a railroad company will be inferred as to an employee to those in which he is compelled by positive orders to violate such rules, or when such a system of timing the trains, or conducting the business is adopted as to make it necessary to violate rules in order to do the work required of them. But this ruling is clearly contrary to the weight of authority, and unsupported by any sound principle.

In other decisions the negative side of the doctrine is emphasized, and the servant viewed as the party upon whom rests the burden of proving certain facts before he can be permitted to escape the ordinary consequences of disobedience to a rule.

A servant who seeks to absolve himself from the imputation of contributory negligence on the ground of an habitual disregard of a rule must show that the employer acquiesced in its infraction. Francis v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. (1892) 110 Mo. 387.

without notice of their whereabouts, and the risks and dangers of the system of rules which was based upon this theory. Wolsey v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 33 Ohio St. 227. When a railroad company has deliberately adopted a system of rules, which have been made familiar to its employees, and its railroad is operated under them, the reasonableness and sufficiency of these rules are questions of law, and not of fact. These questions must be determined by the court, because there is no other way in which a set of rules may ever be established or adjudicated as either reasonable or sufficient. It may be said that trial judges often differ upon questions of this character. But the answer to this objection is that the appellate court will finally settle them, and in the end a substantial uniformity of decision as to the reasonableness and sufficiency of any set of rules in general use must eventually result, if these questions are left to the determination of the courts. If, on the other hand, they are remitted to the juries, their various findings can result in little less than confusion worse confounded. The deci-

"In order . . . that rules for the conduct of business and safety of employees may avail an employer in a suit for damages for injuries resulting from a breach thereof, they must not only have been known to the employee [servant], but also their observance must not have been waived by the employer, nor the existing conditions at the time of the injury have rendered their enforcement and obedience impracticable to perform the services required by the employer." Wright v. Southern P. Co. (1896) 14 Utah, 383.

Compare also Sloan v. Georgia P. R. Co. (1890) 86 Ga. 15; Georgia P. R. Co. v. Davis (1890) 92 Ala. 300; Fay v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. (1883) 30 Minn. 231; Overby v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1893) 37 W. Va. 524; O'Neill v. Keokuk & D. M. R. Co. (1877) 45 Iowa, 546; Gleason v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. (1896) 43 U. S. App. 89, 73 Fed. Rep. 647, 19 C. A. 636.

2. Acquiescence in violation, when implied from employer's knowledge.

The cases above cited show clearly that the essential element which is necessary to establish a practical abrogation of a rule is the acquiescence of the employer in its infringement. The following decisions are collected for the purpose of bringing out more distinctly this aspect of the subject.

To justify the conclusion that a rule has been abandoned "it must satisfactorily appear that notice or knowledge of such disregard, by the persons for whom they are intended, has been brought home to the principal, or to someone whose duty it is to take action and is authorized to bind the principal. The mere habit of the employee or person bound by the rule to disregard the rule, though done with the knowledge of any immediate superior less than the principal or person authorized to bind the principal by acquiescence or failure to object will not be sufficient to justify the conclusion that the rules are no longer binding. Such knowledge on the part of the principal may be shown as in other cases where it is necessary to show notice, either by direct proof or by circumstances." Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Roach (1895) 110 Ala. 266.

There the court said with regard to a phrase which had been used in an earlier case,—that "custom and usage may be relied upon to excuse the violation of a rule (Andrews v. Birmingham Mineral R. Co. (1892) 99 Ala. 438),—that it was intended as a statement of the principle that "a principal may knowingly acquiesce in or assent to a continuous disregard of rules established and promulgated, and for such a length of time as to justify those for whom they were intended, to consider that the principal has abandoned them, and that they have ceased to be binding," and laid down the following general doctrine: "The custom and usage of prudent persons and well-regulated railroads, acting independently of any rule regulating the matter, is never admissible to excuse or exempt from liability for the consequences of the violation of a rule reasonable and proper, adopted and promulgated by proper authority, for the protection of the person of employees and the property of those adopting the rule; nor will custom and usage excuse the voluntary and unnecessary risk of an obvious danger, whether a rule exist or not."

A waiver of a rule will not be implied where there has been no violation of it to the knowledge of the employer, except in occasional instances, and employees violating the rule, or saying they cannot do the work in the manner prescribed by the rule, have been promptly discharged. Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Rush (1894) 71 Miss. 987, as explained in White v. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. (1894) 72 Miss. 12.

In O'Neill v. Keokuk & D. M. R. Co. (1877) 45 Iowa, 546, the court said: "Without considering whether the rule could be regarded as waived by any less formal or authoritative action than that by which it was adopted, it seems clear that it could not be so regarded by reason simply of a custom on the part of those for whom it was made to violate it. Acquiescence by the company in the custom of violating the rules should be shown, and this would involve the necessity of showing at least knowledge on the part of the officer or agent charged with the enforcement of the rule that it was customarily violated."

Nor is habitual violation material where the evidence shows that the rule was actually enforced by the company, and the rule itself states that the employees for whose guidance it was promulgated were in the habit of doing the forbidden act, and that its express purpose was to put an end to this practice. Francis v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. (1892) 110 Mo. 387.

But in order to establish a waiver of a rule it is not necessary that the servant should show that it has been habitually disobeyed in the actual presence of the master or his agents. It is not material how the knowledge of the disobedience has been obtained. Strong v. Iowa C. R. Co. (1895) 94 Iowa, 380.

It need not appear that the officers of the defendant, who are charged with the enforcement of its rules, had actual knowledge of the custom of the defendant's employees as to violating the rule. Such notice or knowledge may be inferred from circumstances; it may be implied from the notoriety of the custom, whereby they are chargeable with notice. Lowe v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. (1893) 89 Iowa, 420.

Negligence cannot be imputed to a railroad company for its failure to discover, after a period of four months, that an employee has been guilty of an habitual violation of rules framed to secure the safety of trains at switches. Cameron v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1895) 145 N. Y. 400.

It is error to nonsuit the plaintiff where there sion of an appellate court becomes a precedent for the rulings of many inferior courts. But the finding of one jury is no precedent for the decision of another, and a rule that is found to be reasonable by one jury will frequently be thought to be unreasonable by another; and no criterion will ever be established by which railroad companies may measure their duties in this regard, if the reasonableness and sufficiency of their rules are to be daily submitted to new tribunals, which are governed by no precedent, and are without experience in the determination of these questions. We adhere to the view of this question expressed by Judge Caldwell in the opinion of this court in Kansas & A. Valley R. Co. v. Dye, 36 U. S. App. 23, 28, 70 Fed. Rep. 24, 27, 16 C. C. A. 604, 607, which is supported by the following authorities, among others: Vedder v. Fellows, 20 N. Y. 126, 130; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Adcock, 52 Ark. 406, 410; Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Hammond, 58 Ark. 324, 334; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Whittemore, 43 Ill. 420, 423, 12 Am. Dec. 138; Louisville, N. & G. S. R. Co. v. Fleming, 14 Lea, 128; Tracy v. New York & H. R. Co. 9 Bosw. 396, 398, 402; Hoffbauer v. Davenport is evidence that the rule which he is alleged to have disobeyed was customarily violated with the knowledge of the master. Wright v. Southern P. Co. (1896) 14 Utah, 383.

In Spaulding v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co. (1896) 98 Iowa, 205, testimony was held relevant and competent which tended to show that it was the custom of the employees of the defendant to uncouple cars while they were in motion; that it was as safe to do so as to uncouple them when not in motion; that the decedent attempted to make an uncoupling in question in the manner usually adopted on the defendant's road; and that the officers of the defendant who had supervision and control of such matters knew of that method of doing such work, but made no objection to it, although it was in violation of printed rules which the defendant had adopted and given to its employees for their guidance. The court said: "The evidence in question tended to show that the rules upon which the defendant relies were habitually disregarded by its employees, and that the officers who were charged with the duty of enforcing them knew that the employees of the defendant customarily disregarded them, but made no attempt to enforce them. The alleged negligence of the deceased was a question of fact for the jury; and, in deciding it, the customary way of doing work he attempted to do, apparently approved by the defendant, was a proper matter for the consideration of the jury."

Instructions ignoring evidence tending to show that the master did not require obedience to the rule alleged to have been infringed, and had sanctioned its violation, are properly refused. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Richardson (1893) 100 Ala. 232; Chicago & W. I. R. Co. v. Flynn (1895) 154 Ill. 448.

Where a master posts a written notice prohibiting employees from riding on an elevator, a practical invitation to violate such direction may be inferred from an habitual usage on the part of employees to disregard it. McNee v. Coburn Trolley Track Co. (1898) 170 Mass. 283 (citing the passenger cases to the same effect: O'Donnell v. Allegheny Valley R. Co. (1868) 59 Pa. 239; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Langdon (1879) 92 Pa. 21; Waterbury v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1883) 17 Fed. Rep. 671).

The evidence being that the plaintiff was furnished with a coupling stick, to be used until he learned how to couple without it, and that his injury was received after he had learned to couple without a stick, and had on many occasions done so, some of the instances being in the presence of his superior officers, who made no objection, it is not error to deny a request by the defendant to charge the jury that, if the plaintiff in undertaking the service was furnished with a coupling stick and directed to use it in coupling, but did not use it at the time of the injury, and attempted to make the coupling with his hand instead of the stick, and was hurt in making such attempt, he could not recover. Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Maltby (1892) 90 Ga. 630.

The fact that the servant returned a coupling stick to the office immediately after receiving it, and never used that or any other stick, is evidence tending to show that it was not expected that the rule as to using a stick for coupling would be observed. Horan v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. (1893) 80 Iowa, 328.

The fact that an abandoned rule was not required for safety has been mentioned in one case as an additional reason for declaring it to be of no binding force as regards a servant. Newport News & M. V. Co. v. Campbell (1894) 15 Ky. L. Rep. 714.

The jury is entitled to infer a practical abrogation of a rule, even though there is no evidence tending to show nonobservance of it under circumstances exactly similar to those existing at the time of the accident. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Craig (1897) 47 U. S. App. 647, 80 Fed. Rep. 488, 25 C. C. A. 585 (second appeal after new trial ordered in (1896) 37 U. S. App. 654, 73 Fed. Rep. 642, 19 C. C. A. 631). The circuit judge had assumed that habitual disregard of a rule forbidding the coupling of cars in motion would not avail a servant where the only previous disregard established was in cases where the coupling was done in the daytime and on ground free from ice and snow, whereas the injury in suit was received at night and on ground covered with ice and snow, and in cases where the coupling had been done while the cars were moving 2 miles an hour, whereas the injury was received when the cars were moving 5 miles an hour.

In Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Ritchie (1895) 111 Ala. 297, the injury occurred while the plaintiff, who was a brakeman, was between moving cars. For a special plea the defendant set out a rule of the company which, among other things, prohibited employees "from getting between moving cars, while in motion, to uncouple them." To this special plea the plaintiff filed a replication, which in substance averred that, at the time and place where the injury occurred, it was the duty of the plaintiff to uncouple the cars, and that this duty could not be performed without going between the cars while they were in motion, and that it was the custom of plaintiff, acquiesced in by the defendant, to go between the cars while in motion, for the purpose of uncoupling them, whenever it was necessary to do so. To this replication the defendant demurred, assigning several grounds. The court held that the replication was defective in that it failed to state the facts and circumstances which rendered it necessary for the plaintiff to go between the cars while in motion to uncouple them in discharge of his duty, and that the defendant was accordingly not informed by the replication what facts were relied upon by the plaintiff to absolve him from

4 N. W. R. Co. 52 Iowa, 342, 343, 35 Am. Rep. 278.

Moreover, the court, in effect, told the jury by this instruction that, if they believed that the collision occurred through the failure or neglect of the railroad company to give these notices, the defendant in error might recover. It is difficult to understand what basis there is in this case, under the admitted facts, for a finding that a failure to give these notices caused this collision. If we concede that the failure to write the notice which was verbally given to the conductor and engineer of the extra train at Hope-field, that they must look out for the freight train which was in the bottom between Edmondson and Forrest City (an unreasonable concession, except for the sake of argument), and the failure to stop the extra train at Edmondson, and notify its conductor and engineer that the freight train was still there, and the failure to send a courier from Forrest City, or some other point, to the freight train, to notify its conductor and engineer that the extra train was coming, constituted negligence, there still remains what seems to us an insuperable obstacle to a recovery on this ground. An injury that could an observance of the rule, and could not prepare to meet the issue presented by the replication.

3. Rationale of doctrine.

There seems to be occasionally some confusion of thought as to the rationale of the situation resulting from the master's habitual failure to enforce the rules. Thus, in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Reagan (1896) 96 Tenn. 128, we find the court first recognizing the principle that laxity in the enforcement of rules already promulgated is as much negligence as a failure to promulgate them where the circumstances demand it (compare also the language used in Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Hissong (1892-93) 97 Ala. 187), and then in another place remarking that "a perpetual breach and disregard of rules by the employees with the knowledge of the company amounts to a practical abrogation of them."

In other words, the right of the servant to recover, where the rule has been habitually broken to the knowledge of the master is first regarded as referable to the theory that the master's negligence is the efficient cause of the accident, and then to the consideration that, as the rule is no less nonexistent as a living ordinance if it is never enforced than if it had never been promulgated, the servant is himself guilty of no breach of duty.

The former consideration, however, seems to be quite out of place in this connection. Servants who do what they know to be prohibited, or fail to do what they know to be prescribed, cannot be less culpable because the master has failed to exercise an efficient control over their conduct.

The correct theory undoubtedly is either that the employer's intention to abolish a rule is deduced from his omission to enforce it, or that this omission amounts to a kind of estoppel in pais, which precludes him from relying on the defense of contributory negligence so far as it might be predicated from the servant's disobedience to orders.

Compare the statement that the master's knowledge of an habitual custom to disregard a rule may be regarded as "a practical invitation to violate it." McNee v. Coburn Trolley Track Co. (1898) 170 Mass. 283.

4. Express agreement to obey rules, effect of.

There is a conflict of opinion as to the effect which should be ascribed to the fact that the servant has expressly agreed in writing to obey the rule which is alleged to have been waived by the master.

On the other hand, we find it laid down, in broad terms, that the fact of the employee's having signed a stipulation which shows, not only that he had knowledge of the rule, but the dangers incident to the employment, does not furnish any reason for excepting the case from 43 L. R. A.

the operation of the general principle that a rule may be waived by its being disregarded for such a time and in such a manner that the employer or his agent is chargeable with notice. Fish v. Iowa C. R. Co. (1896) 96 Iowa, 702.

So, also, in Northern P. R. Co. v. Nickels (1892) 4 U. S. App. 369, 50 Fed. Rep. 718, 1 C. C. A. 625, we find the court commenting as follows on the effect of a writing by which the servant agreed to take upon himself the risk of a violation of the rules: "There is some doubt whether this writing under the evidence in this case rises to the dignity of a solemn contract made for a valuable consideration. It is styled 'Personal Record,' and consists very largely of questions and answers relative to the qualifications of the plaintiff to serve as a brakeman. It is dated November 12, 1889, and is alleged to have been made in consideration of the employment of the plaintiff by the defendant at a subsequent date, but the evidence discloses the fact that he was employed by the defendant on June 26, 1889, more than four months before this paper was signed, and that he remained in the defendant's service continually from that date until he was injured, so that it would seem that this writing could not be successfully claimed to be proof of anything more than notice to the plaintiff of the existence of the rule in this particular case. But if it was a contract, it is clear that it could not bar the plaintiff from proving a waiver or abandonment of the rule. This writing was prepared by the defendant; all that the plaintiff had to do with it was to answer the questions and sign his name. It contained in it these words: 'The company expects you and all other employees to comply strictly with its rules and regulations, and does not, and will not, in any case acquiesce in or consent to any violation of them. Do you understand that all violations of the rules of the company by you or any other employee of the company, whether habitual or otherwise, are not consented to or acquiesced in by the company? Yes.' There are at least two parties to every contract, and this provision was a representation and a contract on the part of the defendant that it did not and would not acquiesce in the violation of any of its rules. The plaintiff signed the contract and proceeded with his service. He must immediately have discovered that, if there really was any rule about the use of sticks and pins in coupling cars it was constantly violated on this railroad, and that the defendant knew of this violation and acquiesced in it. This uniform and constant acquiescence of the defendant in the violation of this rule, if such a rule were really in existence, was a violation of the contract on the part of the defendant that it did not and would not acquiesce in the violation of any of its rules, and relieved the plaintiff from further compliance therewith, and if, on the other hand, the rule was not really in force, if it had been waived or abandoned, the not have been foreseen or reasonably anticipated as the probable result of an act of negligence is not actionable. An injury that is not the natural consequence of an act or omission, and that would not have resulted but for the interposition of a new and independent cause, is not actionable. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. v. Elliott, 12 U. S. App. 381, 386, 55 Fed. Rep. 949, 952, 20 L. R. A. 582, 5 C. C. A. 347, 350; Finlayson v. Utica Min. & Mill. Co. 32 U. S. App. 143, 151, 67 Fed. Rep. 507, 512, 14 C. C. A. 492, 496; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Bennett, 32 U. S. App. 621, 69 Fed. Rep. 525, 16 C. C. A. 300; Union

P. R. Co. v. Callaghan, 12 U. S. App. 541, 550, 56 Fed. Rep. 988, 993, 6 C. C. A. 205, 210; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mosley, 12 U. S. App. 601, 609, 57 Fed. Rep. 921, 926, 6 C. C. A. 641, 646; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Robbins, 27 U. S. App. 547, 557, 65 Fed. Rep. 178, 184, 27 L. R. A. 629, 12 C. C. A. 544, 550. It was the duty of the engineer and conductor of the extra train to look out for and to so operate their train that their engine would not crash into the freight which they knew was on the track before them. It was the duty of the engineer of that train, who alone could see the track in front of him, to utter disregard of the rule and the defendant's acquiescence therein were competent evidence of the abandonment. In either case the plaintiff had a right to rely on the conduct of the defendant, and to introduce his evidence in this behalf."

In Alabama the view adopted apparently is that a written undertaking of this description obliterates the legal consequences of any previous acquiescence in the violation of the rules. The rights of the parties are determined upon the assumption that these rules were in full force at the time the contract was signed, and the question whether there has been any waiver as regards the signer will depend upon whether the subsequent violations were of such frequent and long-continued occurrence as to create the presumption that the employer had assented to the disuse of the rule. In other words, a rescission of the particular contract thus entered into must be deducible from the acts of the employer before the doctrine of waiver can take effect, and the length of time which had elapsed between the execution of the contract and the accident, and the opportunities which the employer may have had for ascertaining the habitual nonobservance of the rule during that period became the material circumstances to be considered in deciding whether the servant is entitled to the benefit of that doctrine.

In Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Hissong (1892-93) 97 Ala. 187, the court modified its decision on the previous hearing (1890, 91 Ala. 514) where the more liberal theory of the two cases above cited had been recognized, and refused to infer a waiver where the plaintiff was injured the day after he had signed the contract.

The decision was followed in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mothershead (1895) 110 Ala. 143, where the period was nine days of service on an extensive system of railroad, during which it did not appear that the company had had time, in the regular course of business, to receive any reports as to the conduct of the employees respecting the observance of rules.

Similarly, in Russell v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (1891) 47 Fed. Rep. 204, the court refused to admit that a regulation recognized in writing by the plaintiff's intestate at a certain date could be held obsolete by him three weeks later.

This doctrine is based upon the general principle that parol evidence of a custom is not admissible to vary the terms of a written contract (see Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Hissong (1892-93, 97 Ala. 187)). It is not apparent why this principle, if it is applicable at all under the circumstances, should not preclude the inference of a waiver from what occurs after the execution of the contract as well as the inference that the habitual violations of the rule had made it a dead letter previous to such execution in such a sense that it could not be regarded as embraced by the terms of the contract. Yet in the case just cited the court admits that the 43 L. R. A.

former of these inferences may be drawn under an appropriate showing of facts. The true view seems to be that the controlling factor in these cases is not the technical rule of evidence thus relied upon, but the broader principle that, where the employer has acted in such a manner as to justify the conclusion that he no longer regards the regulation as binding, every servant whom he hires while the regulation thus remains virtually abrogated should be entitled to the benefit of the assumption that it is not in force. A doctrine which has the practical effect of requiring a servant who is bound by some particular regulation to work amongst other servants in whose favor a waiver of the same regulation may, as a result of the greater length of their service, be implied, seems to be highly anomalous and must certainly be productive of gross injustice in its actual operation.

G. Obligation of rules and other duties, effect of conflict between.

The question of the extent of a servant's duty to observe a particular rule is sometimes determined by the application of the general principle, that a person upon whom two inconsistent obligations are imposed by a contract may without culpability act upon the assumption that the less binding one may be disregarded.

A master is deemed to have waived the observance of a rule forbidding an act not necessarily negligent in itself, where the duty which his servant owes to him cannot be performed without a violation of such rule. Brown v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (1895) 111 Ala. 275.

In Sedgwick v. Illinois C. R. Co. (1887) 73 Iowa, 158, the court remarked, arguendo, that a servant's violation of a known rule was excusable if "there existed some necessity which imposed upon him a higher duty than that created by the rule."

Thus the fact that the plaintiff has disobeyed a rule will not, as matter of law, debar him from recovering, if the defendant conducted his business in a manner which rendered a violation of such rule necessary or probable. Hayes v. Bush & D. Mfg. Co. (1886) 41 Hun, 407.

So, where the evidence is undisputed that the employees of a railroad company could not obey a certain rule, and do the work incident to their positions, it will be inferred that it must have been enacted to serve some purpose other than the protection of the property of the defendant, or the proper conduct of its business, or the safety or protection of its employees. Strong v. Iowa C. R. Co. (1895) 94 Iowa, 380. The court remarked: "A rule which, if obeyed, would prevent the defendant from properly carrying on its business, does not commend itself to the courts as being made in good faith, and in furtherance of any legitimate purpose."

So, it is error to nonsuit the plaintiff where a rule forbids the coupling of cars while in motion, if the evidence is that there was a grade so govern the speed of his engine that he could at any time stop it within the range of his vision. It was the duty of the crew of the freight train to place torpedoes on the track at least fifteen telegraph poles in the rear of their train when it stopped at the place of the collision, and to station a flagman ten or twelve telegraph poles behind that train. The railroad company had the right to presume that its servants on these trains would obey its rules and discharge these duties, and it had the right to act upon that assumption. It was its right to calculate the natural and probable result of its acts and omissions upon this supposition. Indeed, it could reckon upon no other, for it is alike impracticable and impossible to predicate and administer the rights and remedies of men on the theory that their associates and servants will either disregard their duties or violate the laws. Now, no one who, reckoned on the faithful discharge of their duties by these employees could reasonably have anticipated this fatal collision as either a natural or probable consequence of the failure to give these notices. Nor could it have been the result of such failure, had not the unforeseen negligence of the engineer of the extra train, and the gross and unexpected carelessness of the crew of the freight train, intervened to interrupt the natural sequence of events, to turn aside their course, and to prevent the safe operation of these trains, which was the natural and probable result of in the yard which rendered it necessary for the cars to be moved while they were being uncoupled, on account of the links and pins being tightened when they were stationary. Wright v. Southern P. Co. (1896) 14 Utah, 383.

So, the failure to comply with a rule requiring brakemen to inspect brakes will not be deemed culpable where no reasonable opportunity is given to make the inspection. O'Malley v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1893) 67 Hun, 130.

Similarly, if compliance with a general rule is rendered impossible by other and inconsistent orders given by the master to his employee, negligence cannot be imputed to the employee for not following the general rule. Hall v. Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. (1891) 46 Minn. 439 (a case in which the plaintiff could not conform to the timetable, and at the same time keep the train "under complete control," as the rule required).

The same principle, of course, holds good where the special order is given by the employers' representative.

Hence, an employee's disregard of the general rules promulgated by a railroad company will not disable him from recovering, where compliance with them had been rendered impossible,—as where the orders given to an engineer by the governing officers of the company require him to run his train in a manner different from that prescribed in the rules. Pennsylvania Co. v. Roney (1883) 89 Ind. 452, 46 Am. Rep. 173.

So, the impossibility of making a coupling with a stick will relieve from the imputation of contributory negligence a brakeman who, in obedience to the order of his conductor, violates a rule forbidding him to couple cars without a stick, unless his compliance with such order threatened immediate injury. Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Rudd (1892) 88 Va. 648. (It should be observed that in Virginia a conductor is, as regards brakemen, a vice principal. See cases cited in Bailey's Masters' Liability, p. 844.)

But the recipient of a special order which has the effect of superseding a general rule is culpable in obeying the order unless he has actual knowledge that the employee who gives it is acting within his powers. Hence, where one of the rules of a railroad company provides that the conductor shall have control of all persons employed on his train, except when his directions conflict with the rules or involve risk or hazard, in which case the engineer will be held equally accountable, and another rule requires that a certain train shall remain at a specified station until the arrival of a train from the opposite direction, the engineer of the waiting train must, at his peril, detain it as so prescribed unless he actually knows that the despatcher has sent special directions that it is to proceed before the arrival of the expected train. He is 43 L. R. A.

not permitted to infer that the conductor has received information which will justify his moving his train in a manner different from that prescribed by the rules, and act on that assumption. York v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1896) 98 Iowa, 544.

The schedule of hours for the running of trains is obligatory upon both conductors and engineers, and if an engineer is injured by a collision due to the starting of his train at a time not set down in the schedule, he cannot excuse himself for his disobedience to the printed orders of his superiors on the ground that he allowed himself to be prevailed upon by the conductor to depart from the schedule time. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. McDade (1877) 59 Ga. 73.

A conductor's infringement of one regulation requiring him to remain in the middle of his train on descending grades so as to be better able to direct his crew is not necessarily negligence where another regulation imposes on him the duty of "taking the safe side in all cases of doubt." What is the "safe side" in any given exigency is a question for the exercise of judgment. A court, therefore, cannot say, as matter of law, that a conductor would, under such circumstances, be guilty of negligence in quitting his post temporarily to warn the engineer of the possibility that he might meet some obstruction not known to, or not considered by, the company in making out the special order under which the train was running. Somerset & C. R. Co. v. Galbraith (1885) 109 Pa. 32.

There is no such conflict of rules as will invalidate them, where one requires that trains upon approaching a "time-table station" shall be under full control with the expectation that the main track is occupied, and another provides that the general direction and government of a train are vested in the conductor, who shall be responsible for its proper conduct, and requiring all employees on the train to yield obedience to his proper orders. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mothershed (1896) 110 Ala. 143.

So, also, a special order to a locomotive engineer to make a run in a certain time must be executed with due regard to the general rules which are not incompatible therewith, and there can be no recovery against the company if he is killed by his breach of a rule requiring him to approach a station with "great care," in view of the possibility of finding "some other train occupying the main track." Illinois C. R. Co. v. Neer (1889) 31 Ill. App. 126. The court said: "A special order will supersede a standing rule only where they in terms conflict, or where it is or ought to be foreseen, when given, that its execution is incompatible with the latter, or becomes so afterward by some action of the giver, taken with reasonable ground to expect that effect."

the rules and the orders which the defendant gave. It was the gross negligence of these servants, which no one could anticipate, that constituted the intervening and proximate cause, without which this collision could never have been; and it is to this, and not to the failure to give the notices, in our opinion, that this accident must be attributed, under the maxim, Causa proxima non remota spectatur.

There are many other errors assigned in this case, and many other questions discussed in the briefs of counsel, but the case must be retried on account of those to which we have referred. What has already been said will be a sufficient intimation of our views to guide the court in the coming trial, and it would be unprofitable to extend this opinion by the discussion of other questions which may not again arise.

The judgment below must be reversed, and the cause remanded to the court below, with directions to grant a new trial; and it is so ordered.

Thayer, Circuit Judge, concurring:

I concur in the view that the case should be reversed for error in the instruction which is quoted above, in the opinion of the majority of the court. There was a controversy before the jury as to whether the engineer and conductor of the extra train ought to have been notified at Edmondson that freight train No. 5 had not arrived at Forrest City, h. Injuries caused by servants' violation of rules, liability for.

See also X. supra.

1. Under common-law principles.

The consequence of connecting the doctrine of common employment with the doctrine that the violation of a known rule is negligence, is to preclude a recovery for an injury caused by such violation when the culpable party is a fellow servant of the plaintiff.

"It is the duty of a railroad corporation to prescribe, either by means of time-tables, or by other suitable modes, regulations for running their trains with a view to their safety; but it is obvious that obedience to these regulations must be intrusted to the employees having charge of the trains. Such obedience is matter of executive detail which, in the nature of things, no corporation or any general agent of a corporation can personally oversee, and as to which employees must be relied upon." Rose v. Boston R. Co. (1874) 58 N. Y. 217.

The principle that the execution of rules is a "matter of detail" was also relied upon in Bryant v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1894) 81 Hun, 164.

"When the master has furnished—to be observed by those having the management of his business—such rules as may be reasonably essential to the safety of his employees in any emergency or condition which may be apprehended in the service, he has discharged his duty to them in that respect, and they assume the hazard of the observance of the regulations by those with whom the duty rests to execute them." Tully v. New York & T. S. S. Co. (1896) 10 App. Div. 463. See also Drake v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1894) 80 Hun, 490.

Upon this ground the plaintiff's action was held not to be maintainable in the following cases: Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Henderson (1882) 37 Ohio St. 549 (trainmen injured through collision resulting from the negligence of an employee sent to flag an approaching train); Niles v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1897) 14 App. Div. 58 (engineer ran his train past a block signal so that it came into collision with another standing on the track); Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Tohill (1895) 143 Ind. 49 (collision caused by conductor's running train past station, instead of side tracking, as required by the regulations); Simpson v. Central Vermont R. Co. (1896) 5 App. Div. 614 (same species of accident); Northern P. R. Co. v. Poirier (1896) 167 U. S. 48, 42 L. ed. 72 (collision caused by conductor's disregard of rule as to running a train closely behind another); Ford v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1899) 117 N. Y. 638 (disregard by employees of rules regulating loading of cars); Byrnes v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1889) 113 N. Y. 251, 4 L. R. A. 151 (railroad company not liable for the negligence of its employees in making the inspection of loaded cars which is imposed on them by its rules); Rutledge v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1894) 123 Mo. 121 (brakeman thrown off car by a sudden check in its movements consequent upon a fellow servant's giving a signal to the engineer in breach of the custom in use); Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Sipes (1890) 23 Colo. 226 (railroad company not liable for the consequences of a conductor's negligence in failing to observe a rule of the company with respect to the closing of switches); Davis v. Staten Island Rapid Transit R. Co. (1896) 1 App. Div. 178 (switch left open by conductor—brakeman injured); Moeller v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. (1897) 13 App. Div. 467 (car repairer injured by fellow servant's failure to put out a signal flag); Nolan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.; Kennelty v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (1895) 166 Pa. 60 (men operating a train following another on the same track failed to keep a sharp look out, as prescribed by rule); Enright v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. (1892) 93 Mich. 409 (engineer disregarded rule requiring freight trains to approach stations under full control).

Where all the testimony shows that a special order to an engineer to run his train "two hours late" was to be read in connection with the general rules of the company, and was so understood by all the employees concerned, and that such order meant that the train was to run with reference to the schedule of all passenger trains and never to encroach upon the time of the train which it followed, the company cannot be held liable for injuries which a brakeman on the train in front received through the negligence of the engineer of the following train in running it too fast. Kennelty v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (1895) 166 Pa. 60.

The whole duty of a railroad company is performed when it has promulgated rules which, if observed and followed by the subordinates who have to carry them out, will bring personal notice to everyone concerned of any special deviation from its time-table in regard to the running of its trains, and it is not liable for an injury caused to a fireman by the carelessness of operators and conductors in executing an order of the train despatcher to stop a train at a certain station. The servant's action cannot, under such circumstances, be maintained on the theory that the order so given was a change of the rules of the road. Slater v. Jewett (1881) 85 N. Y. 61, 29 Am. Rep. 627.

Where a railroad company has employed a sufficient number of competent servants to shift its cars in a yard, and has promulgated proper rules for the management of the business, it is and that they must keep a sharp lookout for the freight train between the two stations last mentioned. Three expert railroad men, who were called as witnesses for the plaintiff below, testified, in substance, that such notice ought to have been given; that as the engineer of the extra train would naturally infer that the freight train had reached Forrest City by the time the extra train reached Edmondson, since the freight train was then overdue at the former station, he ought to have been notified by the train despatcher at Edmondson that such was not the fact, and that for some unknown reason the freight train had been delayed, and was not where it would very naturally be expected to be. In other words, three railroad men expressed the opinion, in substance, that, as applied to the facts existing when the extra reached Edmondson, the standard rules were not adequate to afford protection to trainmen and passengers, but that some further precautions ought to have been taken by the train despatcher. Several witnesses for the defendant company expressed a contrary opinion, namely, that the standard rules were sufficient to meet any and every emergency, and that no additional notice ought to have been given at Edmondson. This was one of the crucial issues in the case, to which the attention of the jury should have been more specifically directed. The instruction above quoted, which was given by the court, was couched in very general language, and was liable to be understood by the jury as meaning that it was the duty of the train despatcher, in any event, and without reference to the existence of the rules, to have given notice at Edmondson that the freight train had not arrived at Forrest City. Being too general, as applied to the issue of fact above stated, and for that reason being liable to mislead, I agree that the case should be reversed, and a new trial ordered.

Other views, however, are expressed in the opinion of the majority of the court, to which I cannot assent. It is held broadly, as I understand, that when a railroad company adopts rules for the operation of its trains, or for the management of its business, and puts them in force, the question as to the reasonableness and sufficiency of such rules not liable for the consequences of a brakeman's failing to take his proper position on the top of moving cars. Potter v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1892) 136 N. Y. 77, Distinguishing Filke v. Boston & A. R. Co. (1873) 53 N. Y. 549, 13 Am. Rep. 545.

The rationale of the distinction apparently is that in the earlier case the brakeman had never reported for duty at all, and that the company was responsible for the manning of the train, but not for the subsequent negligence of the men in not being at their posts.

In Wright v. New York C. R. Co. (1873) 25 N. Y. 568, it was sought to support the judgment on the ground of the improper arrangement of the time-tables at the point where the collision took place. The court, however, held that the time-tables were not in fault, but that the collision grew out of the carelessness of the employees in running the train not in conformity with the time-tables, and that the fault was therefore to be regarded as that of a fellow servant, and that the defendants were not responsible.

Even if it be assumed that rules for signals at crossings and as to speed are available to an employee, the negligence of the conductor and engineer of a train in failing to make such signals, and in running at excessive speed, is that of fellow servants as regards a section hand. Wright v. Southern R. Co. (1897) 80 Fed. Rep. 260.

The defendant is not entitled to a nonsuit where the evidence leaves it uncertain whether the injury was caused by the misconduct of the plaintiff's coservants in violating a duly promulgated rule, or whether at the time the injury was received they were acting without any regulations, and simply following a dangerous practice sanctioned by time and custom. Doling v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. (1897) 151 N. Y. 579.

The principles exemplified in the foregoing decisions are of course subject to the qualification that the master remains liable where the injury complained of was caused partly by a coservant's disregard of rules and partly by the negligence of the master himself or of some employee for whose omissions of duty he is responsible. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Hack (1898, Ind.) 50 N. E. 988 (collision due in 43 L. R. A.

part to the train despatcher's neglect of rules).

In estimating the effect of the decisions in the various states it is necessary to take into account the modifications which some courts may have introduced into the rigorous doctrine which imputes to a servant an assumption of the risks of the negligence of every fellow servant.

Thus, the theory that the doctrine does not extend to cases where the negligent and the injured servants are in different departments is taken for granted in the following decision: Proof that a rule of a steel company, that molds of a certain class rounding on the bottom should be laid down, was violated by leaving such a mold standing on one end with the empty molds, and that within twenty minutes after it was thus left standing it fell over on an employee, is sufficient to justify a finding that the servants of such company were guilty of negligence. Joliet Steel Co. v. Shields (1893) 146 Ill. 603, Affirming (1892) 45 Ill. App. 453.

Where the evidence is equally consistent with the theory that the injury was caused by negligence in supervising the operation of trains, and with the theory that it was caused by the fault of a coservant, the plaintiff cannot recover. Rose v. Boston & A. R. Co. (1874) 58 N. Y. 217. The court said: "In the case before us it appeared in proof that the train on which plaintiff's intestate was a brakeman went out within three or four minutes after another train, and was itself followed by a third train, at about the same distance of time. The injury which resulted in the death of the plaintiff's intestate was the consequence, as the jury have found, and as they might rightfully find from the evidence, of those trains being sent out so near together. By what direction they started so nearly at the same time does not appear. All the proof that relates to the point is contained in the single phrase of one of the witnesses, who, speaking, not of the time of the accident, but of the time of his testifying, says: 'The head conductor who has charge of sending out trains is Mr. Rockefeller.' What charge Rockefeller has is not shown, nor whether he, in fact, despatched the trains in question. It does not appear whether he was intrusted with any discretion upon the subject of starting trains, or whether any regulations on the subject, either to afford protection to its employees and to the traveling public is always a question of law to be decided by the court. In my judgment, this proposition is not tenable, either upon principle or authority. When a controversy arises in a court of justice touching the reasonableness or sufficiency of a code of rules that has been adopted by a corporation or individual for the management of their business, and competent witnesses express different opinions upon that subject, an issue of fact is presented, which can only be determined by a jury, unless a trial by jury is waived. Judges cannot arrogate to themselves the power of determining such questions, on the ground that such practice insures greater unanimity of opinion, or on any other ground, without denying suitors their constitutional right of a trial by jury. The cases cited by the majority of the court in support of the proposition that the question whether a given code of rules is reasonable and sufficient is one of law (with one exception, to wit, Illinois C. R. Co. v. Whittemore, 43 Ill. 420, 423, 12 Am. Dec. 138) were all cases where a rule or regulation was introduced without any testimony tending to show whether the regulation was reasonable or otherwise, and the decisions were simply to the effect that in such cases the court could properly decide as to reasonableness of the regulation. In three of the cases, and particularly in the case of Vedder v. Fellows, 20 N. Y. 126, 131, to which all the other cases refer as the foundation of the doctrine, it was clearly intimated that the reasonableness of a regulation is a question of fact for the jury when there is a conflict of testimony upon that issue, and it is difficult to conceive how the rule could be otherwise without ignoring fundamental principles. In the case of St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Adcock, 52 Ark. 406, 410, the court said, "The facts being uncontroverted, it was the province of the court to declare the regulations reasonable." The same remark was quoted with approval in the subsequent case of Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Hammond, 58 Ark. 324, 334, and in a late case in New York (Abel v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 128 N. Y. 662, 666, 667), where the sufficiency of a code of rules which had been adopted by a railway company was challenged, and there was some testimony on that subject besides the rules by a prescribed time-table or otherwise, had been made by the company. But it is obvious that the company may have prescribed proper and safe rules in respect to the starting of these trains, and that those rules may have been disregarded by the persons who actually started these trains so near each other. It may be conceded that it is the duty of a railroad corporation to prescribe, either by means of time-tables or by other suitable modes, regulations for running their trains with a view to their safety; but it is obvious that obedience to these regulations must be intrusted to the employees having charge of the trains. Such obedience is matter of executive detail which, in the nature of things, no corporation or any general agent of a corporation can personally oversee, and as to which employees must be relied upon. . . . Nothing appears in the evidence indicating that any distinction exists between the duty of the company in starting trains and in subsequently running them. In the absence, therefore, of any such proof, and of any proof showing negligence in this respect on the part of the defendants, the case must be determined by ascertaining on which party the burden of proof rests."

2. Under statutes modifying the common law.

The subjoined decisions illustrate the effect of statutes abolishing the doctrine of common employment.

The conduct of a switching crew in using a main track in violation of the company's rules for switching purposes at the very time a train is due, is such negligence as will render the company liable for injuries received by the engineer of that train as the result of its collision with the cars left on the main track. Hall v. Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. (1891) 46 Minn. 439. (Laws 1887, chap. 13). Where a rule of the company enjoins upon a coemployee of the plaintiff the performance of a particular duty, such coemployee is bound to exercise ordinary care in the discharge of that duty; it is not cause for reversal that the court charged the jury that, if such coemployee failed to exercise ordinary care in discharging such duty, they "ought to find the defendant company negligent 43 L. R. A.

in that regard." Western & A. R. Co. v. Bussey (1894) 95 Ga. 584. (Code of 1892, § 2083.)

A rule by which conductors are "cautioned as to flying switches," and directed to "avoid such switching even if it increases their work," is advisory merely, and does not forbid such switches. The fact, therefore, that a conductor orders a brakeman to make such a switch is not such negligence as will render the company liable for injuries to the latter. Youll v. Sioux City & P. R. Co. (1885) 66 Iowa, 346. (Code, § 1307.)

A railway engineer who, without receiving any notice from his fireman of his intention to go under the engine to clean out the ash pan, such as the well-understood custom among engineers and firemen requires shall be given, blows off the engine while the fireman is so at work under it and scalds him, is not guilty of negligence in so doing. Crane v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1896) 93 Wis. 487. (Stat. 1893, chap. 220, § 1. Custom here assumed to be equivalent to rule.)

It is not error to admit in evidence a rule from a railroad company's book of rules providing that "a lamp swung across the track is the signal to stop" where the issue involved is whether the engineer was negligent in failing to perceive upon the track an employee who had fallen down and became unconscious by reason of sickness. Helton v. Alabama Midland R. Co. (1893) 97 Ala. 275. (Code, § 2590.)

A railroad company is liable for the death of an engineer caused by the negligence of a conductor in failing to observe a rule that, in case of a stoppage on the main line, the train shall be protected by sending back flagmen. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Culpepper (1898, Tex. Civ. App.) 46 S. W. 922. (Tex. Rev. Stat. 1895, § 4560 F.)

Where it is a question whether a coemployee, for whose negligence a statute makes the master responsible, violated a rule, parol proof that the master's rules required the performance of the act which the employee is alleged to have omitted is admissible, where it does not appear that there is any better evidence of such rules. Sobieski v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. (1889) 41 Minn. 169. (Minn. Laws of 1887, chap. 13.)

C. B. L.

themselves, it was held that the issue presented was properly submitted to the jury. I conclude, therefore, that the reasonableness of a regulation is a question of law for the court only in those cases where no testimony is offered tending to show whether it is reasonable or otherwise, and that where, as in the case at bar, there is a conflict of testimony on such issue, the question is one of fact for the jury.

In the opinion in chief it is further held that the defendant company is not liable to the plaintiff, even if it was guilty of negligence in failing to inform those in charge of the extra train at Edmondson of the then whereabouts of the freight train. This conclusion is based on the ground that the negligence of the defendant company was not the proximate cause of the accident, but that the accident was solely occasioned by the fault of certain fellow servants of the plaintiff. I am not able to assent to this proposition. If, as the testimony for the plaintiff below tended to show, the rules were insufficient for the protection of trainmen and passengers, as applied to the conditions existing when the extra train reached Edmondson, and if at that station the train despatcher ought to have given the information last above specified to the engineer and conductor of the extra train, then, in my judgment, it was the right of the jury to determine whether such omission of duty on the part of the defendant company directly contributed to the accident. The question as to what was the proximate cause of an injury is ordinarily not one of legal knowledge, but of fact, for the jury to determine, in view of all the accompanying circumstances. Milwaukee &

St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 474, 24 L. ed. 256, 258. And in the case at bar the jury might well have reached the conclusion that a word of caution spoken at Edmondson to the engineer in charge of the extra train would have prevented the disaster. The operator at Edmondson evidently thought that the extra train ought to be warned that the freight train had not reached Forrest City, for as it came into view he said to the train despatcher, over the wire: "Here comes the special. Have you any orders for it?" The engineer of the extra train well knew that sufficient time had elapsed to enable the freight train to reach Forrest City, and he doubtless supposed that it had passed that station some time before the extra reached Edmondson. If he had been warned that it had not reached Forrest City, he would doubtless have exercised a degree of care commensurate with the conditions which actually existed, and the jury might reasonably have found that the failure to give such warning directly contributed to the injury. Moreover, the fact that certain fellow servants of the plaintiff were also guilty of negligence did not absolve the defendant company from liability for its own neglect of duty, or that of its train despatcher, since it is well settled that it is no excuse for a master, when sued by his servant, that the negligence of a fellow employee, as well as his own, contributed to occasion the injury. For these reasons I cannot concur in the views of my associates, that they have the right to determine that the negligence of the defendant company was not the proximate cause of the accident.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

James DOUGLASS, Appt.,
v.

City Council of MONTGOMERY et al.

(.....Ala.....)

1. A grant of a right to construct a railway over a city park and the abandonment and discontinuance of the park by the city, which attempts to confirm the title of a reversioner, is a violation of the trust of the city for the public, where the lands were conveyed for a street or common only, with a provision for their reversion if used for other purposes, and were afterwards dedicated by the city as a public park or pleasure ground.
2. One who can look out from the front of his house, with an unobstructed view, upon a park near by, can maintain a suit to prevent the destruction of the park, although he may not be strictly an abutting owner.

(Coleman, J., dissents.)

(November 5, 1898.)

NOTE.—For protection of parks from forbidden uses, see also Clarke v. Providence (R. I.) 1 L. R. A. 725; Church v. Portland (Or.) 6 L. R. A. 259; Fort Wayne v. Lake Shore & M. S. 43 L. R. A.

A PPEAL by complainant from a decree of the Chancery Court for Montgomery County in favor of defendants in a suit brought to enjoin the enforcement of certain ordinances discontinuing a public park and confirming the title in the owners of the reversionary interest. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Frederick S. Ball, for appellant:

The city council of Montgomery had no legal right, power, and authority to grant the Belt Line Railway Company the right to lay and operate a railroad track across said park.

Municipal corporations hold the title to streets, alleys, public squares, wharves, etc., in trust for the public.

15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1064; Harn v. Dadeville, 100 Ala. 199; Webb v. Demopolis, 95 Ala. 116, 21 L. R. A. 62; Avondale Land Co. v. Avondale, 111 Ala. 523; Com. v. Rush, 14 Pa. 186; Ransom v. Boal, 29 Iowa, 68, 4 Am. Rep. 195; Warren v. Lyons City,

R. Co. (Ind.) 18 L. R. A. 367; Sturmer v. Randolph County Ct. (W. Va.) 36 L. R. A. 300; and Rowzee v. Pierce (Miss.) 40 L. R. A. 402.

22 Iowa, 351; Alton v. Illinois Transp. Co. 12 Ill. 38, 52 Am. Dec. 479; St. Paul v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 63 Minn. 330, 34 L. R. A. 184; Morris v. Sea Girt Land Improv. Co. 38 N. J. Eq. 304, note; Methodist Episcopal Church v. Hoboken, 33 N. J. L. 13, 97 Am. Dec. 696.

By the original deed said land was to be used only as a common or street.

By the recitals in the ordinances, the city council, as the moving or ordaining party thereto, the maker, the dedicator in the ordinance of 1877 and grantor in the two of 1897, is estopped from denying that said lot or parcel was conveyed to, and held by it, as a common or public park and in trust for the city of Montgomery and its inhabitants.

Miller v. Hampton, 37 Ala. 342.

Property which the municipal corporation holds in trust for the public, such as streets, public squares, etc., can only be used for the purpose for which it was dedicated.

15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1068; Ransom v. Boal, 29 Iowa, 68, 4 Am. Rep. 195; Warren v. Lyons City, 22 Iowa, 351; St. Paul v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 63 Minn. 330, 34 L. R. A. 184; Morris v. Sea Girt Land Improv. Co. 38 N. J. Eq. 304.

The city council has only such power and authority as has been conferred upon it by the legislature as expressed in its charter, and its charter must be strictly construed.

New Orleans, M. & C. R. Co. v. Dunn, 51 Ala. 128; Wetumpka v. Wetumpka Wharf Co. 63 Ala. 611; St. Paul v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 63 Minn. 330, 34 L. R. A. 184.

The city council cannot grant a railroad right of way over a public park except by express legislative authority in each particular case.

Jacksonville v. Jacksonville R. Co. 67 Ill. 540; Price v. Thompson, 48 Mo. 361; St. Paul v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 63 Minn. 330, 34 L. R. A. 184.

The city council of Montgomery had no power and authority to grant said park to, or confirm the title to the same in, said Alabama Midland Railway Company.

2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 650; Webb v. Demopolis, 95 Ala. 116, 21 L. R. A. 62; Morris v. Sea Girt Land Improv. Co. 38 N. J. Eq. 304; Com. v. Rush, 14 Pa. 186; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1064.

Trustees of towns have no authority to convey the streets, alleys, or public grounds, and such conveyances are absolutely void.

Giltner v. Carrollton, 7 B. Mon. 680; Alton v. Illinois Transp. Co. 12 Ill. 38, 52 Am. Dec. 479; Morris v. Sea Girt Land Improv. Co. 38 N. J. Eq. 304, note; Com. v. Rush, 14 Pa. 186; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1064.

The city council had not so violated the terms of its original purchase as to cause a reversion of said park to said Alabama Midland Railway Company as the owner of said reversionary interest.

A court of chancery has jurisdiction and may use its writ of injunction.

High, Inj. 2d ed. § 855; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 67; Atty. Gen. v. Goderich, 5 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 402; Guelph v. Canada Co. 4 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 654; Harrison, Mun. 43 L. R. A.

Law, 5th ed. 350; Kennedy v. Jones, 11 Ala. 63; Warren v. Lyons City, 22 Iowa, 351; Ransom v. Boal, 29 Iowa, 68, 4 Am. Rep. 195; Morris v. Sea Girt Land Improv. Co. 38 N. J. Eq. 304, note; State v. Mobile, 5 Port. (Ala.) 279, 30 Am. Dec. 564.

A resident citizen, property owner, and taxpayer of the city may maintain his suit as herein.

5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 418; Maywood Co. v. Maywood, 118 Ill. 61; Princeville v. Auten, 77 Ill. 325; Ransom v. Boal, 29 Iowa, 68, 4 Am. Rep. 195; Brockman v. Creston, 79 Iowa, 587; Sheffield & T. Street R. Co. v. Rand, 83 Ala. 294; Morris v. Sea Girt Land Improv. Co. 38 N. J. Eq. 304, note.

A resident citizen and taxpayer, living and owning property near the park, and suffering special irreparable injury in his personal or property rights, may maintain his suit to enjoin the cause of such injury.

High, Inj. § 1301; Tift v. Buffalo, 65 Barb. 460; Chicago v. Union Bldg. Assn. 102 Ill. 379, 40 Am. Rep. 598; Roosevelt v. Draper, 23 N. Y. 323; Sheffield & T. Street R. Co. v. Rand, 83 Ala. 294; Morris v. Sea Girt Land Improv. Co. 38 N. J. Eq. 304, note; Greene v. New York C. & H. R. Co. 12 Abb. N. C. 124; Williams v. Boston Water Power Co. 134 Mass. 406; Perrin v. New York C. R. Co. 40 Barb. 65, 36 N. Y. 120.

The true test is not ownership of fronting property, but injury to the party's property rights different from that of the body of the inhabitants.

Tift v. Buffalo, 65 Barb. 460; Chicago v. Union Bldg. Assn. 102 Ill. 379, 40 Am. Rep. 598; Morris v. Sea Girt Land Improv. Co. 38 N. J. Eq. 304, note.

The building of a railroad in a street is not a nuisance per se. To build it across a park may be; but certainly the conversion of a park into railroad yards is a nuisance per se.

State v. Mobile, 5 Port. (Ala.) 279, 30 Am. Dec. 564; Rosser v. Randolph, 7 Port. (Ala.) 238, 31 Am. Dec. 712; Hoole v. Atty. Gen. 22 Ala. 190; Demopolis v. Webb, 87 Ala. 659; Reed v. Birmingham, 92 Ala. 339.

Messrs. A. A. Wiley and Charles Wilkinson, for appellees:

The deed of Gilmer and wife to the city council of Montgomery was a deed either on condition or a conditional limitation.

1 Sharswood & B. Lead. Cas. on Real Prop. pp. 134, 135.

The effect of a nonperformance or breach of a condition subsequent is to render the estate granted liable to forfeiture at the option of the person entitled to take advantage of such breach.

1 Sharswood & B. Lead. Cas. on Real Prop. p. 136.

The reversioner has a right to declare a forfeiture.

Schlesinger v. Kansas City & S. R. Co. 152 U. S. 447, 38 L. ed. 507; Covell v. Colorado Springs Co. 100 U. S. 55, 25 L. ed. 547.

No injunction will lie to restrain a municipal ordinance, except where special and extraordinary damages are shown.

High, Inj. §§ 587, 1301.

No right is given a taxpayer to restrain a vacation or abandonment of a street or park in any event, unless he is an abutting property holder.

High, Inj. §§ 594, 1301, 1302; Tift v. Buffalo, 65 Barb. 460; Chicago v. Union Bldg. Assn. 102 Ill. 379, 40 Am. Rep. 598; Hering v. Scott, 107 Ill. 600; McGee's Appeal, 114 Pa. 470; Brady v. Shinkle, 40 Iowa, 676.

The public streets, parks, and highways in Montgomery belong to the city, and when the municipality sees fit to vacate them, the consequential loss, if any, must be borne by those who suffer it.

McGee's Appeal, 114 Pa. 470; Stetson v. Chicago & E. R. Co. 75 Ill. 74; Patterson v. Chicago, D. & V. R. Co. 75 Ill. 588.

In this case the city council of Montgomery is virtually enjoined from executing an ordinance which authorizes the construction and operation of a street railway through Gilmer park. The adoption of the ordinance in question was legislative in its character, and is fully exempted from judicial control.

Montgomery Gaslight Co. v. Montgomery, 27 Ala. 257, 4 L. R. A. 616; Schurmeier v. St. Paul & P. R. Co. 8 Minn. 113, 83 Am. Dec. 770; Zabriskie v. Jersey City & B. R. Co. 13 N. J. Eq. 314; Booraem v. North Hudson County R. Co. 40 N. J. Eq. 557; Western Railway of Ala. v. Alabama G. T. R. Co. 96 Ala. 272, 17 L. R. A. 474.

Haralson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is stated in 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1064, that "municipal corporations hold the title to streets, alleys, public squares, wharves, etc., in trust for the public; and upon principle, such trust property can no more be disposed of by the corporation than can any other trust property held by an individual." In the note to the text, many decisions are cited in support of the principle stated. So, it has been held that the trustees of a town have no authority to convey streets, alleys, or public grounds, and such conveyances are absolutely void. Giltner v. Carrollton, 7 B. Mon. 680; Morris v. Sea Girt Land Improv. Co. 38 N. J. Eq. 304, and authorities there cited; Harn v. Dadeville, 100 Ala. 200; Webb v. Demopolis, 95 Ala. 116, 21 L. R. A. 62. In the case last cited, which had reference to a public street,—over which, in general, the city has greater authority in the matter of the direction of the uses to which it may be subjected than it has over a public park,—it was said: "The city never had any alienable title to or right in the street. It could never have granted it or any part of it away, for any purpose whatever. Having no power of direct alienation it could not pass title indirectly by submitting for the statutory period to private possession, claim, and use."

Judge Dillon states the rule to be, that "municipal corporations possess the incidental or implied right to alienate or dispose of the property, real or personal, of the corporation, of a private nature, unless restrained by charter or statute; they cannot, of course, dispose of property of a public nature, in violation of the trusts upon which it is held, and they cannot, except under valid legislative authority, dispose of the public squares, streets, or commons." 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 575, 650, and numerous authorities cited. Another phase of the rule should be added in this connection, as we find it stated in the Encyclopedia: "When lands held by a municipality for public use are not subject to any special trust, the legislature may authorize a municipal corporation to sell and dispose of the same or to apply them to uses different from those to which they are devoted, but, in the absence of such an authority, the municipality has no implied power to do so. . . . If, however, the lands have been dedicated by private individuals for a public park or square, the legislature has no authority to authorize any diversion from the use to which they were originally dedicated." 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 417, and authorities.

In this case, on the 17th of September, 1850, F. M. Gilmer and his wife, in consideration of $300 paid to said Gilmer, by the city council of Montgomery, sold and conveyed to said city council a piece of land in said city, the subject of this suit, which is particularly described in the conveyance, and is called "Gilmer Park." The conveyance contained the condition, "said lands to be used only as a common or street; if otherwise, to revert to me or my heirs." Neither the park, nor any part of it, has ever been devoted to street purposes; but, on the 19th February, 1877, as alleged, the city council of Montgomery, by ordinance, set apart and dedicated to the public use, as a public park or pleasure ground, the lands conveyed to them by said Gilmer, known as "Gilmer Park," which ordinance is still of force. It is further alleged that shortly after the adoption of said ordinance the said city council caused the said Gilmer park to be inclosed with a fence, and caused a number of trees to be planted on or about it, and from that time down to about the 20th January, 1897, the said park remained inclosed, and was held and treated and used as a park, for the use and benefit of the inhabitants of the city of Montgomery, etc.

The said F. M. Gilmer died, leaving a widow and two children. The defendant, the Alabama Midland Railway Company, purchased from his widow and these two children, for the recited consideration of $300, all their right, title, interest, and reversion in and to the lands known as the "Gilmer Park." This company, according to the allegations of the bill, and as appears to be true, for the purpose of promoting its terminal facilities and its connections with the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, induced the city council of Montgomery by ordinance to grant to the Belt Line Railway Company—a local company in the city—the right to put down and operate an additional main-line track through Gilmer park, etc.; and, also, to adopt another ordinance at the same time—both ordinances having been prepared, as alleged, by the counsel of the Alabama Midland Railway Company, and induced, adopted, and approved on the same days. Manifestly, these ordinances constitute but one transaction, designed for the same purpose. The two might as well have been adopted as one. The latter ordinance, after reciting the sale by Gilmer of said park to the city; the purposes of its conveyance; the condition of its reversion to his heirs; the purchase of the reversionary interest of the heirs of Gilmer by said Alabama Midland Railway Company, contains this further recital, by way of preamble: "And whereas, the exigencies of public business and the necessity of better transportation facilities have induced the city council of Montgomery to grant to the Belt Line Railway Company the right and privilege of laying down a railway track through, over, and across said triangular park, otherwise called the 'Gilmer Park,' and to run and operate a dummy steam engine and cars thereon, thereby destroying the said parcel of land as a public park, and thereby causing a reversion of said realty to its rightful owners; Now, therefore, and for the purpose of abandoning in some public and authoritative manner, the use of said land as a public park, be it therefore ordained by the city council of Montgomery, that said city council of Montgomery hereby abandons and discontinues the use of said ground or parcel of land as a park and for all other purposes; and hereby confirms, as far as the city council of Montgomery is able to do, the right, title, claim, and interest of the said Alabama Midland Railway Company, its successors and assigns therein and thereunto forever. Adopted Jan. 13, 1897. Approved Jan. 18, 1897."

There is no disguise about these ordinances. The city authorities openly abandoned whatever trust obligation had been imposed on them by the deed of Gilmer to the park, and their own act of dedication by said ordinance of the 19th of February, 1877, by which act of abandonment, as was supposed, the title would revert to the Gilmer heirs, whose reversionary interest, if they had any, the said Midland Railway Company had bought up. The effort was to invest the railroad company with a title to the property, by means of this violation of the trust of the city. The city authorities were induced into the scheme, by what, it is stated, appeared to them to be the necessity of better transportation facilities and the exigencies of the public business. We must acquit all engaged in this scheme, of any intentional fraud upon the rights of the public; the one side, in procuring, and the other in yielding to, an abandonment of a public trust for another supposed public benefit. But, yielding to them a good and honest intention, what was accomplished, according to the authorities, was an illegal transaction and a fraud in law. The condition inserted in his deed by Gilmer, for a reversion of this property to him and his heirs, if the land should be used otherwise than as a common or street, was inserted, not as a provision to enable the city authorities to abandon or divert it at will, if accepted for the purposes intended, but to prevent their doing so. It was not a license for the violation of the trust tendered, if assumed, but a prohibition against such a violation. It is true, the deed did not make a positive dedication of the land for the purposes named, and it is also true, that the conveyance was made for a recited consideration of $300, and is, in form, a fee-simple title, containing the condition for reversion, if the land conveyed should be used otherwise than as a street or common. Without such condition, it may be that the price for the land would have been much greater. Certainly such a condition in any deed tended to impair the value of the lands conveyed. It was an encumbrance on a free title. We know of no rule which prevents a dedication to uses from being ingrafted on a fee-simple title conveyed for value, nor do we know of any rule which prevents the ingrafting of a conditional dedication to uses in such a conveyance; the dedication to be completed and irrevocable on the acceptance of the conveyance with the conditions imposed. If it had been recited in said deed, that the city had agreed to accept the conveyance on the conditions imposed, and had by ordinance set apart and dedicated the land to the public for the uses prescribed, as a consideration for procuring the conveyance, could it be doubted that the conveyance on such terms would have been less than a dedication, and that its charter as such would have been destroyed, because of a condition in the conveyance that if the grantee violated the terms of the deed in this regard the property should revert to the heirs of the grantor? It is not left open to doubt, that there had been negotiation on the part of the city with Gilmer for the procurement of this land, and as to the purposes for which it was to be procured. Gilmer did not desire the property ever to revert. The clause referred to in his deed was not inserted in his interest or that of his heirs, but in the interest of the public, and was as strong as he could devise to prevent, in the future, an abandonment of the trust he reposed in his trustee for uses,—the city of Montgomery. The city elected to accept the trust as and for a dedication for a public park, as is evidenced by their said ordinance to that effect, adopted the 19th February, 1877. In this said ordinance, they recited: "Whereas, some of said parcels (referring to certain small tracts or parcels of land in a triangular shape) were granted to the city on condition and in trust that they should be devoted to public use as parks or pleasure grounds, and whereas, the health and comfort of the citizens and the best interests of the city will be promoted by converting the said parcels of land into parks and pleasure grounds, therefore be it ordained," etc., followed by a dedication of said park to the public use as a park or pleasure ground. After this, the conveyance of Gilmer became as operative as a dedication, as much so as if such a use had been unconditionally ingrafted in the deed at its execution. The public became thereby invested with dedicated rights and interests. The trustee violated the trust, and aided in diverting the dedication. This was a wrong from which no right could accrue to anyone who claims in consequence of such an act.

It remains to inquire if the complainant is such a party as can maintain a bill to enjoin the abandonment and destruction of this park. He may not be an abutting owner, strictly speaking. He owns two lots on the west side of Catoma street, the first, next to and adjoining an abutting owner, who owns a small lot between him and the street in front of the park. From the front of complainant's door, diagonally across the street, on the left, to the park, it is 110 feet,—open and unobstructed. He also owns another lot, on the same side of said street, with an intervening lot between it and the first one referred to, 250 feet from said park.

Ordinarily, the city is the proper party to redress a wrong of the character here complained of; but in this instance it is the main actor in the commission of the wrongs complained of, for the abandonment and destruction of the park. It is to be presumed, it would not file a bill to declare void an act which, by solemn ordinance, it had itself just done. Individuals damaged by such action, therefore, were driven to private action for the maintenance of any rights they had in the premises.

There are authorities which hold that non-abutting property owners upon a square or park cannot complain of its being closed by municipal authority; but with such a doctrine, if necessary to decide, we might not agree. There is a marked difference between the uses and trusts as ordinarily imposed in the dedication of streets or highways in a city, and those imposed in the dedication of public squares or commons, and in the use and enjoyments of the people therein. The municipality may allow uses in the one that it cannot in the other. The uses of each are distinct, and the rights of abutting proprietors on each are different. It is allowed, generally, that such a proprietor as to a street owns to its center, but there is no such right, or anything accruing from it, in an abutter on a park. The street must be kept open, as long as used, but the park may be inclosed, improved, and ornamented for pleasure grounds and amusements, for health and recreation. 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 410. In speaking of this difference between the rights of property owners attinent to a street and a public common, dedicated to public uses, this court, in Sheffield & T. Street R. Co. v. Rand, 83 Ala. 294, said the rule of law was entirely different when applied to the two; that "the purpose for which such dedication is made, the use or changing uses to which it may be applied, and many other distinguishing characteristics, demonstrate that neither the rule nor the reason of the rule, on which the law of the street or highway rests, can be made applicable to a public common. The differences will naturally suggest themselves, and we need not attempt their enumeration."

43 L. R. A.

In respect to the remedy for the misuse or diversion of such property, it has been said: "If dedicated property be put to a use foreign to that contemplated by the intention and purpose of the dedication, then not only the dedicator, but any property owner, will have his remedy in equity to enforce the proper use, and inhibit an improper one." 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 418, and authorities there cited.

In Maywood Co. v. Maywood, 118 Ill. 61, a bill filed by the village and Small and Hubbard, residents therein, to prevent obstructions to a public park,—it was said: "The objection of multifariousness or misjoinder of complaints we do not regard as well taken to the bill. Small and Hubbard, as residents of the village, have a common interest with each other and with the village itself, in preventing any obstruction to the use of the public square for the purposes of a park." "Again, the evidence shows a threatened nuisance tending to deprive appellees and others of the full and free use of this park, as they were entitled to have it used. This is a well-recognized ground for equitable interposition." Zearing v. Raber, 74 Ill. 409. When a dedication of land for a public park is made by or to a town or city, it inures to the benefit of all who are at the time, or may afterwards become, citizens of the municipality, which holds in trust for the benefit of the public, with no power to convey or divert it to other uses. This right of use belongs equally, not only to lot holders of the corporation, but to all the inhabitants, in the future as well as at present, according to their various necessities or conveniences. Macon v. Franklin, 12 Ga. 239; Alves v. Henderson, 10 B. Mon. 131, 169; Campbell County Ct. v. Newport, 12 B. Mon. 541; Pomeroy v. Mills, 3 Vt. 279, 23 Am. Dec. 207; Com. v. Rush, 14 Pa. 186; Carter v. Portland, 4 Or. 346; Alton v. Illinois Transp. Co. 12 Ill. 38, 52 Am. Dec. 479; Quincy v. Jones, 76 Ill. 231, 20 Am. Rep. 243; Sheffield & T. Street R. Co. v. Rand, 83 Ala. 294; 2 Beach, Inj. § 1279, and authorities cited in note 1.

It is unnecessary, perhaps, for us to decide in this case that any resident taxpayer in a city or town may maintain a bill to enjoin a diversion and abandonment of grounds dedicated for a public park, to the use of individuals and corporations for their own private use and advantage, in interference with or destruction of the rights of the public therein. It appears, however, that reason and authority are not wanting for such a holding. In these days of rapid and cheap transit in cities and towns, brought about by the applications of steam and electricity, it would seem that every resident property holder of the municipality occupies, in a sense, the position of an adjacent owner to its public parks, dedicated to public use, and is clothed with all the valuable rights and interest in such dedications, as the one whose property abuts them. These parks, by these means, are the great resorts for health and recreation by all the inhabitants of the municipality, valuable and beneficent in their advantages to all alike. The one living remote is borne in a few minutes, at the cost of a trifle, to and from these grounds, and derives as much rest, recreation, and profit from their existence as the one in closer proximity may enjoy. When the hand of vandalism and destruction is laid upon them, by the municipality itself or by strangers, it is difficult to understand upon what principle any individual property owner, without respect to where he lives in the city or town, may not himself invoke injunctive relief against their destruction or misuse when perpetrated by the municipality, or join it for such relief, against such acts when done by others. If there ever existed any good reason why such relief should be invoked alone by an abutting proprietor, it may be that it must give way, in accommodation to the necessities and conditions of modern life, brought about by the wonderful discoveries of the present age.

But we find no difficulty in holding that the complainant in this case is in reason, and for the purposes of this case, an adjacent proprietor to the said park, and occupies such a position as entitles him to maintain this bill. He can look out from the front of one of his houses, with an unobstructed view, on to the park, a distance of only 110 feet from him. This gives him the attitude of an adjacent proprietor. From his other lot the view is obstructed, though it is only 250 feet from the park. For the purposes of aid and recreation, he has shown he has a direct and special interest against its proposed destruction.

The cause was submitted on a motion to dissolve the injunction theretofore granted, and on motion to dismiss the bill for want of equity. The court by its decree dissolved the injunction, and dismissed the bill for want of equity. In this there was error.

The decree is reversed and the cause remanded.

Coleman, J., dissenting:

This cause was submitted to the chancery court on a motion by respondents to dissolve an injunction and on a motion to dismiss the bill for the want of equity. The chancellor granted the motion to dissolve the injunction and dismiss the bill for want of equity. From the decree dissolving the injunction and dismissing the bill the present appeal was prosecuted by the complainant, and the correctness of this doctrine presents the only question for review. This court has no jurisdiction to render a final decree granting relief to complainant upon the present appeal. A motion to dismiss a bill for want of equity cannot perform the office of a demurrer. On such a motion all amendable defects will be considered as made. The material questions are: Has the bill equity? and, if the averments of the bill show a state of facts which justify relief, can the bill be maintained by the complainant? The purpose of the bill is to enjoin the respondent railroads from laying tracks upon and across a plat of land in the city of Montgomery designated as "Gilmer Park," and to set aside and annul certain ordinances of the city, by which the respondent railroads were authorized to make such use of said plat of ground. The rule is general and well established that a municipal corporation has no power, unless specially authorized by the legislature, to sell for its own benefit, or to appropriate for the use and benefit of private persons or corporations, a public park or common; and, if this was the only question involved, we would have little difficulty in reaching a conclusion. The question presented is whether Gilmer park was held by the city of Montgomery upon such terms and conditions as to justify the application of the general rule to the case at bar; and, secondly, whether a municipal corporation, when it has once appropriated a plat of ground as a public park, is compelled to maintain it as such for all time, although, by reason of circumstances and changed conditions, it is no longer adapted to, or is useful for, such purposes. It is probable that the latter question more properly arises upon the motion to dissolve the injunction upon the denials of the answer. Francis M. Gilmer sold and conveyed to the city of Montgomery said plat of land for $300, and the deed of conveyance provides that "said lands to be used only as a common or street, otherwise to revert to me or my heirs." (We italicize.) This conveyance is not a dedication to the city, nor did the city acquire an absolute, unconditional title and estate in the land. In our opinion, the legislature would be powerless to authorize the city to sell the plat of land so as to convey a title to a purchaser. Much less, without such authority, could the city sell or appropriate it to other purposes than for a street or common. 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 651, and note. The land belonged to Gilmer. He had the right to dispose of it on such terms, and for such purposes, as he saw proper, not inconsistent with any law or the public good. The provision in the deed, "said lands to be used only as a common or street, otherwise to revert to me or my heirs," was as much a part of the consideration for the sale and conveyance as the $300. A dedication, after it becomes effective, is irrevocable. An easement may be legally abandoned. The fee is then released from the burden of the easement, and the owner comes into possession as before the dedication. No court, nor the city of Montgomery, nor the legislature, has the power to eliminate from the deed of conveyance the provision which declares that, if the land is used for other purposes, "it is to revert to me or my heirs." To hold otherwise would invade the sanctity of contracts, and destroy rights reserved by solemn deed. Persons erecting improvements or making investments with reference to Gilmer park, and having notice, actual or constructive, of the terms and conditions upon which the city acquired the land, have no cause of complaint against the grantor or his heirs. He had the right, in making the sale, to contract for the conditions upon which the land should revert, and the city acquired and held the land upon these terms and conditions, and no other. The case is different where there has been irrevocable dedication, or where the municipality purchases land, and obtains an absolute, unconditional, indefeasible estate in fee. According to the averments of the bill, the city of Montgomery has abandoned the land as a park or street, and, so far as it is competent to act, has devoted the land to other purposes than "as a street or common;" but complainant's contention is, and the equity of the bill rests upon the contention, that any act of the city of Montgomery, by which the land might revert to the grantor as provided in the deed, is null and void. The equity of the bill, summarily stated, is that the provision in the deed of conveyance of Gilmer to the city, "said lands to be used only as a common or street, otherwise to revert to me or my heirs," is without legal force, and ought to be stricken out. Certainly the parties to the deed did not so understand it, and we know of no rule of equity or justice which sustains the contention. It may be that, by some act of Gilmer, he is estopped from asserting any claim or right reserved or provided for by virtue of the deed, and the bill may be capable of amendment, so as to give it equity in this respect. We are unable to say.

The bill shows clearly that the other citizens of Montgomery will suffer like inconveniences and deprivations as himself by destruction of the park and the running of railroad engines over the land. Conceding that the bill shows that application to the city authorities for redress would be useless, has a single citizen of Montgomery, in his own name, the right to file a bill to redress what is shown to be a public wrong, if a wrong at all? Should not the bill be filed in the name of all or such as are willing to come in as complainants? To authorize a bill in the name of a single person, must it not aver, not by way of conclusion, a special injury, but the facts which show a special injury different from that sustained in common with others? 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 920, and note; Church v. Portland (Or.) 6 L. R. A. 259, and notes (18 Or. 73). These questions are not raised by demurrer, and are not before us on this appeal. We merely suggest for inquiry.

We will refer briefly to the decree dissolving the injunction. On page 38 of the record it is said: "This cause coming on to be heard on motion to dissolve the injunction, on the sworn denials of the answer, and to dismiss the bill for want of equity." We regard this as a submission upon the answers of all the defendants. Many exceptions are taken by answers which were not considered by the court. Leaving out of consideration all the averments of fact except those responsive, and such as should be considered on a motion to dissolve the injunction, under our view of the law, we are of the opinion the injunction was properly dissolved. We will reverse the decree dismissing the bill, and remand the cause, that complainant may have an opportunity to amend the bill as he may be advised. Thirty days will be allowed from the date of this decree within 43 L. R. A.

which to amend the bill, and, if not amended within the time, the court, at any regular term thereafter, shall dismiss the bill, absolutely.

J. W. WORTHINGTON et al., Appts.,

v.

M. M. GWIN.

(.....Ala.....)

1. The fact that a small quantity of ore delivered under a contract providing for successive shipments of ore free from foreign substances was not free from them does not justify an abandonment of the entire contract.
2. The mere expression of dissatisfaction with an article furnished under a contract providing that it shall be satisfactory will not justify a termination of the contract, if there was not an actual dissatisfaction.
3. Declarations of the superintendent of a company when receiving ore, as to its being satisfactory, are competent evidence to show that it was satisfactory.
4. The expenditure for rails for a side track to be used in mining may be included in the damages for breach of a mining contract.
5. A witness who has testified as to dissatisfaction with the methods of a party in mining ore may be asked on cross-examination if he did not afterwards propose to contract with him for mining.

(November 5, 1898.)

APPPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the City Court of Birmingham in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for breach of a mining contract. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Walker Percy, for appellants:

A delivery of only a part of the quality ordered, or a failure to deliver any part of it, terminates the contract if the plaintiffs see proper to so treat and regard it.

Johnson v. Allen, 78 Ala. 391, 56 Am. Rep. 34; Norrington v. Wright, 115 U. S. 188, 29 L. ed. 366.

It was plaintiff's duty to mine and ship the ore in a manner satisfactory to the furnace company receiving the same.

A contract of hiring by which the employee guarantees to give satisfaction vests the master with full power to determine whether the work is satisfactory.

Allen v. Mutual Compress Co. 101 Ala. 574.

Messrs. Bowman & Harsh and O. W. Ward for appellee.

NOTE.—For an extensive review of the subject of the right to rescind or abandon a contract because of a default of the other party, see note to Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Richards (Ill.) 30 L. R. A. 33.

Brickell, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was instituted by appellee to recover damages for the breach of a mining contract entered into between appellants and appellee's assignor. By the terms of the agreement, which was in the form of a written proposition by Thomas H. Dunn and the acceptance thereof by appellants, appellee was to "strip, quarry, and deliver one quarter of a mile of the outcrop [ore], commencing at a point nearest the Birmingham Mineral Railroad, at 50 cents (fifty cents) per ton of 2,240 lbs., weight to be ascertained from furnace company receiving the ore, such furnace company weighing the ore in the usual manner. Ore to be paid for on the 20th day of each month for the ore shipped on the previous month. The 50 cents per ton to be my whole compensation for mining, quarrying, and delivering said ore on board cars. You to loan what rails I need for delivering ore on board cars. Said rails to be returned when job is completed. The ore is to be stripped up to a face of from 10 to 15 feet, as I may prefer to do. I will commence work on the 8th, and put on a force of twelve or fifteen teams, and commence the delivery of the ore as soon thereafter as practicable. The said ore is to be mined and put on board the cars free of foreign substance, and in a manner satisfactory to the furnace company receiving the same." The principal breach assigned is that "defendants ordered plaintiff to cease mining ore under said agreement." There are other assignments, among which is one averring that defendants "caused the railroad company not to furnish the plaintiff with cars on which to load ore mined and to be mined under said agreement." The damages claimed consisted of the loss of profits which would have been earned if plaintiff had been allowed to carry out the contract, and also the loss sustained by reason of his purchase of a "large quantity of rails, tools, implements, and fixtures in and about carrying out said agreement." The overruling of the motions to strike out the averment by which the last-mentioned damages were claimed, and the averment that defendants had caused the railroad company not to furnish cars, did not constitute reversible error. If the averment that defendants caused the railroad company to refuse to furnish cars was insufficient as an assignment of a breach of the contract, the defect could have been taken advantage of by demurring to this assignment of breach without demurring to the whole complaint; and in such case it is discretionary with the trial court whether to strike the averment constituting the defective assignment, or to put the defendant to his demurrer, and its refusal to grant the motion to strike is not revisable on appeal, unless it affirmatively appears that defendant was prejudiced thereby. Columbus & W. R. Co. v. Bridges, 86 Ala. 448. The damages for the breach of a contract of this character, when its full performance is prevented by the one party without fault on the part of the other, may consist of one or the other of two items: First, the profits that would have been realized by the full performance; and, second, if there would not have been any profits, or if the proof fails to show what would have been the amount, the reasonable expenditures made, and loss of time, less the value of the material on hand. Danforth v. Tennessee & C. R. Co. 93 Ala. 620; United States v. Behan, 110 U. S. 349, 28 L. ed. 170. Both items are not, of course, recoverable, since the profits would necessarily include the expenditures for tools, etc., less their value at the time the work on the contract ceased. Plaintiff's expenditure for tools, implements, fixtures, etc., was, therefore, a proper element of damages; and, while both the elements claimed, were not recoverable, defendants were able to protect themselves by a request for appropriate charges.

The contract contains a provision that "the said ore is to be mined and put on board the cars free of foreign substance, and in a manner satisfactory to the furnace company receiving the same." In view of the subject-matter of the contract, we think it was the manifest intention of the parties, by the use of the words employed, not to impose an obligation on the plaintiff with respect to the manner in which the ore was to be taken from the ground, or loaded on the cars, but simply to require him to furnish on board the cars ore free from foreign substance other than such as was contained in the vein of ore, and satisfactory in this respect alone to the furnace company to which it might be shipped. Thus construed, this clause of the contract was sufficiently complied with by furnishing such ore irrespective of the manner in which it was taken from the ground and loaded on the cars. The defendants sought to justify their action in causing plaintiff to cease work under the contract by a plea averring that "plaintiff failed to mine said ore and put it on board the cars free from foreign substance, and in a manner satisfactory to the furnace company receiving the same." A demurrer to this plea having been overruled, plaintiff replied thereto that he had mined ore under said contract for a period of twelve months, during which time he had delivered to defendants 18,000 tons of ore, and defendants had received and paid for the same amount without any complaint except as to a very small quantity of the ore; that, a short time after plaintiff began work under the contract, defendants complained of one car of the ore delivered, and refused to pay for the same, but plaintiff continued to furnish ore under the contract, and defendants accepted and paid for the same, for a long time thereafter, when further complaint was made; and that plaintiff was at all times ready and willing to mine and deliver ore according to said contract, and to rectify any mistake or failure on his part. The overruling of defendants' demurrer to this replication is assigned as error.

The principal question presented by these pleadings is whether the fact that a small quantity of the ore delivered by plaintiff was not free from foreign substance, and satisfactory to the furnace company receiving it, operated as a discharge of the whole contract, and authorized defendants to terminate it. The effect of a breach of a contract upon the rights and liabilities of the parties depends upon the nature of the agreement. If the contract be entire in the sense that each and all its parts are interdependent, so that one part cannot be violated without violating the whole, a breach by one party of a material part will discharge the whole at the option of the other party; but, if the contract be severable,—susceptible of division and apportionment,—the amount to be paid by the one party depending upon the extent of performance by the other, the mere failure to perform a part of the contract in strict compliance with its terms will not of itself necessarily authorize the party injured to refuse further performance. Wharton, Contr. § 580; 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 150; Johnson v. Allen, 78 Ala. 391, 56 Am. Rep. 34. Whether a particular contract is entire or severable depends on the intention of the parties, to be determined from the language employed and the subject-matter. In the contract sued on, plaintiff obligated himself to mine and load on the cars all the ore within a given territory, the ore to be satisfactory to the furnace company to which it might be shipped; but the time and amount of the deliveries and the time of the completion of the contract were left unfixed, and necessarily the aggregate price to be paid for full performance was not named. No particular amount of ore was to be furnished each month, and a failure to furnish any ore in any one month would not, of itself, amount to a breach of the contract. The defendants' obligation was simply to permit plaintiff to mine all the ore within the territory named, and to pay on the 20th of each month a specified sum for each ton delivered during the previous month. There is nothing in the contract to indicate an intention of the parties that the right of plaintiff to make successive shipments of ore until the contract was completed should be dependent on the mere fact that each and every ton previously mined and shipped was free from foreign substance, and satisfactory to the furnace company receiving it, and had been accepted by defendants. The contract was, in its nature, severable, and not entire, and the rights and liabilities of the parties are to be determined according to the principles applicable to such contracts. Not every breach of such a contract by the one party will authorize the other to abandon the contract, and refuse further performance on his part. The circumstances attending the breach, the intention with which it was committed, and its effect on the other party and on the general object sought to be accomplished by the contract, must be considered in determining whether or not the breach will operate as a discharge. If the circumstances are such as manifest an intention on the part of the party in default to abandon the contract, or not to comply with its terms in the future, or if, by reason of the breach, the object sought to be effected is rendered impossible of accomplishment according to the original design of the parties, 43 L. R. A.

the breach will operate as a discharge of the whole contract unless waived; but no such result follows from a mere breach of a severable contract unattended with such circumstances or such effect. The right to claim a discharge of the whole contract depends, not on whether the act constituting the breach was inconsistent with the terms of the contract, but whether it was inconsistent with an intention to be further bound by its terms, or whether the breach was such as to defeat the purpose of the contract. The mere fact that a small quantity of the ore delivered to defendants was not free from foreign substance, and satisfactory to the furnace company receiving it, did not give defendants any right to forbid plaintiff to continue mining ore under the contract. Blackburn v. Reilly, 47 N. J. L. 290, 54 Am. Rep. 159; Cahen v. Platt, 69 N. Y. 348, 25 Am. Rep. 203; Scott v. Kittanning Coal Co. 89 Pa. 231, 33 Am. Rep. 753; Mersey Steel & I. Co. v. Naylor, L. R. 9 App. Cas. 434; Lake Shore & M. S. I. Co. v. Richards, 30 L. R. A. 33, notes (152 Ill. 59); 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 150. Against the natural and ordinary injury flowing from such breach defendants had an adequate protection and remedy,—the refusal to receive and pay for the unsatisfactory ore, or their action for the breach in this respect. If any extraordinary injury arose therefrom, the effect of which was to defeat the purpose of the contract, the pleadings fail to show it, and it cannot be inferred from the nature and subject-matter of the contract. It results that the demurrer to the replication was properly overruled. If the plea be construed as averring that plaintiff failed to furnish any ore that was free from foreign substance, and satisfactory to the furnace company, the replication denies the averment by alleging that defendants accepted and paid for 18,000 tons without complaint, and avers facts which negative any intention on the part of the plaintiff, in furnishing the ore complained of, to be no longer bound by the terms of the contract, and there is nothing in the pleadings or in the contract itself to indicate that defendants were so injured by the defaults admitted in the replication as to render it unjust to hold them to the obligation to accept such future deliveries as should comply with the contract.

From what has already been said, the correctness of the charges given at the request of plaintiff, and of the oral charge of the court, may be determined. Most of them assert the proposition that the mere fact that a few cars of the ore mined and shipped were not free from foreign substance, and satisfactory to the furnace company, if the circumstances showed no intention to no longer comply with the terms of the contract, did not of itself authorize the defendants to terminate the contract; and this proposition is in accord with the principles above announced. It is true, in predicated plaintiff's right to a verdict upon the insufficiency of the evidence to reasonably satisfy the jury that plaintiff intended to abandon the contract, or no longer comply with its terms, they ignore the effect the defaults may have had upon the defendants, and the object sought to be accomplished by the contract, and would, perhaps, be erroneous on this account if the nature of the contract and its subject-matter were such that, considered in the light of the evidence, it could reasonably be inferred that the injury to defendants caused by the defaults defeated the purpose of the contract; but the record furnishes no ground for such inference. Charge 9 asserts a correct proposition. The mere expression by the furnace company of dissatisfaction with the ore would not authorize a termination of the contract. It is only the actual existence, not the mere expression, of dissatisfaction, regardless of its reasonableness, that can have this effect; and it was for the jury to say whether this dissatisfaction did exist as a fact, or whether it was expressed as a mere pretext. Electric Lighting Co. v. Eider Bros. 115 Ala. 138. The charges requested by appellants were properly refused. Appellee had a right, under the contract, to mine all the outcrop ore within the described territory back to a face of 15 feet, and this right was not affected by the fact that he had mined some ore beyond the territory described, or mined in some places within the territory back to a face of more than 15 feet. If there were some places within the territory not mined back to such a face, appellee had a right to mine them to the extent stipulated in the contract, notwithstanding a face of more than 15 feet was reached in other places; and this right was not exhausted by the fact that the ore mined outside the territory and beyond the stipulated face, added to that mined within the territory and the 15-foot facing, was equal in amount to all the ore that could have been properly mined in accordance with the terms of the contract.

Many of the assignments of error relate to evidence concerning the quality of the ore. If, by the questions relating to the quality of the ore, it was intended to elicit evidence as to the amount of metallic iron contained therein, they called for irrelevant testimony, and the objections thereto should have been sustained. But it does not clearly appear that such was the intention, and such evidence was not elicited by the questions. Both parties treated the last clause of the contract as meaning that the ore should be free from foreign substance, and in this respect only satisfactory to the furnace company receiving it, and the court, at the request of appellee, charged that it was immaterial what was the quality of the ore itself. These assignments of error are not, therefore, well taken. The declarations of the superintendent of the furnace company receiving the ore, made while receiving it, tending to show that it was satisfactory, were competent and material. Testimony as to the amount expended by appellee for rails for the side track was also relevant on the question of damages. The testimony tends to show that the expenditure for this purpose was necessary, and this expenditure was one element of damages recoverable in the event no loss of profits was proved. As stated above, appellant could have protected himself by requesting an appropriate charge. We are unable to perceive the relevancy of the testimony of McCormack, the general manager of the Tennessee Coal & Iron Company, to which all the ore was shipped, that he wanted plaintiff "to take a contract at a reduced price with the Tennessee Company, at less than 50 cents a ton." The evidence was doubtless offered on the theory that the willingness of the furnace company which had received the ore mined by plaintiff under this contract to employ him to mine ore under a contract with it at a less price was evidence tending to show that all the ore shipped by plaintiff was satisfactory to said furnace company; but we are of the opinion no such inference can reasonably be drawn from the evidence, and that the court below erred in admitting it. With this exception we find no error in the record.

An application for rehearing having been filed, the court handed down the following response:

Per Curiam:

McCormack was the defendants' witness, and had testified in their behalf to his dissatisfaction with the ore mined and delivered to his (the witness's) company by the plaintiff,—to dissatisfaction both as to the percentage of metallic iron in the ore itself, and to plaintiff's manner of mining the ore in respect of refuse left in the output. Of course, as held in the original opinion, the testimony of McCormack, elicited by the defendants, that he had proposed to plaintiff, after the time of his alleged dissatisfaction, "to take a contract at a reduced price with the Tennessee [witness's] Company to mine ore at less than 50 cents a ton," was not competent as original evidence upon any issue in the case. But we are now of opinion that coming, as it did, on the cross-examination by plaintiff of defendants' witness, it was clearly competent as weakening the force of the witness's testimony in chief as to his dissatisfaction with plaintiff's methods in the mining of ore. We therefore conclude, on the application for rehearing, that this evidence was properly received.

The judgment of reversal is set aside, and the judgment of the City Court will be affirmed.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.,
v.

Nellie P. HARRISON.

(.....Ala.....)

1. A mistake in a bill of lading by stating interstate rates less than those scheduled in accordance with the act of Congress does not preclude the carrier from recovering the full schedule rate as a condition of delivering the goods.

2. The law of the state in which a contract of interstate transportation was made, and in which the performance begins, cannot govern the contract so far as it conflicts with the act of Congress to regulate commerce.

NOTE.—The above case overrules Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Dismukes (Ala.) 17 L. R. A. 113, by virtue of the controlling authority of Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hefey, 158 U. S. 98, 89 L. ed. 910.

(November 5, 1898.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the City Court of Birmingham in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged conversion of certain carriages which had been delivered to defendant for transportation. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Smith & Weatherly, for appellant:

The case differs materially from the Dismukes Case in important particulars, namely:

First. The rate proposed to be collected was not unreasonable and excessive, as in the Dismukes Case.

Second. The point is here raised for the first time that the contract having been entered into and to be partly performed in a foreign state, and being entire, must be governed by the laws in force in the state wherein it was entered into and to be partly performed.

Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. v. Bundick, 94 Ga. 775, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 289.

The court should overrule entirely, or modify or limit, its decision in Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Dismukes, 94 Ala. 131, 17 L. R. A. 113, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 200.

Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hefley, 158 U. S. 98, 39 L. ed. 910; Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. v. Bundick, 94 Ga. 775, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 289; Baird v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 41 Fed. Rep. 592.

The rights and liabilities of the parties to this contract must be governed by the law of Georgia.

Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co. 129 U. S. 397, 32 L. ed. 788; McDaniel v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 24 Iowa, 412; Hazel v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 82 Iowa, 477; Merchants' Dispatch Transp. Co. v. Furthmann, 47 Ill. App. 561; Meuer v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 5 S. D. 568, 25 L. R. A. 81; Fonseca v. Cunard S. S. Co. 153 Mass. 553, 12 L. R. A. 340; Potter v. The Majestic, 20 U. S. App. 503, 60 Fed. Rep. 624, 9 C. C. A. 161, 23 L. R. A. 746; Dyke v. Erie R. Co. 45 N. Y. 113, 6 Am. Rep. 43.

Messrs. Gregg & Thornton, for appellee:

The question as to whether the appellee could recover in an action on the contract of shipment is immaterial. Appellee's action is in case, and is founded upon the breach of a common-law duty. The contract of shipment is set out and mentioned in the complaint only by way of inducement.

Sharpe v. National Bank, 87 Ala. 644; Wilkinson v. Moseley, 18 Ala. 288.

The action includes a conversion, and the appellant was responsible for all damage to the goods, while wrongfully withheld and during the conversion as an insurer.

Hooks v. Smith, 18 Ala. 338; 4 Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. § 1700.
43 L. R. A.

There may be a temporary conversion of personal property.

Gray v. Crocheron, 8 Port. (Ala.) 191; Bolling v. Kirby, 90 Ala. 215.

The action was properly brought and the allegations in the complaint present the facts properly.

Alabama Code, § 2664; Hutchinson, Carr. 2d ed. § 447a, 514.

Brickell, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On February 20, 1896, appellant, a common carrier engaged in interstate commerce, received from appellee, at Atlanta, Georgia, for transportation over its road to Birmingham, Alabama, two carriages, of the alleged value of $1,200, and delivered to appellee a bill of lading in which the rate specified was 96 cents per 100 pounds, and the weight 2,500 pounds; making the aggregate charge $24. Upon the arrival of the carriages in Birmingham a few days later, appellee tendered that amount in payment of the charges; but the appellant refused to accept the tender or to make delivery of the carriages. The ground of this refusal was that the rate specified in the bill of lading was less than that fixed by the schedule of rates, fares, and charges established and published in accordance with the act of Congress known as the "Interstate Commerce Law," and that the agent of appellant at Atlanta had, inadvertently and by mistake, wrongfully and in violation of that law, agreed upon and specified in a bill of lading a rate of 96 cents per 100 pounds, instead of $1.28, as said schedule required him to charge. Appellee refused to pay the extra charge, amounting to $8; and appellant retained possession of the carriages until August 11, 1896, when it delivered them to appellee upon the payment of $24, the stipulated charge. Appellee instituted this suit to recover the damages resulting to her from the loss of the use and hire of the carriages, the actual injury thereto, and their deterioration in value, during the period of detention.

The subject-matter of the contract, the transportation of goods from one state to another, was an act of interstate commerce and as such a subject of Federal cognizance, and governed by the act of Congress entitled "An Act to Amend an Act Entitled an Act to Regulate Commerce," approved February 4, 1887. By the provisions of § 6 of this act, every common carrier subject to the same is required to print and publicly post at each station on its route, for the inspection and information of the public, the schedule of fares, rates, and charges for the carriage of passengers and property thereon. It is further provided that "when any such common carrier shall have established and published its rates, fares, and charges in compliance with the provisions of this section, it shall be unlawful for such common carrier to charge, demand, or collect, or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation for the transportation of passengers or property, or for any service in connection therewith, than is specified in such published schedule of rates, fares, and charges, as may at the time be in force." It is further unlawful for any person, in any manner, knowingly to obtain transportation at less than the published schedule of rates; and any violation of the statute, whether by the consignors or consignees, or by the carrier, is made a highly penal offense. In Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Dismukes, 94 Ala. 131, 17 L. R. A. 113, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 200, decided in 1891, we had occasion to consider a contract for the transportation of goods into this state from another state at less than the published schedule rates, and to construe the act of Congress with respect to its effect on such a contract, and on the rights of the parties thereto. In that case, as in this, the plaintiff sought to recover damages for the refusal of the carrier to deliver the goods after tender of the amount of the charges specified in the bill of lading. We then held that although the contract was illegal and void as to the carrier, because made in violation of the Interstate Commerce Law, and could not be made the basis of any action on the part of the carrier, yet, inasmuch as the consignor had not knowingly obtained the transportation at less than the schedule rates, his act was not tainted with the criminality of the carrier, and, not being in pari delicto with the carrier, he was entitled to invoke that principle of law which authorizes the enforcement of such a contract in behalf of the innocent party, and he could, therefore, upon the payment or tender of the charges named in the bill of lading, maintain the action, and recover damages for the failure of the carrier to deliver the goods to him. It is now insisted by counsel for appellant that the present case differed from the case cited in two particulars. First, because the schedule rate, which appellant claims to be entitled to collect, was not unreasonable or excessive, or disproportionate to the value of the goods, as in the Dismukes Case in which the value of the goods was $40, the charges specified in the bill of lading $5.44, and the schedule charges $29.30; and second, because the contract was made in the state of Georgia, and was therefore to be governed, as to its nature, obligation, and interpretation, by the law of that state, and not by the law of Alabama, and, by the law of Georgia, a common carrier, engaged in interstate traffic, who undertakes to transport goods from one state to another at less than the published schedule rates established in accordance with the act of Congress, is not precluded from recovering the full schedule rate because by mistake a less rate was agreed upon and specified in the bill of lading, and may retain possession of the goods until the full schedule rate is paid. We are of the opinion that our ruling in the Dismukes Case can no longer be followed, either in this or in any similar case involving the right of a consignor or consignee of goods transported by a common carrier from one state to another to recover damages for the refusal of the carrier, after the arrival of the goods at their destination, to deliver them upon the payment or tender of the charges agreed upon and named in the bill of lading, when such charges are less than the published schedule charges in force at the time the contract was made, established in accordance with the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Law. But neither of the particulars in which it is contended this case differs from that will justify any modification of, or departure from, that ruling. The principle on which that case was decided is not affected by the degree of disparity between the schedule rate and the stipulated rate. What was there said in this respect was, by way of illustration only, to show the wrong and injustice of permitting a carrier who may have induced a shipper, by promises of low rates, to ship his goods over its line, to recover a greater, and perhaps extortionate, rate. Nor can the ruling in that case be affected by the fact that by the law of Georgia, in which state the contract of carriage was made, the carrier may recover the schedule rate, notwithstanding a lower rate may have been agreed upon. The general rule of law, it is true, is that a contract is governed as to its nature, obligation, validity, and interpretation, by the law of the place where it is made, unless the parties have in view some other law, or unless it is to be wholly performed in some other place, in which case the law of the place of performance, or the law which both parties had in view, must govern. Peet v. Hatcher, 112 Ala. 514; Cubbedge v. Napier, 62 Ala. 518; Donagan v. Wood, 49 Ala. 242, 20 Am. Rep. 275. And the weight of authority is that this rule requires a contract for the transportation of goods by a common carrier from one state or country to another to be governed by the law of the place where it is made, and where the performance begins, unless the parties, when entering into the contract, clearly manifest a mutual intention that it shall be governed by the law of some other state or country. Whart. Conf. L. § 471; Hutchinson, Carr. §§ 140-144; Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co. 129 U. S. 397, 32 L. ed. 788; McDaniel v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 24 Iowa, 412; Hazel v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 82 Iowa, 477; Pennsylvania Co. v. Fairchild, 69 Ill. 260; Meuer v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 5 S. D. 568, 25 L. R. A. 81; Fonseca v. Cunard S. S. Co. 153 Mass. 553, 12 L. R. A. 340; Potter v. The Majestic, 20 U. S. App. 503, 9 C. C. A. 161, 23 L. R. A. 746, 60 Fed. Rep. 625. But this rule can have no application where the subject-matter of the contract is one of national cognizance and Congress has assumed exclusive cognizance of it by enacting a law for its complete regulation. In such case the parties must be presumed to contract with reference to the act of Congress, and its effect on the subject-matter, and not with reference to the law of the state where the contract was made; and they cannot, by agreement or otherwise, make any other law the applicatory law in the determination of the nature, validity, or interpretation of the contract. No principle of comity requires the courts of one state to place the same construction upon the act of Congress, with respect to its effect on such a contract, given to it by the decisions of the supreme court of another state, in which the contract was made. Unless the national law has been construed by the Supreme Court of the United States, the courts of the various states will follow their own judgment in determining its effect on the contract, and the rights of the parties thereto growing out of it; but, if it has received a construction from the highest national tribunal, its decision is supreme, and by it the state courts are bound. Tubbs v. Wilhoit, 73 Cal. 61; State, Carly, v. Andriano, 92 Mo. 70; Lyman v. Central Vermont R. Co. 59 Vt. 167; Bressler v. Wayne County, 25 Neb. 468. The Interstate Commerce Law has been construed by the Supreme Court of the United States, and its effect upon a contract by a common carrier to transport goods from one state to another at less than the published schedule rates, and upon the rights of the parties to such a contract, has been declared. In Gulf, O. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hefley, 158 U. S. 98, 39 L. ed. 910, the plaintiff sued to recover damages for the refusal by the carrier to deliver goods consigned to him, after tender of payment of the stipulated charges named in the bill of lading. The goods (a lot of furniture) had been received by the carrier at St. Louis, Missouri, for transportation to Cameron, Texas, at a stipulated rate, specified in the bill of lading, of 69 cents per 100 pounds, the charges amounting to $82.80, whereas the published schedule rate in force at the time was 84 cents, and the charges should have been $100.80; and the plaintiff, as in this case, was ignorant of the fact that the rate obtained was less than the schedule rate. It was held, in an opinion by Brewer, J., that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. It is true that the only question discussed in the opinion was whether or not the interstate act superseded the Texas statute which prohibited a common carrier from charging or collecting from the owner or consignee of freight a greater sum than that specified in the bill of lading, and this question was decided in the affirmative, as in the Dismukes Case. But this was not the only effect of the decision, and it is by its effect on the rights of the parties to such a contract, by whatever process of reasoning the decision may be reached, that the state courts are bound. The clear effect of the decision was to declare that one who has obtained from a common carrier transportation of goods from one state to another at a rate, specified in the bill of lading, less than the published schedule rates filed with and approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and in force at the time, whether or not he knew that the rate obtained was less than the schedule rate, is not entitled to recover the goods, or damages for their detention, upon the tender of payment of the amount of charges named in the bill of lading, or of any sum less than the schedule charges; in other words, that, whatever may be the rate agreed upon, the carrier's lien on the goods is, by force of the act of Congress, for the amount fixed by the published schedule of rates and charges, and this lien can be discharged, and the consignee can become entitled to the goods only by the payment or tender of payment, of such amount. Such is now the supreme law, and by it this and the courts of all other states are bound, and for this reason our ruling in the Dismukes Case can no longer be followed.

It results that the inquiry as to the law of the state of Georgia was entirely immaterial and irrelevant, and the court below did not err in sustaining the objection to appellant's offer of evidence on this point. But proof of compliance with the requirements of the Interstate Commerce Law, of the amount of the charges fixed by the published schedule of rates and charges, and of the other facts offered in evidence by appellant, was relevant; and the demurrers to the pleas setting up these facts should have been overruled, and under such pleas evidence of these facts should have been admitted. Upon uncontradicted proof of these facts, if they had been in evidence, in connection with the other evidence in the case, the defendant would have been entitled to the general charge in its favor.

The judgment of the City Court must be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings in conformity to this opinion.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

Annie O'DONNELL, Appt.,

v.

Charles W. SLACK, Judge of Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco.

(.....Cal.....)

1. The disposal of the body of a person who has not made any testamentary provision therefor cannot be taken away from his widow and given to a stranger to his blood.
2. Neither the court in probate nor the personal representative has any right to the body of a deceased person who has made no testamentary provision on the subject, nor any right to control the manner of disposing of the remains, or to dictate the place of interment.

(January 18, 1899.)

APPLICATION by petitioner for a writ to review the action of the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco awarding the custody of the remains of petitioner's deceased husband to Matthew Martin for removal to Ireland for interment.

NOTE.—As to rights and duties in regard to the disposition of a dead body, see note to Larson v. Chase (Minn.) 14 L. R. A. 85; see also 43 L. R. A.

Hackett v. Hackett (R. I.) 19 L. R. A. 558; Choppin v. Dauphin (La.) 33 L. R. A. 123; and Thompson v. Deeds (Iowa) 35 L. R. A. 54.

Order annulled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Stafford & Stafford for petitioner.

Henshaw, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an application for a writ of review. Roger O'Donnell, husband of petitioner, died testate. His will was admitted to probate in the city and county of San Francisco. It contained no provision or direction for the disposition of his body. During the course of administration the widow filed a petition setting forth that the deceased had expressed a last wish that his remains should be buried beside those of his father and mother, at Finn Town, Ireland, and praying for an order enabling her to fulfill this request. The court made its order, authorizing and directing the executor "to pay over to Annie O'Donnell, the widow of the deceased, the sum of $700, out of the funds of the estate, to be used and expended by Annie O'Donnell in defraying the expense of removing from the city and county of San Francisco to Finn Town, Ireland, and there suitably interring, the body of Roger O'Donnell, deceased." The final account subsequently filed by the executor showed payment to Annie O'Donnell of the $700 for the purposes named. The account was allowed and settled, and a decree of distribution was entered; but on the same day the court made the following order: "Good cause appearing therefor, it is hereby ordered that the fund of $700 heretofore, by order herein dated February 1, 1897, allowed out of said estate for the purpose of defraying the expense of the removal of the body of deceased to Ireland, and there interring the same, and which fund, less the sum of $55 already expended in preliminary preparations for the removal of said body, is now in the possession of John A. Percy, Esq., be retained by said John A. Percy, Esq., in his possession, subject to the further order of the court." On April 26th the court made its decree finally discharging the executor. On August 13th John A. Percy, who had been the attorney for Annie O'Donnell, filed a petition stating that he still retained in his possession the funds set apart for the transportation and burial of the body of the deceased, and prayed an order appointing some suitable person to execute the order of court. The court fixed a date for the hearing of this petition, and ordered service of notice upon all interested parties. The widow appeared, and by verified pleading set up that she had been sick, and therefore unable to take the body to Ireland; that she had recovered, and was willing, and would be ready within three weeks, to remove the body,—and asked that Percy be directed to pay to her the moneys in his hands. She objected to the payment of the money to anyone else, objected to any other person being empowered to remove the body, denied the jurisdiction of the court to modify its original order, and "respectfully informs the court that she does not and will not consent to the removal of the body of her deceased husband to Ireland or elsewhere by any other person than petitioner herself." After the hearing the court made its order commanding that the body be immediately removed to Finn Town, Ireland, and giving Matthew Martin authority, and directing him, to execute the order, and further directing Percy to pay over to Martin the money in his hands, or so much thereof as might be necessary for the indicated purposes. Martin is a stranger in blood to the deceased.

By this writ there is sought to be annulled the order last above mentioned, directing Martin to transport the body of the deceased to Ireland, and there supervise its interment. The validity of the original order, by which the $700 was ordered set apart to and paid over to Annie O'Donnell, the widow, for the same purpose, is not called in question. The single proposition which is seriously argued is whether the court in probate did or did not exceed its jurisdiction in attempting to deliver to one not of kin to the deceased his body, and in directing a particular disposition to be made of that body by this stranger. It is also further contended that the order is in excess of jurisdiction, because the moneys directed to be paid under the original order had in fact been paid; that the executor had complied with the directions of the court as to payment, and had entered the payment as a credit to himself in his final account; that his final account had been allowed, and final distribution of the estate decreed, and the control of the property had therefore passed from the court. Ex parte Smith, 53 Cal. 204; Wheeler v. Bolton, 54 Cal. 302. The last proposition, which involves a consideration of the court's jurisdiction and control of the burial fund after entry of the decree of distribution, we do not think it necessary to consider, for the reason that the court exceeded its jurisdiction in attempting to award the custody of the body of the deceased to a stranger to his blood, to the exclusion of the next of kin; indeed, that it exceeded its jurisdiction in attempting to make any award of the custody, or to direct any disposition to be made of the body.

The body of one whose estate is in probate unquestionably forms no part of the property of that estate. It is recognized that the individual has a sufficient proprietary interest in his own body after his death to be able to make valid and binding testamentary disposition of it. The court in probate and the personal representative acquire jurisdiction from the last testament to see that its provisions in this regard, as in all others, are duly executed; but where, as in this case, the will is silent, the court in probate has no such power. The duty of the burial of the dead is made an express legal obligation (Pen. Code, § 292); but, aside from the obligation, there is a right, well-defined and universally recognized, that in disposing of the body of deceased the last sad offices belong of right to the next of kin, within which phrase, as here employed, is included the surviving husband or wife. This right had its origin in sentiment, in affection for the dead, in religious belief in some form of future life. It therefore early became a subject of cognizance by the ecclesiastical courts. But while thus having its origin in affection and religious sentiment, it soon came to be recognized as a strictly legal right; and the next of kin, while not, in the full proprietary sense, "owning" the body of the deceased, have property rights in the body which will be protected, and for a violation of which they are entitled to indemnification. Thus, if the right is interfered with, damages will be awarded. Smiley v. Bartlett, 6 Ohio C. C. 234. "That there is no right of property in a dead body, using the word in its ordinary sense, may well be admitted, yet the burial of the dead is a subject which interests the feelings of mankind to a much greater degree than many matters of actual property. There is a duty, imposed by the universal feelings of mankind, to be discharged by someone towards the dead, a duty, and we may also say a right, to protect from violation, and a duty on the part of others to abstain from violation; and it may therefore be considered as a sort of quasi property, and it would be discreditable in any system of law not to provide a remedy in such a case." Pierce v. Proprietors of Swan Point Cemetery, 10 R. I. 227, 14 Am. Rep. 667. The whole question is learnedly considered in Ruggles' Report, 4 Bradf. 503, Appx. The conclusions there reached are those which have been generally adopted by the courts of the land. One of those conclusions is "that the right to bury a corpse and to preserve its remains is a legal right, which the courts of law will recognize and protect." Another is that "such right, in the absence of any testamentary disposition, belongs exclusively to the next of kin." And another, that "the right to protect the remains includes the right to preserve them by separate burial, to select the place of sepulture, and to change it at pleasure." In employing the phrase "next of kin," Mr. Ruggles explains that it was not used for the purpose of denying or even questioning the legal right of a surviving husband to bury his wife's remains. Hackett v. Hackett, 18 R. I. 155, 19 L. R. A. 558. The same right belongs to the surviving wife. Hackett v. Hackett, 18 R. I. 155, 19 L. R. A. 558; Larson v. Chase, 47 Minn. 307, 14 L. R. A. 85; Perley, Mortuary Law, 27; Hadsell v. Hadsell, 7 Ohio C. C. 196; Durell v. Hayward, 9 Gray, 248, 69 Am. Dec. 284. Therefore, in a case such as this, neither the court in probate nor the personal representative has any right to the body of the deceased, nor any right to control the manner of disposing of the remains, nor to dictate the place of interment. The proper expenses of such disposition may well be a charge against the estate, but the duty and right of burial are quite different things from the duty and right of auditing and paying the expenses of such burial. It is concluded, therefore, that the court exceeded its jurisdiction in intrusting the body of the deceased to Matthew Martin, and in directing that by him the body should be taken to Finn Town, Ireland, and there interred.

The order is therefore annulled.

We concur: Beatty, Ch. J.; Garoutte, J.; Temple, J.; Harrison, J.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA COURT OF APPEALS.

Edward CLARK, Appt.,

v.

MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSOCIATION.

(.....D. C.....)

1. Mere allegations of the effect and operation of the charter or by-laws of a corporation are not facts that are admitted by a demurrer.
2. An allegation as to what constitutes a contract of insurance in a mutual company is simply the statement of a conclusion of law, which is not sufficient, as against a demurrer, when by-laws, rules, regulations, and circulars referred to are not set out.
3. The constitution and by-laws of a mutual insurance association are binding upon the members, whether they have actual knowledge thereof or not.
4. A foreign insurance company is not made a corporation of the District of Columbia by having an agency and doing business in the District, in compliance with the act of Congress of 1887, chap. 46, § 4, which subjects it to process when served on the agent.

5. A suit to enjoin a foreign insurance company to which all assessments are payable at its home office, but which has an agency and carries on business within the jurisdiction of the court, against collecting from a resident therein any excessive and illegal assessments, and against forfeiting his policy for nonpayment of such assessments, while seeking also an accounting and a discovery of the books and papers of the corporation, and a determination of the true basis of assessments, is beyond the power or jurisdiction of a court of equity, as the relief sought would require the control, direction, and revision of the internal affairs of the corporation.

(February 7, 1899.)

NOTE.—For refusal of court to interfere with management of a foreign corporation, see also Republican Mountain Silver Mines v. Brown (C. C. App. 8th C.) 24 L. R. A. 776; and Madden v. Penn Electric Light Co. (Pa.) 38 L. R. A. 638.

For effect of by-laws of a corporation as notice, see note to Moyer v. East Shore Terminal Co. (S. C.) 25 L. R. A. 48. 43 L. R. A.

A PPEAL by complainant from a decree of the Supreme Court for the District of Columbia dismissing a bill to enjoin defendant from changing the rate of assessment upon plaintiff's insurance certificate from that indorsed thereon when the certificate was issued. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Richard C. Thompson and Charles L. Fralley, for appellant:

The court below has jurisdiction to entertain the bill of complaint.

The acts complained of in the bill do not affect the complainant solely in his capacity as a member of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, and in such a case the court has jurisdiction to entertain the action.

Guilford v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 59 Minn. 332; Prouty v. Michigan S. & N. I. R. Co. 1 Hun, 655; Babcock v. Schuylkill & L. Valley R. Co. 31 N. Y. S. R. 643; Ives v. Smith, 19 N. Y. S. R. 556.

The right of the appellee to do business in the District of Columbia appears to rest upon the principle of comity.

If, then, the New York courts will take jurisdiction of actions involving contract obligations of foreign corporations, even though certain corporate matters have to be inquired into, it certainly seems reasonable and proper and in accordance with the law of comity that when a citizen of this jurisdiction proceeds to have his contract with a New York corporation enforced in our courts, or a breach of said contract prevented, the same rights should be accorded him here as would be accorded a New York litigant in a New York court in an action brought there against a Washington corporation, even though the suitor here be a member of the New York corporation.

The rights of a member of a mutual insurance company as a party insured are separate and distinct from his rights and privileges as a member of the corporation.

Fire Ins. Co. v. Connor, 17 Pa. 137; Rosenberger v. Washington Mut. F. Ins. Co. 87 Pa. 207; Cohen v. New York L. Ins. Co. 50 N. Y. 610.

The relief asked for is such as the court has power to afford; but jurisdiction will be exercised even though a part only of the relief can be granted.

Singer Sewing-Mach. Co. v. Union Button-Hole & E. Co. Holmes, 253; Ervin v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 62 How. Pr. 490; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Union P. R. Co. 3 Fed. Rep. 423.

The bill of complaint states a cause of action.

A breach of contract is clearly set forth in the bill.

When a table of rates of assessment has been made a part of the contract of insurance assessments must be strictly in accordance therewith.

Beach, Priv. Corp. § 592; York County Mut. Aid Assn. v. Myers, 11 W. N. C. 541; Niblack, Mut. Ben. Soc. § 250, p. 475.

No by-law, and much less a mere resolution of the governing body of an association, passed without the consent of or without notice to the policy holder, can alter or impair the obligation of the contract of insurance or take away a vested right.

Fire Ins. Co. v. Connor, 17 Pa. 137; Martin v. Mutual F. Ins. Co. 45 Md. 52; Stewart v. Lee Mutual F. Ins. Asso. 64 Miss. 499; Great Falls Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Harvey, 45 43 L. R. A.

N. H. 292; Bliss, Life Ins. p. 767; 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 96, and cases cited. And this rule is applicable to the contracts of a mutual company.

Elkhart Mut. Aid Benev. & Relief Asso. v. Houghton, 98 Ind. 149; Bacon, Ben. Soc. ed. 1894, § 180; Cluff v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 99 Mass. 325.

An assessment in violation of the contract of insurance is void.

Joyce, Ins. §§ 1253, 1391; Stewart v. Lee Mutual F. Ins. Asso. 64 Miss. 499; Mutual Endowment Assessment Asso. v. Essender, 59 Md. 403; Underwood v. Iowa L. of H. 66 Iowa, 134; Baker v. Citizens' Mut. F. Ins. Co. 51 Mich. 243.

Even if a person pays illegal assessments in a mutual company he is not estopped from denying the right of the company to levy such assessments, nor from questioning their legality and in all respects claiming his rights under the contract of insurance.

Niblack, Mut. Ben. Soc. § 143; Farmers' Mut. Ins. Co. v. Knight, 162 Ill. 470; Schultz v. Citizens' Mut. L. Ins. Co. 59 Minn. 308.

The bill alleges fraud and mismanagement.

The bill alleges a discrimination among the policy holders which is in direct violation of the policy of insurance. Such discrimination renders the assessment void.

Joyce, Ins. §§ 350, 368.

Messrs. Frank R. Lawrence, George Burnham, Jr., and Gordon T. Hughes, with Mr. A. A. Lipsecomb, for appellee:

The supreme court of the District of Columbia has no jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the bill, no authority to grant the relief prayed for, and no power to enforce a decree granting such relief.

The courts of one jurisdiction will not interfere in controversies relating to the internal management of the affairs of a corporation organized in another jurisdiction.

6 Thomp. Corp. § 7904; North State Copper & Gold Min. Co. v. Field, 64 Md. 151; Wilkins v. Thorne, 60 Md. 253; Smith v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 14 Allen, 336; Williston v. Michigan S. & N. I. R. Co. 13 Allen, 400; Kansas & E. R. Constr. Co. v. Topeka, S. & W. R. Co. 135 Mass. 34, 46 Am. Rep. 439; Madden v. Penn Electric Light Co. 181 Pa. 617, 38 L. R. A. 638; Bank of Virginia v. Adams, 1 Pars. Sel. Eq. Cas. 534; Gregory v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 40 N. J. Eq. 38; Stafford v. American Mills Co. 13 R. I. 310; Howell v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 51 Barb. 378; Berford v. New York Iron Mine, 24 Jones & S. 236; Fisher v. Charter Oak L. Ins. Co. 20 Jones & S. 179; House v. Cooper, 30 Barb. 157; Chase v. Vanderbilt, 5 Jones & S. 334; Cumberland Coal & I. Co. v. Hoffman Steam Coal Co. 30 Barb. 159; Dela-ware, L. & W. R. Co. v. New York, S. & W. R. Co. 12 Misc. 230; Leary v. Columbia River & P. S. Nav. Co. 82 Fed. Rep. 775; Murfree, Foreign Corp. § 226.

The present bill and the relief prayed for in it call upon the court below to interfere in the internal affairs of the association.

North State Copper & Gold Min. Co. v. Field, 64 Md. 151; Wilkins v. Thorne, 60 Md. 253; Berford v. New York Iron Mine, 24

Jones & S. 236; Fisher v. Charter Oak L. Ins. Co. 20 Jones & S. 175; Madden v. Penn Electric Light Co. 181 Pa. 617, 38 L. R. A. 638; Kansas & E. R. Constr. Co. v. Topeka, S. & W. R. Co. 135 Mass. 34; Leary v. Columbia River & P. S. Nav. Co. 82 Fed. Rep. 775.

Those who insure in mutual associations are members of the corporate body.

May, Ins. 2d ed. § 548; Lake v. Minnesota Masonic Relief Asso. 61 Minn. 96; Biddle, Ins. §§ 47, 48; Cooke, Life Ins. § 8.

Legislation of various states in regard to foreign corporations may be divided into two classes.

In the first class fall all statutes which impose upon foreign corporations seeking to do business within the borders of the enacting state the condition that they shall, in substance, become domestic corporations of that state.

The second class includes all statutes which simply recognize foreign corporations and their continuance in existence as such, and permit them, as foreign corporations, to conduct their operations upon complying with certain conditions, relating generally to the appointment of a resident agent upon whom process may be served.

Whether a given statute relating to the status of a foreign corporation falls within the first or the second class is purely a question of legislative intent, to be decided as a matter of construction.

Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Harris, 12 Wall. 65, 20 L. ed. 354; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. St. Louis, A. & T. H. R. Co. 118 U. S. 290, 30 L. ed. 83; Uphoff v. Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. 5 Fed. Rep. 545; James v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 46 Fed. Rep. 47; 6 Thomp. Corp. § 7890.

The common example of the second class is an act permitting a foreign corporation to do business within the state upon condition that it appoint a resident agent for the service of process upon the foreign corporation as such.

Goodlett v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 122 U. S. 391, 30 L. ed. 1230; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. St. Louis, A. & T. H. R. Co. 118 U. S. 290, 30 L. ed. 83; Smith v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 14 Allen, 336; North State Copper & Gold Min. Co. v. Field, 64 Md. 161.

The act of 1887, relating to the appointment of agents within the District, simply recognizes foreign insurance companies as such, and permits them as such to carry on their business within the District upon condition that they appoint an agent for the service of process.

Manhattan L. Ins. Co. v. Warwick, 20 Gratt. 614, 3 Am. Rep. 218; Continental Ins. Co. v. Kasey, 25 Gratt. 268, 18 Am. Rep. 681; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Duereson, 28 Gratt. 630; Howard v. Universal L. Ins. Co. 32 Gratt. 445; North Star Copper & Gold Min. Co. v. Field, 64 Md. 151; Guilford v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 59 Minn. 332; Smith v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 14 Allen, 336; Williston v. Michigan, S. & N. I. R. Co. 13 Allen, 400; Kimball v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 157 Mass. 7; Kansas & E. R. Constr. Co. v. Topeka, S. & W. R. Co. 135 Mass. 34, 46 43 L. R. A.

Am. Rep. 439; Stafford v. American Mills Co. 13 R. I. 310; Madden v. Penn Electric Light Co. 181 Pa. 617, 38 L. R. A. 638.

The courts of New York have refused to interfere with the internal affairs of foreign corporations.

Fisher v. Charter Oak L. Ins. Co. 20 Jones & S. 179; Howell v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 51 Barb. 378; Ives v. Smith, 19 N. Y. S. R. 556; Babcock v. Schuykill & L. Valley R. Co. 31 N. Y. S. R. 643; Berford v. New York Iron Mine, 24 Jones & S. 236; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. New York, S. & W. R. Co. 12 Misc. 230; Chase v. Vanderbilt, 5 Jones & S. 334; Gibbs v. Queen Ins. Co. 63 N. Y. 114, 20 Am. Rep. 513; Barbour v. Paige Hotel Co. 2 App. D. C. 174.

The bill does not state such a case as would entitle the appellant to the relief prayed for.

The legal effect of an instrument is not admitted by demurrer.

Dillon v. Barnard, 21 Wall. 430, 22 L. ed. 673; Swan v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 20 App. Div. 255, Affirmed 155 N. Y. 9.

The constitution and by-laws of such a corporation are part of the contract of insurance between it and its members.

Hass v. Mutual Relief Asso. 118 Cal. 6; Supreme Commandery K. of G. E. v. Ainsworth, 71 Ala. 436, 46 Am. Rep. 332; Barbot v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 100 Ga. 681; Sule v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 145 N. Y. 563, 28 L. R. A. 379.

By becoming a member of a mutual association, one is conclusively presumed to know its constitution and by-laws; it is one of his duties to acquaint himself with them; and if he fails to do so, he cannot escape their force by setting up his lack of knowledge; nor by showing they were not mentioned in his certificate.

Davidson v. Old People's Mut. Ben. Soc. 39 Minn. 303, 1 L. R. A. 842; Sineral v. Dubuque Mut. F. Ins. Co. 18 Iowa, 319; Treadway v. Hamilton Mut. Ins. Co. 29 Conn. 68.

The courts will not permit a member to set up ignorance in fact of the statutes which are the very foundation and which constitute the fundamental law of the association.

Stohr v. San Francisco Musical Fund Soc. 82 Cal. 557; Wanschaff v. Masonic Mut. Ben. Soc. 41 Mo. App. 206; M'Cracken v. Hayward, 2 How. 608, 11 L. ed. 397; Fry v. Charter Oak L. Ins. Co. 31 Fed. Rep. 197; Weingartner v. Charter Oak L. Ins. Co. 32 Fed. Rep. 314; Railway Pass. & Freight Conductors' Mut. Aid & Ben. Asso. v. Robinson, 147 Ill. 138; Cooke, Life Ins. § 11; Joyce, Ins. § 194.

Members of a mutual insurance association are bound by the statutes of the state of incorporation, whether they reside in that state or elsewhere.

Fry v. Charter Oak L. Ins. Co. 31 Fed. Rep. 197; Weingartner v. Charter Oak L. Ins. Co. 32 Fed. Rep. 314; Bookover v. Life Asso. of America, 77 Va. 85; Swan v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 155 N. Y. 9.

The charter is part of the executory agreement between the association on the one hand and its members on the other.

Supreme Lodge K. of P. v. Knight, 117

Ind. 489, 3 L. R. A. 409; Simeral v. Dubuque Mut. F. Ins. Co. 18 Iowa, 319; Supreme Commandery K. of G. R. v. Ainsworth, 71 Ala. 436, 46 Am. Rep. 332; Hellenberg v. District No. 1, I. O. of B. B. 94 N. Y. 580.

Appellant fails to allege any effort made by him to obtain redress within the association itself.

Bailey v. Birkenhead L. & C. Junction R. Co. 12 Beav. 433; Haroes v. Oakland, 104 U. S. 450, 26 L. ed. 827; Dunphy v. Traveller Newspaper Asso. 146 Mass. 495; Swan v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 155 N. Y. 9.

If the assessment levied upon him is for an excessive amount, he may tender the proper amount, and if the association refuses to accept it, and declares his certificate of membership forfeited, the member may at once bring an action at law for damages for breach of the contract of insurance.

Hancock v. New York L. Ins. Co. 4 Bigelow, Life & Acci. Ins. Cas. 488; Cohen v. New York Mut. L. Ins. Co. 50 N. Y. 610; Smith v. Charter Oak L. Ins. Co. 1 Cent. L. J. 76, and note; Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Poettker, 5 Bigelow, Life & Acci. Ins. Cas. 449; Mo-Kee v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 28 Mo. 383, 75 Am. Dec. 129; May, Ins. 3d ed. §§ 350, 568, and notes; Bliss, Life Ins. 2d ed. §§ 386, 394; Joyce, Ins. § 1659.

Alvey, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The bill in this case was filed by the appellant, Edward Clark, of the District of Columbia, against the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, a corporation created under the laws of the state of New York, for the purpose of having enjoined the defendant association from enforcing or attempting to enforce certain assessments made upon the plaintiff, a member of the association, and to have adjudged and declared as null and void certain changes and increase in the rate of assessment, from the rate fixed in the policy or certificate of membership issued to the plaintiff, and for other relief prayed.

The defendant association is a mutual life insurance corporation, conducting the business of life insurance upon the co-operative or assessment plan. It was incorporated under the law of the state of New York, and its home office is in the city of New York. It has a numerous membership, and its funds amount to very large sums. The plaintiff became a member, for the benefit of his wife, on the 14th of March, 1882, and he claims to be entitled to an insurance, by virtue of the certificate issued to him on the date just named, for $10,000, at certain fixed rate of assessment, according to a table of rates indorsed on the certificate.

In the certificate of membership it is stated that, in consideration of the statements, representations, and warranties, contained in his application, and of the admission fee paid, and of the dues for expenses to be paid, etc., "and of all mortuary assessments, payable at the office of the association within thirty days from the date of each notice," etc., the plaintiff was admitted as a member of the association. And by this certificate it was agreed and covenanted, that in the event of the decease of a member holding a certificate, and the death fund is insufficient to meet the existing claims by death, an assessment upon the entire membership for such a sum as had been established, by the board of trustees, according to the age of each member, as per table indorsed thereon, at the date of entry,—that is, the date upon which the plaintiff became a member of the association,—shall be made; and from the sum received from such assessment, the defendant association shall have the right to set aside 25 per cent of the amount so received as a reserve fund; and that the balance shall be paid, at the office of the association in the city of New York, to the wife of the plaintiff, or, if she be dead, to his legal representatives, within ninety days after the receipt of satisfactory evidence of the death of the plaintiff, from the death fund at the time of said death, the sum so to be paid, however, not to exceed the sum of $10,000; and no claim shall be otherwise due or payable, except from the reserve fund as thereafter provided. The certificate contains various other provisions in regard to the maintenance of a reserve fund, and a death fund, but which provisions are not material to be stated here, as the questions presented do not involve their consideration.

It is one of the provisions of the certificate that no alteration of the terms of the contract shall be valid, and no forfeiture shall be waived, unless such alteration or waiver shall be in writing, and signed by the president and one other officer of the association. And it is further provided that the certificate is issued and accepted subject to the express condition that if any of the payments above stipulated shall not be paid when due, at the office of the association in the city of New York, or to an agent of the association furnished with a receipt signed by its president or secretary, the said certificate shall be null and void, and all payments made thereon shall be forfeited to the association.

It is alleged in the bill that the plaintiff has regularly paid all dues, and all assessments made upon him down to 1898. That the rate of assessments for the death fund, fixed at the time of issuing the certificate of membership to the plaintiff, was $2.50 per thousand dollars, the plaintiff then being fifty-nine years of age, making the annual amount of $28 upon his policy of $10,000. The table of rates of assessment is printed on the back of the certificate of membership.

It is alleged that, from the date of the policy or certificate until August 15, 1895, the plaintiff paid assessments when called upon at the rate stated in the table indorsed on the back of the certificate for a person of fifty-nine years of age,—that is, $2.80 per thousand dollars. But in 1895 the defendant association changed its method of computing the amount of its assessments, disregarding entirely the table on the back of the policy issued to the plaintiff, which, by the terms of the policy was made part thereof, and assessed the plaintiff with the sum of $112.80 every two months; and that such sum was arrived at in the following manner: To the plaintiff's age at the date of the policy, to wit, fifty-nine years, was added one half of the number of years from January 1, of that year, that is, 1882, to January 1, 1895,—counting the fractions of a year as a whole year,—thus making an arbitrary age of sixty-six years as a basis of assessment. That a new table of assessments was used; which gave a much larger rate per thousand than was used in the old or original table, and it was according to this new and higher rate table that the plaintiff was assessed as of the age of sixty-six years; that this new table of rates contained rates for ages up to eighty years; that the plaintiff had never received any notice of the adoption of this new table of rates, and it was used without his knowledge or consent. That he paid these enhanced assessments because of the forfeiture clause in his policy or certificate of membership.

It is further alleged that, about the 1st of February, 1898, the defendant association, by a resolution of its board of directors and its executive committee, without notice to the plaintiff, and without his consent, assessed and called upon him to pay an assessment of $235.90, a sum over eight times the original amount called for in the table on the back of his policy. That this call had printed upon it the new table of rates to which reference has just been made, in connection with the last assessment, and the sum of $235.90 represented the amount called for therein, from a person of the present age of the plaintiff,—that is to say, of the age of seventy-five years, on a policy of ten thousand dollars. That the plaintiff paid such last-mentioned assessment under protest, because of the fear that in case of nonpayment of the same his policy might be forfeited. That about the 1st of April, 1898, another call or notice was sent to the plaintiff, requiring him to pay the same amount: and that this call had the new table of rates, and notice was given the plaintiff to the effect that the bimonthly calls would thereafter be based thereon. That, according to the latter table of rates, the plaintiff would have to pay at the age of seventy-six years $1,533 for that year, and at seventy-seven $1,665.90, and each succeeding year a larger amount, until at eighty his bimonthly assessments for that year would aggregate the sum of $2,187.10 on his policy of $10,000.

It is also charged in the bill that the reserve fund authorized to be raised and maintained, according to the statement of the defendant association, purporting to be made on or about March 18, 1898, amounted to the large sum of $3,306,779.29, and that such reserve fund has for a long period of time, to wit, for twelve years, exceeded the sum of $100,000 over and above outstanding bonded obligations. It is also charged that the administration of the affairs and funds of the association has been reckless and extravagant; that the enhanced assessments are illegal and fraudulent, and have been made and enforced as a part of a scheme on the part of the officers and directors of the association, to force the plaintiff and other members, either to pay such fraudulent and excessive rates for their insurance during the remainder of their lives, after having been lured into the association by its specious promises and representations of insurance at low rates, or to drive them out of the association in their old age, when it is impossible for the plaintiff and many others to obtain any insurance at all from other companies, and thereby compel them to forfeit all the money that they have paid and contributed to the defendant association for so many years past.

Upon the allegations of the bill the plaintiff prays:—1. For an injunction to restrain the defendant, its agents and attorneys, from collecting any sum upon said call No. 97, dated April 1, 1898, and upon any subsequent call in excess of the rate in force at the date of the plaintiff's becoming a member of the association, or such sum as the court upon hearing of the case may deem just and proper; and to restrain and enjoin the defendant, during the pendency of this suit, from in any manner declaring lapsed and void, or in anywise annulling or canceling, the policy or certificate issued to the plaintiff, and commanding the defendant to retain the plaintiff as a member and policy holder in good standing, during the pendency of this suit, with the same force and effect as if he had paid said calls or assessments. 2. That the court, if it be deemed necessary, may cause the defendant association to discover to the plaintiff its books and accounts, showing losses, mortality, expenses, and particularly the salaries of each individual officer, assessments, and matters and things incidental thereto, since the time when the plaintiff became a member of the association, or for such a period of time as the court may deem necessary for the proper ascertainment of the plaintiff's rights in the premises, whereby the correct and true assessments and amounts which should have been at all times levied upon the plaintiff and the other members may be ascertained, and an accounting had between the plaintiff and the defendant in that regard. 3. That the court determine the true and proper amount of assessment or payment to be made on said call, No. 97, together with the subsequent calls hereafter to be made, and that it also determine the amount the plaintiff has already paid in excess of the rate of assessment that should have been levied upon him, and that the defendant may be compelled to refund the same, or apply the same upon calls hereafter to be made. 4. That the defendant may be decreed to apply the reserve fund, mentioned in the certificate of membership issued to the plaintiff, in so far as the said reserve fund may be in excess of $100,000 over and above sums represented by outstanding bonds, to the payment of claims in excess of the American Experience Table of Mortality, and to making up any deficiency which may exist in the death fund, as provided in the plaintiff's certificate of membership; and, 5. For process of subpoena to be issued to the defendant, and for such other relief as the nature of the case may require. The defendant appeared and entered a demurrer to the bill, upon the ground, as stated in the demurrer, that the bill states no such matter as will authorize a court of equity in this jurisdiction to grant the relief prayed as against the defendant, a foreign corporation. Upon hearing in the court below this demurrer was sustained, and the bill was dismissed, upon the ground as set forth in the decree, "that the court had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the bill, and no power to interfere with the internal management of the defendant, a foreign corporation, and that the injunction heretofore issued is hereby dissolved; but this being without prejudice to the plaintiff's right to sue in any court having jurisdiction." It is from this decree that the plaintiff has appealed.

As we have seen, it is alleged in the bill that the defendant is a New York corporation, incorporated under the laws of that state, and that it is a mutual life insurance corporation, doing business on the co-operative or assessment plan, and that its home or principal office is in the city of New York; though it has an agent duly appointed in this district, and a place of business therein. But though a foreign corporation, and a mutual insurance company, and therefore necessarily dependent to a large extent upon its charter or articles of association and by-laws made in pursuance thereof, for the definition of its powers, and the rights and duties of its members, neither the charter or articles of association, nor the by-laws, are exhibited with the bill; and the court, therefore, is left without knowledge in regard to them. The mere allegations of the effect and operation of the charter or by-laws of the defendant are not facts that are admitted by the demurrer, but conclusions of law merely. A demurrer never admits the mere averments of the pleader, or the construction of an instrument; nor does it admit as true the conclusions or inferences drawn by the pleader from facts alleged, or which should have been alleged, in the bill. As said by the Supreme Court, in the case of Dillon v. Barnard, 21 Wall. 437, 22 L. ed. 676, "a demurrer only admits facts well pleaded; it does not admit matters of inference and argument, however clearly stated; it does not admit, for example, the accuracy of an alleged construction of an instrument, when the instrument itself is set forth in the bill, or a copy is annexed, against a construction required by its terms; nor the correctness of the ascription of a purpose to the parties when not justified by the language used. The several averments of the plaintiff in the bill as to his understanding of his rights, and of the liabilities and duties of others under the contract, can, therefore, exert no influence upon the mind of the court in the disposition of the demurrer." See also case of Bran v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assn. 155 N. Y. 9.

It is alleged in the bill that the contract of insurance between the plaintiff and the defendant association is made up of the application for insurance, the certificate issued to the plaintiff upon such application, the printed rules and regulations contained therein, together with the representation by the defendant, in the circulars and otherwise as set forth in the bill. This allegation as to what constitutes the contract is simply the statement of a conclusion of law, and is of no force or effect upon the demurrer, especially as the by-laws, rules, and regulations, and the circulars referred to, are not set out as part of the bill.

The contract of insurance here involved is of a mutual character, as its title imports; and the plaintiff became a member of the association by obtaining the certificate of membership, and as such member we may suppose that he was entitled to certain rights in the administration of the affairs of the corporation. To determine what those rights were or are, the constitution or articles of association and the by-laws should have been exhibited as part of the bill, for they are required to be consulted and construed in determining the nature of the contract, and the rights and duties of the parties thereto. And though such constitution and by-laws may not be referred to in the certificate of membership, yet they are binding upon the members of the association, and constitute a part of the contract of membership. By becoming a member of a mutual association, such as the defendant in this case, one is conclusively presumed to know its constitution and by-laws; and if he fails to acquaint himself with them, he cannot escape their force and operation by setting up his want of actual knowledge of them, nor by showing that they were not referred to in the certificate held by him. This principle is established by many well-considered cases, a few of which will be sufficient to refer to in this connection. Hass v. Mutual Relief Assn. 118 Cal. 6; Barbot v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assn. 100 Ga. 681; Supreme Commandery K. of G. R. v. Ainsworth, 71 Ala. 436, 443, 46 Am. Rep. 332; Sultz v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assn. 145 N. Y. 563, 568, 28 L. R. A. 379.

The rights and liabilities of parties in a mutual co-operative insurance company are essentially different from the rights and liabilities in a stock insurance company. This difference is remarked upon by Mr. May in his work on Insurance, § 146. He says: "Mutual insurance, it is truly observed, is essentially different from stock insurance, and much of the litigation that has grown out of this species of insurance has been owing to inattention to this difference. Its original design was to provide cheap insurance by means of local associations, the members of which should insure each other. Such associations are in their nature adapted only to local business. They need many by-laws and conditions that are not required in stock companies; and it is necessary and equitable that each person who gets himself insured in them should become subject to the same obligations toward his associates that he requires from them towards himself. If the officers have discretionary power as to the terms of the contract or even as to its form, it is obvious that different parties may become members upon different terms and conditions, and thus the principle of mutual-ity will become completely abrogated." And so again, in § 548, the author says: "The principle which lies at the foundation of mutual insurance, and gives it its name, is mutuality,—in other words, the intervention of each person insured in the management of the affairs of the company, and the participation of each person in the profits and losses of the business, in proportion to his interest. Each person insured becomes a member of the body corporate, clothed with the rights and subject to the liabilities of a stockholder. He is at once insurer and insured."

And in Niblack on Mutual Benefit Societies, § 136, the same principle is stated with the authorities for its support. The author says: "An ordinary life insurance policy contains the whole contract of insurance; but the certificate of membership in a mutual benefit society is only part of the written evidence of the contract. . . . The charter, constitution, and by-laws of such societies are made to contain the whole plan of insurance, designating who shall be the beneficiaries of its members, fixing the amount of the benefit fund, and setting forth the terms of the entire contract. In such cases membership in the society carries with it a specified amount of life insurance."

With these well-settled principles in view, it would clearly not be safe and proper to proceed upon the presumption that the certificate of membership exhibited with the bill contains the entire and exclusive evidence of the contract, in the absence of the constitution or articles of association and the by-laws of the corporation. The certificate of membership having been issued and accepted subject to the provisions and conditions of those articles and by-laws of the association, the certificate must be construed in reference and in subordination to such articles and by-laws; and it may be that some of the articles or by-laws may have a very material bearing in the construction of the certificate; and hence they should have been made part of the case as stated by the bill.

But apart from this defect in the bill, in considering the case on demurrer, there is a broader and more insuperable objection to the bill than that just referred to, and that is the want of power and jurisdiction in the court to extend its remedial processes to restrain and control the internal affairs and administration of corporate duties and functions of the defendant, a foreign corporation. It was upon this ground that the court below acted in sustaining the demurrer and dismissing the bill.

The principal ground of complaint appears to be the alleged or supposed illegal enhancement of the rate of assessment levied and collected, or attempted to be collected, of the plaintiff, over and above the rate specified in the table of rates indorsed on the certificate of membership. This increased rate of assessment would appear to be the result of a change of policy on the part of the defendant association, founded upon a supposition that it was inequitable and unjust that the assessment should be based upon the age of the member at the time he obtained his certificate of membership and that the just and more equitable rule would be to make the assessment with reference to the age of the member at the time the call is made. This may, and certainly would appear to, work great hardship upon the older class of members. But the question is, Has a court of equity in this district, the power or jurisdiction to correct the wrong, if it be one? If this were an action to recover money due on the policy, or an action by the defendant association to recover of the plaintiff money due for assessments, or any money of one party to the other, then, in all such cases, and others that might be suggested, instituted in the courts of this District, the jurisdiction of a court of equity here might be invoked to prevent injustice and wrong. In all such cases, the party aggrieved has the right to sue and obtain effective remedy against foreign insurance companies, having an agency here and doing business in this District. This is provided for by the act of Congress of 1887, chap. 46, § 4 (25 Stat. at L. p. 369). That act provides for the due appointment of an agent in this District as a condition upon which a foreign insurance company is allowed to do business here,—the agent being made competent to receive service of process in suits against the company appointing him. But that act, manifestly, does not contemplate or apply to a case such as the present. It does not contemplate suits here against foreign insurance companies, the object and effect of which would be to restrain their home administration, and to ransack and overhaul their internal affairs, in order to determine whether their proceeding has been in all respects legal and in accordance with the law of their creation, and of their by-laws, as they may affect their individual members. It is clear, the act of 1887 does not attempt to make foreign insurance companies, doing business here under this statute, corporations of this District. For as said by the Supreme Court, in the case of Pennsylvania R. Co. v. St. Louis, A. & T. H. R. Co. 118 U. S. 290, 296, 30 L. ed. 83, 87: "To make such a company a corporation of another state, the language used must imply creation or adoption in such form as to confer the power usually exercised over corporations by the state, or by the legislature, and such allegiance as a state corporation owes to its creator. The mere grant of privileges or powers to it as an existing corporation, without more, does not do this, and does not make it a citizen of the state conferring such powers." The act of 1887 contains no language that could imply creation or adoption of these foreign insurance corporations, but only the grant of privileges or powers to existing corporations of other jurisdictions, upon complying with certain conditions. The class of laws granting such privileges and powers, say the Supreme Court, in the case just referred to, "are common in authorizing insurance companies, banking companies and others to do business in other states than those which have chartered them." Such acts do not extend the jurisdiction of the courts of one state and authorize them to reach over their territorial limits into the jurisdiction of another state, and bring into review and revision the corporate acts and internal affairs of the local corporations of the latter states. Such a power, if attempted to be exercised, would be futile and ridiculous. Indeed, neither the legislatures of the states, nor the Congress of the United States, could confer such powers.

In this case, it is proper to observe the prayer of the bill. The prayer is, that an injunction may issue to restrain the defendant and its agents from collecting any sum upon call No. 97, dated April 1, 1898, and upon all subsequent calls in excess of the rate in force at the date of the certificates of membership issued to the plaintiff, and from in any manner declaring lapsed or void the policy or certificate held by the plaintiff, and commanding the defendant to retain the plaintiff as a member and policy holder in good standing during the pendency of this suit, with the same force and effect as if he had paid all said calls or assessments.

Now, in the first place, all assessments and dues, required to be paid by the certificate holder, as also the amount of the policy itself by the defendant, are payable and are required to be paid, at the home office of the defendant in the city of New York. And this being so, it is a little difficult to imagine how a court in this district could restrain and direct the action of the corporation at its home office in the city of New York. Suppose the injunction to be issued as prayed, and to be served upon an agent in this District, and the board of directors of the corporation were to refuse to recognize it, and proceed to forfeit and declare null and void the certificate or policy of the plaintiff, for default of payment of assessments, as according to the terms of the certificate they are authorized to do. How would or could the court in this District deal with such conduct? For the disregard or violation of an injunction the ordinary remedy is a proceeding and punishment for contempt. But how could that be made effectual as against parties beyond the jurisdiction of the court, and who claim to be proceeding in accordance with what may be legal authority derived from their own state? It is very clear, therefore, that this prayer for an injunction could not be granted.

The next prayer is, that the defendant be required to discover to the plaintiff its books and accounts, showing losses, mortality, expenses, and particularly the salaries of each individual officer of the association, assessments, and matters and things incident thereto, since the plaintiff became a member of the association, etc., whereby correct and true assessments and amounts which should have been at all times levied upon the plaintiff and the other members of the association, may be ascertained, and that an accounting be had between the plaintiff and the defendant.

It is hardly necessary to say that a court of equity in this District has no such power or jurisdiction over the affairs of a foreign corporation as to require such discovery and accounting as are prayed for by this bill. Upon such a theory as is here propounded, no corporation could ever venture to conduct business beyond the limits of the state of its creation. According to the principle of this prayer, any business transaction of an insurance company, which might take place in a state other than that of a company's creation, and which could be alleged to affect the assets of the company, and the interest of its members, would furnish the ground for calling for discovery the production of books, and for a general accounting. Upon any such principle, it would be very perilous for any insurance company to attempt to do business beyond the limits of the state of its creation. It might have half a dozen courts, in as many different states, requiring discovery, and demanding the production of its books, and directing the statement of accounts, all at the same time. There is no principle that would justify such proceeding.

Then, again, it is prayed that the true and proper amount of assessments to be made be determined, and that it also be determined what amount the plaintiff has already paid in excess of the rate of assessment that should have been levied upon him, and that the defendant be compelled to refund the same; and that there be directed and required to be made a proper application of the reserve fund, in accordance with the requirements of the certificate of membership.

This prayer, like the preceding, requires a complete overhauling and scrutiny of the entire administration of the internal affairs of the corporation, from the time that the plaintiff became a member down to the present time; and that nothing short of a full and complete account would enable the court to decree in accordance with the prayer.

It is thus apparent from the statement of the facts alleged in the bill, and from the several prayers based thereon, that the relief sought, if it could be granted, would require the control, direction, and revision of the internal affairs of the corporation, by a court of equity in this District. This we think, upon the clearest authority, cannot be done. The law would seem to be too well settled to admit of such a question, that where the acts complained of affect the plaintiff in his rights of corporator, or stockholder, or as a member of a mutual benefit insurance company, or other corporation, and the acts are those of the corporation, done and performed in the course of the administration of the corporate affairs, and especially when claimed to have been done and performed, or authorized to be done, by virtue of authority derived from its by-laws, the courts of another state or jurisdiction will not interfere or attempt to exercise jurisdiction, to direct, control, or revise corporate action. To assume jurisdiction over the affairs of a foreign corporation would inevitably lead to conflicting decisions, resulting in confusion and needless litigation, and the making of orders and decrees simply to be contemned, because not capable of being enforced. The court, if it were to undertake to act in such cases, has no power, and therefore cannot bring the officers, or the corporate books or the assets of the corporation within its jurisdiction, to be subject to its process. Its decrees could only be enforced by proceedings for contempt, and yet there would be no person here, subject to that process, to be coerced to act for the corporation. The mere local agent, clearly, would not be such person. It may well be said, therefore, as was said by the court, in the case of Leary v. Columbia River & P. S. Nav. Co. 82 Fed. Rep. 775, on an application very analogous to the present that "the authorities cited by counsel for the defendant corporation show clearly and strongly that courts having jurisdiction to enforce their decrees in the state where the corporation has its home office should be resorted to in all cases where it is necessary to inquire into and regulate the internal affairs of the corporation," and not to courts of a different state or jurisdiction. And without stating the facts of each particular case, we deem it sufficient to refer generally to some few of the leading and more important cases upon this subject, in support of the conclusion we have stated. And for this purpose we refer to Fisher v. Charter Oak L. Ins. Co. 20 Jones & S. 175; Hovell v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 51 Barb. 378; North State Copper & Gold Min. Co. v. Field, 64 Md. 151; Wilkins v. Thorne, 60 Md. 253; Smith v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 14 Allen, 336; Kansas & E. R. Constr. Co. v. Topeka, S. & W. R. Co. 135 Mass. 34, 46 Am. Rep. 439; Pierce v. Equitable L. Assur. Soc. 145 Mass. 56; Kimball v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 157 Mass. 7; Stafford v. American Mills Co. 13 R. I. 310; Madden v. Penn. Electric Light Co. 181 Pa. 617, 38 L. R. A. 638.

For the reasons we have stated, we shall affirm the decree of the court below, but without prejudice to the right of the appellant to sue and maintain his action in any proper court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter; and it is so ordered.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

J. H. MOHRMANN, Plff. in Err.,

v.

STATE of Georgia.

(.....Ga.....)

- *1. The mere fact that the selling and drinking of intoxicating liquors was "only an incident, and not the main object," of the incorporation of a social club, will make the place where such liquors are dispensed and drunk none the less a tippling house, within the meaning of the statute making penal the keeping open of such houses on the Sabbath day.
2. A person who is the manager, and also a member and officer, of such a social club, and who exercises a general superintendence over the affairs of the club, including the bar from which intoxicating drinks are furnished, is amenable to the statute above referred to.
3. That "only members" are permitted in the rooms of a social club will not take such an organization out of the statute prohibiting the keeping open of tippling houses on the Sabbath day.

(November 16, 1898.)

ERROR to the City Court of Richmond County to review a judgment convicting defendant of keeping open a tippling house on the Sabbath day contrary to the provisions of a statute. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. E. B. Baxter, for plaintiff in error: The home of a bona fide social club is not a tippling house.

The question is whether or not such an organization can reasonably be considered as having been aimed at by our statute.

Williams v. State, 100 Ga. 527, 39 L. R. A. 269.

*Headnotes by COBB, J.

NOTE.—As to the sales of intoxicating liquors by clubs, see note to People v. Adelphi Club (N. Y.) 81 L. R. A. 510; also Klein v. Livingston Club (Pa.) 84 L. R. A. 94, 43 L. R. A.

The fact that the legislature placed the keeping open of a tippling house in the same category, and on the same level, with such other offenses as are named in the statute, is strong evidence that the mere act of keeping a decent place of social gathering, like a bona fide club, open on Sunday, cannot be reasonably held to have been aimed at by our statute.

Minor v. State, 63 Ga. 321; Hussey v. State, 69 Ga. 59.

Mr. C. Henry Cohen, for the State:

The manager of a social organization, chartered by the courts, was the right party to indict for keeping a gaming house if gaming went on in the establishment.

Cochran v. State, 102 Ga. 631.

In a large majority of the states the courts have held that clubs were liable for violation of the Sunday or liquor laws just as individuals.

State v. Lockyear, 95 N. C. 633; State v. Mercer, 32 Iowa, 405; Marmont v. State, 48 Ind. 24; Martin v. State, 59 Ala. 34; 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 810; Kentucky Club v. Louisville, 92 Ky. 309.

To keep a tippling house open on Sunday is indictable without proof that liquor was sold.

Hall v. State, 3 Ga. 18; Holland v. State, 34 Ga. 457; Bethune v. State, 48 Ga. 510.

The sale of liquor is not necessary to constitute a tippling house.

Minor v. State, 63 Ga. 318.

It makes no difference what the place may be called, if it be a place where liquor is sold on the Sabbath, with a door of entrance so that anybody can push it open and enter and drink, the proprietor is guilty of an offense.

Hussey v. State, 69 Ga. 54; Harvey v. State, 65 Ga. 568.

Selling domestic wine in a building within the curtilage of the dwelling house constitutes a tippling house.

Thomason v. State, 92 Ga. 456.

A bar and restaurant with an open door is a tippling house.

Cooper v. State, 88 Ga. 441; Harmon v. State, 92 Ga. 455.

If the owner keep it open but for a moment it is a violation.

Mones v. State, 78 Ga. 110; Lucas v. State, 92 Ga. 454.

Whenever it was shown that the house was a tippling house, that defendant was the owner, and that it was kept open, the offense is made out.

Sanders v. State, 74 Ga. 82; Nixon v. State, 75 Ga. 862.

Cobb, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Mohrmann was arraigned in the city court of Richmond county, charged with the offense of keeping open a tippling house on the Sabbath day. At the trial the following facts were agreed to: (1) The rooms for keeping open which the defendant was indicted were kept open on the day named in the indictment. (2) Said rooms were used as a rendezvous where the Grabemax Social Club did gather on the Sabbath day named in the indictment, and other days, and drink, from a bar kept in the said rooms, intoxicating liquors. (3) They were kept open with the defendant's knowledge on the Sabbath day, as alleged. (4) Said rooms were rented by the Grabemax Social Club, which is incorporated, and which is an organization composed of some one hundred citizens of Augusta. All that is in them belongs to said corporation, which pays taxes thereon. The stock of liquors therein is the property of said club, and drinks therefrom were sold to members of said club on the days mentioned in the indictment. That the selling of liquor on Sunday [was] only an incident, and not the main object, of the organization. (5) Defendant is manager of the said club, and receives a salary for his services. He was an employee and officer of the said club, with designated duties, one of which was to see that the bar in the club was properly conducted and kept open for the use of the members, from which drinks were sold. It was his business to look after the general conduct and running of the club, but he was in no sense, other than the above, the proprietor or owner of said rooms, nor had he any authority or control over them. He acted under orders, and was strictly amenable to the governing board of the said club. His authority to do all that he did do flowed wholly from his employment, and only members are permitted in the said club rooms on Sunday or any other day." On the above facts the presiding judge, sitting without a jury, found the accused guilty. His motion for a new trial on the general grounds was overruled, and he excepted. An examination of the statement of facts above quoted will show that the Grabemax Social Club was distinguished from an ordinary tippling house in three particulars: (1) The selling of liquor on Sunday was incidental to, and not the main object of, the organization. (2) The accused was an employee and officer of the club, and not the owner thereof. It was 43 L. R. A.

his duty, acting under orders of the governing board of the club, to see that the bar was properly conducted and kept open for the use of the members, and to exercise a general superintendence over the club. (3) "Only members are permitted in the said club rooms on Sunday or any other day." We are called upon to decide whether these three distinguishing characteristics of this social organization take it out of that class of liquor-selling establishments commonly denominated "tippling houses."

1. We are of opinion that the incidental selling of liquor will make a place none the less a tippling house than if that was the main object of its establishment. The evil intended to be corrected by the statute is the keeping open on the Sabbath day of houses where liquor is furnished and drunk; and it makes no difference, we think, for what purpose the house is being operated, if the fact remains that intoxicating liquors are furnished on the Sabbath day, to be drunk on the premises where they are supplied. It certainly can be no reply to the statute that the persons guilty of keeping open a house where liquors are sold and drunk had some other business in view, as the primary object of its operation, and that the selling of such liquors is merely an incident to this object. A person keeping a grocery store, but who kept, as incidental to his grocery business, a bar in one corner of the store, about which his friends were accustomed to gather on the Sabbath day and partake with him of intoxicating drinks, might as well make this plea as the plaintiff in error. The fact that the main purpose of the one was social pleasure, and of the other the realization of profit from his grocery business, can make no difference. In both the selling was merely incidental to, and not the main object of, the business. In the case of Harris v. People, 1 Colo. App. 289, the accused was convicted of "keeping open a tippling house on the Sabbath." It appeared from the evidence that he was a grocer, and kept the usual stock of goods in that line of business, and in addition kept on hand intoxicating liquors. Reed, J., in the opinion, uses this language: "The object of the statute, evidently, was to prevent places where intoxicating liquors were sold from keeping open and pursuing their traffic upon the Sabbath. It requires such places to be closed, and parties cannot evade the law by carrying on two kinds of business in the same room, and claiming that the sale of groceries was the principal, and the sale of liquors only an incident." In Williams v. State, 100 Ga. 511, 39 L. R. A. 269, it was held that where a person, "in her dwelling house, sold whisky, by retail to different persons, and on each occasion permitted the same, or a portion thereof, to be drunk on the premises," she was guilty of keeping open a tippling house. The selling of whisky was certainly incidental to the purpose for which she occupied the house. And yet the fact that it was her dwelling did not shield her. See also Harvey v. State, 65 Ga. 568. While furnishing intoxicating drinks might have been a mere incident to the purposes for which the Grabemax Social Club was established, it does not appear but that its members, or some of them, went to the rooms of the club for the sole purpose of procuring and drinking intoxicants. A person who carries on in connection with some other employment a business which is a violation of the law is just as guilty as he who carries on such business alone.

2. The second point is controlled by the principle announced in the case of Cochran v. State, 102 Ga. 631. It was there held that "evidence showing that the accused was an officer of a social club, that gaming with cards for money was carried on in a room thereof, that portions of the losses in the games played were appropriated to the use of the club, and that the accused, knowing these facts, collected and received the same for its benefit, was sufficient to warrant a verdict finding him guilty of keeping a gaming house." See also State v. Mercer, 32 Iowa, 405.

3. Is a social club which furnishes intoxicating liquors to its members only, to be drunk by them on the premises where sold, a tipping house, within the meaning of § 390 of the Penal Code, which provides that "any person who shall be guilty of open lewdness, or any notorious act of public indecency, tending to debauch the morals, or of keeping open tipping houses on the Sabbath day, or Sabbath night, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor"? Keepers of tipping houses have sought in various ways to evade the effect of this statute, and escape the punishment which it prescribes. Some of the methods resorted to are strikingly unique, and this court has not looked with favor upon violators of this law, and has, in every instance where it could possibly do so, upheld convictions thereunder. It has been held that "it makes no difference as to whether any liquors be sold or not, the offense consists in its being open, not in selling, or offering to sell, or giving it away." Harvey v. State, 65 Ga. 568. See also Klug v. State, 77 Ga. 734; Mones v. State, 78 Ga. 110; Seyden v. State, 78 Ga. 105. In the case of Hussey v. State, 69 Ga. 54, no authoritative ruling was made on the question as to whether a club which furnished liquors to its members only was a tipping house within the meaning of the statute. True, the court uses this language: "It makes no difference, in law, whether the place be called a barroom, or a glee-club resort, or a parlor, or a restaurant; if it be a place where liquor is retailed and tipped on the Sabbath day, with a door to get into it, so kept that anybody can push it open and go in and drink, the proprietor of it is guilty of keeping open a tipping house on Sunday. It makes no difference if the drinking be done standing or sitting,—at a bar or around a table; it is tipping, and the place where it is done is a tipping house; and, if anybody wishing to drink can have access thereto,—if ingress and egress be free to all comers,—it is a tipping house kept open on Sunday." The court was in that case dealing with a public resort, and in so far as any language in the headnotes of the opinion indicates that any other character of resort would not be a tipping house, it is, of course, merely obiter. We think, however, that the first part of the language quoted will show that in the opinion of the court a house of the character now under consideration would be a tipping house. In the case of Minor v. State, 63 Ga. 318, an organization known as the "Albany Glee Club" was under investigation. Resolutions and by-laws for the government of the club were in evidence. From these it appeared that the main and controlling purpose of the organization was to engage in selling and drinking liquors on the Sabbath day. It was not in a strict sense a public resort, for it was provided that "no member shall invite an outsider that has not paid his quota to the benefit of the club, without the consent of two thirds of the members present." This club was held to be a tipping house. We can see, however, some difference between the Albany Club and the club under consideration in the present case; for the latter club, according to the evidence, was thoroughly exclusive, and under no circumstances could persons other than those enjoying membership therein partake of its benefits. It does not appear, however, from the evidence, that any limitation was put upon its membership. The object of the general assembly in passing this statute, as was said by Warner, J., in Hall v. State, 3 Ga. 18, "was to remove all temptation to idle and dissolute persons who might be disposed to congregate at such places and violate the Sabbath by any improper conduct." It was said in Sanders v. State, 74 Ga. 82, that "the purpose of the act was not only to close up such establishments on Sunday, in deference to the finer and better feelings of orderly and well-disposed people, but to remove this incitement to graver and more dangerous violations of the law." It is rather difficult to embrace within one comprehensive definition every class of resort which could properly be called a tipping house. Judge Bleckley, in Minor v. State, 63 Ga. 318, says that "it is something easier for an offender to baffle the dictionary than the Penal Code, for the former is perplexed with verbal niceties and shades of meaning, while the latter grasps, in a broad, practical way, at the substantial transactions of men. The Code offers no definition of a tipping house. It deals with them as establishments too well known to need description, and simply prescribes a penalty for keeping them open on the Sabbath day or Sabbath night." According to Black's Law Dictionary, a tipping house is "a place where intoxicating drinks are sold in drams or small quantities, to be drunk on the premises." Anderson says it is "a place of public resort where spirituous, fermented, or other intoxicating liquors are sold and drank in small quantities, without a license therefor," also, "a public drinking house where intoxicating liquor is either sold by drams to the public, or else is given away, and imbibed." Anderson, Law Dict., Tipping House. The house under consideration in the present case comes within the letter of the definition first quoted, and within the spirit, at least, of the last. See also Black, Intoxicating Liquors, § 20. But, as Judge Warner, quoting from Chief Justice Marshall, says in Hall v. State, 3 Ga. 18, "although penal laws are to be construed strictly, they are not to be construed so strictly as to defeat the obvious intention of the legislature." And in Sanders v. State, 74 Ga. 82, we find the following: "Courts are not very astute in shielding violators of this provision from punishment by resorting to the niceties of verbal criticism, such as would be intelligible only to grammarians and fastidious scholars, but would utterly fail to impress less cultivated minds and tastes, in order to provide for them a way to escape."

Even if a sale is necessary before a place where liquors are furnished can be characterized as a tipping house, the weight of modern authority seems to be that such a furnishing as the evidence in the present case discloses is a sale. In the case of State v. Lockyear, 95 N. C. 633, 59 Am. Rep. 287, a number of persons organized a club for social and literary purposes, and became duly incorporated. Incidental to the main purpose of the organization, the members, but no other persons, were permitted to purchase from the defendant, its steward, liquors and other articles, which were furnished by the club at a price fixed by its officers, sufficient to cover the cost, but not for the purpose of profit. It was there held that the furnishing of liquors to the members of the club under these circumstances was a sale, in violation of the local option act. In the opinion, Mr. Chief Justice Smith uses this language: "There can be no question that, in a strict legal sense, the transaction described in the verdict is a sale of spirituous liquors. All the elements of an executed contract are present. The corporate body, a legal entity, and the owner of the liquor, through its servant, the defendant, delivers it to the purchaser at his call, and receives a fixed compensation in money therefor. The property in the goods passes and vests in the purchaser, and the money paid is received for, and becomes the property of, the club. Can there be any doubt that a corporation may make contracts and deal with a corporator precisely as with a stranger, and valid obligations, capable of enforcement, be thus formed between the parties? And is not this dealing with the prohibited subject directly within the terms of the statute, and does it not open the door to the mischiefs intended to be suppressed? It is not necessary that the vendor should be authorized to sell to any applicant, as an ordinary retailer. He is not allowed to sell to anyone, and the fact that customers must be members of the association does not relieve him from criminal responsibility under the mandatory statute." In the opinion will be found several citations of authority supporting the ruling there made. See also State v. Neis, 108 N. C. 787, 12 L. R. A. 412, and authorities cited in note in the Southeastern Reporter. Substantially the same ruling has been made in New York. People v. Si- nell, 34 N. Y. S. R. 898; People v. Bradley, 33 N. Y. S. R. 562. At the conclusion of his opinion in State, Newark, v. Essex Club, 53 N. J. L. 99, Van Syckel, J., says that "it is wholly immaterial whether the sale is made in open view to all who apply, or in the most secluded place, to which only the trusted few can gain admittance. The penalty of the statute is denounced against the sale without license, whether in public or private. The prohibited act is the sale without license, and in my opinion the admitted facts show that such sale was made by the defendant below in contravention of the law." See also Martin v. State, 59 Ala. 34; People v. Soule, 74 Mich. 250, 2 L. R. A. 494; Kentucky Club v. Louisville, 92 Ky. 309; State v. Horacek, 41 Kan. 87, 3 L. R. A. 687. There are cases which hold that the furnishing of liquors under circumstances similar to those in the present case is not a sale, and we do not attempt to reconcile them. We think, however, that the better view is the one supported by the authorities above cited, the reasoning of which seems to be conclusive.

In this state a sale is not necessary, as has been shown, to make out the offense of keeping open a tipping house on the Sabbath. Does the statute, fairly construed, embrace within its terms a house of the character described in the present case? We think so. The statute intended that all places where persons are accustomed to congregate and drink intoxicating liquors should be closed on the Sabbath day. The fact that liquors are furnished to 100 designated persons, and no others, makes the place where such liquors are supplied none the less a tipping house. It is still a place where men congregate for the purpose of drinking intoxicants. There is no limitation placed upon the membership of the club over which the plaintiff in error exercised a general superintendence. It is 100 now, and next year may be 500. It is not unfair to assume that some, at least, of its membership, are accustomed to congregate at the club rooms on the Sabbath day for the sole purpose of procuring intoxicating drinks. To hold that such a place was not a tipping house would be doing violence to the statute, and would defeat, in a large measure, the very object for which it was enacted; that is, to prevent persons congregating and imbibing intoxicants on the Sabbath day. It was claimed by counsel for plaintiff in error in his brief that the Grabemax Social Club of Augusta was "a respectable place, to which the public has not access, in which members of a club owning the resort meet for social ends, and merely drink as an incident of being there." This may be true; it is nevertheless a tipping house, within the meaning of the statute, and must be closed on the Sabbath day.

Judgment affirmed.

All the Justices concur, except Simmons, Ch. J., absent, and Lumpkin, P. J., absent on account of sickness.

CENTRAL OF GEORGIA RAILWAY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

Mrs. John S. PRICE.

(.....Ga.....)

*Where, through the negligence of the conductor of a railway company, a passenger on its cars has been carried beyond the point of her destination, such conductor, in the absence of express authority so to do, cannot constitute the proprietor of an hotel, who is entirely unconnected with the company, its agent for the purpose of providing safe and comfortable lodgings for the passenger until she can return on the company's train to her destination. It follows, therefore, that the company is not liable for any injuries or damage such passenger may have sustained while at the hotel, in consequence of any negligence on the part of its proprietor.

(December 14, 1898.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Macon County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for injuries received at a hotel where she was compelled to go because of defendant's negligence in carrying her past her station while a passenger on defendant's train. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William D. Kiddoo, for plaintiff in error:

The damages from the injury received in the hotel are too remote from the contract of carriage to be the basis of recovery against the plaintiff in error.

6 Rapalje & Mack's Digest of Railway Law, § 43, p. 793; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Enger, 4 Ind. App. 261; Kistner v. Indianapolis, 100 Ind. 210.

Damages traceable to the act of negligence, but not to its legal or natural consequence, are too remote and contingent.

Civil Code, § 3911; Montgomery & W. P. R. Co. v. Boring, 51 Ga. 582; Perry v. Central R. Co. 66 Ga. 746; Georgia R. Co. v. Hayden, 71 Ga. 518, 51 Am. Rep. 274; Hardwick v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. 85 Ga. 507; Jamison v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 92 Va. 327; McClary v. Sioux City & P. R. Co. 3 Neb. 44, 19 Am. Rep. 631; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Beckworth, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 153; Sickles v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 13 Tex. Civ. App. 434; Lewis v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 54 Mich. 55, 52 Am. Rep. 790; Hollenbeck v. Johnson, 79 Hun, 499; 6 Rapalje & Mack's Digest of Railway Law, §§ 43, 46, 48, 49, pp. 793, 794, 796, 797; Stone v. Boston & A. R. Co. 171 Mass. 536, 41 L. R. A. 794; Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. v. Elliott, 12 U. S. App. 381, 55 Fed. Rep. 949, 5 C. C. A. 347, 20 L. R. A. 582; Seale v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. 65 Tex. 274, 57 Am. Rep. 602; Gilliland v.

Chicago & A. R. Co. 19 Mo. App. 411; White v. Conly, 14 Lea, 51, 52 Am. Rep. 157, notes; Hoag v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 85 Pa. 293, 27 Am. Rep. 653; Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Muthersbaugh, 71 Ill. 572.

It is not possible that human foresight could have foreseen or provided against the explosion of the lamp, or that the conductor could have foreseen that the hotel proprietor would have furnished a defective lamp, and therefore it is impossible to make the omission of the defendant in court below to foresee and guard against such facts the basis of a recovery.

Longmeid v. Holliday, 6 Exch. 761; Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. v. Elliott, 12 U. S. App. 381, 55 Fed. Rep. 949, 5 C. C. A. 347, 20 L. R. A. 582; West Mahanoy Twp. v. Watson, 112 Pa. 574, 56 Am. Rep. 336.

Messrs. M. Felton Hatcher and Guerry & Hall for defendant in error.

Simmons, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In the view we take of this case, it is unnecessary to deal with the many special grounds of the motion for a new trial. The record discloses that Mrs. Price was a passenger on a train of the defendant company, and that her destination was Winchester, Georgia. Through the negligence of the conductor, she was not put off at Winchester, but was carried on to Montezuma. Upon her arrival at the latter place, the conductor advised her to go to the hotel and spend the night, he agreeing to carry her back to Winchester in the morning when his train made the return trip. He accompanied her to an hotel, where a room was assigned her, the conductor agreeing with the proprietor to pay her expenses. She was taken to her room by the proprietor or his servants, and furnished with a kerosene lamp, which she left burning after she had retired to bed. Some time during the night, the lamp, she claims, exploded, and set fire to a mosquito net which covered the bed, and, in her efforts to extinguish the flames, her hands were badly burned. She sued the railway company for damages, and, under the charge of the court, the jury returned a verdict in her favor for $400. A motion for a new trial was made, and was overruled by the trial judge. To this the company excepted.

The contention of the plaintiff in the court below was that when the conductor carried her to the hotel in Montezuma, and asked her to remain there until his return the next morning, he thereby made the proprietor of the hotel the agent of the railway company, and that, if the plaintiff was injured by the negligence of the proprietor or his servants in furnishing her a defective lamp, the railway company was liable, the contract of carriage not having been fully executed, and the plaintiff being still a passenger. The trial judge, in his charge, took this view of the law, and in substance so instructed the jury. We, however, think this was error. A conductor on a passenger train of a railway company is the agent of the company, and the company is bound by all of his acts within the scope of his employment. His business is to superintend the running of the train, look after the comfort and safety of the passengers, and do such other work, in and about the running of the train, as is imposed upon him by the rules of the company or by law. Being only an agent, he had no authority without express power conferred by the company, to appoint a subagent. He could not delegate to another, an agent of his own appointment, the powers conferred upon him. Civil Code, § 2999. It was not within the scope of his business to constitute the proprietor of an hotel the agent of the company for the purpose of taking care of the plaintiff during the night. We are aware that several of the courts have held that, where a passenger is injured by the negligence of a railway company, such company is liable for the compensation of a surgeon employed by the conductor or station agent for attendance upon the injured passenger. These rulings are put upon the ground of humanity and public policy in cases of such emergency, but so far as we can ascertain, no court has ever held that the company would be liable to the injured passenger for the negligence or malpractice of a surgeon so employed.

*Headnote by SIMMONS, Ch. J.

NOTE.—As to authority of an agent or representative of a railroad company to employ medical services for a passenger or other third person, see Hanscom v. Minneapolis Street R. Co. (Minn.) 20 L. R. A. 695, and note. 43 L. R. A.

It is argued that, whether or not the proprietor of the hotel was the agent of the company, the contract of carriage was not completed, and it was the duty of the company, by its agents, safely to care for the passenger until they had delivered her at her destination. Admitting, for the sake of the argument, that this is true, we still think that the company would not be liable for the consequences of the landlord's negligence. The negligence of the company consisted in passing the station where the passenger desired to alight, without giving her an opportunity to get off. Taking her version of the manner in which she was injured, the injury was occasioned by the negligence of the proprietor of the hotel or his servants in giving her a defective lamp. The negligence of the company in passing her station was therefore not the natural and proximate cause of her injury. There was the interposition of a separate, independent agency,—the negligence of the proprietor of the hotel, over whom, as we have shown, the railway company neither had nor exercised any control. Civil Code, §§ 3912, 3913; Perry v. Central R. Co. 66 Ga. 746; Macon v. Dykes (Ga.) 31 S. E. 443; South Side Pass. R. Co. v. Trich, 117 Pa. 390; Wood v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 177 Pa. 306, 35 L. R. A. 199; Lewis v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 54 Mich. 55, 52 Am. Rep. 790; Hoag v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 85 Pa. 293, 27 Am. Rep. 653; Sira v. Wabash R. Co. 115 Mo. 127; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Shields, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 652; Smith v. Bolles, 132 U. S. 125, 33 L. ed. 279.

The injuries to the plaintiff were not the natural and proximate consequences of carrying her beyond her station, but were unusual, and could not have been foreseen or provided against by the highest practicable care. The plaintiff was not entitled to recover for such injuries, and the court erred in overruling the motion for new trial.

Judgment reversed.

All the Justices concur.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

Katheryne S. SMITH, Appt.,

v.

Edward O. SMITH et al.

(174 Ill. 52.)

1. The proceeds of a decedent's land sold for partition are not personally subject to be transmitted to the administrator appointed at his domicile in another state and there distributed to creditors whose claims have not been allowed by the courts in whose jurisdiction the land was situated.
2. Heirs who appear in the courts of the state of their ancestor's late domicile to contest the making of a family allowance to his widow are not estopped by a judgment making the allowance from contesting its payment out of land which descended to them in another state, since the judgment is not against them personally.
3. A judgment by the courts of the state of the late domicile of a decedent making a family allowance to his widow out of his assets according to the laws of that state

NOTE.—As to the effect of judgments in other states against executors or administrators, see note to Braithwaite v. Harvey (Mont.) 27 L. R. A. 101.
43 L. R. A.

is not binding upon his lands in another state whose laws do not recognize such an allowance.

4. The aid of equity to enforce a claim against a decedent's estate cannot be sought until the claim has been established at law.
5. An admission in an agreed statement of facts that under the laws of another state a claim has been allowed by its courts against a decedent's estate does not admit that the claim is valid and enforceable under the laws of the state where it is sought to be enforced against real property belonging to the estate.

(June 18, 1898.)

APPEAL by complainant from a judgment of the Appellate Court, Third District, affirming an order of the Circuit Court for Macon County disallowing a claim against the estate of Edward O. Smith, deceased.
Affirmed.

Statement by Magruder, J.:

This is an appeal from an order of the circuit court refusing to direct payment to the appellant of an amount allowed her for "family allowance" by the superior court of Santa Clara county, California, which order was entered, upon an agreed state of facts, in a partition proceeding instituted by appellees, as heirs of one Edward O. Smith, against the appellant, widow of said Edward O. Smith and others, upon the application of appellant to have her claim for such allowance paid out of the proceeds of the sale of a part of the property, reported by the commissioners as incapable of division in said proceeding for partition and assignment of dower. An appeal was taken to the appellate court from the order refusing payment of appellant's claim. The appellate court has affirmed the order of the circuit court, and the present appeal is prosecuted from such judgment of affirmance. 63 Ill. App. 534.

Edward O. Smith died intestate on March 8, 1892, in Santa Clara county, California, where he was then residing. He left, him surviving, his widow, Katheryne S. Smith, and ten children, to wit, one daughter, Katheryne J. Smith, his child by appellant, and the appellee Edward O. Smith, and the other appellees, his children by a former wife. The appellant, Katheryne S. Smith, was appointed, on April 1, 1892, by said superior court of Santa Clara county, California, administratrix of the estate of said Edward O. Smith, deceased, in California, the said superior court having probate jurisdiction under the laws of California. On May 16, 1892, David S. Shellabarger was appointed administrator of the estate of Edward O. Smith in Illinois by the county court of Macon county, Illinois. Said Edward O. Smith, at the time of his death, owned land in Illinois, to wit, 1,000 acres of farm land, and a property in the city of Decatur known as the "Old Opera House." The appellees, heirs of Edward O. Smith, commenced in the circuit court of said Macon county, Illinois, the proceeding above referred to for the partition of said real estate, and for the assignment of the appellant's dower therein. Such proceedings were had in said partition and dower suit, that 267.62 acres were set off to the appellant as her dower, and most of the lands were divided among the heirs, but, the commissioners having reported that the opera-house property in Decatur could not be divided, the same was sold by the master in chancery, who, after paying appellant the amount allowed her for her dower interest therein, as hereafter stated, had in his hands $13,072.73. The appellant, as widow of the deceased intestate, consented to the sale of said opera-house property, and received out of the proceeds of such sale, as the value of her dower, the sum of $5,481.36. The appellant also received one third of the rents of the real estate from the time of the death of said Smith to the time of the assignment of her dower. A receiver, named George W. Bright, was appointed in the proceeding and has in his hands $320.13 arising from the collection of rents. Shellabarger, the administrator, has in his hands $340.43. The total amount in the hands of the master, the receiver, and the Illinois administrator is $13,733.29. The costs of the administration and receivership in Illinois, and the debts due to the creditors, in Illinois, have been fully paid. All the moneys on hand have proceeded from the sale and rental of the real estate owned by the said Edward O. Smith in Macon county Illinois. Claims were presented and allowed against the estate of Smith in the state of California. The assets in California were not sufficient to pay the California creditors. Upon the agreed statement of facts, hereinafter set forth, the circuit court of Macon county was asked to apply the moneys in the hands of the master and receiver, so far as should be necessary, to the payment of the claims against the estate of the intestate, as allowed by the court in California. A number of these claims have been paid by the master with the consent of the heirs, but the claim of the appellant for her "family allowance," as heretofore and hereinafter mentioned, was objected to by the heirs.

The agreed statement of facts set forth the death of Edward O. Smith, the appointment of his widow as administratrix in California, the appointment of Shellabarger as administrator in Illinois; and further sets forth that under the laws of California there was set off to the appellant herein, as such widow, as and for her homestead, in fee simple, certain land in California, valued at $8,468.35; that under and by virtue of the laws of California there was allowed to the said Katheryne S. Smith by the said superior court of Santa Clara county certain household and kitchen furniture in said homestead, valued at $2,992; "that under and by virtue of the laws of California said superior court of Santa Clara county allowed the said Katheryne S. Smith, out of the estate of said deceased, as and for her 'family allowance,' the following sum, to wit, from the date of the death of said Edward O. Smith, on the 8th day of March, 1892, to the 8th day of August, 1892, five months, at $250 per month, $1,250, and from the 8th day of August, 1892, until the further order of said court, at the rate of $200 per month; that the same be paid to her out of the estate of said Edward O. Smith, deceased, in preference to all other claims against said estate, except funeral expenses and the expenses of administration"; that said court, on September 8, 1893, ordered that said allowance cease, and that the amount thereof under the orders of said court is $3,850. The agreed statement of facts further sets forth that a large number of claims were allowed by the superior court of Santa Clara county, California, against the estate in that state. A list of said claims is attached to the agreed statement of facts. Copies of the orders of said superior court making the above allowance to the widow, and setting off the homestead to her, are also attached to said agreed statement of facts; and it is therein agreed that said copies shall be taken as evidence that said order making said allowance was entered, and that the persons heretofore mentioned are the children and heirs of the deceased. The agreed statement of facts also admits the facts hereinbefore stated, not specifically mentioned as being contained therein. It is also agreed therein that the administratrix, Katherine S. Smith, has no funds in her hands to pay the said allowance of $3,850 made to her by the California court, or to pay the expenses of the administration of said estate in California. It is therein agreed that the parties plaintiff or defendant may appeal, or prosecute a writ of error, from the order of court made upon such agreed statement of facts.

Mr. W. C. Johns, for appellant:

The allowance for the support of his widow is a debt.

Cal. Stat. §§ 11464-11467.

The funds in the hands of various officers of court must be regarded as personalty, converted into such for the purpose of paying debts.

3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1150; Re Simmons, 55 Ark. 485; Foster v. Foster, L. R. 1 Ch. Div. 588; Cooke v. Dealey, 22 Beav. 196; Oberly v. Lerch, 18 N. J. Eq. 346; Heydock's Appeal, 7 N. H. 496; Cronise v. Hardt, 47 Md. 433; Davis v. Estey, 8 Pick. 476; 2 Woerner, Law of Administration, §§ 481, 562; Porter v. Heydock, 6 Vt. 374; 2 Kent, Com. p. 433; Steed v. Preece, L. R. 18 Eq. 192; Robinson's Appeal, 62 Pa. 213; Emerson v. Cutler, 14 Pick. 118.

The administration in California is principal, and the administration of the funds in Illinois, whether conducted by an administrator or by a court of equity, is ancillary.

Young v. Wittenmyre, 123 Ill. 307; Heyer v. Alexander, 108 Ill. 386; Young v. Young, 2 Misc. 381; United States, Mackey, v. Coxe, 18 How. 105, 15 L. ed. 301; 3 Redf. Wills, *26 et seq.; Churchill v. Boyden, 17 Vt. 319; 3 Wms. Exrs. p. 1664.

Personalty is governed in distribution by the law of the domicile.

Parsons v. Lyman, 20 N. Y. 112; Despard v. Churchill, 53 N. Y. 197; Young v. Wittenmyre, 123 Ill. 307; Stevens v. Gaylord, 11 Mass. 256; Fay v. Haven, 3 Met. 114; Davies v. Boylston, 9 Mass. 337, 6 Am. Dec. 72; Jennison v. Hapgood, 10 Pick. 79; Wheelock v. Pierce, 6 Cush. 288; Richards v. Dutch, 8 Mass. 514; Heydock's Appeal, 7 N. H. 496.

After domestic creditors are paid, property should be remitted to the place of principal administration.

Young v. Wittenmyre, 123 Ill. 307; Stevens v. Gaylord, 11 Mass. 256; United States, Mackey, v. Coxe, 18 How. 106, 15 L. ed. 301; 3 Redf. Wills, *26 et seq.; Churchill v. Boyden, 17 Vt. 319; Fay v. Haven, 3 Met. 109; Wheelock v. Pierce, 6 Cush. 288; Richards v. Dutch, 8 Mass. 514; 3 Wms. Exrs. p. 1664; Walker v. Welker, 55 Ill. App. 123; McDonald v. McDonald, 96 Ky. 209; Mayo v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. 71 Miss. 590; Cross v. United States Trust Co. 131 N. Y. 330, 15 L. R. A. 606; Despard v. Churchill, 53 N. Y. 197.

A question determined by the courts of a sister state, so far as to become res judicata between the parties, cannot be reopened by the same parties in another state.

Davies v. Head, 3 Pick. 128; 1 Woerner, Law of Administration, §§ 158, 167 et seq. 43 L. R. A.

Messrs. Crea, Ewing, & Walker also for appellant.

Messrs. Bunn & Park and Outen & Roby, for appellees:

The attempt to have the same paid out of the proceeds of the sale of lands in Illinois in this case is an attempt to distribute the real estate in Illinois according to the laws of the state of California, which cannot be done.

An award is only allowed to one who is a resident of this state.

1 Starr & C. Stat. p. 223; Veile v. Koch, 27 Ill. 129.

Even an award made to a widow in this state may be contested.

Marshall v. Rose, 86 Ill. 374.

The funds arise from the real estate in the state of Illinois of which E. O. Smith died seized. Such real estate descended to the heirs eo instanti of the death of their father. Any change from real estate has been made since by them through the aid of the court, and as of their own property and not the property of the estate.

Chapin, Petitioner, 148 Mass. 591, 2 L. R. A. 768; Simonds v. Simonds, 112 Mass. 157; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1107; Haward v. Peavey, 128 Ill. 430; Holland v. Crust, 3 Gray, 162; Emerson v. Cutler, 14 Pick. 118; 3 Washb. Real Prop. 6; Smith v. McConnell, 17 Ill. 135, 63 Am. Dec. 340; Horne, Probate Law, § 172, p. 200; Story, Conf. L. §§ 428, 430, 431, 435, 483, 551, 555; 1 Redf. Wills, 4th ed. p. 398.

Real estate is governed by the lex rei sitæ.

1 Story, Eq. § 586; McGarvey v. Darnall, 134 Ill. 370, 10 L. R. A. 861; Judy v. Kelley, 11 Ill. 211, 50 Am. Dec. 455; Rosenthal v. Renick, 44 Ill. 202; Stacy v. Thrasher, 6 How. 44, 12 L. ed. 337; Hill v. Tucker, 13 How. 466, 14 L. ed. 226; McLean v. Meek, 18 How. 16, 15 L. ed. 277; Freeman, Judgm. §§ 163, 572; McDonald v. McDonald, 96 Ky. 209.

The allowance made by the superior court of Santa Clara county, California, to appellant as widow of E. O. Smith is only effective as to property in that jurisdiction.

McGarvey v. Darnall, 134 Ill. 367, 10 L. R. A. 861; Story, Conf. L. § 522; Freeman, Judgm. §§ 163, 572; Jones & Cunningham, Probate Practice, § 5, p. 206; Stacy v. Thrasher, 6 How. 44, 12 L. ed. 337; Judy v. Kelley, 11 Ill. 211, 50 Am. Dec. 455; Rosenthal v. Renick, 44 Ill. 202; McLean v. Meek, 18 How. 16, 15 L. ed. 277.

It can have no binding effect upon our courts.

Judy v. Kelley, 11 Ill. 211, 50 Am. Dec. 455; McGarvey v. Darnall, 134 Ill. 367, 10 L. R. A. 861.

No proof of the claim was made, and the admission relied upon was only that the claim had been allowed in another state, which admission could have no greater effect than proof of such allowance in such foreign jurisdiction, hence could not be held to establish even a prima facie case for claimant.

Smith v. Goodrich, 167 Ill. 46. Jones & Cunningham, Probate Practice, § 5, p. 206.

The fact that appellees were parties to the suit in the foreign jurisdiction does not estop them.

Aspden v. Nixon, 4 How. 467, 11 L. ed. 1059; De Brimont v. Penniman, 10 Blatchf. 436.

Even if the claim of appellant be warranted under our law, it was necessary for her to first establish it against the administrator in a county court of this state before the heirs (appellees) could be called upon to pay it out of their real estate.

Winslow v. Leland, 128 Ill. 304; Cowdrey v. Hitchcock, 103 Ill. 262; Harris v. Douglas, 64 Ill. 466; Blanchard v. Williamson, 70 Ill. 647; Freeland v. Dazey, 25 Ill. 294; 2 Freeman, Judgm. 4th ed. § 564; Williams v. Gibbs, 17 How. 239, 15 L. ed. 135.

An allowance to the widow is only for the benefit of the widow of a resident.

Cowdrey v. Hitchcock, 103 Ill. 272.

This claim is not a debt of E. O. Smith, and was not in existence at the time of his death.

Fitzgerald v. Glancy, 49 Ill. 465; Walker v. Diehl, 79 Ill. 473; Lynch v. Hickey, 13 Ill. App. 139.

Magruder, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The superior court of Santa Clara county, California, allowed appellant, under the law of that state, $3,850 "as and for a family allowance out of the estate of her deceased husband, Edward O. Smith." The appellant seeks to have her said claim of $3,850 paid out of the proceeds of a sale of land in Illinois, made in a partition proceeding between the heirs and widow of the deceased. It is conceded that the claim whose payment the appellant here seeks to enforce has not been allowed in the county court of Macon county, or in any other court in Illinois. The only question in this case is whether or not the circuit court erred in refusing to allow the appellant's claim of $3,850 for a "family allowance" to be paid out of the funds realized from the sale and rental of the Illinois land. This question would appear to have been settled by two recent decisions of this court. One of said decisions is the case of McGarvey v. Darnall, 134 Ill. 367, 10 L. R. A. 861. In the latter case we held that a judgment against an administrator in one state is not competent testimony to show a right of action against either a domiciliary or ancillary administrator in another state, or to affect the assets in such other state. The second decision is the case of Smith v. Goodrich, 167 Ill. 46, which holds the same doctrine as that announced in McGarvey v. Darnall, supra. It is not necessary here to repeat the reasoning by which the conclusions announced in the cases thus referred to are supported.

It is, however, claimed by the appellant that the administration in California is the principal administration, and the administration in Illinois is merely ancillary; that personal property is governed in its distribution by the law of the domicile; and that, after domestic creditors are paid, the property should be remitted to the place of the principal administration. Here, the domicile of the deceased, Edward O. Smith, was in Santa Clara county, California. His widow was appointed administratrix in the state of his domicile, and is the principal administratrix. It is therefore claimed that so much of the moneys or funds now in the hands of the master and receiver in the partition suit should be paid over to the appellant, representing the principal administration, as may be necessary to pay the claims allowed against the estate in California, including the appellant's claim for a "family allowance." In Young v. Wittenmyre, 123 Ill. 303, we held that the administration granted in the state of a decedent's domicile at the time of his death is the principal administration, and that granted in another state is but ancillary to the other; and that when the principal administration of an estate is had in this state, and the ancillary administration in another state, it is the duty of the administrator in such other state to collect all debts due the estate there, and convert all assets within that jurisdiction into money, pay all debts established against the estate there, and after all such debts are satisfied, to pay the balance to the principal administrator in this state, so that it may be disposed of and distributed under the authority of the county court of this state. But the doctrine thus announced has reference to personality or money, and to the proceeds of the sale of personality. In order to make this doctrine applicable to the facts of the present case, it is insisted by the appellant that when the sale of the land was made in the partition proceeding, the proceeds of such sale in the hands of the master were thereby converted into and became personality, and ceased to be real estate. Upon the theory that these funds are personality, it is claimed that they should be paid over to the administratrix appointed in California, to be applied upon the claims allowed there. We cannot agree with the contention that the proceeds of the sale of the land made in the partition proceeding were by such sale converted into personality, so that they can be ordered to be distributed among foreign creditors of the estate, whose claims have not been allowed in Illinois. The real estate sold is located in Illinois. Nothing is better settled than that the law of the place where real and immovable property is situated exclusively governs in respect to the rights of the parties, and the modes of transfer and distribution. When the property is real estate, the lex rei sitæ controls. Story, Conf. L. § 424; Wunderle v. Wunderle, 144 Ill. 40, 19 L. R. A. 84; McCartney v. Osburn, 118 Ill. 403; 2 Freeman, Judgm. §§ 564, 572. Under the laws of Illinois the administrator has no interest in the land. Noe v. Moutray, 170 Ill. 169. The claims against the estate must be proved up in the county or probate court, and, if there is a deficiency of personal assets, then the administrator may apply for a sale of the realty to pay such claims. The allowance of a claim in the probate or county court is, as against the heirs, prima facie evidence of its validity.

Counsel refer to some cases in other states than Illinois where, upon a sale by an administrator to pay debts allowed in the states than Illinois where, upon a sale by an administrator to pay debts allowed in the state where ancillary administration is taken out, a surplus remaining from the proceeds of such sale after the payment of all of such debts will be remitted to the administrator in the state of the principal administration to be applied upon unpaid claims there. Such a case is that of Re Gable, 79 Iowa, 178, 9 L. R. A. 218. Whether or not the surplus arising under such a state of facts would so far be regarded as personality as that the ancillary administrator should be authorized to pay it to the principal administrator is a question which we are not called upon to decide in this case. Here the fund on hand is not the proceeds of a sale made by the administrator to pay debts, but it is the proceeds of a sale made by the master in chancery of the court for the purpose of distribution among the heirs, and not among the creditors. It follows that the proceeds of sale now under consideration are affected with the character of real estate.

The doctrine of equitable conversion is applicable, as a general thing, when land is directed by a will or other instrument to be converted into money for a particular purpose, such as the payment of debts. Where land is sold by the order of court for any purpose, the character of the property is changed only so far as may be necessary to accomplish the particular purpose. The conversion of real into personal property, or personal into real property, under a power in a will, takes place only for the purposes for which it is authorized. Where these purposes fail, or do not take effect in fact or in law, the property is considered as remaining in its former condition. Where an executor sells real estate of his testator to pay his debts under a power contained in a will, the conversion of the realty into personalty is completed to all intents and purposes only to the extent to which the purchase money is required for the particular objects for which the sale takes place; and the excess, though in the form of money, remains impressed with the character of real estate for the purpose of determining who is entitled to receive it. 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1167; Cronise v. Hardt, 47 Md. 433; 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 671. Section 31 of the Illinois partition act provides that "the proceeds of the sale shall be divided according to the interests of the parties, as directed by the court." Section 5 of the act provides that the petition shall describe the premises sought to be divided, and shall set forth the interests of all the parties interested therein, and shall pray for the division and partition of the premises according to the respective rights of the parties interested therein. Section 5 further provides that, if a division cannot be made, etc., a sale shall be made, and the proceeds divided according to the respective rights of the parties. Hence, under our statute, in case of a sale in a partition proceeding, the proceeds are to be divided among the parties interested in the land according to their respective interests. When the partition is among the heirs of a deceased ancestor, the purpose of the sale is the distribution of the proceeds among the owners of the undivided interests in the land. Such proceeds, therefore, remain impressed with the character of real estate for the purpose of distribution. It may be that in a case where the creditor of one of such heirs is seeking to reach the money derived from such sale it would be regarded as personality, but, so far as the ancestor is concerned from whom the heirs inherited the land, the proceeds of such sale cannot be regarded as the personal estate of such ancestor, and therefore cannot be paid to his administrator. Indeed, the purpose of the sale is the distribution of the proceeds among the heirs, and not the payment thereof to the administrator for distribution among the creditors. Hence we do not think that under the facts of this case the proceeds of the sale in this proceeding can be regarded as having been converted by the sale from land into money, so as to require the payment of the same to the administratrix in California. If the appellant had presented her claim to the county court of Macon county, Illinois, and had it allowed there, and then applied for a sale of the land of these appellees for the purpose of having it paid, a different question would be presented. But such question does not here arise.

It is said, however, that the heirs of the deceased, Edward O. Smith, who are the appellees here, appeared in the court in California, and opposed appellant's claim there made for a "family allowance." From this fact it is argued that the matter is res judicata as to them, and that they are estopped from contesting the claim here. It is true that the appellees did appear in the California court, and there oppose the claim for a "family allowance." But they are not on that account estopped from contesting the claim here. No judgment was entered against them in the California court. The judgment there was only against the estate of the deceased within the jurisdiction of the California court rendering the judgment. By allowing the claim, the California court settled the question that under the laws of that state appellant was entitled to the "family allowance." But here the question is whether such allowance shall be paid out of property in Illinois. The matter to be determined here is a new matter, not heretofore passed upon. The question before the circuit court of Macon county was whether the appellant, under the laws of Illinois, is entitled to such allowance. The statutes of Illinois do not provide for such a "family allowance" as is permitted by the statutes of California. Such a claim against the estate of a decedent is unknown in the courts of Illinois. Moreover, the claim for this allowance was not an existing claim at the death of the intestate. It was made to his widow, under the laws of California, after his decease. A state has the right to provide for the allowance of such a claim for the benefit of one of its own citizens, and can enforce it out of the property within its own jurisdiction; but it is not one which can be enforced in another state as to the property there. Such a provision is local in its nature and operation. It has no extraterritorial significance, but must be executed upon persons and property within the jurisdiction of the state where the law permitting it is in force. Aspden v. Nixon, 4 How. 467, 11 L. ed. 1059; De Brimont v. Penniman, 10 Blatchf. 436. What we said in McGarvey v. Darnall, 134 Ill. 367, 10 L. R. A. 861, upon this subject, is precisely applicable here. In that case the proceeding was for the partition of land in this state, and one of the defendants by cross bill set up the allowance of a claim in his favor against the estate of the deceased ancestor in the state of Iowa, the residence of the decedent at his death, and asked to have such judgment paid out of the proceeds of the sale of the land in case of a sale, but made no proof of the justness of the claim, other than the production of the judgment of allowance in Iowa. We there held that the cross bill was properly dismissed for want of proof of the claim, and that the judgment of the Iowa court was not evidence against the heirs of the estate, saying, in the course of the decision (134 Ill. 372, 10 L. R. A. 861: "Moreover, that in regard to which the Iowa courts had jurisdiction to adjudicate was the property in that state, and that only; and when they assumed to adjudicate that the demand of appellant was a just charge upon the estate of the deceased, such adjudication had reference solely to the property in that state, and was efficacious in respect to that property only."

It is also to be noted that the appellant did not pursue the remedy which she had at law. Even if her claim were warranted under our statute, it was necessary for her to first establish it against the administrator in a county court of this state, before the heirs could be called upon to pay it out of their real estate. She cannot come into a court of chancery in the first instance, as her claim has not been reduced to judgment. The law is well settled in this state that a court of equity will not ordinarily assume jurisdiction of claims against an estate until the claimant shall have exhibited his claim and had it allowed in the county court, and then, if any special reasons that may be deemed sufficient can be assigned why that court cannot afford the requisite relief, equity will assist him, but not otherwise. Harris v. Douglas, 64 Ill. 466. As was said in Smith v. Goodrich, 167 Ill. 46: "This proceeding seeks to reach the proceeds of real estate. It is, in fact, a proceeding against the land itself, without a judgment at law, and is a resort to chancery on a simple contract indebtedness. This cannot be done where the law provides a remedy." It is, however, claimed by the appellant that the appellees have admitted the correctness of her claim by the terms of the agreed statement of facts in this record, and that they are estopped by such admission from questioning the claim. The admission, as contained in the agreed statement of facts, is "that under and by virtue of the laws of California said superior court of Santa Clara county allowed the said Katheryne S. Smith out of the estate of the said deceased, as and for a family allowance, the following sum," etc. This is not an admission that the claim is right or just, or that under the laws of Illinois such an allowance can properly be made. The admission is only that under the law of California, in a case in that state where the appellees appeared and defended, it was adjudicated that appellant was entitled to the allowance. The admission is of no greater force than would be given to the presentation of a properly authenticated copy of the proceedings of the California court allowing the claim. It can have no greater effect. But the presentation of such an authenticated copy under the decisions of this court would not have made even a prima facie case for the appellant. McGarvey v. Darnall, 134 Ill. 367, 10 L. R. A. 861.

Appellees are entitled to insist that under the laws of the state there is no authority for the collection of this "family allowance" out of the real estate of the decedent in Illinois, which descended to them as heirs. To hold otherwise would be to allow the law of California, however different from our own, to govern the distribution of real estate here. This is contrary to the well-settled rules of law upon this subject.

The judgment of the Appellate Court, and the order of the Circuit Court disallowing appellant's claim, are affirmed.

Boggs, J., took no part in the decision of this case.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Indiana, ex rel. Joseph R. HARRISON, Appt.,

v.

Benjamin F. MENAUGH et al.

(.....Ind.....)

1. A statute changing the time for an election of township trustees, whereby it is to come more than four years after the previous election, does not violate Const. art. 15, § 2, which inhibits the creation of an office the tenure of which shall be longer than four years, where the statute does not in any manner profess or attempt to extend the tenure of the trustees then in office; but, if their term is extended, it will be by operation of Const. art. 15, § 3, which provides that officers may hold over until their successors have been elected and qualified.

On rehearing.

2. Bitter and intense feeling against township trustees, in the communities where they reside, cannot be considered by the courts in determining the validity of an act extending the time for the election of their successors.

NOTE.—As to the effect of the constitutional provision for the holding over of officers, see also People, Richardson, v. Henderson (Wyo.) 43 L. R. A.

22 L. R. A. 751; Lafferty v. Huffman (Ky.) 32 L. R. A. 203; and Baker City v. Murphy (Or.) 33 L. R. A. 88.

3. A suitor has no standing in court to compel the holding of an election under an earlier law because the later one is unconstitutional where the earlier one is subject to the same objection although his pleadings do not show that fact.

(Hackney, Ch. J., and Howard, J., dissent from proposition 1.)

(July 1, 1898.)

APPEAL by relator from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Whitley County in favor of defendants in a mandamus proceeding to compel the taking of the necessary steps to hold an election on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1898. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Thomas R. Marshall, William F. McNagny, and Philemon H. Clugston, for appellant:

The office of township trustee was one which, by the Constitution of 1852, the legislature had a right to create.

Under § 2, art. 15, of the Constitution the legislature has no power to extend the term of an officer beyond the period of four years, as it would have no power to abridge the term of an officer specifically declared by the Constitution.

State, Gibson, v. Friedley, 135 Ind. 119, 21 L. R. A. 634.

Although the office of township trustee is not a constitutional office but is created by the legislature, the term is limited by that constitutional restriction which forbids the creation by the legislature of any office the tenure of which shall be more than four years.

The people have never confided in the legislature the power either directly or indirectly to choose, appoint, or elect township trustees, nor is that right reserved to the legislature in the Constitution.

State, Wilson, v. Wells, 144 Ind. 231.

If by this act the legislature attempted to appoint township trustees, such attempt by the legislature, directly or indirectly, to exercise the power of appointment to a purely municipal office is an interference with the right of local self-government.

15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 994; Evansville v. State, Blend, 118 Ind. 426, 4 L. R. A. 93; State, Jameson, v. Denny, 118 Ind. 382, 4 L. R. A. 79; Hovey v. State, Carson, 119 Ind. 393.

An act of the legislature which changes the time of holding election from 1898 to 1900 and makes no provision for the short term is an appointment by the legislature.

People, Fowler, v. Bull, 46 N. Y. 57, 7 Am. Rep. 302.

This act is in direct violation of express prohibitions of the Constitution, and is therefore unconstitutional and void.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. p. 208; Page v. Allen, 58 Pa. 338, 98 Am. Dec. 272; Evansville v. State, Blend, 118 Ind. 426, 4 L. R. A. 93.

43 L. R. A.

The right to choose officers is primarily and inherently in the people. Primarily it is neither an executive nor a legislative function.

Silence on the subject takes no part of the power from the people and vests none in their representatives.

State, Jameson, v. Denny, 118 Ind. 382, 4 L. R. A. 79; Evansville v. State, Blend, 118 Ind. 426, 4 L. R. A. 93; State, Holt, v. Denny, 118 Ind. 449, 4 L. R. A. 65.

In view of the interests involved the court will disregard the suggestion of this being a struggle for party supremacy and look to the real merits of the controversy.

Fesler v. Brayton, 145 Ind. 71, 32 L. R. A. 578.

The board of election commissioners are purely ministerial officers, and if they refuse to perform ministerial duties upon application to the proper court writ of mandamus will issue to compel them.

State, Plaquemines Parish Supers. of Election, v. Livaudais, 48 La. Ann. 827; McPherson v. Blacker, 92 Mich. 377, 16 L. R. A. 475, Affirmed in 146 U. S. 3, 36 L. ed. 870; State, Morris, v. Wrightson, 56 N. J. L. 126, 22 L. R. A. 548; People, Hodges, v. McGaffey, 23 Colo. 156.

On rehearing.

In view of the bitter and intense feeling in many communities of Indiana at the continuance in office of a number of township trustees who are looked upon with suspicion by the people, and the formation of that latest and most consummate flower of the trust system, the township trustees' organization which meets in the state house to devise ways and means by which to hold office, we have felt it a solemn duty, to file a petition for rehearing in this cause, and briefly, in everyday language, to argue it. We do this in the hope that maturer consideration has changed the opinion of the majority of this court, and in the belief that a few suggestions will lead the minority to modify its final conclusion.

The liberties of the Anglo-Saxon race are not suddenly wrenched from it. It is only by subtle and small but persistent encroachments upon them that they are lost. A judge of the Supreme Court of the United States changes his mind over night, and deprives the people of a part of the power of taxation.

The majority of this court, in this case, declares in substance that the general assembly of this state has had the sovereign power delegated to it by the people of abolishing and postponing elections for township trustees. It is but a little matter, yet the fathers never dreamed of it, and it is an encroachment upon the inalienable and guaranteed rights of the people.

So apparent is the unconstitutionality of the act of 1897, postponing the election of township trustees to 1900, that if it is to be upheld it can only be done by a naked statement that it is one of the solemn acts of the legislature, and must therefore stand.

Appellant has an interest and attacks the law of 1897 only. The minority of this court says that the contention is well founded. The appellant does not attack the act of 1893, nor do the township trustees, unless inferentially in argument.

Had the township trustees attacked the act of 1893, they would have come clearly within the exception in that permitting them to attack that act would give them an unconscionable advantage by retaining benefits derived from that act.

State, Collett, v. Gorby, 122 Ind. 17; 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1090; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. p. 196; Buck v. Eureka, 109 Cal. 504, 30 L. R. A. 409; Com. v. Wright, 79 Ky. 22, 42 Am. Rep. 203; Smith v. McCarthy, 50 Pa. 359; Wagner v. Garrett, 118 Ind. 114.

Messrs. A. A. Adams, Hogate & Clark, C. M. McCale, W. W. Spencer, E. P. Ferris, and B. E. Gates for appellees.

Jordan, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was instituted by the relator to obtain a writ of mandate against appellees to compel them to take the necessary steps in order that an election might be held in Columbia township, Whitley county, Indiana, on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1898, for the purpose of electing a trustee for that township. Each of the appellees filed a separate demurrer to the complaint, which the court sustained; and, the relator refusing to amend, judgment was rendered against him for costs. Sustaining these several demurrers constitutes the errors assigned in this court.

The only questions raised and discussed by the parties to this appeal relate to the constitutional validity of an act of the legislature approved February 25, 1897 (Laws 1897, p. 64). The title of this statute, and the first section thereof, are as follows:

"An Act Providing for Changing the Time of Electing Certain Township Officers, Fixing the Time when They Shall Qualify and Assume the Duties of Their Respective Offices, Providing for Separate Ballots and Ballot Boxes, and Repealing All Laws and Parts of Laws in Conflict Therewith.

"Sec. 1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Indiana: That the time for holding the election of township trustees and assessors shall be changed from the general election on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1898, to the general election on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1900, and at the general election on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November of every fourth year thereafter. Said township trustees and assessors shall qualify as now provided by law, and enter upon the discharge of the duties of their respective offices at the expiration of ten days after such election."

Section 2 provides that the time of holding the election of justices of the peace, constables, and other officers of the township shall remain as now fixed by law.

Section 3 declares that "the election of said township officers shall be conducted under the provisions of the law governing said general elections."

The fourth section relates to the ballots and ballot boxes to be used at the election of township officers.

The fifth section repeals all laws in conflict with the act.

It is insisted by counsel for appellant that, as this act is invalid by reason of its being repugnant to the Constitution, therefore the law of 1893 (Laws 1893, p. 192; Burns's Rev. Stat. 1894, § 6290), whereby the time of holding the election for township officers was changed from April to the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1894, and every fourth year thereafter, is still in force, and consequently the election of township trustees must be held at the November election in 1898. It will be observed that the act of 1897, supra, applies only to township trustees and assessors, and changes the time of the election of these officials from the general election in November, 1898, as provided for by the act of 1893, to the general election in November, 1900, and every fourth year thereafter, and further provides that these officers shall qualify and enter upon the discharge of the duties of their respective offices at the expiration of ten days after such election. The time of electing justices of the peace, constables, and such other township officers as may be provided for by law is left unchanged, and remains as fixed by the act of 1893, supra. If the act of 1897 is a valid exercise of legislative power, no election of township trustees and assessors can be held by reason thereof until the general election in November, 1900, unless the legislature at its next session provides for one to be held at an earlier time.

Appellant's learned counsel challenge the constitutional validity of the law in controversy upon the ground that it extends the term of trustees elected in 1894 beyond the period of four years,—the time allotted by the Constitution for the tenure of an office created by the legislature; or, in other words, they virtually contend that, as § 2 of article 15 of the Constitution inhibits the general assembly from creating any office the tenure of which shall be longer than four years, by this inhibition the legislature has no power to extend the term of a township trustee beyond the period of four years, which it is contended the act of 1897, as a necessary result, does, in respect to trustees elected at the November election in 1894, and therefore it is in violation of this provision of the Constitution. Counsel assert that, as, under the provisions of the act in question, the election of trustees being postponed until November 1900, the result will be that the present incumbents will hold for two years beyond the constitutional limit. They say: "Of course, this act does not expressly appoint the present incumbents, but it does produce that result; and we contend that, in the consideration of the act, we must look to the results, and, where the results would be absolutely repugnant to the Constitution, a law cannot be upheld." It is conceded that under article 2, § 14, of the Constitution, the right to provide for or fix the time for holding township elections is reserved for the legislature; but the contention seems to be that this provision of the Constitution contemplates that elections for township officers must at least be held once in every period of four years, and therefore the legislature has no power to enact a law like the one in dispute, which operates in changing or postponing the time for electing trustees beyond the quadrennial period.

Before reviewing the cardinal question involved, we may say that, if the objections urged by appellant against the validity of the act of 1897 can be sustained, then the effect of such holding would certainly result in striking down the act of 1893, under which the relator seeks to compel appellees to hold an election in November, 1898. Unquestionably, it can be said of the latter act that it is impressed with the same infirmities which are alleged to exist against the statute of 1897. It expressly changed or postponed the time of electing trustees and other township officers from the first Monday in April, 1894, as provided by the amendatory act of 1889 (Laws 1889, p. 425), to the time of holding the general election in November, 1894, and every fourth year thereafter, and thereby, if the argument of counsel for appellant is sound, extended the holding of the trustees elected in April, 1890, three months in excess of four years. It will be seen that trustees elected at the April election, 1890, by reason of the provision of the act approved March 9, 1889 (Laws 1889, p. 344), entered upon the discharge of their duties on the first Monday in August of that year, and the time of electing their successors was fixed by the act of 1893 on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, in 1894. Thus, if the reasoning of appellant can be accepted as correct, it operated to extend their term three months, at least, over or beyond the constitutional limit of four years; and, in accordance with the insistence of counsel, for this reason the act of 1893 must be condemned for violating the Constitution in like manner as does the act of 1897, and, without further legislation, the law of 1889 would control, and the time for holding an election under the latter would not again occur until April, 1902. But this would not be the only result which would follow a decision of this court adverse to the validity of the act of 1897. The act of 1893 being unconstitutional and void under appellant's contention, consequently there was no legal authority for electing township trustees and assessors at the November election in 1894, and therefore the present incumbents would not be legally entitled to hold their offices, and could be ousted therefrom, and those whom they succeeded might be, if they desired, reinstated into the offices which they, as it might be said, without authority of law, surrendered; and no doubt numerous suits would be instituted on the part of trustees and assessors elected in 1890 against present incumbents, to obtain possession of the respective offices, together with the past emoluments thereof. Passing these features of the case, however, as of no present consequence, in view of our ultimate conclusion, they being mentioned merely to show the deplorable results which would follow an adverse decision on the validity of the act in question in the event our views on the law constrained us to so decide, we proceed to consider and determine the real question in controversy between the parties.

It becomes necessary for us to refer to and examine certain provisions of the Constitution which the parties to this appeal insist have a material bearing upon the decision of the questions presented. It must be remembered that, under § 1 of article 4 of the state Constitution, all legislative authority is lodged in the general assembly; and, as regards this authority, that body is considered supreme and sovereign, subject to no restrictions except those which the state's Constitution expressly or impliedly imposes, and the restraints of the Federal Constitution and the laws and treaties passed and made pursuant thereto. Aside from these inhibitions or restrictions, the legislature may be said to be unfettered in the exercise of the power with which it has been invested. This doctrine has been repeatedly affirmed in many of the decisions of this court. See Beauchamp v. State, 6 Blackf. 299; Beebe v. State, 6 Ind. 501, 63 Am. Dec. 391; Lafayette, M. & B. R. Co. v. Geiger, 34 Ind. 185; Mount v. State, Richy, 90 Ind. 29, 46 Am. Rep. 192; Robinson v. Schenck, 102 Ind. 307; Hovey v. State, Carson, 119 Ind. 395; Hancock v. Yaden, 121 Ind. 366, 6 L. R. A. 576; State, Smith, v. McClelland, 138 Ind. 395; Townsend v. State, 147 Ind. 624, 37 L. R. A. 294.

The sole contention of appellant, as previously stated, is that the statute in question is antagonistic to the fundamental law of the state. As against this attack upon an act of the legislative department, this court must indulge all reasonable presumption in favor of its validity; and, guided by a well-settled rule, we cannot consistently declare the statute in controversy invalid unless it is clearly, palpably, and plainly shown to be violative of the Constitution, so as to remove all reasonable doubts that may exist in the mind of the court in respect to its alleged invalidity. State, Smith, v. McClelland, 138 Ind. 395; State v. Gerhardt, 145 Ind. 439, 33 L. R. A. 313; Townsend v. State, 147 Ind. 624, 37 L. R. A. 294. Being therefore required to give the benefit of all reasonable doubts in favor of the validity of the act of the lawmaking power, it is consequently incumbent upon him who assails its validity to affirmatively and clearly establish his charge to the exclusion of all such doubts. Especially must this rule prevail in view of the fact that the legislature is invested with plenary power for all purposes of civil government. Therefore an inhibition to exercise a particular power is an exception and the burden must rest upon the party who questions the validity of a statute to show that it is forbidden. Jamieson v. Indiana Nat. Gas & Oil Co. 128 Ind. 555, 12 L. R. A. 652, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 613, and cases cited; State, Smith, v. McClelland, 138 Ind. 395; Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 105.

It was well said by Chief Justice Black, in Sharpless v. Philadelphia, 21 Pa. 147, 59 Am. Dec. 759, on page 161 of the opinion, as follows: "The Constitution has given us a list of the things which the legislature may not do. If we extend that list, we alter the instrument, we become ourselves the aggressors, and violate both the letter and the spirit of the organic law as grossly as the legislature possibly could. If we can add to the reserved rights of the people, we can take them away; if we can mend, we can mar; if we can remove the landmarks which we find established, we can obliterate them; if we can change the Constitution in any particular, there is nothing but our own will to prevent us from demolishing it entirely." It may be true, perhaps, as counsel for appellant would seem to insist, that the great power conferred upon the legislature may be, and sometimes is, abused, but the remedy for this evil lies in an appeal to the people, who, in their sovereign capacity, can correct it, and not by appeal to the judiciary. There is no reason for assuming that the mere abuse by the legislature of its power was intended to be corrected by the courts. Brown v. Buzan, 24 Ind. 194; State, Terre Haute, v. Kolsem, 130 Ind. 434, 14 L. R. A. 566. If the latter should assume to protect the people against the abuse of power upon the part of their own servants or representatives, it would be the equivalent of attempting to protect the people against their own abuse. We have repeatedly affirmed that the question whether an act of the general assembly is politic, expedient, or necessary is one of legislative discretion, which is not subject to judicial review; and we have not the liberty to declare a statute void because it is not in harmony with our opinions in respect to policy, expediency, or justice. If the people are aggrieved by the action of their representatives in the general assembly, the way to redress the wrong is open to them at the next biennial election. The question in this case with which we have to deal is not whether the power to change or repeal a statute relative to the time of the holding of township elections has been conferred upon the legislature, but whether such power has been restricted or withheld by the organic law of the state. Section 14 of article 2 of the Constitution provides that "all general elections shall be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November; but township elections may be held at such time as may be provided by law," etc. Section 3 of article 6 provides that "such other county and township officers as may be necessary shall be elected or appointed in such manner as may be prescribed by law." (Our italics.) Section 2 of article 15 reads as follows: "When the duration of any office is not provided for by this Constitution, it may be declared by law. . . . But the general assembly shall not create any office the tenure of which shall be longer than four years." The express restriction imposed by this last section is that the general assembly shall not create any office the prescribed term of which is longer than four years. Section 3 of the same article provides 43 L. R. A.

vides that "whenever it is provided in this Constitution, or in any law which may be hereafter passed, that any officer, other than a member of the general assembly, shall hold his office for any given term, the same shall be construed to mean that such officer shall hold his office for such term and until his successor shall have been elected and qualified." Tested by any or all of these provisions, and it is evident, we think, that no express or implied antagonism can be held to exist between any of them and the statute in dispute. We are of the opinion that the Constitution will be searched in vain to discover any restriction against the enactment of a statute of the character or purport of the one here involved. That the creation of the office of township trustee, under our Constitution, is a matter which is left wholly with the legislature, is undisputed. It may or may not, in the exercise of its discretion, create such an office; but, if it chooses to do so, the tenure prescribed cannot be in excess of four years. Within this limit, the legislature, in its discretion, may enlarge, abridge, or otherwise change the term of the office, or abolish it entirely, and repeal all laws pertaining thereto. State, Elwing, v. Bell, 116 Ind. 1; State, Reese, v. Bogard, 128 Ind. 480.

The electors of this state have no unalterable right to elect township trustees at the polls, for, as we have seen, the legislature, under the Constitution, has the power to provide that they may be chosen by election or appointment. The Constitution in no uncertain terms declares that "township elections may be held at such time as may be prescribed by law." (Our italics.) The power to fix the time at which the people may elect township officers is by this provision of the Constitution left entirely with the legislative department. This power is a continuing one, and surely it cannot be said to be exhausted by being once exercised. The legislature may from time to time direct when the election shall take place. That the general assembly may, unless restricted by the Constitution, amend, change, or repeal the acts of its predecessors, is a right which cannot be successfully questioned. Its power to make a reasonable change in the time of holding township elections from that fixed by a previous law is certainly a legitimate exercise of the power with which it is invested. Wall v. State, 23 Ind. 150; State, Clark, v. Haworth, 122 Ind. 462, 7 L. R. A. 240; Bloomer v. Stolley, 5 McLean, 158; Jordan v. Bailey, 37 Minn. 174. In State, Clark, v. Haworth, 122 Ind. 462, 7 L. R. A. 240, it is said: "To deny the power to change is to affirm that progress is impossible, and that we must move forever 'in the dim footsteps of antiquity.' But the legislative power moves in a constant stream, and is not exhausted by its exercise in any number of instances, however great." In fact, the power of the legislature to fix or change the time of electing township trustees has always been recognized, and not, to our knowledge, until now has it ever been called in question. Formerly such elections were held in April, then changed to October, then back again to April, and subsequently, by the act of 1893, to November. The power of right of the legislature to change the time of electing trustees or other township officers from the time fixed by a former law being recognized, as it must be, as a continuing and existing right or power, the mere fact that the legislature, in the exercise thereof, may deprive the electors for a reasonable time of electing successors to present incumbents, will not alone operate to render the act providing for the change unconstitutional, and thereby invalid.

Counsel for appellant seem especially to base their contention on § 2 of article 15 of the Constitution, which, as we have seen, prohibits the legislature from creating any office the tenure of which shall be longer than four years, and their insistence is that this restriction will prevent the act in question from being upheld. It is manifest, we think, that this contention is wholly untenable. An examination of the act will readily disclose that it does not profess to create the office of township trustee, nor to extend the term thereof beyond the constitutional limit. It proceeds upon the theory that the office has been previously created, and it merely declares as the legislative will that the time of holding an election for township trustees, etc., shall be changed from the general election on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1898, to the general election on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1900, and on such day "of every fourth year thereafter." The trustees and assessors elected thereunder are thereby authorized to qualify as provided by existing laws, and enter upon the discharge of their official duties at the expiration of ten days after such election. These provisions of the law do not appear to us to be impressed with any constitutional infirmities. The change or postponing of the time of electing these officers from the general election in 1898 to the next general election cannot be said to be so unreasonable as to render the law open to judicial condemnation on that ground; especially in view of the fact that the members of the general assembly to be elected at the coming election in November can change the time of the election to an earlier date. The act does not in any manner profess nor attempt to extend the tenure of the trustees elected in 1894, nor of those to be elected thereunder in 1900, beyond the constitutional limit of four years. If it provided that the election should be held in 1900 and every fifth or sixth year thereafter, quite a different question would be presented. The statute in question makes no reference to present incumbents. It neither pretends nor attempts to abridge or enlarge their tenure. In no sense, under its terms or provisions, can it be said to be retrospective, but is wholly prospective, and in no manner does it take into consideration the question as to the holding of any of the present incumbents of the office; and the question as to whether they will hold over under the provisions of § 3 of article 15 of the Constitution, or some other provision of 43 L. R. A.

the law, until their successors are elected and qualified, remains, under this act, wholly intact. Consequently, if incumbent trustees are permitted to hold beyond four years, it cannot, in legal contemplation be attributed to the provisions of the act in controversy, but will be due to the force and effect of the provision of the Constitution last mentioned, which, as we have seen, provides that the prescribed tenure of any office under the Constitution, or any law, other than a member of the general assembly, "shall be construed to mean that such officer shall hold his office for such term and until his successor shall have been elected and qualified." (Our italics.) Certainly, what results from the force and operation of the Constitution itself cannot be said to be unconstitutional. There is some question, it is true, as to whether at common law an officer was entitled to hold beyond his prescribed term. But the general rule of the common law seems to be that, when the term of an office to which one is elected or appointed expires, the power of the incumbent to perform the duties thereof is terminated. Mechem, Pub. Off. § 396, and authorities were cited.

It is elementary that the law abhors vacancies in public offices, and great precaution is usually taken to guard against their occurrence; and courts of this country have not adhered to a strict rule, and in the absence of some express or implied legal restriction, the officer is held to be entitled to hold his office until he is superseded by the election and qualification of another person. State, Carson, v. Harrison, 113 Ind. 434, and authorities there cited; Mechem, Pub. Off. § 397; Throop, Pub. Off. § 308. It was no doubt the design of the molders of our fundamental law, by incorporating therein a provision that public officials should hold for their prescribed constitutional or statutory terms, as the case might be, and until their successors are elected and qualified, to guard against the possibility of the office becoming vacant, and the powers and duties of the incumbent being terminated, before some one had been duly selected and qualified, as provided by law, to succeed him. See Fesler v. Brayton, 145 Ind. 71, 77, 32 L. R. A. 578. In consideration of this constitutional provision, the electors of this state, when, by their ballots, they designate a person to fill a public office the tenure of which is prescribed either by the Constitution or some statute, must be presumed to understand and know that the contingent holding of the officer until his successor is elected and qualified is as much a part of the term for which he is elected as is that which is expressly prescribed and fixed. Kimberlin v. State, Tow, 130 Ind. 120, 14 L. R. A. 858; State, Reese, v. Bogard, 128 Ind. 480. Therefore the contention of appellant that the act in question operates to continue the present incumbents in office until 1900, in opposition to the will of the people, is of no merit and without force. Mitchell, Ch. J., speaking for the court, in State, Carson, v. Harrison, 113 Ind. 434, in respect to this provision of our Constitution (on page 442 of the opinion, 113 Ind.), said: "It is certain, therefore, that all offices to which the above constitutional provision applies are held by the same title, or by as high and lawful tenure, after the prescribed term, until the title of the duly elected and qualified successor attaches, as before and during such term." Continuing (on page 447 of the opinion, 113 Ind.), he said: "After the expiration of the term fixed by the general assembly, the tenure of the officer is not under or by legislative approbation or authority, but by the continuing and superior authority and approbation of the Constitution." See also upon this point, Com., Broom, v. Hanley, 9 Pa. 513.

Reliance is placed on the case of State, Wilson, v. Wells, 144 Ind. 231, and it is cited by appellant to sustain the invalidity which he imputes to the statute in dispute. The decision in that case, however, in view of the question there involved, cannot be invoked as an authority in support of his insistence, but some of the reasoning in the opinion in that case may be said to "fight" on the side of the appellees in this appeal. It is there said: "Certainly, a change in the date of an election cannot affect the term of the office to be filled. If the office becomes vacant by the change of the date of filling it, the Constitution makes ample provision therefor by continuing the old incumbent in office until his successor is elected and qualified." Of course, the word "vacant," as employed by the writer of the opinion in that case, was used in the sense or meaning of the expiration of the prescribed term of the office. The question involved in the Wells Case was, to an extent at least, of like character to the one in controversy in Griebel v. State, Niezer, 111 Ind. 369. It was further said in the Wells Case that there could be no election of township trustees except at the time provided by the act of 1893. The decision in that case rests upon the validity of the act of 1893, and its effect was to affirm, impliedly at least, the validity of that statute. It is certain that a decision by this court adverse to the validity of the law of 1897 would result in uprooting the decision in the Wells Case, and would, as heretofore said, pave the way to ousting present incumbents, and to the reinstatement of the trustees and assessors elected at the April election in 1890.

Counsel for appellant have referred us to People, Fowler, v. Bull, 46 N. Y. 57, 7 Am. Rep. 302. The decision in that case is in no manner helpful to the appellant's side of the issue in the case at bar, for the question there raised was in respect to the power of the legislature, under the Constitution of the state of New York, at the expiration of the term of the incumbent of an elective office, to extend, by an express enactment, his term for three years beyond that for which he had been elected. It was therein held that it was not competent, under the Constitution of that state, for the legislature to put or continue a person in office in that manner, without an election by the people. In that case, Folger, J., speaking for the court, in the course of the opinion, on page 68, said: "The Constitution empowers the legislature, in the clause first above quoted, to direct the times and manner of the election. . . . It is a continuing power. And the legislature may from time to time, as it sees occasion, direct when and how the election shall take place." While it is true that the case of People, Fowler, v. Bull, 46 N. Y. 57, 7 Am. Rep. 302, does in fact deny that the legislature, under the then-existing Constitution of New York, had the power, by express enactment, to lengthen the tenure of the incumbent of the office, still it also affirms the constitutional right of that body to fix and change, at its discretion, the time when the charter election shall be held; and, to this extent at least, the case is an authority in support of the right of the legislature, under our Constitution, to change the time of holding township elections.

A defect in the argument of appellant, to an extent at least, is that he assumes that the act of 1897 extends the term of the office of township trustees, and his assault on the validity of the law proceeds upon the ground of his assumption. The legislature of 1869 changed the time of the annual election of county and township officers, and provided for their biennial election, declaring in the act that the first election thereunder should be held on the second Tuesday in October, 1870, and on that day biennially thereafter. Laws 1869, p. 57. It is a fact well known that many of the county officers throughout the state, whose successors, in the absence of the change in the time of holding the election, would have been elected at the annual October election in 1869, held over, under the provision of the Constitution, until their successors were elected, in October, 1870, and qualified, thereby holding and discharging the duties of their respective offices for a year and over beyond the tenure prescribed by the Constitution. And yet, we have no recollection that the validity of that act of the legislature was ever called in question on the ground that it operated to extend the term of the incumbents holding over beyond the time fixed by the Constitution; and the statute stood unchallenged, we believe, until superseded by the law of 1881. Rev. Stat. 1881, § 4678 (Rev. Stat. 1894, § 6190). If the insistence of appellant in respect to the act of 1897 is correct, then it necessarily would follow that the legislature, in 1869, was powerless to change from an annual to a biennial election, and the people would have either been compelled to change the Constitution, or submit forever to the extra expense of holding annual elections. For a like reason, the legislature would have been fettered and devoid of power to change township elections from April to November, as it did in the act of 1893. The mere mention of a proposition denying the right or power of the legislative department in this respect ought to suffice to expose the weakness thereof.

If it were necessary to look beyond the decisions of this court for support of the ultimate conclusion reached in this appeal, the case of State, Barton, v. McCracken, 51 Ohio St. 123, is directly in point. The Constitution of Ohio provides for the election of a clerk of the court of common pleas, who, as therein declared, shall hold his office for the term of three years, and until his successor is elected and qualified. The legislature of that state, in March, 1893, by an act, provided that the clerk of the court of common pleas should be elected triennially, and hold his office for three years, his term being fixed by the act to begin on the first Monday in August after his election. The contention in that case was that the act was invalid because it operated to extend the term of incumbents beyond the time fixed by the Constitution. This the court denied, and sustained the validity of the law, saying, in the course of its opinion, on page 127, 51 Ohio St.: "The assumption, we think, is not warranted. The act in question does not purport to extend the term of the incumbent, nor does it in effect do that. The result of this legislation upon the incumbent depends wholly on the Constitution. If, by virtue of § 16 of article 4, a vacancy is created, then the term of the incumbent is not extended; if under that section no vacancy ensues, it is the force and effect of the Constitution, and not of the statute, which extends the term." The decision of the supreme court of Missouri in State, Atty. Gen., v. McGovney, 92 Mo. 428, is also in point, to sustain the right of the legislature to make changes in the times of electing public officers.

Other minor objections are made against the validity of the act, among which is that the subject-matter thereof is not sufficiently expressed in the title. There is no merit in this contention, for it is evident that, under the many decisions of this court, the title of the act is sufficient. The law does not, as insisted, attempt to fix the time of electing justices of the peace, constables, and other officers of the township; but, as previously said, it leaves the time fixed for the election of such officers unchanged.

From what we have said, and by force of the authorities cited, the conclusion must necessarily follow that, if the incumbent trustees hold and discharge the duties of their offices beyond the term of four years by reason of their successors not being elected and qualified, they will be permitted to do so under the express warrant of the Constitution, and not by the act of 1897. It follows that the law in question is, and we so hold, a valid exercise of legislative power; and its validity is therefore sustained, and there can be no election of township trustees and assessors thereunder until the time therein fixed and provided.

The judgment is affirmed, at the cost of the relator.

Haekney, Ch. J., dissenting:

I cannot concur in the conclusion of the majority of the court. I am fully convinced that the general assembly, by the act of 1897, exercised a right expressly denied to it by the Constitution. The denial of authority is in these words: "The general assembly shall not create any office the term of which shall be longer than four years." Const. art. 15, § 2. This clause has frequently and properly been held to apply to the office, and not to the officer. Baker v. Kirk, 33 Ind. 517; Parmater v. State, Drake, 102 Ind. 90; State, Staff, v. Barlow, 103 Ind. 563; Jones v. State, Snodgrass, 112 Ind. 193; State, Carson, v. Harrison, 113 Ind. 434; Bell v. State, Summers, 129 Ind. 1. In considering it, to avoid confusion, we must look to it as affecting the office, and not as giving or denying any right to the officer. To interpret this clause of the Constitution, we are required to ascertain the intent of the people in adopting it,—the thought which they expressed. Indianapolis Brewing Co. v. Claypool, 149 Ind. 193. "If the general purpose of the instrument is ascertained, the language of its provisions must be construed with reference to that purpose, and so as to subserve it." Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 16 Pet. 612, 10 L. ed. 1088; State, Perry, v. Arrington, 18 Nev. 412; 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 921. "No court of justice can be authorized so to construe any clause of the Constitution as to defeat its obvious ends when another construction, equally accordant with the words and sense thereof, will enforce and protect them." Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 16 Pet. 612, 10 L. ed. 1088.

What, then, were the objects of the tenure clause? It is most certainly a limitation upon the power of the general assembly. It relates to office. It has reference to time, and is definite in the period prescribed: This clause, in similar form, has found its way into the Constitution of several of the states, notably California, Florida, Kansas, Nevada, Oregon, and Texas. Its purpose could not have been an idle one. The framers were engaged in a more serious undertaking than in mere empty phrase-making. They were certainly providing a bar against the loss of some right to the people from the encroachment of the legislative department of the government. That right, considered with reference to the period of time named, could only have meant the right to choose their public servants at least once in four years. There was wisdom in this purpose, for it would prevent the general assembly from building up a favored class of office holders without responsibility to the people, and whose tenure would depend alone upon the perpetuity of the party controlling the assembly. This purpose would cut off that train of evils which would follow from an official class using its offices in the interest of party, and for its own perpetuity. The clause, interpreted in the light of this purpose, is wise and effective, and no other provision supplies its place. Rejecting this purpose as one of the objects of the clause, and the general assembly is left free to visit upon the people all such evils. Tenure, then, as applied to the office, must mean the period bounded by the appointments or elections to the office. In this meaning it must be assumed, it was designed that the general assembly should not violate it directly or indirectly. That, after creating the office and providing for elections once in four years (the constitutional limit), the act of 1897, postponing an election for two years, violated the Constitution, seems too plain for serious difference of opinion. Can it be doubted for a moment that an act fixing the period between elections to an office of legislative creation at six years would be unconstitutional. That it would was held in the recent case of Indianapolis Brewing Co. v. Claypool, 149 Ind. 193. If such an act would fail, why, after creating the office and providing the full tenure, may such tenure be enlarged by a second act? Nor is there sound reason in the conclusion that, in computing the time, that which has already been occupied by legislative sanction should not be added to the new time. What difference in the result can be said to exist where six years' time has been provided by one act, and where four years has been provided by one act, and another increase such time two years? Certainly, no difference, unless the first should be void as to the whole time, and the last only as to the two-years' added time. Looking to the objects to be attained by the tenure clause, can we say that its purpose is satisfied when the general assembly provides a tenure of four years, places an occupant in the office, and then takes away the means of electing a new occupant at the close of the period of that tenure? By postponing the exercise of that privilege for two years beyond the four-years' limit, the time bounded by the periods of electing is enlarged to six years as certainly as if the act had declared originally that elections to the office shall occur but once in six years. It is not creditable to the wisdom of the framers of the Constitution to say that they intended to limit the tenure period to four years, as a limit upon the legislative authority, and, at the same time, intended that the general assembly might, by intentional jugglery or innocent oversight or misconstruction, so evade the provision as to render it meaningless. Nor can it be said with reason that the framers intended by one provision to create a limitation, and by another to strike it down. If one or more of the objects of the clause are defeated by the legislation, our duty is plain, and we must declare the object paramount to the will of the general assembly. It is true that the act does not expressly provide that the tenure is enlarged; but it enlarges it indirectly as certainly as if it directly provided that the tenure should be enlarged. As to the office of trustee,—indeed, as to most offices,—the general assembly has not said “the tenure shall be” so long, or “the term shall be” so long; but it has usually been provided that at a given period an election to the office shall be held, and elections thereto shall be held thereafter once in two or four years. The idea thus adopted is that tenure and periods bounded by elections are one and the same. Keeping in mind the conclusions that the tenure clause relates to the office and to the periods within which the people reserved the right to elect to such offices as the general assembly might create, it seems, inevitably, that this act has done indirectly that which could not have been done directly. Nor do we regard the fact that the effect is not permanent as controlling. If the enlargement of the tenure for two or more periods or for all periods is a violation of the Constitution, it follows that the enlargement of one period is likewise a violation.

Considering the question with reference to those provisions of the Constitution conferring upon the general assembly the power to create the office of trustee, and to provide the times of election (art. 6, § 3; art. 2, § 14), we find no support for the proposition that the tenure clause may be disregarded. These various constitutional provisions, construed as other laws or instruments, should be made to stand together, as constituting a consistent whole, if possible. So construing them, it must be held that, while the general assembly may create the office and prescribe and change the times of electing thereto, this must be done within the limits of the expressed inhibition of the Constitution. It must be done so as to not enlarge the tenure limit; so as not to deprive the people of the privilege of electing to an office of this character at least once in four years. Nor will it do to say that, in exercising the right to change the time of electing, it may become necessary or indispensable to extend the tenure. Since terms may be made of different duration, within the four-years' limit, and since laws may be enacted to take effect in the future, there is no objection to a provision for a short tenure to fill the interregnum between the expiration of the discarded term and the taking effect of the new.

Considering the questions before us with reference to the hold-over clause of the Constitution, I find no authority for the violation of the tenure clause. It is that “when- ever it is provided in this Constitution, or in any law which may be hereafter passed, that any officer, other than a member of the general assembly, shall hold his office for any given term, the same shall be construed to mean that such officer shall hold his office for such term and until his successor shall have been elected and qualified.” Const. art. 15, § 3. It is contended with much learning and ability that this provision of the Constitution saves the legislation under consideration from the inhibition of the tenure clause. This provision, unlike that of the tenure clause, has reference to the officer and his right to hold the office for the term prescribed by law, and until a successor is elected and qualified. It has no reference whatever to the periods between which the people may deny the right to elect their officers. One provision has reference to the office, and not to the officer; and the other has reference to the officer, and not to the tenure of the office. It is true, as held in some of the cases, that when one is elected to an office, except that of legislator, he is elected for the prescribed term, and until a successor is elected and qualified, although that may result in a holding of more than four years; but that is neither excuse nor authority for holding that the general assembly may enlarge the four-years' tenure,—may deny the people the right of choice for more than four years; the hold-over clause was designed to save the public service from embarrassment by the failure of the people to elect, or the failure of their choice, from death or other causes, to qualify and assume the duties of the service. It was not designed as authority, and is not even a reasonable pretext, for an act directly or indirectly enlarging the tenure beyond the limit of four years. Upon this construction of the hold-over clause, we have no question before us involving that provision, since we have no question of a vacancy and no question of rival claimants to the office, and we decide nothing as to any right to hold over. The exact question here is as to whether the general assembly may by an act, directly or indirectly, enlarge the tenure of an office of its own creation beyond the period of four years. If it may do so for two years, it may do so for four years or ten years, and until some succeeding session of that body concludes to accord to the people the right guaranteed by the tenure clause to elect their officers. That there are dangers which may result from the denial to the people of the opportunity, within reasonable periods, to elect public officers, is plainly seen. That such possible dangers gave rise to the tenure clause of the Constitution I have no doubt. And that the construction of that clause which I maintain is a guaranty against such dangers supplies the strongest reasons in support of that construction.

The case of State, Barton, v. McCracken, 51 Ohio St. 123, relied upon by appellees, involved an act providing for the beginning of an official term after the expiration of the term of the incumbent, the right of the incumbent, under a constitutional hold-over provision, to continue in the office until the beginning of the newly-fixed term, and the claims of one elected to the office under the new law to take the office before the beginning of the term for which he was elected, namely, upon the expiration of the old term. As we have already shown, none of these questions are before us. The act there in question did not postpone or deny the right of the people to elect, and there was no question made as to the enlargement of the tenure of the office in question beyond constitutional limit. The questions there decided might be pertinent if we were called upon to decide as to the right of the incumbents of the office of trustee to hold over until a successor should be elected and qualified, but they are not pertinent to the questions before us. The case of Christy v. Sacramento County Supers, 39 Cal. 3, also cited and relied upon by the appellees, involved a law postponing for two years the election of certain commissioners, the prescribed tenure of whose office was two years. Notwithstanding repeal of the law for an election at the end of the two-years' term, votes were cast for successors to the incumbents. The court held that it was within the power of the general assembly to postpone the election, since the power was given to fix the times of election, but that such power must be exercised with reference to the four-years' tenure clause of the Constitution, which is like our own. It will be seen, therefore, that the case did not involve the tenure clause further than the repeated expressions of the court that such postponement must not exceed the limit of such clause. By the act there in question the people were not denied the right to elect commissioners within the four years' limit, but, observing the limit, the tenure was extended to but four years. The reasoning of the court is in harmony with our conclusion. The case of Jordan v. Bailey, 37 Minn. 174, is another case cited by the appellees as supporting their contention. That case involved a law postponing the time of electing for two years, the term having been four years, and the constitutional tenure limit having been seven years. The act did not reach the constitutional limit by one year, and the people were not deprived of the right to elect within the period reserved by the Constitution. Anything said in these cases or others as to extending the terms of incumbents, as to vacancies, and as to holding over, we do not regard as bearing upon the question before us; and upon the question here for decision the cases are clearly distinguishable from this. I realize the full meaning of the rule that the judge should be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the Constitution has been violated before he should hold that the general assembly has exceeded its authority. However, it is not questioned that I have correctly interpreted the tenure clause; and I see no reasonable ground for contention that this clause is not involved before us. The inquiry must be, then, Has the act violated it? To my mind there is but one answer. I am not to be deterred from giving this answer because the consequences may possibly be to continue in office the incumbents even beyond the time intended by the act. If the act is invalid, its authors must be held to account for the consequences. The Constitution is the paramount law, and by it the acts of every department of the government must be tested. If I permitted this legislation to stand against the inhibition of the Constitution, I should feel that I had violated that sacred law. I conclude, therefore, that the act of 1897 violates the tenure clause of the Constitution, and is void.

The invalidity of that act, however, does not fully support the appellant's theory that the election should be held in November, 1898, since that theory implies the validity of the act of 1893 (Laws 1893, p. 192), which postponed the elections for trustee from April, 1894, to November, 1894, in exactly the same manner that the act of 1897 postponed the election from November, 1898, to November, 1900. Counsel for the appellees insist that the objections urged by the appellant to the act of 1897 obtain as against the act of 1893, and with this insistence we all concur. The violations of the Constitution are of the same character, and differ only in degree; one being a postponement of two years, and the other of seven months, beyond the constitutional period for the tenure of said office. The theory of the petition affirmed the invalidity of the act of 1897 and the validity of the act of 1893 by seeking to require an election under it. We are therefore unable to avoid the consequences of this theory. Counsel for the appellant contend that, the people having elected under the act of 1893, the appellees are estopped to deny its validity, and assert that this court so held with reference to the apportionment law in Fesler v. Brayton, 145 Ind. 71, 32 L. R. A. 578. In this position, I respectfully submit, counsel are in error. It is the general rule that the constitutionality of an act may be questioned at any time by anyone having an interest, excepting that, where, to do so, he would gain an unconscionable advantage from retaining benefits derived from such acts, and escape the liabilities therefor. An unconstitutional law is as no law; it is as waste paper. The case of Fesler v. Brayton, 145 Ind. 71, 32 L. R. A. 578, was not decided upon the ground of estoppel, but was decided upon an exception to the general rule, which was that a law could not be declared in violation of the Constitution when to do so would defeat the Constitution itself, in abrogating the form of government declared by the Constitution.

These conclusions should result in affirming the judgment of the circuit court. Whether the incumbents of the office shall hold until the regular election period in April, 1902, whether they, having been elected under an invalid law, hold de facto, as against appointees, or whether the general assembly may provide for the exigency which these invalid laws have created, it is not for us to suggest.

Howard, J., concurs in the foregoing.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, the following response was handed down on July 1, 1898:

Per Curiam:

Counsel for appellant, in their brief filed in support of the petition for a rehearing, in the main insist that it be granted upon the grounds urged at the former hearing of this cause. Counsel preface their argument by asserting that: "In view of the bitter and intense feeling in many communities of Indiana at the continuance in office of a number of township trustees who are looked upon with suspicion by the people," etc., they are impressed with the "solemn duty" to file the petition for rehearing, and "in every-day language to argue it, . . . in the hope that mature consideration has changed the opinion of the majority of this court, and in the belief that a few suggestions will lead the minority to modify their final conclusion." Counsel recognize the fact that the minority opinion of Judges Hackney and Howard expressly declares that the final conclusion therein reached must result in affirming the judgment of the lower court which denied the right of the relator to demand that an election for township trustees be held at the November election of the present year. This court, under the two opinions in question, may properly be said to have been unanimous in holding that the judgment below must be affirmed for the reason that there was no existing law which authorized the election of township trustees at the November election of 1898. While it is true that the minority opinion in this cause does not agree with the premises from which the final conclusions of the majority of the court were deduced, nevertheless it is evident that it is nothing more nor less than a concurrence in the court's final conclusion that the judgment must be affirmed, and that there could be no election of trustees at the ensuing November election. The material difference or distinction between the two opinions consists in the reasoning by which the ultimate conclusion in each is reached. That of the majority, as will be seen, is arrived at by affirming the constitutional validity of the act of 1897; while that of the minority is reached by denying the constitutional validity of the act of 1897, and, for like reasons, that of the act of 1893.

As to the assertion of counsel that such a "bitter and intense feeling" exists in many communities against the present township trustees, and which, as counsel for appellant seem to intimate, has, in part at least, actuated them to discharge the "solemn duty" by applying for a rehearing in this appeal, we may say that, in regard to this feeling upon the part of these communities, this court has no concern, and in no wise is it responsible for its existence.

We are informed by counsel's brief of the fact, as they therein assert, that some members of the bar, not of counsel, however, in this case, "for some occult reason" are imbued with the desire to have this cause tried and determined in the "forum of public opinion," and that these particular attorneys declare with "charming frankness" that the majority opinion in this case "is not an opinion, but an argument." If the majority opinion can be said to be impressed with this infirmity, the responsibility therefor should be charged to the writer thereof, and not to the court, for the latter is only responsible for the final result reached in the case. We may also say, in passing, that this tribunal, in the determination of questions involved in causes pending therein, cannot be influenced by any "bitter and intense feeling" that may exist in some communities relative to the merits of such question. Neither is the judgment of this court in appeals thereto to be molded or controlled in any manner by means or methods which can be more properly, and with better effect, employed at a "town meeting" or a political caucus, than in a court constituted for the administration of law and justice. Concluding, we may say that we have again given the questions involved in this cause a careful consideration, and are fully satisfied that the conclusion reached at the former hearing is correct, and in full harmony with well-settled principles of law. Considering the principal question involved in this appeal from the final conclusion of either the majority or minority opinion of this court, and it must necessarily follow as, and is, the unanimous opinion of this court, that the petition for a rehearing ought to be denied. It may also be said that appellant's learned counsel, in their criticisms upon the minority opinion, to the effect that the validity of the act of 1893 could not become involved under the complaint of the relator, and that the minority in so holding traveled outside of the record, are certainly mistaken. It is evident that the complaint of the relator is founded upon his theory that the act of 1893 is a valid exercise of legislative power. If the objections which his counsel urge against the validity of the act of 1897 can be maintained, they will certainly apply with equal force, and for like reasons, in striking down the act of 1893; and he could therefore have no standing in court to demand the relief which he does under his complaint. That this result would follow, his counsel, in their argument, from the position which they assume, certainly make evident.

The petition for a rehearing is overruled, at the costs of the relator.

Hackney, Ch. J., concurring:

The appellant's petition, as addressed to the minority opinion, rests, we respectfully submit, upon false premises, i. e., that the validity of the law of 1893 was not in issue, that the appellees were estopped to assert its invalidity, and that the case of State, Wilson, v. Wells, 144 Ind. 231, holds the act of 1893 to be constitutional. As in Denney v. State, Basler, 144 Ind. 503, 31 L. R. A. 726, the petition sought the relief prayed upon the earlier act, and denied the validity of the later act. The respondents—properly, we have no doubt—contended that the entire relief prayed could not be granted, because of the invalidity of the earlier act. It was there held that both acts were in question, the relief demanded affirming one act and denying the other. It would be remarkable if one seeking relief under a law could preclude his adversary from denying the constitutional validity of that law. It would be no less remarkable to hold that the question must be specially pleaded, and could not arise upon demurrer. In considering the question of estoppel again argued, it must be borne in mind that the person to be estopped, according to the appellant, is not in court. He is the trustee in office, who, in this case, is not a party denying or affirming the right of the appellant to require an election this fall. The issue in this case, as we affirmed originally, is not as to the right of a trustee; it is as to the right of the people to elect a trustee. It was the loss of this distinction by the majority of the court, as the minority conceived, that made the hold-over clause appear to have application to the case. In the case of State, Wilson, v. Wells, 144 Ind. 231, the constitutional validity of the act of 1893 was neither mooted nor decided, and, as well said by appellant's counsel, constitutional questions are never passed upon unless necessary to a decision of the case. The constitutionality of laws is assumed where not denied. The minority adhere to their original opinion.

Howard, J., concurs in this opinion.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, SEVENTH CIRCUIT.

John B. GROMMES et al., Appts.,
v.

William K. SULLIVAN, Receiver of the American Building, Loan, & Investment Company.

(53 U. S. App. 859, 81 Fed. Rep. 45, 26 C. C. A. 320.)

1. The right of a building, loan, and investment society to execute negotiable paper is implied in the power to incur debts for various purposes, and to sell and mortgage property.

2. The acceptance of a negotiable order by a building, loan, and investment society which has power to execute negotiable paper under some circumstances is binding on the corporation in favor of a bona fide holder, although nothing was due to the drawer of the order when it was accepted.

(June 17, 1897.)

NOTE—Power of building association to issue negotiable paper.

In some states where the statute authorizing the incorporation of building associations gives them powers of corporations in general, they have the same power as other corporations to issue negotiable paper. Under the English statutes, authorizing societies to make rules, where a rule provides for borrowing money and issuing notes for the same, negotiable paper issued under it and within the limit prescribed thereby is valid. A building association, like any other corporation, may indorse checks received by it in its business. But where the issue of negotiable paper exceeds the limit provided for in the rules under the English statutes, or where the rules give no power, or where, in this country, over drafts, notes, bonds, and mortgages, are issued by a building association in the absence of a statute, such paper is not binding upon the 45 L. R. A.

association for want of power. This note is not intended to include cases on the question of the right of an association to receive deposits and issue certificates therefor, or the general power to borrow money.

The case of GROMMES v. SULLIVAN, which was the case of the acceptance of a negotiable order, holds that a building association authorized by express provision by statute to purchase land in which it has any interest, and to sell, convey, or mortgage the same at pleasure, has the power to borrow money implied in the power to mortgage, and has the power to negotiate notes taken for real estate sold, and has the power to incur debt and to execute the customary evidences of indebtedness.

This case reverses the decree in Towle v. American Bldg. Loan & Invest. Co. 78 Fed. Rep. 688.

A building association formed "for the accumu-

A PPEAL by interveners from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois dismissing their petition filed in an action by Marcus M. Towle against the American Building, Loan, & Investment Society for the purpose of obtaining payment of claims which plaintiffs had against said society. Reversed.

Before Woods, Jenkins, and Showalter, Circuit Judges.

Statement by Woods, Circuit Judge:

This appeal is from a decree dismissing the intervening petition of the appellants, John B. Grommes and Michael Ullrich, in the case of Marcus M. Towle v. The American Building, Loan, & Investment Society, wherein William K. Sullivan had been appointed receiver of the assets of the society. The case was submitted and heard upon the petition, answer, and a stipulation of the parties. The substance of the petition is that George F. Montgomery, being indebted to the appellants in the sum of $1,608.47, on October 5, 1893, executed to them the following accepted draft:

$1,608.47—100 Chicago, Oct. 4, 1893.

Sixty days after date pay to the order of Grommes & Ullrich one thousand six hundred eight and 47—100 dollars, value received, and charge to account of George F. Montgomery.

To the American Building & Loan Society, Owings Building.

The acceptance written upon the face of the draft being as follows:

10—5—'95. Accepted. Am. B., L. & I. Soc'y, F. B. Modica, V. P.

It is alleged that prior to the delivery of the acceptance the appellants had from time to time taken from Montgomery "various and sundry other accepted drafts," drawn upon, and which at their maturity had been issue such paper. It was contended that it was subject to the conditions of the association, but it was held otherwise.

The power to indorse a check, which the secretary of the loan association, who is its general official agent, has authority to collect, is implied in the power given him to collect securities and pay the money for them to the treasurer. Gate City Bldg. & L. Asso. v. National Bank of Commerce, 126 Mo. 82, 27 L. R. A. 401.

In this case under the by-laws the secretary was made the general official agent of the association, the custodian of its securities, and to him was intrusted the duty of collecting all moneys due the association, and he had full power to receive the check and collect the same.

And a building association has the power to borrow money and issue notes therefor, under Sanborn & B. (Wis.) Stat. 1204, §§ 2009-2014, providing for the formation of mutual savings fund, loan, or building corporation, in the manner prescribed in chapter 86, and that thereupon such corporation shall have all the powers and privileges, and be subject to all the liabilities, conferred and prescribed by this chapter, and such other powers conferred on corporations by these statutes as are necessary or proper to accomplish the purposes prescribed by its articles of association. North Hudson Mut. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. First Nat. Bank, 70 Wis. 31, 11 L. R. A. 845.

issue such paper. It was contended that it was subject to the conditions of the association, but it was held otherwise.

The power to indorse a check, which the secretary of the loan association, who is its general official agent, has authority to collect, is implied in the power given him to collect securities and pay the money for them to the treasurer. Gate City Bldg. & L. Asso. v. National Bank of Commerce, 126 Mo. 82, 27 L. R. A. 401.

In this case under the by-laws the secretary was made the general official agent of the association, the custodian of its securities, and to him was intrusted the duty of collecting all moneys due the association, and he had full power to receive the check and collect the same.

And a building association has the power to borrow money and issue notes therefor, under Sanborn & B. (Wis.) Stat. 1204, §§ 2009-2014, providing for the formation of mutual savings fund, loan, or building corporation, in the manner prescribed in chapter 86, and that thereupon such corporation shall have all the powers and privileges, and be subject to all the liabilities, conferred and prescribed by this chapter, and such other powers conferred on corporations by these statutes as are necessary or proper to accomplish the purposes prescribed by its articles of association. North Hudson Mut. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. First Nat. Bank, 70 Wis. 31, 11 L. R. A. 845.

The fact that this note had on its face a printed representation of a seal did not restrain its negotiability.

In Muth v. Delfield, 43 Md. 466, the power to issue notes is sustained, the court saying that the notes are negotiable in form, and that they and others of a similar form and character have been used and regarded by the commercial community as negotiable notes.

In Canton Nat. Bldg. Asso. v. Weber, 34 Md. 663, an action was brought upon a single bill issued by a building association. The question as to the power to issue such bill was not discussed.

The fact that this note had on its face a printed representation of a seal did not restrain its negotiability.

In Muth v. Delfield, 43 Md. 466, the power to issue notes is sustained, the court saying that the notes are negotiable in form, and that they and others of a similar form and character have been used and regarded by the commercial community as negotiable notes.

In Canton Nat. Bldg. Asso. v. Weber, 34 Md. 663, an action was brought upon a single bill issued by a building association. The question as to the power to issue such bill was not discussed.

In Clark v. Lake Ave. Permanent Sav. & L. Asso. 48 N. Y. S. R. 189, an order given by the president and secretary for money, and assigned for value, was held to be negotiable, either as an accepted bill or promissory note.

In this case the bill was issued to a party for a loan which was due him, and no question was made as to the power of the association to issue such paper. It was contended that it was subject to the conditions of the association, but it was held otherwise.

The power to indorse a check, which the secretary of the loan association, who is its general official agent, has authority to collect, is implied in the power given him to collect securities and pay the money for them to the treasurer. Gate City Bldg. & L. Asso. v. National Bank of Commerce, 126 Mo. 82, 27 L. R. A. 401.

In this case under the by-laws the secretary was made the general official agent of the association, the custodian of its securities, and to him was intrusted the duty of collecting all moneys due the association, and he had full power to receive the check and collect the same.

And a building association has the power to borrow money and issue notes therefor, under Sanborn & B. (Wis.) Stat. 1204, §§ 2009-2014, providing for the formation of mutual savings fund, loan, or building corporation, in the manner prescribed in chapter 86, and that thereupon such corporation shall have all the powers and privileges, and be subject to all the liabilities, conferred and prescribed by this chapter, and such other powers conferred on corporations by these statutes as are necessary or proper to accomplish the purposes prescribed by its articles of association. North Hudson Mut. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. First Nat. Bank, 70 Wis. 31, 11 L. R. A. 845.

issue such paper. It was contended that it was subject to the conditions of the association, but it was held otherwise.

The power to indorse a check, which the secretary of the loan association, who is its general official agent, has authority to collect, is implied in the power given him to collect securities and pay the money for them to the treasurer. Gate City Bldg. & L. Asso. v. National Bank of Commerce, 126 Mo. 82, 27 L. R. A. 401.

In this case under the by-laws the secretary was made the general official agent of the association, the custodian of its securities, and to him was intrusted the duty of collecting all moneys due the association, and he had full power to receive the check and collect the same.

And a building association has the power to borrow money and issue notes therefor, under Sanborn & B. (Wis.) Stat. 1204, §§ 2009-2014, providing for the formation of mutual savings fund, loan, or building corporation, in the manner prescribed in chapter 86, and that thereupon such corporation shall have all the powers and privileges, and be subject to all the liabilities, conferred and prescribed by this chapter, and such other powers conferred on corporations by these statutes as are necessary or proper to accomplish the purposes prescribed by its articles of association. North Hudson Mut. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. First Nat. Bank, 70 Wis. 31, 11 L. R. A. 845.

issue such paper. It was contended that it was subject to the conditions of the association, but it was held otherwise.

The power to indorse a check, which the secretary of the loan association, who is its general official agent, has authority to collect, is implied in the power given him to collect securities and pay the money for them to the treasurer. Gate City Bldg. & L. Asso. v. National Bank of Commerce, 126 Mo. 82, 27 L. R. A. 401.

In this case under the by-laws the secretary was made the general official agent of the association, the custodian of its securities, and to him was intrusted the duty of collecting all moneys due the association, and he had full power to receive the check and collect the same.

And a building association has the power to borrow money and issue notes therefor, under Sanborn & B. (Wis.) Stat. 1204, §§ 2009-2014, providing for the formation of mutual savings fund, loan, or building corporation, in the manner prescribed in chapter 86, and that thereupon such corporation shall have all the powers and privileges, and be subject to all the liabilities, conferred and prescribed by this chapter, and such other powers conferred on corporations by these statutes as are necessary or proper to accomplish the purposes prescribed by its articles of association. North Hudson Mut. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. First Nat. Bank, 70 Wis. 31, 11 L. R. A. 845.

it was made as to the power of the association to 43 L. R. A.

it was made as to the power of the association to 43 L. R. A.

severally paid by, the American Building, Loan, & Investment Society; that at the time when the first of the drafts had been taken from Montgomery in satisfaction of the amount which he owed the appellants, they had been advised by F. B. Modica, as the agent of the society, that Montgomery was a creditor of the society, and that his drafts upon it were good, and would be met at maturity; that each of the earlier drafts was accepted by the association "by F. B. Modica, its vice president, in manner and form precisely similar to the acceptance on the face of the draft of October 4, 1893, aforesaid"; that "Modica was, at the time, in full charge and control" of the society, "and in all business matters, so far as your petitioners were concerned, he was the chief managing officer of the said society." It is further alleged that, the draft not having been paid at maturity, the petitioners in December, 1893, began in the superior court of Cook county an action at law, and procured a writ of attachment to be issued and levied upon real property of the society in the county of La Salle, Ill., that the attachment was a first and valid lien upon that property, which was worth more than the amount of the demand. The petition concludes with an offer to dismiss the proceedings in the superior court of Cook county, and to release the attachment, if leave to file the petition be granted, and the receiver ruled to answer the same within a short day.

The receiver answered, admitting the averments of fact in the petition, but alleging that when the draft was accepted Montgomery was not, and had not since been, a creditor or member or stockholder of the society; that by the by-laws of the society, of which the articles defining the powers of the president and vice president are set out, Modica had no authority to sign, and that the society had no right or power to execute, the acceptance. The by-laws referred to read as follows: "It shall be the duty of the president society, and that the paid-in and subscribed capital shall be liable for the amount so borrowed. Suarr v. Toronto Permanent Bldg. & Sav. Soc. 29 U. C. Q. B. 317.

Where a note was given for money advanced and title deeds delivered as a security by a society founded in 1870, and incorporated under 6 & 7 Wm. IV. chap. 32, and not incorporated under the building societies act of 1874, the court sustained a rule providing that the trustees or directors may from time to time as occasion may require, borrow and take up at interest any sum or sums of money, and any borrowed money shall be a first charge on the funds and property of the society, and in case the trustees or directors shall at any time give their joint and several promissory note or other security for money borrowed for or on behalf of the society, in such case the person giving the security shall be indemnified by the society, and the funds and property of the society shall be subject to the repayment of the borrowed money; the borrowed money being always a charge on the society's funds and property. It was further held that the lenders were entitled in the winding up to the payment out of the assets after satisfaction of the outside creditors and in priority to the claims of all shareholders or members, the lenders giving up their securities to the official liquidators. The act of 1875, amending § 8 of the act of 1874, was held not to affect the existing societies unless they registered under the new act, which this society had not done. Agnew v. Murray, L. R. 9 App. Cas. 519.

In this case the dictum in Laing v. Reid, infra, as to an unlimited power of borrowing, was overruled. These cases were in substance, though not in form, appeals from a decision Re Guardian Permanent Ben. Bldg. Soc. L. R. 23 Ch. Div. 440, and reverse the decision of the court of appeals in that case.

Where a building society organized under act 6 & 7 Wm. IV., chap. 32, had from time to time borrowed money and given notes to secure the payment of the same under rule 1, providing that the object of the society is to raise by weekly contributions a fund to enable each of them to erect or purchase a dwelling house, or other real or leasehold property, and rule 18, providing that the trustees may, as occasion shall require, borrow and take up at interest any sum of money from any banker with whom the funds of this society shall be deposited, or from any other person, to procure which the trustees 43 L. R. A.

may give their own personal security, and be indemnified out of the first funds of this society which shall be received, and that the total sum to be borrowed shall not exceed two thirds of the amount secured by the mortgages to the society, a shareholder brought a suit for an injunction against the payment of the notes given by the trustees for borrowed money, alleging a want of power, although admitting that the money had been applied to the purposes of the society; but it was held that the rule was not in itself in excess of the power of the society. Laing v. Reid, L. R. 5 Ch. 4, 18 Week. Rep. 76.

It was said in this case that if the rule had not limited the amount it would have been ultra vires, but this dictum was overruled in Agnew v. Murray, L. R. 9 App. Cas. 519.

But where nothing has been secured by a society on mortgages from its members, it is not liable on an overdraft by the society on its bankers, secured by a deposit of title deeds to be paid with interest, that is a loan under building societies act 1874, § 15, providing that a society may receive deposits or loans at interest from its members or other persons, within the limits provided by the section, and in a terminating society the total amount received on deposit or loan and not repaid may either be a sum not exceeding two thirds of the amount for the time being secured to the society by mortgages from its members, or a sum not exceeding twelve months' subscription on the shares for the time being in force. In such a case the directors are personally liable under building societies act, § 43, providing that if any society receives loans or deposits in excess of the limits prescribed by the act, the directors receiving such loans shall be personally responsible, where the society adopts the first alternative under § 15, supra, and they cannot maintain that the other alternative of the act applies. Looker v. Wrigley, L. R. 9 Q. B. Div. 397.

Under the certified rules of an unincorporated building society providing that the directors might borrow money not exceeding a prescribed amount, where loans were made in accordance with advertisements, through the secretary, who gave a receipt in writing agreeing "to procure the promissory note of the directors for the loan," after which a note was given of the date of the receipt, and when the limit had been exceeded other money was loaned but no note of the directors was given, to preside at all meetings of the shareholders and of the board of directors, to sign all certificates of stock, and to sign all releases of mortgages, and he shall do all other duties usually pertaining to this office." "The vice president shall perform all the duties of the president in his absence. In case of any vacancy in that office he shall be ex officio president until the vacancy is filled."

The stipulation of the parties is to the effect that the copy of the by-laws set out in the answer is correct; that the petitioners, when the accepted draft was delivered to them, had no knowledge that such were the by-laws, other than the general knowledge imputed to them from the nature of the society; and that it is true, as alleged in the answer, that the society was not and had not been indebted to Montgomery, of which fact, and that he was not a member or stockholder of the society, the petitioners were ignorant until the date of the stipulation. The American Building, Loan, & Investment Society was incorporated on November 22, 1888, under the act of the general assembly of Illinois entitled "An Act to Enable Associations of Persons to Become a Body Corporate to Raise Funds to be Loaned only among the Members of Such Association," which went into force July 1, 1879. 1 Starr & C. Anno. Stat. 2d ed. p. 1045, chap. 32, §§ 108-134.

Messrs. Ralph M. Shaw, Frederick S. Winston, James F. Meagher, Silas H. Strawn, and Frederick R. Babcock, for appellants:

The acceptor of a bill of exchange, even though he has no funds in his hands belonging to the drawer at the date of the acceptance, and even though he was not then, or did not thereafter become, indebted to the drawer in any manner, is nevertheless liable whereupon the secretary absconded, the society was held not to be liable on his agreements. Chapleo v. Brunswick Permanent Bldg. Soc. L. R. 6 Q. B. Div. 696, 50 L. J. C. P. N. S. 372, 44 L. T. N. S. 440, 29 Week. Rep. 529.

And a bond and mortgage given by a building association for the purchase of land is ultra vires, in the absence of any statute authorizing such purchase. But under Pa. act June 17, 1878 (Pub. Laws, 214), confirming purchases made by building and loan associations prior to the act, the title to the land is validated, at least so far as to enable the association to hold the land if it so elect, the purchase money due is a lien on the land, and the recourse of the vendors is limited to the land. Faulkner's Appeal, 11 W. N. C. 48.

Under a building association rule stating that the object of the society is to raise a fund for the purpose of enabling its members to purchase land, to erect houses thereon, to provide means for the profitable investment of small savings, and an amended rule providing that the directors shall have power to borrow for the purpose of the society such sums and at such rates of interest as they may think proper, the society has not the power to borrow money to loan to another society where the trustees give their notes and deposit society mortgages as security. But the holder of the securities will not be compelled to give them up until he has been paid his debt. Re Durham County Permanent Invest. Land & Bldg. Soc. L. R. 12 Eq. 516, 41 L. J. Ch. N. S. 124, 25 L. T. N. S. 83.

In this case it was not disclosed that the lender knew the purpose for which the money was to be used.

Bankers allowing an overdraft under a contract ultra vires, made by a building society, were entitled to hold securities for so much of the money advanced as has been applied in payment of the debts and liabilities of the society properly payable and unpaid to the banker. Blackburn Bldg. Soc. v. Cunliffe, L. R. 22 Ch. Div. 61, 52 L. J. Ch. N. S. 541, 48 L. T. N. S. 33, 31 Week. Rep. 98.

Where bankers advanced money on a note given by a committee for a building society, and one of the obligors brought suit against the bankers and shareholders asking for an accounting, and for a contribution in respect of the notes by the persons who signed the same, and by the persons present at the meeting, at which it was resolved to borrow money and to appoint a committee to join in the security, it was held under the society rules, cl. 13, providing for accommodating a member desiring an advance by the 43 L. R. A.

society obtaining a loan for that purpose, that no loan could be made by the managing body so as to bind the society, unless to make an advance to a member who had agreed to the terms specified; but that as between the persons who signed and those who authorized them to sign they were all liable to make good the amount and indemnify the plaintiff who has paid. Moye v. Sparrow, 18 Week. Rep. 400, 22 L. T. N. S. 154.

And where money was advanced in 1857 to a society on the security of promissory notes signed by the trustees, when the rules of the society as certified did not contain any power to borrow money, but a rule which was never certified was subsequently added empowering the managers to borrow such sums as they might consider necessary to advance to members, it was held that the claim on winding up against the company on the notes should be disallowed. Re Coetmor Ben. Bldg. Soc. 51 L. T. 253.

In State, Colburn, v. Oberlin Bldg. & L. Asso. 35 Ohio St. 258, which was an information in quo warranto to oust a building association from acting as a corporation, it was held that under Ohio acts May 5, 1868, May 9, 1868 (65 Ohio Laws, 133-173, Swan & S. 194, 195), providing for an association becoming a corporation to raise money to be loaned among its members, such an association had no power to discount notes given by its officers for the purpose of raising money to loan the same; that the only way in which money to be loaned could be accumulated was by dues, fees, premiums, and interest.

In GROMMES v. SULLIVAN the case of State, Colburn, v. Oberlin Bldg. & L. Asso. 35 Ohio St. 263, was distinguished, on the ground that there the procedure was by quo warranto against the society for an abuse of its power, and involved no question of the validity of a corporate obligation in the hands of an innocent purchaser.

Under statutes like Tex. Rev. Stat. art. 589, limiting the business of such associations to the legitimate objects of their creation, some questions might arise as to the distinction between the purposes for which their negotiable paper might be issued, and the consequent effect upon the validity of such paper. But these questions do not seem to have been yet before the courts, although it was held in Anderson v. Cleburne Bldg. & L. Asso. 4 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) § 174, that such a statute made the discounting of notes by such an association ultra vires as an exercise of banking business.

L. T.

in an action brought by the payee against him to recover on the acceptance.

Diversy v. Loeb, 22 Ill. 394; Diversy v. Moor, 22 Ill. 331, 74 Am. Dec. 157; United States v. Bank of the Metropolis, 15 Pet. 377, 393, 10 L. ed. 774, 780; Goetz v. Bank of Kansas City, 119 U. S. 551, 560, 39 L. ed. 515, 518.

This is the law, even if there was no consideration as between the drawer and the acceptor. And lack of consideration would not be a defense in an action brought by the payee against the acceptor, even if the payee knew there was no consideration as between the acceptor and the drawer.

Diversy v. Loeb, 22 Ill. 394; Diversy v. Moor, 22 Ill. 331, 74 Am. Dec. 157; Nowak v. Excelsior Stone Co. 78 Ill. 307; Hardy v. Ross, 4 Ill. App. 501; Townsend v. Sumrall, 2 Pet. 170, 7 L. ed. 386; United States v. Bank of the Metropolis, 15 Pet. 377, 393, 10 L. ed. 774, 780.

The negotiable paper of a corporation in the hands of a holder who takes it in good faith for value can be enforced against the corporation, even though it be an accommodation note.

San Antonio v. Mehaffy, 96 U. S. 312, 314, 24 L. ed. 816, 817; Mechanics' Bkg. Asso. v. New York & S. White Lead Co. 35 N. Y. 505; Monument Nat. Bank v. Globe Works, 101 Mass. 57, 3 Am. Rep. 322.

Whenever one of two innocent parties must suffer by the acts of a third, he who has enabled such third person to occasion the loss must sustain it. This law applies to corporations as well as to individuals.

Lickbarrow v. Mason, 2 T. R. 63; Hern v. Nichols, 1 Salk. 289; Story, Partn. ¶ 108; Merchants' Bank v. State Bank, 10 Wall. 604, 646, 19 L. ed. 1008, 1017; New York & N. H. R. Co. v. Schuyler, 34 N. Y. 30; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Derby, 14 How. 468, 479, 14 L. ed. 502, 506; Heenrich v. Pullman Palace Car Co. 20 Fed. Rep. 100; Lee v. Sandy Hill, 40 N. Y. 443; Locke v. Stearns, 1 Met. 560, 35 Am. Dec. 382.

If agents conduct themselves fraudulently so that if they had been acting for private employers the persons for whom they were acting would have been affected and bound by their fraud, the same rule must prevail when the principal under whom an agent acts is a corporation.

Merchants' Bank v. State Bank, 10 Wall. 604, 646, 19 L. ed. 1008, 1018; New York & N. H. R. Co. v. Schuyler, 34 N. Y. 50; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Quigley, 21 How. 202, 210, 16 L. ed. 73, 75; First Nat. Bank v. Graham, 100 U. S. 699, 702, 25 L. ed. 750, 751; Frankfort Bank v. Johnson, 24 Me. 490; Henderson v. San Antonio & M. G. R. Co. 17 Tex. 560, 67 Am. Dec. 675; Soosfield Rolling Mill Co. v. State, 54 Ga. 635.

Strangers to a corporation cannot be bound by the rules adopted for the government of the company.

Smith v. Smith, 62 Ill. 493; Metropole Bldg. & Turkish Bath Co. v. Garden City Fan Co. 50 Ill. App. 681; Wait v. Smith, 92 Ill. 385; Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. White, 106 Ill. 67; St. Louis, A. & C. R. Co. v. Dalby, 19 Ill. 353; Driscoll v. West Bradley & C. Mfg. 43 L. R. A.

Co. 59 N. Y. 96; State v. Overton, 24 N. J. L. 435, 61 Am. Dec. 671.

The by-laws of the association in question did not in any degree increase or lessen the authority of the officers of the association.

Smith v. Smith, 62 Ill. 493; Glover v. Lee, 140 Ill. 102; Mitchell v. Deeds, 49 Ill. 416, 95 Am. Dec. 621.

Where the officers of a corporation openly exercise powers affecting the interests of third parties, which presupposes a delegated authority for that purpose, and other corporate acts subsequently performed show that the corporation must have contemplated the legal existence of such authority, the acts of such officers will be deemed rightful and the delegated authority will be presumed.

Marshall County Supers. v. Schenck, 5 Wall. 772, 18 L. ed. 556; Farmers' & M. Bank v. Butchers' & D. Bank, 16 N. Y. 125, 69 Am. Dec. 678; Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. White, 106 Ill. 67; St. Louis, A. & C. R. Co. v. Dalby, 19 Ill. 353; Metropole Bldg. & Turkish Bath Co. v. Garden City Fan Co. 50 Ill. App. 681; Miners' Ditch Co. v. Zellerbach, 37 Cal. 543, 99 Am. Dec. 300; Page v. Fall River, W. & P. R. Co. 31 Fed. Rep. 257; New York & N. H. R. Co. v. Schuyler, 34 N. Y. 58.

The plea of ultra vires should not, as a general rule, prevail, whether interposed for or against a corporation, when it would not advance justice, but, on the contrary, would accomplish a legal wrong.

Kadish v. Garden City Equitable Loan & Bldg. Asso. 151 Ill. 531; Whitney Arms Co. v. Barlow, 63 N. Y. 62, 20 Am. Rep. 504; Darst v. Gale, 83 Ill. 136; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. McCarthy, 96 U. S. 258, 267, 24 L. ed. 693, 695; San Antonio v. Mehaffy, 96 U. S. 312, 315, 24 L. ed. 816, 817.

If the extrinsic fact upon which depends the lawful character of the act is one peculiarly within the knowledge of the general agent of the corporation by whom the act is done, the act itself is an implied representation that the necessary fact exists, the truth of which the corporation is estopped to deny as against any person who in dealing with the corporation has parted with value, or what the law considers value, on the faith of it.

Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Sutton Mfg. Co. 6 U. S. App. 312, 52 Fed. Rep. 191, 3 C. C. A. 1, 17 L. R. A. 595; Bissell v. Michigan S. & N. I. R. Cos. 22 N. Y. 258; Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. White, 106 Ill. 67; Farmers' & M. Bank v. Butchers' & D. Bank, 16 N. Y. 125, 69 Am. Dec. 678.

If it is possible, under any hypothetical condition of facts, for the act in question to be within the express or implied power of a corporation, the corporation will be estopped in a particular instance to say that the act in question is not within such express or implied power, when such a defense would be to the injury of an innocent third party; and this, even if the act itself was unauthorized and illegal.

Citizens' State Bank v. Hawkins, 34 U. S. App. 423, 71 Fed. Rep. 369, 18 C. C. A. 78; Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Sutton Mfg. Co. 6 U. S. App. 312, 52 Fed. Rep. 195, 3 C. C. A. 1, 17 L. R. A. 595; Marshall County Supers. v.

Schenck, 5 Wall. 772, 784, 18 L. ed. 556, 559; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. McCarthy, 96 U. S. 258, 267, 24 L. ed. 693, 695; Bissell v. Michigan S. & N. I. R. Cos. 22 N. Y. 258; Macon County v. Shores, 97 U. S. 272, 279, 24 L. ed. 889, 890; Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 1 Wall. 175, 203, 17 L. ed. 520, 524; Farmers' & M. Bank v. Butchers' & D. Bank, 16 N. Y. 125, 69 Am. Dec. 678; Stoney v. American L. Ins. Co. 11 Paige, 635; Madison & I. R. Co. v. Norwich Sav. Soc. 24 Ind. 457; New York & N. H. R. Co. v. Schuyler, 34 N. Y. 30; State Bd. of Agri. v. Citizens' Street R. Co. 47 Ind. 407, 17 Am. Rep. 702; Miners' Ditch Co. v. Zellerbach, 37 Cal. 543, 99 Am. Dec. 300.

Where a party dealing with a corporation has acted in good faith, and the contract has been completely executed, so that nothing remains to be done except the payment by the corporation to the party, the corporation is always estopped to set up its want of authority as a defense, unless the act is malum in se or expressly prohibited.

Wood v. Corry Waterworks Co. 44 Fed. Rep. 146, 12 L. R. A. 168; Knos County Comrs. v. Aspinwall, 21 How. 539, 545, 16 L. ed. 208, 210; Dimpfel v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 9 Biss. 127; National Bank v. Matthews, 98 U. S. 621, 629, 25 L. ed. 188, 190; Planters' Bank v. Union Bank, 16 Wall. 483, 499, 500, 21 L. ed. 473, 479, 480; Union Trust Co. v. Illinois Midland R. Co. 117 U. S. 434, 468, 29 L. ed. 963, 975; Bradley v. Ballard, 55 Ill. 413, 7 Am. Rep. 656; Kadish v. Garden City Equitable Loan & Bldg. Assn. 151 Ill. 531; Darst v. Gale, 83 Ill. 136; Peoria & S. R. Co. v. Thompson, 103 Ill. 187; Holmes & G. Mfg. Co. v. Holmes & V. Metal Co. 127 N. Y. 252; Whitney Arms Co. v. Barlow, 63 N. Y. 62, 20 Am. Rep. 504; Parish v. Wheeler, 22 N. Y. 494; Woodruff v. Erie R. Co. 93 N. Y. 609; Hays v. Galion Gaslight & Coal Co. 29 Ohio St. 330; Thompson v. Lambert, 44 Iowa, 239; State Bd. of Agri. v. Citizens' Street R. Co. 47 Ind. 407, 17 Am. Rep. 702.

Under such circumstances, when the contract has been fully executed the question of ultra vires can only be raised by a direct proceeding in quo warranto.

National Bank v. Matthews, 98 U. S. 621, 629, 25 L. ed. 188, 190; Citizens' State Bank v. Hawkins, 34 U. S. App. 423, 71 Fed. Rep. 369, 18 C. C. A. 78; Knos County Comrs. v. Aspinwall, 21 How. 539, 16 L. ed. 208; Alzander v. Tolleston Club, 110 Ill. 65; Union Water Co. v. Murphy's Flat Fluming Co. 22 Cal. 621; California State Teleg. Co. v. Alta Teleg. Co. 22 Cal. 398; Chester Glass Co. v. Dewey, 16 Mass. 94.

Messrs. Lorin C. Collins, Jr., and William Meade Fletcher, for appellee:

Appellee is not estopped from asserting that it is not liable upon the instrument in question, its execution being beyond the scope of any express or implied powers on the part of the party purporting to act for the corporation, and it being undisputed that the corporation in question never received any consideration of any kind from any person for such attempted liability.

Humboldt Min. Co. v. Variety Iron Works Co. 22 U. S. App. 334, 62 Fed. Rep. 357, 10 C. C. A. 415; St. Louis, V. & T. H. R. Co. v. 43 L. R. A.

Terre Haute & I. R. Co. 145 U. S. 393, 36 L. ed. 738; Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 139 U. S. 24, 35 L. ed. 55; Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 351; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Detroit Knitting & Corset Works, 68 Mich. 620; Davis v. Rockingham Invest. Co. 80 Va. 290; New York Iron Mine v. First Nat. Bank, 39 Mich. 644; Adriance v. Roome, 52 Barb. 411; Lowell Five Cents Sav. Bank v. Winchester, 8 Allen, 121; First Nat. Bank v. Council Bluffs City Waterworks Co. 56 Hun, 412; Webber v. Williams College, 23 Pick. 302; City Electric Street R. Co. v. First Nat. Esch. Bank, 62 Ark. 33, 31 L. R. A. 535; Catiron v. First Universalist Soc. 46 Iowa, 106; Bigelow, Estoppel, 5th ed. § 466; Oregonian R. Co. v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 10 Sawy. 464.

The contention of the appellants, that whenever one of two innocent parties must suffer by the acts of others, he who has enabled such third person to occasion loss must sustain it, and this law applies to corporations as well as individuals, is not well founded, and does not apply in the present instance.

Lowell Five Cents Sav. Bank v. Winchester, 8 Allen, 115; Oregonian R. Co. v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 10 Sawy. 464.

The same distinction exists between trading and nontrading corporations as between trading and nontrading copartnerships. Even bona fide purchasers of negotiable instruments executed by a nontrading partnership must prove the power of the agent or partner to execute such instrument on behalf of the firm, and the same rule applies to the agent or officer of a nontrading corporation. Such power is not implied or presumed.

Bates, Partn. §§ 342, 345, 443; Smith v. Sloan, 37 Wis. 285, 19 Am. Rep. 757; Hibbler v. De Forest, 6 Ala. 92; Ulery v. Ginrich, 57 Ill. 533; Story, Partn. §§ 102-126; 3 Collyer, Partn. p. 269, chap. 1, § 2; Morse v. Richmond, 6 Ill. App. 169; 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1026; Pooley v. Whitmore, 10 Heisk. 629, 27 Am. Rep. 733; Pease v. Cole, 53 Conn. 53, 55 Am. Rep. 53; Dickinson v. Valpy, 10 Barn. & C. 138; Hedley v. Bainbridge, 3 Q. B. 316; Judge v. Braswell, 13 Bush, 67, 26 Am. Rep. 185; Levy v. Pyne, Car. & M. 453; Hunt v. Chapin, 6 Lans. 139; 4 Thomp. Corp. § 4641; Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 2d ed. §§ 351, 353, 606; First Nat. Bank v. Council Bluffs City Waterworks Co. 56 Hun, 412; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Citizens' Gaslight Co. 159 Mass. 505; Webber v. Williams College, 23 Pick. 302; Packard v. First Universalist Soc. 10 Met. 427; Torrey v. Dustin Monument Assn. 5 Allen, 327; Lowell Five Cents Sav. Bank v. Winchester, 8 Allen, 109; Tappan v. Warren Five Cents Sav. Bank, 127 Mass. 107; Craft v. South Boston R. Co. 150 Mass. 207, 5 L. R. A. 641; Silliman v. Fredericksburg, O. & C. R. Co. 27 Gratt. 131; The Floyd Acceptances, 7 Wall. 680, 19 L. ed. 175; Clark v. Des Moines, 19 Iowa, 209; Bateman v. Mid-Wales R. Co. L. R. 1 C. P. 499; Narragansett Bank v. Atlantic Silk Co. 3 Met. 282; Bates v. Keith Iron Co. 7 Met. 224.

The American Building, Loan, & Investment Society is not a trading or manufacturing corporation. Building and loan associations are essentially corporate copartnerships; they have no function except to gather together from small stated contributions sums large enough to justify loans to their members, and the same rule exists relative to the issuance of negotiable paper by them through their officers as in the case of an instrument executed in the name of a nontrading copartnership by one of the general partners.

Toivle v. American Bldg. Loan, & Invest. Soc. 61 Fed. Rep. 446; Re National Sav. Loan & Bldg. Assn. 9 W. N. C. 79; Endlich, Bldg. Assn. §§ 111, 283, 511, 515, 547; Burbridge v. Cotton, 8 Eng. L. & Eq. 57; Silver v. Barnes, 6 Bing. N. C. 180; Christian's Appeal, 102 Pa. 184; Thompson, Bldg. Assn. p. 132, § 1; Starr & C. Rev. Stat. 1896, chap. 22, §§ 115, 118; Rhodes v. Missouri Sav. & L. Co. 173 Ill. 621, 42 L. R. A. 93; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 604; 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 89; Bouvier, Law Dictionary; Warren v. Shook, 91 U. S. 704, 23 L. ed. 421; Ill. Const. art. 11, § 5; Re National Permanent Ben. Bldg. Soc. 22 L. T. N. S. 285; Re Victoria Permanent Ben. Bldg. Invest. & Freehold Land Soc. 22 L. T. N. S. 779; State, Colburn, v. Oberlin Bldg. & L. Assn. 35 Ohio St. 263; Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 351; Bissell v. Michigan S. & N. I. R. Co. 22 N. Y. 258; Pooley v. Whitmore, 10 Heisk. 629, 27 Am. Rep. 733; Bates, Partn. § 342; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Citizens' Gaslight Co. 159 Mass. 505; 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 2d ed. § 608; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. State Nat. Bank, 10 Wall. 604, 19 L. ed. 1018; City Electric Street R. Co. v. First Nat. Exch. Bank, 62 Ark. 33, 31 L. R. A. 535; Mechem, Agency, § 289; The Floyd Acceptances, 7 Wall. 666, 19 L. ed. 169; Farmers' & M. Bank v. Butchers' & D. Bank, 16 N. Y. 125, 69 Am. Dec. 678; Madison & I. R. Co. v. Norwich Sav. Soc. 24 Ind. 457; Stoney v. American L. Ins. Co. 11 Paige, 635; Marshall County Supers. v. Schenck, 5 Wall. 782, 18 L. ed. 559; Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Sutton Mfg. Co. 6 U. S. App. 312, 52 Fed. Rep. 195, 3 C. C. A. 1, 17 L. R. A. 595.

Officers of a corporation are special and not general agents, consequently they have no power to bind the corporation, except within the limits prescribed by the charter and by-laws. Persons dealing with officers of a corporation do so at their peril.

Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Detroit Knitting & Corset Works, 68 Mich. 620; Davis v. Rockingham Invest. Co. 89 Va. 290; New York Iron Mine v. First Nat. Bank, 39 Mich. 644; Adriance v. Roome, 52 Barb. 411; Lowell Five Cents Sav. Bank v. Winchester, 8 Allen, 121; First Nat. Bank v. Council Bluffs City Waterworks Co. 56 Hun, 412; Clafin v. Farmers' & C. Bank, 25 N. Y. 293; Re Cunningham, L. R. 36 Ch. Div. 536; Webber v. Williams College, 23 Pick. 302; City Electric Street R. Co. v. First Nat. Exch. Bank, 62 Ark. 33, 31 L. R. A. 535; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. State Nat. Bank, 10 Wall. 644, 19 L. ed. 1018; 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 608; Mechem, Agency, § 289; The Floyd Acceptances, 7 Wall. 668, 19 L. ed. 169; Cattron v. First Universalist Soc. 46 43 L. R. A.

Iowa, 106; Lyndon Mill Co. v. Lyndon Literary & Biblical Inst. 63 Vt. 585; Life & Fire Ins. Co. v. Mechanics' F. Ins. Co. 7 Wend. 34; Koch v. National Union Bldg. Assn. 35 Ill. App. 465; Morawetz, Corp. § 537; Morris v. Griffith & W. Co. 69 Fed. Rep. 131; Western Nat. Bank v. Armstrong, 152 U. S. 346, 38 L. ed. 470; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. James, 22 Wis. 198; Titus v. Cairo & F. R. Co. 37 N. J. L. 98.

Appellants are not bona fide holders of the bill of exchange. There were sufficient circumstances of suspicion to put reasonably cautious men upon inquiry as to the transaction in question.

Knapp v. Bailey, 79 Me. 195; Pringle v. Phillips, 5 Sandf. 157; 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 790; Lawrence v. Gebhard, 41 Barb. 577; First Nat. Bank v. Council Bluffs City Waterworks Co. 56 Hun, 412; Lowell Five Cents Sav. Bank v. Winchester, 8 Allen, 115; Taylor v. Atchison, 54 Ill. 196, 5 Am. Rep. 118; Auton v. Gruner, 90 Ill. 300; Wade, Notice, §§ 3, 4; Toivle v. American Bldg. Loan, & Invest. Soc. 61 Fed. Rep. 446.

From the facts appearing in the record it appears that the bill was obtained by fraud or circumvention, and under the statutes of the state of Illinois such fact renders a negotiable instrument void, even though it be in the hands of a bona fide holder.

Ill. Starr & C. Rev. Stat. 1896, chap. 98, § 14; Mitchell v. Kintzer, 5 Pa. 216, 47 Am. Dec. 408; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 873; Kerr, Fraud & Mistake, p. 42; Story, Eq. Jur. 3d ed. § 186.

Woods, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

We are of opinion that, under the law of its creation, the American Building, Loan, & Investment Society had power to execute negotiable paper. The rule is well established that corporations authorized to do a particular business, unless especially denied the power, have implied authority to contract debts in the legitimate transactions of the business authorized; and the right to contract debts, it is the equally well settled American rule, carries with it the power to give negotiable notes or bills in payment or security for the debts, unless that power is expressly denied. Reese, Ultra Vires, § 100; Green's Brice, Ultra Vires, 2d ed. p. 253; Dan. Neg. Inst. 4th ed. §§ 381, 382; Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 2d ed. §§ 350, 351. The decisions upon the subject are numerous, and are cited in the footnotes to the texts referred to. With respect to municipal corporations the Supreme Court of the United States has established a different doctrine (Police Jury v. Britton, 15 Wall. 566, 21 L. ed. 251; Merrill v. Monticello, 138 U. S. 673, 34 L. ed. 1069); but for further exception to the rule as stated there seems to be no authority in this country.

In the usual course of its business the American Building, Loan, & Investment Society was empowered, expressly or by implication, to incur debt in various ways,—as for example, to its secretary for his services, to withdrawing members, to the representatives or beneficiaries of deceased members, and to others, strangers to the association, for stationery, office supplies, office rent, for real estate to be used as a place of business; and by express provision it was authorized "to purchase at any sheriff's or other judicial sale, or at any other sale, public or private, any real estate" in which it had an interest, "and the real estate so purchased, to sell, convey, lease, or mortgage, at pleasure, to any person or persons whatsoever." 1 Starr & Curtiss (Ill.) Anno. Stat. 2d ed. pp. 1045, 1050, chap. 32, § 120. This power to mortgage its real estate imported, necessarily, the power to borrow or in some way to become indebted. It had power, also, to receive from its vendees negotiable notes for the price of real estate sold, and from its members like notes for loans made to them, and the notes so acquired it had the right to sell, to pledge, and to indorse. In short, its right to incur debt and to execute the customary evidences of indebtedness was not exceptional or extraordinary, but pertained to the ordinary line and scope of the business which it was organized to do. It was competent, and doubtless would have been wiser, for the legislature to have provided that such societies should not have power to bind themselves by negotiable promises or contracts, into the consideration of which, when in the hands of a good-faith purchaser, there can be no inquiry; but it is not for the courts to put upon the powers granted a restriction which would be inconsistent with an established rule of construction, from which, presumably, the legislature intended no departure.

The power of the society to execute notes or bills for the various purposes suggested being conceded, and there being no ground for questioning the authority of Modica as vice president to sign the name of the society to such obligations executed in the regular course of business, the case comes within the rule that, when a corporation has power—"under any circumstances," as some of the cases say, and certainly when it has power under ordinary circumstances, or in the usual course of its business—to execute negotiable obligations, the bona fide purchaser of a particular obligation has a right to presume that it was executed under circumstances which gave the requisite authority. Gelpoke v. Dubuque, 1 Wall. 175, 17 L. ed. 520; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. McCarthy, 96 U. S. 258-267, 24 L. ed. 693-695; Macon County v. Shores, 97 U. S. 272-279, 24 L. ed. 889, 890; Bissell v. Michigan S. & N. I. R. Cos. 22 N. Y. 258; Mon- ument Nat. Bank v. Globe Works, 101 Mass. 57, 3 Am. Rep. 322; Webster v. Howe Mach. Co. 54 Conn. 394; National Bank v. Young, 41 N. J. Eq. 531. It is admitted in the answer that the appellants received the acceptance in question of Montgomery "for a bona fide indebtedness," and, whether that be regarded as meaning in discharge of or only as collateral security for the debt, it made the appellants purchasers for value (Swift v. Tyson, 16 Pet. 1-18, 10 L. ed. 865-871; Brooklyn City & N. R. Co. v. National Bank of the Republic, 102 U. S. 14, 26 L. ed. 61); and, in the absence of proof that they purchased with knowledge or notice that the acceptance was without consideration, or was otherwise wrongfully obtained, gave them the rights of good-faith purchasers. King v. Doane, 139 U. S. 166, 173, 35 L. ed. 84, 87; Atlas Nat. Bank v. Holm, 34 U. S. App. 472, 71 Fed. Rep. 489, 19 C. C. A. 94.

The chief contention of the appellee is that the American Building, Loan, & Investment Society is not a trading or manufacturing corporation, that building and loan associations are essentially corporate partnerships, and that the officers thereof have no more authority to bind them by negotiable paper than has a member of a nontrading partnership to make such paper in the firm name. Numerous authorities are cited in support of these propositions. Of the English cases referred to it is enough to observe that they proceed upon the theory that a corporation, without special authority, express or implied, cannot make, accept, draw, or indorse bills or notes. That is not the American rule. The only American cases cited, which need be mentioned, are State, Colburn, v. Oberlin Bldg. & L. Asso. 35 Ohio St. 263, and Christian's Appeal, 102 Pa. 184. These cases are not in point. In the first, the procedure was by quo warranto against the society for an abuse of its powers, and involved no question of the validity of a corporate obligation in the hands of an innocent purchaser. The Pennsylvania case had reference to the rights of the members in the distribution of the assets of an insolvent company, and contains nothing which can be regarded as bearing upon the question now under consideration. See Davis v. West Saratoga Bldg. Union, No. 3, 32 Md. 285.

It follows that the decree below must be reversed, and, accordingly, it is ordered that the decree entered be set aside, and a decree given for the interveners for the amount of the acceptance, with interest.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

Caroline H. SVANBURG, Resp't.,
v.

Osmond FOSSEEN, Exr., etc., of James Fosseen, Deceased, Appt.

(.....Minn.....)

1. Where, in a parol agreement for the purchase of real estate, the consideration consists of services to be rendered which are of such a peculiar character that it is impossible to estimate the value to the vendor by a pecuniary standard, and neither party intended so to measure them, the performance of the services will entitle the vendee to a specific performance, notwithstanding the contract was by parol; and this rule is especially applicable where, in addition to such services, the vendee, at the request of the vendor, subsequently sold real estate at a sacrifice, and paid the proceeds over to the vendor, as further consideration, and where, after the full performance of the services, it is out of the power of the court to restore the vendee to the situation in which he was before the contract was made, or to compensate him in damages.
2. The probate court has no jurisdiction over actions for the specific performance of parol contracts for the conveyance of real estate.
3. A contract on the part of husband and wife to convey by deed or will all their property, both real and personal, and a subsequent agreement on their part and that of each of them to make such conveyance, to take effect on their demise, would include all the property which they owned jointly or separately.
4. Where the demurrer is one as to want of jurisdiction and insufficiency of facts in the complaint to constitute a cause of action, it does not reach an objection that there is a defect of parties either of nonjoinder or misjoinder.

(January 25, 1899.)

APPEAL by defendant from an order of the District Court for Hennepin County overruling a demurrer to a complaint filed to enforce specific performance of a contract to convey property. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. O. Moenness and M. L. Fosseen, for appellant:

The plaintiff has had her day in court and she is barred by a former adjudication.

That decision upon the validity of the will becomes res judicata, and binding on all persons and all courts.

State v. McGlynn, 20 Cal. 234, 81 Am. Dec. 118; Deslonde v. Darrington, 29 Ala. 95; Bogardus v. Clark, 4 Paige, 625; Woodruff v. Taylor, 20 Vt. 65; Ballow v. Hudson, 13 Gratt. 682; Tompkins v. Tompkins, 1 Story, 557; Broderick's Will, 21 Wall. 503, 22 L. ed. 599; 3 Redf. Wills, p. 56.

*Headnotes by BUCK, J.

NOTE.—As to the validity of agreements to give property at the promisor's death, see note to Krell v. Codman (Mass.) 14 L. R. A. 860; also Wright v. Wright (Mich.) 23 L. R. A. 196; 43 L. R. A.

The alleged agreements relied on in the complaint, being oral, are within the statute of frauds.

Townsend v. Fenton, 30 Minn. 528, 32 Minn. 482.

Performance of the consideration by living with a person during his life will not take an oral agreement therefor out of the statute of frauds.

Austin v. Davis, 128 Ind. 472, 12 L. R. A. 120; Wallace v. Long, 105 Ind. 522, 55 Am. Rep. 222; Bender v. Bender, 37 Pa. 419; Gorham v. Dodge, 122 Ill. 528; Parker v. Heaton, 55 Ind. 1; Pond v. Sheean, 132 Ill. 312, 8 L. R. A. 414; Moore v. Small, 19 Pa. 461; Crabill v. Marsh, 38 Ohio St. 331; Mauck v. Melton, 64 Ind. 414; Ham v. Goodrich, 37 N. H. 186; Smith v. Smith, 28 N. J. L. 208; Shahan v. Swan, 48 Ohio St. 25.

A parol agreement to convey real estate by will, made in settlement of a lawsuit, is not enforceable under the statute of frauds, where there has been no act of part performance on the part of the defendant, although valuable rights may have been relinquished by the intended devisee in consideration of the contract.

Swash v. Sharpstein, 14 Wash. 426, 32 L. R. A. 796; Wallace v. Long, 105 Ind. 522, 55 Am. Rep. 222; Temple v. Johnson, 71 Ill. 13; Ackerman v. Fisher, 57 Pa. 457; Purcell v. Miner, 4 Wall. 513, 18 L. ed. 435; Williams v. Morris, 95 U. S. 444, 24 L. ed. 360; De Moss v. Robinson, 46 Mich. 62, 41 Am. Rep. 144; Crabill v. Marsh, 38 Ohio St. 331; Bresnahan v. Bresnahan (Minn.) 73 N. W. 515; Maddison v. Alderson, L. R. 8 App. Cas. 467; Campbell v. McKorricher, 6 Ont. Rep. 85.

The probate court has exclusive jurisdiction of all ex contractu obligations of the testator.

Hill v. Nichols, 47 Minn. 382; Horn v. Ludington, 32 Wis. 73.

Mr. John M. Rees, for respondent:

The testator could not lawfully devise the property to third parties in open disregard of his contract to devise it to plaintiff and her sisters.

He had no right, within the meaning of the law, to dispose of property which he had already disposed of to the children, except subject to such obligation, and to his just debts.

Statutes 1894, § 4423.

Probate courts have jurisdiction of the estates of deceased persons, that is, of the estate or interest of deceased in the particular property.

Mousseau v. Mousseau, 40 Minn. 236.

The kind and character of the services rendered by the children cannot be adequately paid for in money; it was never intended between the parties in the contract that such services should be paid for in money.

Kofka v. Rosicky (Neb.) 25 L. R. A. 207; Nowack v. Berger (Mo.) 31 L. R. A. 810; Swash v. Sharpstein (Wash.) 82 L. R. A. 796; and Owens v. McNally (Cal.) 33 L. R. A. 369.

There was such part performance as to take the case out of the statute.

Slingerland v. Slingerland, 39 Minn. 197; Brown v. Hoag, 35 Minn. 373; Newton v. Newton, 46 Minn. 33; Pollock, Contr. *310; Pom. Contr. p. 161; Fry, Spec. Perf. 254; Maadon v. Rowe, 23 Ga. 431, 68 Am. Dec. 535; Gill v. Newell, 13 Minn. 462.

An oral contract to convey land may be enforced in equity when, relying thereon, a party has made a manifest change in his property.

Place v. Johnson, 20 Minn. 219; Williams v. Stewart, 25 Minn. 516.

A parol contract to make a will in a certain person's favor is valid where there has been a part performance in services.

Owens v. McNally, 113 Cal. 444, 33 L. R. A. 369; Townsend v. Vanderwerker, 160 U. S. 171, 40 L. ed. 383; Patterson v. Patterson, 13 Johns. 379; Carmichael v. Carmichael, 72 Mich. 76, 1 L. R. A. 596; Linneman v. Morris, 98 Mich. 178.

Specific performance is a matter of discretion with courts of equity.

Kofka v. Rosicky, 41 Neb. 328, 25 L. R. A. 207.

The principles of equity will be applied to new cases as they are presented, and relief will not be withheld merely on the ground that no precedent can be found.

Vandeyne v. Vreeland, 12 N. J. Eq. 142; Kofka v. Rosicky, 41 Neb. 328, 25 L. R. A. 207; Nowack v. Berger, 133 Mo. 24, 31 L. R. A. 810.

A contract to leave property to an adopted child as an heir is taken out of the statute of frauds by its complete performance.

Wright v. Wright, 99 Mich. 170, 23 L. R. A. 196; Neal v. Gilmore, 79 Pa. 421; Frank's Appeal, 59 Pa. 190; Seddon v. Rosenbaum, 85 Va. 928, 3 L. R. A. 338; Swain v. Seamen, 9 Wall. 254, 19 L. ed. 554; Walker v. Wilmington, C. & A. R. Co. 26 S. C. 80; McClure v. Otrich, 118 Ill. 320; Frame v. Frame, 32 W. Va. 463, 5 L. R. A. 323, note.

A court of equity will specifically enforce a promise to leave to another the whole of a definite portion of one's estate as reward for peculiar personal services rendered or other acts done by the promisee which are not susceptible of a money valuation and were not intended to be paid for in money, provided the consideration has been substantially received at the promisor's death.

Jaffee v. Jacobson, 4 U. S. App. 4, 48 Fed. Rep. 24, 1 C. C. A. 24, 14 L. R. A. 352; Townsend v. Vanderwerker, 160 U. S. 171, 40 L. ed. 383; 8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 740; Warren v. Warren, 105 Ill. 568.

Buck, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appeal by defendant from an order overruling a demurrer to plaintiff's complaint. The grounds of the demurrer are: First, that the court has not jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the causes of action therein stated; second, that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The facts stated in the complaint and admitted by the demurrer are as follows:

The plaintiff, whose maiden name was Caroline H. Hanson, when three and a half years old, with two sisters under six years of age came with their father, from Europe to America, to live with their uncle and aunt, James and Anna Mary Fosseen. James Fosseen died about the 3d day of December, 1894, and his wife died April 5, 1891. Plaintiff and her said sisters lived for several months with their said uncle and aunt after their arrival in this country, and thereafter they lived part of the time with the Fosseens, and part of the time with their father, until about the 23d day of January, 1876, when plaintiff's father died. At that time plaintiff was about eight years old, and her sisters were then of the respective ages of ten and thirteen years. Immediately after the death of their said father, the plaintiff and her said sisters, as aforesaid, and the said James and Anna Mary Fosseen, contracted orally by and between each other, in fact and in substance, as follows: That if the plaintiff and her said sisters would come to the house of the said James and Anna Mary Fosseen, as aforesaid and live with them, and give them their services, as they should be directed, until they had grown up, in consideration thereof, at their death said James Fosseen and his said wife would give and leave to the plaintiff and her said sisters, as aforesaid, all the property, both real and personal, which they then owned, and which they might own at the time of their death. That relying upon said promises and agreements, and in pursuance to said contract, as aforesaid, the plaintiff lived at the house of said James Fosseen and his said wife, and gave them her services, as requested, daily and continuously, until she was twenty-one years of age, when she was married to Charles H. Svanburg, her present husband. That the services so rendered by the plaintiff, as aforesaid, cannot be enumerated specifically, but they consisted of housework of every kind and character, all work in and about the house of every nature, required in housekeeping, and in running and maintaining a home, of sewing, washing, ironing, of care and nursing for said James Fosseen and his said wife and much other and different kind of work done and performed outside of the dwelling house, in many and different ways, as requested by the said James Fosseen and his said wife. That during said time, as aforesaid, a strong affection existed between said James Fosseen and his wife and the plaintiff and her said sisters, aforesaid, and that the labor and services, as aforesaid, and the relationship herein described, were daily and continuous until the plaintiff was married, as herein alleged. That the plaintiff never received any compensation or wages whatever for her said work and services, nor for any part thereof. These sisters inherited real estate of value of $2,000; and about the 1st day of December, 1885, they made an additional contract with the said Fosseens, as follows: That if said plaintiff and her sisters would sell and convey their said real estate, hereinbefore described, to one Swen Anderson, or to some other person whom said

James and Anna Mary Fosseen would name, and give the money and proceeds thereof to said James Fosseen and his said wife, that said James and Anna Mary Fosseen, and each of them, in consideration thereof, would, by deed or by will, convey or bequeath to said plaintiff and to her said sisters, as aforesaid, all the property which they then had or which they might thereafter acquire, both real and personal, in equal parts, such conveyance to take effect at the demise of the said James and Anna Mary Fosseen, and that said James and Anna Mary Fosseen, in consideration of the premises, would give and leave to the plaintiff and her said sisters, at their death, all the personal property which they should own at their demise. That said deed or will, as aforesaid, was to be left at the death of said James and Anna Mary Fosseen, or that the title to all of said property at their decease, was to be left in this plaintiff and her said sisters, as aforesaid. That said plaintiff and her said sisters, relying upon said promises and agreements, as aforesaid, were thereby induced to, and did thereupon, sell, deed, and convey their said real property, as aforesaid, to one Swen Anderson, at the request and solicitation of said James and Anna Mary Fosseen, at the price and for the sum of $1,300. That nearly all of said sum of $1,300, was, upon said 1st day of December, A. D. 1885, or immediately thereafter, paid to said James and Anna Mary Fosseen, by and with the consent of the plaintiff and her said sisters. That thereafter the balance of said $1,300 was paid to and turned over by said Swen Anderson to said James and Anna Mary Fosseen, by and with the consent of the plaintiff and her said sisters, and that the whole of said $1,300, as aforesaid, was, by and with the consent of the plaintiff and her said sisters, paid to said James Fosseen and Anna Mary Fosseen, and was by them used and appropriated to their own use. That neither of the Fosseens, by deed, conveyance, will or otherwise, in any manner, during their lifetime, made or executed any papers nor did they, by gift or otherwise, give or leave the title to any of the property which they owned at the time the contract was made, or which they died seized of, as hereinafter alleged and set forth, to this plaintiff or to her said sisters, or to either of them.

James Fosseen died seized of a large amount of real estate a portion of which is specifically described in the complaint, situate within the jurisdiction of the court; and it is also alleged in the complaint that the defendant executor has disposed of a large portion of the estate, and now has the proceeds thereof in his hands. After the decease of James Fosseen, the defendant, Osman Fosseen, qualified as the executor of said will, and is engaged in settling the estate in accordance with the terms thereof but has not distributed any portion thereof to the beneficiaries therein named. He gave a bond for only $5,000, whereas the said estate is of the value of about $25,000. The relief asked in the complaint is that plaintiff be adjudged the owner of an undivided one third of the real and personal property of which James Fosseen died seized; that said executor be enjoined from disposing of the same, as he is not financially responsible; that he be enjoined from paying to the beneficiaries in said will named any of said property, or conveying any thereof to said beneficiaries, but that one third should be conveyed and turned over and paid to plaintiff. The demurrer was overruled, and defendant appeals.

It is proper to state that the other two nieces have each brought similar actions in equity in the district court, praying for the same relief, and a stipulation has been entered into between the parties whereby such actions shall abide the event of the decision in this case.

The two questions more distinctly brought before us for consideration are: First. Are the contracts, or either of them, set forth in the complaint, within the statute of frauds? Second. Was the probating of the will a final determination of all the interests of the plaintiff and her sisters in the property of the deceased?

The law is too well settled to need argument or citation of authorities that a person may make a valid obligation which is not within the statute of frauds, binding himself to make his will in a certain way, and thereby give certain property to a particular person or persons, and that such contract may be specifically enforced if such contract is not in itself unlawful. Under our statute of frauds (Gen. Stat. 1894, § 4215), "every contract for the leasing for a longer period than one year or for the sale of any lands or any interest in lands shall be void unless the contract or some note or memorandum thereof expressing the consideration is in writing and subscribed by the party by whom the lease or sale is to be made or by his lawful agent thereunto authorized in writing." But by § 4216, same statute, it is provided that "nothing in this chapter contained shall be construed to abridge the power of courts of equity to compel the specific performance of agreements in cases of part performance of such agreements." The original statute of frauds was passed in the reign of Charles II., and a majority of the American states have enacted laws substantially, in legal effect, the same as the English statute. Section 4215 of our statute above quoted is an illustration. "The controlling motive of the statute is one of expediency and convenience, and this motive has always been kept in view by the ablest courts in their work of interpretation. As its primary object is to prevent mistakes, frauds, and perjuries by substituting written for oral evidence in the most important classes of contracts, the courts of equity have established the principle, which they apply under various circumstances, that it shall not be used as an instrument for the accomplishment of fraudulent purposes. Designed to prevent fraud, it shall not be permitted to work fraud. This principle lies at the basis of the doctrine concerning part performance, but is also enforced wherever it is necessary to secure equitable results." Pom. Contr. § 71. In the very nature of human legislative enactments, it is sometimes impossible to guard against every case of fraud, but equity, with its remedial powers, frequently steps in where law has failed or is powerless to accomplish the desired effect. And the legislature, recognizing the great wrongs that may sometimes be perpetrated in the name and under color of law, has enacted § 4216, above quoted, whereby equity may be invoked to stay the iniquities of those who rely upon the rigid rules of law; and it has thus made part performance a ground for the more perfect administration of justice. There are certain special features in the contract herein involved, appearing in the relation of the parties, in the terms of the subject-matter, and in the full performance on the part of the plaintiff, where damages would be inadequate if not impracticable. These special features and incidents of the contract and the relations of the parties are, in our opinion, sufficient to bring the case within the rules justifying an action for specific performance in behalf of plaintiff, whereby her interests can only be satisfied by an actual fulfilment of the stipulations which have been made for her benefit, and are justified by the authorities.

In the case of Slingerland v. Slingerland, 30 Minn. 197, in an action to compel specific performance for conveyance of land, the plaintiff was never in the possession of the land, and never made any improvements thereon. The defendant was the father of the plaintiff, and owned a large farm; and the son had brought several different actions or proceedings against the father, each being practically a party in interest, and the father had one suit as plaintiff against the son, and all of them being on the court calendar for trial when the father proposed orally to the son that if he would dismiss the action brought by him, and consent that the money involved in the other action should be paid to the father, and the proceedings discontinued, he (the father) would convey to the son a certain farm, and the personal judgment belonging to it, on the day when the son should be married to a young lady named. The son accepted the proposition, dismissed four actions, and the money involved in the other action was paid to the father, and the proceedings discontinued. The son married the young lady, but the father refused to make the conveyance agreed upon. An action by the son for specific performance was sustained, the court holding that the son could not be restored in respect to the action and proceedings to the position he was in at the time of making the oral agreement, nor could any action for damages he might bring put him in as good position, and that the agreement was not within the statute of frauds. In that case it was further stated that in case of payment in services, if their character be such that it is impossible to estimate their value by any such standard, the performance of them is a part performance; citing, among other authorities, Rhodes v. Rhodes, 3 Sandf. Ch. 279. In that case it was held: "In general, the payment of the consideration is not such a part performance of a parol agreement for the purchase of lands as will relieve it from the operation of the statute of frauds. But where the consideration consists of services to be rendered, which are of such a peculiar character that it is impossible to estimate their value to the vendor by a pecuniary standard and the vendor did not intend to measure them by such a standard,—the performance of the services will entitle the vendee to a specific performance, notwithstanding the contract was by parol. This was held of an agreement made between two brothers, who had always lived together and owned their property in common, by which the one having a family agreed to provide for and take care of the other,—who had no family, and who was subject to epileptic fits,—during his life, in consideration that the former should have all the real and personal estate of the latter. Held, also, that the contract was so far certain and reasonable in its terms that it ought to be enforced in equity." The doctrine of that case is cited with approval by Pomeroy in his work on Contracts (p. 161), where he says that the principle of this case is sound. He further says: "But if the services are of such a peculiar character that it is impossible to estimate their value by any pecuniary standard, and it is evident that the parties did not intend to measure them by any such standard, then the plaintiff, after the performance of these services, could not be restored to the situation in which he was before, or be compensated by any recovery of legal damages. Under these circumstances, the rendition of the services, or the procuring them to be rendered, is a part performance of the verbal agreement, and the case is quite analogous to those in which outlays are made for improvements by a vendee or lessee under a parol contract. This principle is, at bottom, the same as that upon which the courts have proceeded; especially in a series of recent English decisions, in specifically enforcing certain agreements for continuous acts of labor and services, and construction of works where the legal remedy of damages for their breach is impracticable. It has also been applied under analogous circumstances, where the plaintiff has not, indeed, made any payment, but has done other acts in pursuance of the verbal agreement, but not directly affecting its subject-matter, which would leave him without adequate remedy unless the contract is enforced. . . . Payment of the price, although not of itself sufficient to admit the equitable remedy, is always regarded as a strong circumstance in connection with other acts, such as possession or the making of improvements."

In Davison v. Davison, 13 N. J. Eq. 246, the services of Olson were held to be a good part performance of his father's verbal agreement to leave him a farm after the father's death.

Van Dyne v. Vredland, first reported in 11 N. J. Eq. 370, and on a second hearing in 12 N. J. Eq. 142, was a case in which "the father of an infant child made an agreement with an uncle of the infant, at the uncle's request, to this effect: that the uncle should take the infant and adopt him as his own child, and that he would treat him as his own son, and that the property he should have should be given to the child, so that it should belong to him at the death of the uncle and his wife. The uncle took the child, and had him baptized, and the child assumed his surname, and lived with him twenty-five years. Held, that the child might maintain his bill upon the agreement after such performance."

In Wright v. Wright, 58 N. W. 54, a Michigan case, the court held: "Defendant, in his second year, was indentured to deceased until his majority. When he was eight, deceased and his wife, being childless, adopted him, under the law then in force, and his name was changed. He gave them his entire services, without pay, till he was over twenty-two, when deceased died. The widow testified that they intended that he should be their heir, that her husband believed that this was effected by the adoption, that defendant thought he was their child till after her husband's death, and that they never talked about paying him for his services. The adoption law was held unconstitutional. Held that defendant's performance entitled him to the inheritance, by way of specific performance of the oral contract." 99 Mich. 170, 23 L. R. A. 196.

In Missouri, in the case of Sutton v. Hayden, 62 Mo. 101, a case in which one Mrs. Green made an agreement by which she took, in its infancy, the child of her brother, upon the understanding that at her death all the property owned by her should go to the child, the child was to come and live with her, be as a daughter to her, and take care of her for the remainder of her life. The child entered upon the performance of her part of the agreement, and throughout the course of Mrs. Green's life rendered the services, and, so far as lay in her power, performed her part of the agreement. Mrs. Green died without having in any way secured the property to the child. Says the court: "There are things which money cannot buy,—a thousand nameless and delicate services and attentions, incapable of being the subject of explicit contract, which money, with all its peculiar potency, is powerless to purchase. The law furnishes no standard whereby the value of such services can be estimated, and equity can only make an approximation in that direction, by decreeing the specific execution of the contract."

See also Sharkey v. McDermott, 60 Am. Rep. 270, where it was held: "An agreement by a man and his wife to adopt a child, provide and care well for her, and leave her their property, at their death, performed on the part of the child, is enforceable as to the property upon their death." 91 Mo. 655.

In Brinton v. Van Cott, 33 Pac. 218, it was held as follows: "A verbal contract, whereby plaintiff agrees to live with and take care of an old woman until her death, in consideration of her promise to leave all her property to plaintiff, is taken out of the statute of frauds by the rendition of the services during the lifetime of the woman; and, after her death, equity will specifically enforce the contract, on the theory of part performance, since the services rendered are of a peculiar character, not intended by the parties to be measured by a pecuniary standard." "A contract by which an old woman, in apparent good health, and having the expectancy of many years of life, agrees to leave all her property, worth about $5,000, to a sixteen-year-old girl, in consideration of the latter's promise to live with and take care of her as long as she lives, is not void for want of mutuality and fairness; and after her death the contract will be specifically enforced in favor of the girl, who performed her part of the agreement, though the woman died within three or four months after the execution of the contract." 8 Utah, 460. Also: "In this territory [Utah] the statute of frauds is in full force. 2 Comp. Laws, § 2831. It is therefore incumbent upon the appellant to show by her complaint that she has partly or wholly performed her contract, so as to take it out of the statute of frauds. 'When the consideration of the agreement consists in work, labor, and services personally done and rendered by the plaintiff, if the value of the same can be ascertained with reasonable accuracy in an action at law, and adequately compensated by the recovery of damages, then neither the services themselves nor the payment for them will avail as a part performance of the verbal agreement. But if the services are of such a peculiar character that it is impossible to estimate their value by any pecuniary standard, and it is evident that the parties did not intend to measure them by any such standard, then the plaintiff, after the performance of these services, could not be restored to the situation in which he was before, or be compensated by any recovery of legal damages.' Under these circumstances, the rendition of the services is a part performance of a verbal agreement. The act of part performance of a verbal agreement for services must be such that it would be a fraud on the party performing for the other party to refuse to perform his part as agreed between them. Pom. Contr. § 114." See also Korminsky v. Korminsky, 2 Misc. 138; Godine v. Kidd, 64 Hun. 585; Jaffee v. Jacobson, 4 U. S. App. 4, 48 Fed. Rep. 21, 14 L. R. A. 352, 1 C. C. A. 24; McKinnon v. McKinnon, 12 U. S. App. 433, 56 Fed. Rep. 409, 5 C. C. A. 530; Haines v. Haines, 6 Md. 435.

In the recent case of Kofka v. Rosicky, 41 Neb. 328, 25 L. R. A. 207, a girl about seventeen months old was given by her parents to her uncle and aunt, under an agreement that they would adopt her, and rear, nurture, and educate her, and that she was to be as their own child, and at their death to receive all the property which they might own. She lived with them until they died, some ten years, took their name, did not recognize or know her own father and mother in their true relation, but knew them as, and called them, uncle and aunt, and knew and recognized her uncle and aunt as father and mother. The uncle died intestate, possessed of real estate. It was held there was such a part performance of the contract by the parties thereto as entitled the child to a decree giving her the title to the property, by way of specific performance of the contract.

Now, the first contract brings this case within the doctrine above stated. The Fosseens were childless. They took these children as members of their own household. A strong affection grew up between the sisters and their foster parents. For many years they rendered faithful services to their uncle and aunt, doing household work of every kind, as well as outdoor work. They nursed and cared for these old people, and in no respect were they disobedient, negligent, or unfaithful in their duties or attentions to their uncle and aunt. It is a fair inference that these childless old people regarded these nieces with a love and affection almost akin to that of parents for their own children, and in return, the services and society of these children to them were of great benefit and pleasure. The value of such society and services to their uncle and aunt is incapable of measurement in money. Emery v. Darling, 50 Ohio St. 160-167; Rhodes v. Rhodes, 3 Sandf. Ch. 279.

The services were continuous for many years, until plaintiff was married, when she was twenty-one years old. The first contract would alone entitle the plaintiff to a specific performance. But the Fosseens encouraged and induced the plaintiff and her sisters to enter into the second contract, not that the Fosseens were, in substance, to do any more for the sisters than they had agreed to do under the first contract, but to procure from the sisters a further and valuable consideration to themselves. When their father died, in 1876, he left them real estate of the value of $2,000, which the Fosseens induced them to sell; and to please and satisfy these foster parents, they sold the real estate for $1,300, or $700 less than its actual value, and paid the consideration to the Fosseens, upon their further promise to do just what they had, years before, substantially promised to do,—leave their property at their death to the sisters; and this payment of such money was a strong circumstance, creating an additional equity for the enforcement of this action. Now, courts of equity will not allow the statute of frauds to be used as an instrument of fraud. Bork v. Martin, 132 N. Y. 280. And where a person tacitly encourages an act to be done, he cannot afterwards exercise his legal right in opposition to such consent, if his conduct or active encouragement induced the other party to change his position, so that he will be peculiarly prejudiced by the assertion of such adversary claim. Swain v. Seamens, 9 Wall. 254, 19 L. ed. 554. One of the underlying principles upon which an action for specific performance may be enforced is that the plaintiff cannot be restored to the situation in which he was before the contract was made, and cannot be compensated by the recovery of legal damages. Slingerland v. Slingerland, 39 Minn. 197; Pom. Contr. p. 162. The land sold by the sisters at a loss of $700 could not be restored to them, especially as the consideration received by them had passed into the hands of the Fosseens, and beyond the control of the sisters, and hence they could not be placed in statu quo.

While the complaint is not complete in its description of all the property of which James Fosseen died seised, nor of that sold, and the proceeds of which are held by the defendant as executor, nor of the amount and kind of personal property so held by the defendant, yet, as against the demurrer, there is enough real property the subject of the action, specifically described, to entitle the plaintiff to maintain this action. It is also to be noted that the contracts provided that the sisters should have the Fosseens' personal property on their decease; hence the contract was an entirety, and must be enforced as such. Mann v. Higgins, 83 Cal. 66.

Great stress is placed by the appellant upon the fact, as he alleges, that the plaintiff has had her day in court; that the will has been proved, and her claim has not been presented or allowed in the probate court; and that such court has fixed the status of the estate. It is a sufficient answer to this contention to say that this is not an action for the construction of a will, or for the distribution of any property thereunder. The probate court has no jurisdiction over actions for the specific performance of parol contracts for the conveyance of real estate. Title 10, chap. 45a, Gen. Stat. 1894, and the sections thereunder, providing that the probate court may decree the conveyance of land, give that court jurisdiction only where the contract for conveyance is in writing; and it cannot decide controverted questions arising upon the merits even in such cases, but must leave the applicant or petitioner to his remedy by action. Mousseau v. Mousseau, 40 Minn. 236. Hence, if the probate court had no jurisdiction to hear this case, the plaintiff is not barred of her rights to enforce her contract in a court of general jurisdiction.

There is no merit in the contention of the defendant that the complaint does not show that the Fosseens had either jointly or separately any property whatever while they lived. Their promise was by the first contract to give and leave to plaintiff and her sisters all the property, both real and personal, which they owned and might own at the time of their death. Subsequently, by the terms of the second contract, said James Fosseen and Anna Mary Fosseen, and each of them, agreed to convey by deed, or bequeath, to said plaintiff and her sisters, said property, such conveyance to take effect upon their demise. This would include all the property which they owned jointly and separately.

The last point raised goes to the nonjoinder of parties plaintiff and defendant. But the demurrer is one as to want of jurisdiction, and insufficiency of facts stated to constitute a cause of action, and does not reach the objection that there is a defect of parties, either by nonjoinder or misjoinder.

Order affirmed.

Start, Ch. J., concurring:

I concur in the result, and in all that is said in the opinion, except as to conveyance of plaintiff's real estate. I am inclined to the opinion that she could be compensated in damages for the real estate.

Mitchell, J., concurring:

While in the main I concur in the foregoing opinion, I do not attach much, if any, importance to the fact that the plaintiff sold her own property for less than its value, and gave the proceeds to the deceased. I think the case is taken out of the statute of frauds by the fact that the consideration which plaintiff has furnished consisted, not merely of services in the ordinary sense of the word, but also of the assumption of a peculiar personal and domestic relation to the deceased as a member of their family; and therefore the value of the consideration as a whole is incapable of being estimated by any mere pecuniary standard.

Collins, J., concurring:

I am of the opinion that plaintiff could be compensated in damages to the amount of her loss when selling her real estate, and therefore, that the fact of such sale is of no consequence here.

Canty, J., concurring:

I concur in a part of the result arrived at, but not in the foregoing opinion. I do not think that the statute of frauds should be brushed aside merely because the consideration for the land purchased on a verbal contract is personal services, whether it is difficult to estimate the value of such services or not. But I am of the opinion that the fact that the plaintiff was an infant, under the care and control of the vendor, and having no natural or legal guardian at the time, is a sufficient ground for taking the case out of the statute of frauds. Everyone who assumes to act as guardian for, or manage the affairs of, an infant, is, at the election of the infant, estopped to deny that he has assumed the relation of guardian to the infant. 9 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 121, and cases cited. Even where the adult has not the care or control of the infant, their dealings are scrutinized, and every presumption is against the adult, the same as if he bore to the infant the relation of guardian to ward. Johnson v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 56 Minn. 365, 26 L. R. A. 187; Alt v. Graff, 65 Minn. 191. But, when the adult has the sole care and control of the infant, equity should hold that such a fiduciary relation exists between them as to take the case out of the statute of frauds as to the real estate, but specific performance should not be awarded as to the personal property.

43 L. R. A.

St. PAUL & DULUTH RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

City of DULUTH et al., Respts.

(.....Minn.....)

*1. The right granted to the Lake Superior & Mississippi Railroad Company (now St. Paul & Duluth Railroad Company) by Special Laws 1861, chap. 1, to construct its railroad across any public road or highway, does not extend to branch roads which are neither a part of, nor appurtenant to, its main line to the west end of Lake Superior.

2. The mere construction, maintenance, and occasional use by a railroad company (which has no conveyance of the land) of an ordinary railroad track across a platted street while it still remains unimproved and unfit for public use, and before public convenience or necessity requires it to be opened and improved for use as a street, does not constitute adverse possession as against the public. Such occupancy must be presumed to be subject to the paramount right of the public.

(July 12, 1898.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the District Court for St. Louis County overruling a motion for new trial after dismissal of an action brought to enjoin defendants from tearing up a track which had been laid across a public street. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Hadley & Armstrong for appellant.

Messrs. Thomas S. Wood, Ayres, Morris, & Greene and J. B. Richards, for respondents:

A grant of franchise to a corporation is to be strictly construed; nothing passes thereby but what is expressly granted, or is necessary to be implied to allow of the exercise of a power expressly granted.

Proprietors of Charles River Bridge v. Proprietors of Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. 545, 9 L. ed. 823.

The right to cross highways is to be exercised in connection with, and so far as necessary to, the construction of the main line and the main line only, and with no branches.

By the simple act of placing ties in Arthur avenue and laying rails on those ties, and leaving the ties and rails there for fifteen years, appellant could not obtain either an easement or a fee in the land.

Texas Western R. Co. v. Wilson, 83 Tex. 155; Emery v. Raleigh & G. R. Co. 102 N. C. 209; Indianapolis, P. & C. R. Co. v. Ross, 47 Ind. 30; Wayzata v. Great Northern R. Co. 50 Minn. 438.

*Headnotes by BUCK, J.

NOTE.—For rights acquired as against the public by adverse possession of highway or street, see note to Meyer v. Graham (Neb.) 18 L. R. A. 146; also Webb v. Demopolis (Ala.) 21 L. R. A. 62.

The proof to support title by adverse possession must be of the clearest possible character.

1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 887; Sydnor v. Palmer, 29 Wis. 226.

The possession was not hostile.

Reilly v. Racine, 51 Wis. 526; Lane v. Kennedy, 13 Ohio St. 42; Com. v. Boston, 16 Pick. 442; Henshaw v. Hunting, 1 Gray, 205; Texas Western R. Co. v. Wilson, 83 Tex. 155; Smyley v. Hastings, 22 N. Y. 217; Bridges v. Wyckoff, 67 N. Y. 130; Olean v. Steyner, 135 N. Y. 341, 17 L. R. A. 640; New York v. Law, 6 N. Y. Supp. 632; Bedell v. Shaw, 59 N. Y. 46; Re Commissioners of Public Parks, 25 N. Y. S. R. 231; Hurley v. Mississippi & R. River Boom Co. 34 Minn. 143; Borer v. Lange, 44 Minn. 285.

What will be hostile possession will vary according to the character of the street or of the possession.

Hostile possession "is possession taken with an intention to claim the title as owner, and in derogation of the rights of the true owner."

1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 790; Sherin v. Brackett, 36 Minn. 152.

Buck, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The St. Paul & Duluth Railroad Company, plaintiff herein, is the successor of the Lake Superior & Mississippi Railroad Company, and for many years has maintained a railroad track on Rice's Point, in the city of Duluth, crossing two streets or highways known as "Garfield Avenue" (formerly "Third Street") and "Arthur Avenue" (formerly "Fifth Street"). In the early part of June, 1897, the defendants tore up this railroad track where it was laid across Arthur avenue; and the plaintiff immediately replaced the track, and obtained an injunction from the court restraining the defendants from tearing up, removing, or interfering with the track during the pendency of the action. The differences as to Garfield avenue were subsequently adjusted. The application for a permanent injunction as to Arthur avenue came on for hearing on its merits in September, 1897, at a general term of the district court of St. Louis county, and upon defendants' motion the action was dismissed. A motion for a new trial was made and denied, and plaintiff appeals.

A considerable portion of the plaintiff's evidence was introduced in support of its claim that it had acquired an easement in the nature of a right of way across Arthur avenue, the locus in quo, by adverse possession. Rice's Point was platted in 1858. Arthur avenue, which appears upon this plat, was from 1881 up to 1896 a sandy or marshy waste; and during this time it had not been opened, used, or worked as a public highway. It was not needed during such time for highway purposes, and had no actual, visible marks of existence for avenue or street purposes; and fifteen years had not elapsed between the time when it was first required for public use as a highway and the commencement of this action. Gen. Stat. 1894, § 5155, provides "that all the provisions of this title ["The Time of Commencing Actions"] as to the time of the commencement of civil actions shall apply to municipal and all other corporations with like power and effect as the same applies to natural persons." This law would undoubtedly apply to this case if Arthur avenue had, during a period of fifteen years, been opened, worked, and used as a public highway by the city of Duluth prior to the commencement of this action. But the difficult question arises upon the fact that during part of said time it was not so opened, worked, and used and recognized as a public street, nor needed for such purpose, by said city. When a party makes a plat of his land, with streets and avenues marked thereon, and duly files the plat for record, the municipal corporation within whose boundaries the land is situate may adjudge when its necessities require the use of such streets and avenues for public purposes; and until it has so determined, and taken possession, and opened and used it, the statute of limitations will not commence to run against it. The mere execution and filing of a plat by the owner of land cannot entail upon a municipal corporation the absolute duty to protect the streets thereon marked, as against occupants thereof. Its right in regard to the plat may remain dormant for a reasonable time, at least, but until such rights spring into life no legal obligations arise against it. In this western country, and especially during the so-called "boom times," thousands of acres of land were platted, and frequently included land designated for street purposes, which, by reason of hills, rocks, marshes, or deep water at various places therein, was utterly unfit for public ways until improved, and often at great expense. Such designated streets a municipal corporation is not bound to protect against occupants until the time arrives when such a street, or part of it, is required for actual public use, and is actually opened. Of course, this rule would apply to any street marked on a plat, where the dedication thereof is not accepted, and it is not opened for public use. Hence persons in possession of such platted streets, or part of them, will, until the time arrives when such streets are required for actual public use, be presumed to hold subject to the paramount right of the public. Reilly v. Racine, 51 Wis. 526; Derby v. Alling, 40 Conn. 410; Henshaw v. Hunting, 1 Gray, 210.

It is unnecessary to discuss at length the question of adverse possession of the locus in quo prior to 1881, as the evidence is too meager and insufficient to establish such possession. Evidence of adverse possession is to be construed strictly, and is not to be made out by inference or presumption, but by clear and positive proof. The burden of proving the essential facts which create title by prescription rests upon him who asserts it. No such facts were proved in this case as to possession prior to the year 1881.

The next point raised by appellant is that the special acts of the legislature which incorporated the Lake Superior & Mississippi Railroad Company authorized the St. Paul & Duluth Railroad Company to construct its tracks across Arthur avenue, without need of further authorization. We have examined the material provisions of the various legislative acts bearing upon this case, and we find none of them authorizing the building of the track in question across Arthur avenue. If these acts can be construed as applicable to the main line, or even to a side track, where it crosses public streets and highways, they are inapplicable to a track of this character. It is not part of the main line, and cannot be properly considered a spur or side track. It is constructed nearly at right angles from the main line, extending a long distance through private property, and over the public streets not occupied by the main line. It is in fact a distinct branch of the main line, and we find no express or implied authority for its crossing Arthur avenue, the locus in quo in question. It would serve no good purpose to go into any further details, or extend this opinion.

Order affirmed.

OREGON SUPREME COURT.

ESBERG-GUNST CIGAR COMPANY, Appt.,
v.

City of PORTLAND, Respt.

(.....Or.....)

1. That the waterworks of a city were built under authority imposed upon it by the legislature and under the direction and supervision of a committee appointed by the legislature will not exempt the city from the general rule which imposes upon municipal corporations owning and operating such works liability for injuries to private individuals through their negligent construction or operation.
2. The vote of a city accepting an act permitting the construction of waterworks and appointing a committee to supervise the work will make the committee its agent for whose negligent acts it will be responsible under the doctrine of respondet superior.
3. Sufficient evidence of negligence in the construction of a water main to carry the question to the jury exists when it is shown to have burst three times under ordinary pressure, and that pipe of its size will not, when properly constructed and laid, burst under such pressure.
4. The mere happening of an accident causing injury is evidence of negligence whenever the thing causing the injury is under control of defendant and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those who have the management use proper care.

(January 16, 1899.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Multnomah County in favor of defendant in an action brought

NOTE.—As to liability for damage by water from falling tank or standpipe, see Defiance Water Co. v. Olinger (Ohio) 32 L. R. A. 736.

As to presumption of negligence in several classes of cases from the occurrence of accidents, see note to Barnowski v. Helson (Mich.) 15 L. R. A. 33.

For some cases as to such presumptions from accidents injuring property, see also Shafer v. Lacock (Pa.) 29 L. R. A. 254; Judson v. Giant Powder Co. (Cal.) 29 L. R. A. 718; and Ryder v. Kinsey (Minn.) 34 L. R. A. 557.
43 L. R. A.

to hold it responsible for injury to plaintiff's goods through the bursting of a water main.
Reversed.

Statement by Bean, J.:

This is an action to recover damages for an injury to plaintiff's goods, caused by the bursting of an alleged negligently defective water main belonging to the defendant city, and the consequent flooding of the cellar in which such goods were stored. In 1885 the charter of the city of Portland was amended by adding thereto an additional chapter (Laws 1885, p. 97), by which the city was authorized and empowered to construct or purchase, keep, conduct, and maintain waterworks therein of a character and capacity sufficient to furnish the city and its inhabitants with water for all uses and purposes necessary for the comfort, convenience, and well-being of the same, and to issue and dispose of its bonds for that purpose. §§ 142, 153. The powers thus given to the city were to be exercised by fifteen resident taxpayers thereof, named in the act, styled collectively "the water committee," nine of whom should constitute a quorum, and who were authorized to fill by appointment all vacancies which may occur in their number. §§ 143, 145. This committee was required to organize within a certain time by the election of a chairman and clerk, whose duties were prescribed by the act (§§ 144, 146-148); to appoint a treasurer, who shall have the care and custody of all moneys received by the committee from the sale of bonds or otherwise for the construction or purchase of waterworks, and shall pay out the same on the order of the chairman, countersigned by the clerk of the committee, and not otherwise (§ 149); to employ and discharge, from time to time, such other agents, workmen, laborers, and servants at such compensation or wages as it may deem necessary and convenient to the accomplishment of the purposes of the act (§ 151). It is further provided that whenever and as soon as the works provided for in the act are, in the judgment of the committee, ready for use, it shall select from its members, if a sufficient number will consent to serve, and, if not, from the resident taxpayers of the city, five persons for the several terms of two, four, six, eight, and ten years, who shall be styled individually "water commissioners," and collectively "the water commission," to which it is required to turn over the waterworks, and all property appurtenant thereto, together with all books, papers, and accounts relating to the construction or purchase thereof; and thereafter the power and authority given by the act to the city to keep, conduct, and maintain waterworks shall be exercised by such commission. §§ 154, 155, 157. After the water commission has been selected by the committee, as provided in the act, the members of such commission shall thereafter be appointed by the governor of the state from among the resident taxpayers of the city, as vacancies may occur from time to time. The commission is given power (1) to employ, hire, and discharge all such agents, workmen, laborers, and servants as it may deem necessary or convenient in the conduct and management of the waterworks; (2) to make all needful rules and regulations in reference thereto; (3) to establish rates for the use and consumption of water by the city and inhabitants thereof, including the people living along the line or in the vicinity of the works without the city; (4) to provide for the payment of water rates monthly in advance, and to shut off the water from any house, tenement, or place for which the water rate is not duly paid, or when any rule or regulation is disregarded or disobeyed; (5) to do any other act or make any other regulations necessary and convenient for the conduct of its business and the due execution of the power and authority given it by the act, and not contrary to law. § 159. All money collected or received by the commission for the use and consumption of water or otherwise is required to be deposited with the treasurer of the city, who shall keep the same separate and apart from other funds, and pay it out on the order of the chairman of the commission, countersigned by the clerk and to the holder of any overdue interest coupons of the bonds issued under the provisions of the act, on the presentation and surrender thereof. § 158. It is made the duty of the commission annually, before the 1st day of January, to make a written estimate of the probable expense of maintaining and conducting the waterworks during the ensuing year, and also the cost of any contemplated alteration, improvement, or extension, and thereupon ascertain and prescribe, as nearly as it conveniently can, a water rate for such year that will insure a sufficient income from the sale of water to pay such expense and costs, together with one year's interest on the bonds then issued and outstanding. § 160. And, after the expiration of five years, in fixing the water rates it is authorized to include in its estimate therefor a sum equal to 1 per centum on the par value of the bonds then issued and outstanding, which sum shall be collected and invested under the direction of the commission as a sinking fund for the payment or redemption of such bonds. § 161. Immediately after the act of 1885 became a law, the persons named therein as the water committee proceeded to organize as directed, and to issue and dispose of city bonds, from the proceeds of which they purchased, in December, 1886, the plant of the Portland Water Company, a private corporation then engaged in supplying the city and its inhabitants with water for hire, and subsequently commenced to enlarge the works so purchased by the construction of a gravity system, by which water should be taken from Bull Run creek at a point some miles distant from the city. The act of 1885 was, in substance, incorporated in the later act (Laws 1891, p. 796), providing for the consolidation of the cities of Portland, East Portland, and Albina, which went into effect in July, 1891, after having been accepted by a majority of the legal voters of the several cities interested, at an election held for the purpose in June, 1891, and is also contained in the subsequent charter of 1893 (Laws 1893, p. 810). During the process of enlarging the works, the water committee, during the year 1892, laid a 24-inch main on Fourth street, and connected it with the other mains comprising the water system. On January 13, 1896, this main burst, and the waters escaping therefrom flooded the streets, and the cellars of the adjoining buildings, including the premises occupied by the plaintiff, and used as a tobacco and cigar store, to its damage in the alleged sum of $2,607.87. Its claim therefor having been rejected by the city, this action was brought, resulting in a judgment of nonsuit, from which the appeal is taken.

Messrs. Cox, Cotton, Teal, & Minor,
for appellant:

Charters are never imposed upon municipal corporations except at their request. They are privileges of great value, and when such privileges are granted concurrent duties are imposed. There is no difference in this respect between a municipal corporation and a private corporation or private individual.

Henly v. Lyme, 5 Bing. 91; Weet v. Brockport, 16 N. Y. 161, note 165; Meares v. Wilmington Comrs. 31 N. C. (9 Ired. L.) 73, 49 Am. Dec. 412; Pittsburgh v. Grier, 22 Pa. 63, 60 Am. Dec. 65; Bigelow v. Randolph, 14 Gray, 541; Jones v. New Haven, 34 Conn. 1; Weightman v. Washington, 1 Black, 39, 17 L. ed. 52; Detroit v. Blackeby, 21 Mich. 117, 4 Am. Rep. 450; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 27.

The authority to provide the city with water, if not inherent in the city as a municipal corporation, was vouchsafed by the several charters, and was to be exercised by the council.

Oregon Sess. Laws 1870, pp. 120, 123, 124; Oregon Sess. Laws 1882, pp. 141, 142; Oregon Sess. Laws, Special Sess. 1885, pp. 97-102; Sess. Laws 1891, pp. 832-837; Sess. Laws 1893, pp. 853-857; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 27, 147, 443, and note; Hale v. Houghton, 8 Mich. 458; Rome v. Cabot, 28 Ga. 50; McKnight v. New Orleans, 24 La. Ann. 412; Grant v. Davenport, 36 Iowa, 396.

In constructing and maintaining a system of waterworks the city of Portland acts. not in a public capacity, but as a private corporation.

Sess. Laws 1885, Special Sess. pp. 97 et seq.; Sess. Laws 1891, pp. 832 et seq.; Sess. Laws 1893, pp. 153 et seq.; Bailey v. New York, 3 Hill, 531, 38 Am. Dec. 669; Oliver v. Worcester, 102 Mass. 489, 3 Am. Rep. 485; Richmond v. Long, 17 Gratt. 375, 94 Am. Dec. 461; Petersburg v. Applegarth, 28 Gratt. 321, 26 Am. Rep. 357; Western Sav. Fund Soc. v. Philadelphia, 31 Pa. 175, 72 Am. Dec. 730; Aldrich v. Tripp, 11 R. I. 141, 23 Am. Rep. 434; Hannon v. St. Louis County, 62 Mo. 313; Crossett v. Janesville, 28 Wis. 420; Helena v. Thompson, 29 Ark. 569; Safety Insulated Wire & Cable Co. v. Baltimore, 25 U. S. App. 166, 66 Fed. Rep. 140, 13 C. C. A. 375; Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank v. Arkansas City, 40 U. S. App. 257, 76 Fed. Rep. 271, 34 L. R. A. 518, 22 C. C. A. 171; Los Angeles City Water Co. v. Los Angeles, 88 Fed. Rep. 731; Donahoe v. Kansas City, 136 Mo. 664.

The water committee is an agency of the city, and the city must answer for it. Respondent superior.

Oregon Laws 1870, pp. 120, 123, 124; Oregon Laws, Special Sess. 1885, pp. 97 et seq.; Oregon Laws 1891, pp. 832 et seq.; Oregon Laws 1893, pp. 853 et seq.; Oregon Laws 1882, pp. 141, 142; Henly v. Lyne, 5 Bing. 91, 3 Barn. & Ad. 77; Bailey v. New York, 3 Hill, 531, 38 Am. Dec. 669, 2 Denio, 433; Sage v. Brooklyn, 89 N. Y. 189; Fleming v. Suspension Bridge, 92 N. Y. 368; Genet v. Brooklyn, 99 N. Y. 296; Re New York, 90 N. Y. 569; Tormey v. New York, 12 Hun, 542; Ham v. New York, 70 N. Y. 459; Oliver v. Worcester, 102 Mass. 489, 3 Am. Rep. 485; Hand v. Brookline, 126 Mass. 324; Brooks v. Somerville, 106 Mass. 271; Perkins v. Lawrence, 136 Mass. 305; Stoddard v. Winchester, 157 Mass. 567; Watson v. Needham, 161 Mass. 404, 24 L. R. A. 287; Aldrich v. Tripp, 11 R. I. 141, 23 Am. Rep. 434; Detroit v. Blackeby, 21 Mich. 117, 4 Am. Rep. 450; Barnes v. District of Columbia, 91 U. S. 541, 23 L. ed. 440; Anne Arundel County Comrs. v. Duckett, 20 Md. 468, 83 Am. Dec. 557; Pittsburgh v. Grier, 22 Pa. 54, 60 Am. Dec. 65; Philadelphia v. Field, 58 Pa. 320; Richmond v. Long, 17 Gratt. 375, 94 Am. Dec. 461; Meares v. Wilmington Comrs. 31 N. C. (9 Ired. L.) 73, 49 Am. Dec. 412; Jones v. New Haven, 34 Conn. 1; Springfield v. Le Claire, 49 Ill. 476; Clayburgh v. Chicago, 25 Ill. 535, 79 Am. Dec. 346; Browning v. Springfield, 17 Ill. 143, 63 Am. Dec. 345; David v. Portland Water Committee, 14 Or. 98.

As there is some evidence of negligence, it was error to take the case from the jury.

1 Greenl. Evidence, § 49, note; Southwell v. Beezley, 5 Or. 458; Salmon v. Olds, 9 Or. 488; Grant v. Baker, 12 Or. 329; Tippin v. Ward, 5 Or. 450; Ferrera v. Parke, 19 Or. 141; Anderson v. North Pacific Lumber Co. 21 Or. 281.

The city in putting in and maintaining waterworks acted at its own peril, sic utere tuo ut alienum non lœdas.

1 Thomp. Neg. pp. 2, 25, 28, 30, 31, 38-41; Fletcher v. Rylands, L. R. 1 Exch. 265; Rylands v. Fletcher, L. R. 3 H. L. 330; Fletcher v. Smith, L. R. 7 Exch. 305; Fletcher v. Smith, L. R. 2 App. Cas. 781; Hay v. Cohoes Co. 2 N. Y. 159; Tremain v. Cohoes Co. 2 N. 43 L. R. A.

Y. 163, 51 Am. Dec. 284; Humphries v. Cousins, L. R. 2 C. P. Div. 239; Ball v. Nye, 99 Mass. 582, 97 Am. Dec. 56; Gorham v. Gross, 125 Mass. 232, 28 Am. Rep. 224; Cahill v. Eastman, 18 Minn. 324, 10 Am. Rep. 184.

The bursting of the main on Fourth street, especially where this had occurred several times and the city had taken no precaution to prevent a recurrence, in itself constitutes evidence of negligence sufficient at least to make a prima facie case for the jury—res ipsa loquitur.

2 Thomp. Neg. p. 1220; Kearney v. London, B. & S. C. R. Co. L. R. 5 Q. B. 411, L. R. 6 Q. B. 759; Byrne v. Boodle, 2 Hurlst. & C. 722; Scott v. London & St. K. Docks Co. 3 Hurlst. & C. 596; Briggs v. Oliver, 4 Hurlst. & C. 403; Mullen v. St. John, 57 N. Y. 567, 15 Am. Rep. 530; Hogan v. Manhattan R. Co. 149 N. Y. 23; Sheridan v. Foley, 58 N. J. L. 230; Howser v. Cumberland & P. R. Co. 80 Md. 146, 27 L. R. A. 154; Vineott v. Cook, 4 Hun, 318; Lyons v. Rosenthal, 11 Hun, 46; Morris v. Strobel & W. Co. 81 Hun, 1; Warren v. Kauffman, 2 Phila. 259; Hays v. Gallagher, 72 Pa. 136; Thomas v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 100 Mass. 156; Wharton, Neg. 2d ed. §§ 857, 858; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Phillips, 49 Ill. 234, 55 Ill. 194; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Houck, 72 Ill. 285; Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Beggs, 85 Ill. 80, 28 Am. Rep. 613; Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Moore, 77 Ill. 217; John Morris Co. v. Burgess, 44 Ill. App. 27; Koonts v. Oregon L. & Nav. Co. 20 Or. 2; Carhart v. Auburn Gaslight Co. 22 Barb. 297; Holbrook v. Utica & S. R. Co. 12 N. Y. 236, 64 Am. Dec. 502; Ware v. Gay, 11 Pick. 106; Feital v. Middlesex R. Co. 109 Mass. 398, 12 Am. Rep. 720; Congreve v. Smith, 18 N. Y. 79; Curtis v. Rochester & S. R. Co. 18 N. Y. 534, 75 Am. Dec. 258; Stokes v. Saltonstall, 13 Pet. 181, 10 L. ed. 115.

The jury had a right to inspect the material and to say from such inspection whether it was weak or insufficient.

1 Wharton, Ev. § 345 et seq.; Ingram v. Plasket, 3 Blackf. 450; State v. Arnold, 35 N. C. (13 Ired. L.) 184; Mulhadov. Brooklyn City R. Co. 30 N. Y. 370; Garvin v. State, 52 Miss. 207; Howell v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 6 Biss. 163.

Messrs. W. M. Cake and F. L. Keenan, for respondent:

Defendant has no power of appointment of the members of the water committee; no power of selecting or choosing agents or servants to carry out the provisions of the act creating said committee; no power to fix or collect water rates; receives no income or benefit from the levying of rates; receives no consideration for the duties performed by said committee; did not and could not, by any act or sanction, cause the committee to organize or proceed to the execution of the provisions of the act; nor is the water committee charged with a duty to file with or make any report to the defendant city of their actions or doings, or made amenable to the city in any way.

Portland Charter, chap. 12; Laws 1893, pp. 853-857.

The city was not required to adopt or sanction any plan for the proposed work before the same was proceeded with; did not and could not let any contracts for the work or employ any agents or servants to perform the work, and could not discharge any that were employed.

Charter, §§ 150, 151, 153; Laws 1893, p. 854.

The water committee is not an agency of the city. Where there is no right of selecting or choosing the relation of principal and agent cannot exist, and the maxim of respondeat superior has no application where that relation does not exist.

Pratt v. Weymouth, 147 Mass. 254; Hafford v. New Bedford, 16 Gray, 302; White v. Phillipston, 10 Met. 111; Walcott v. Swampscott, 1 Allen, 101; McCarthy v. Boston, 135 Mass. 200; Morrison v. Lawrence, 98 Mass. 221; Fisher v. Boston, 104 Mass. 93, 6 Am. Rep. 196; McCann v. Waltham, 163 Mass. 344; Dooley v. Sullivan, 112 Ind. 455; Eastman v. Meredith, 36 N. H. 288, 72 Am. Dec. 302; Mawmilian v. New York, 62 N. Y. 163, 20 Am. Rep. 468; Ham v. New York, 70 N. Y. 463; Tormey v. New York, 12 Hun, 548; Darlington v. New York, 31 N. Y. 197, 88 Am. Dec. 248; Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Keeseville, 148 N. Y. 51, 30 L. R. A. 660; Bryant v. St. Paul, 33 Minn. 293, 53 Am. Rep. 31; Detroit v. Blackeby, 21 Mich. 112, 4 Am. Rep. 450; Burrill v. Augusta, 78 Me. 120, 58 Am. Rep. 788; Dodge v. Granger, 17 R. I. 667, 15 L. R. A. 781; Gillespie v. Lincoln, 35 Neb. 41, 16 L. R. A. 349; Edgerly v. Concord, 62 N. H. 22; Gross v. Portsmouth (N. H.) 33 Atl. 256; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 4th ed. § 253, p. 436, § 256, pp. 440, 441; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. §§ 974, 981; Condict v. Jersey City, 46 N. J. L. 160; Haight v. The Mayor, 24 Fed. Rep. 93.

The constructing and maintaining of the main on Fourth street was an act lawful in itself, and the defendant is not answerable unless it has been guilty of negligence or other fault in the manner of doing the act. The maxim sic utere tuo ut alienum non lœdas has no application to the facts of this case.

Loosee v. Buchanan, 51 N. Y. 476, 10 Am. Rep. 623; Garland v. Towne, 55 N. H. 57, 20 Am. Rep. 164; Marshall v. Welwood, 38 N. J. L. 339, 20 Am. Rep. 394; 1 Thomp. Neg. p. 112, § 12; Cosulich v. Standard Oil Co. 122 N. Y. 123; Brown v. Collins, 53 N. H. 442, 16 Am. Rep. 372; 1 Sedgw. Damages, pp. 35-38.

Evidence of the bursting of the main on Fourth street prior to January 13th, 1896, the time alleged in the complaint, was not admissible to show negligence.

North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Hudson, 44 Ill. App. 60; Sherman v. Kortright, 52 Barb. 269; Wise v. Ackerman, 76 Md. 390; Collins v. Dorchester, 6 Cush. 396.

The presumption is, until the contrary is shown, that every man has performed his duty, and it is incumbent upon one who alleges failure in this respect, as the foundation of a right of action, to prove facts from which an inference of negligence may properly be drawn, and proof of themerefact that an accident has happened will not, in the absence of any contractual relations between the parties, authorize such an inference.

43 L. R. A.

Cosulich v. Standard Oil Co. 122 N. Y. 123; Loosee v. Buchanan, 51 N. Y. 476, 10 Am. Rep. 623; Armstrong v. Ackley, 71 Iowa, 81; Murphy v. Hays, 68 Hun, 455; Bradley v. Fort Wayne & E. R. Co. 94 Mich. 35; Walker v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 71 Iowa, 860; Wiedmer v. New York Elev. R. Co. 114 N. Y. 468; Dobbins v. Brown, 119 N. Y. 194; Huff v. Austin, 46 Ohio St. 387; The Nitro-Glycerine Case, 15 Wall. 538, 21 L. ed. 212; 2 Thomp. Neg. p. 1227.

Messrs. J. M. Long and Ralph R. Dunaway, also for respondent:

The said water committee is the agent of the city of Portland only in the capacity that the said city has, as a governmental agent of the state of Oregon.

Both the water committee and the city of Portland, in bringing in Bull Run water, act as agents of the state of Oregon in its governmental capacity.

Such state agents are not subject to suit for acts of negligence in the absence of a statute giving a cause of action against these governmental agents for negligence.

David v. Portland Water Committee, 14 Or. 98.

The supreme court of Oregon has decided in David v. Portland Water Committee, 14 Or. 98, if the project was local and private, the act was unconstitutional and void, but that as the act was general and public, and as it involved the interests of the entire state, the act was valid.

Simon v. Northrup, 27 Or. 495, 30 L. R. A. 171; Cole v. LaGrange, 113 U. S. 1, 28 L. ed. 896; People, Park Comrs., v. Detroit, 28 Mich. 223, 15 Am. Rep. 202; Davock v. Moore, 105 Mich. 120, 28 L. R. A. 783; People, McCagg, v. Chicago, 51 Ill. 17, 2 Am. Rep. 278; People, Wilson, v. Salomon, 51 Ill. 37; People, Dunkirk, W. & P. R. Co., v. Batchellor, 53 N. Y. 123, 13 Am. Rep. 480; Philadelphia v. Field, 58 Pa. 320; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. pp. 263-268.

All the cases holding a city liable for negligence in the performance of a public work, in the absence of a statute creating such a liability hold expressly or impliedly that the city in doing that particular work does it in its private capacity for its own local benefit.

Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Keeseville, 148 N. Y. 46, 30 L. R. A. 660, Reversing 80 Hun, 162; Mendel v. Wheeling, 28 W. Va. 233, 57 Am. Rep. 665; Gross v. Portsmouth (N. H.) 33 Atl. 256; Bulger v. Eden, 82 Me. 352, 9 L. R. A. 205; Welsh v. Rutland, 56 Vt. 228, 48 Am. Rep. 762; Wilkins v. Rutland, 61 Vt. 336; Cushing v. Bedford, 125 Mass. 526; Diamond Match Co. v. New Haven, 55 Conn. 510; Chope v. Eureka, 78 Cal. 588, 4 L. R. A. 325; and cases in the notes; Edgerly v. Concord, 62 N. H. 8; Hafford v. New Bedford, 16 Gray, 302; Fisher v. Boston, 104 Mass. 93, 6 Am. Rep. 196; Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 344, 23 Am. Rep. 332; Hovard v. Worcester, 153 Mass. 428, 12 L. R. A. 160; McCann v. Waltham, 163 Mass. 344; Dodge v. Granger, 17 R. I. 667, 15 L. R. A. 781; Gillespie v. Lincoln, 35 Neb. 41, 16 L. R. A. 349; Kuehn v. Milwaukee, 92 Wis. 263; Hayes v. Oshkosh, 33 Wis. 314, 14 Am. Rep.

760; Schultz v. Milwaukee, 49 Wis. 254, 35 Am. Rep. 779; Condict v. Jersey City, 46 N. J. L. 158; Donahoe v. Kansas City, 136 Mo. 657; Wilcox v. Chicago, 107 Ill. 334, 47 Am. Rep. 434; Bamber v. Rochester, 28 Hun. 587; Goddard v. Harpswell, 84 Me. 499, 30 Am. St. R. 373, note.

No case holds that the legislature can, by statute, compel a city to incur debts to make local improvements for the local benefit.

Cole v. La Grange, 113 U. S. 1, 28 L. ed. 896; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. pp. 227-231, 263-268, 283-285, 288.

The rule of stare decisis will cause the courts in this action to construe the act appointing the water committee the same way as said act was construed in the case of David v. Portland Water Committee, 14 Or. 98.

Paulson v. Portland, 16 Or. 103, 1 L. R. A. 673; White v. Allen, 3 Or. 103; State v. Clark, 9 Or. 466; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. pp. 29, 67; 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 131, 132.

Appellant is in privity to the parties to the case of David v. Portland Water Committee, 14 Or. 98, and therefore appellant is bound by said decision under the rule of res judicata.

Freeman, Judgm. 4th ed. § 178; Neil v. Tolman, 12 Or. 289; Barrett v. Failing, 8 Or. 162; Glenn v. Savage, 14 Or. 574; Morrill v. Morrill, 20 Or. 104, 11 L. R. A. 155; Farquar v. Farquar, 20 Or. 69; Harmon v. Auditor of Public Accounts, 123 Ill. 123; Douglass v. Pike County, 101 U. S. 677, 25 L. ed. 968; Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 1 Wall. 212, 17 L. ed. 527; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. pp. 60-67.

The construction of the statute, made in Davis v. Portland Water Committee, became a part of the statute.

Douglass v. Pike County, 101 U. S. 677, 25 L. ed. 968; Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 1 Wall. 212, 17 L. ed. 527.

When the case of David v. Portland Water Committee was commenced, the courts had power to decide whether the water committee proceeded as agents of the city of Portland in its private capacity, in which event the act creating the water committee would be void, and the taxpayers would have enjoined the water committee from acting.

People, Park Comrs., v. Detroit, 28 Mich. 228, 15 Am. Rep. 202; Davock v. Moore, 105 Mich. 120, 28 L. R. A. 783; People, McCagg, v. Chicago, 51 Ill. 17, 2 Am. Rep. 278; People, Wilson, v. Salomon, 51 Ill. 37; People, Dunkirk W. & P. R. Co., v. Batchellor, 53 N. Y. 128, 13 Am. Rep. 480; Cole v. La Grange, 113 U. S. 1, 28 L. ed. 896; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. pp. 60-67, 263-268, 283-288.

Rights of taxpayers and bondholders have become vested under the construction of the statute made in David v. Portland Water Committee.

If the courts should now attempt to construe said act of the legislature so as to hold that the water committee was the agent of the city of Portland in its private capacity such a decision would deprive the city of Portland and the taxpayers thereof of their property without due process of law, con- 43 L. R. A.

trary to the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

Warren v. Lyons City, 22 Iowa, 351; Douglass v. Pike County, 101 U. S. 677, 25 L. ed. 968; Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 1 Wall. 212, 17 L. ed. 527; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. p. 291.

There was no proof of negligence offered by appellant.

Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Locke, 112 Ind. 404; Huey v. Gahlenbeck, 121 Pa. 238, 6 Am. St. Rep. 792, note; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Anderson, 72 Md. 519, 8 L. R. A. 673; O'Brien v. Miller, 60 Conn. 214; Montgomery v. Muskegon Boom Co. 88 Mich. 633, 26 Am. St. Rep. 308, note; Hawkins v. Front Street Cable R. Co. 3 Wash. 592, 16 L. R. A. 808, 28 Am. St. Rep. 72, note; Kincaid v. Oregon Short Line & U. N. R. Co. 22 Or. 35; 1 Thomp. Neg. pp. 91, 101, 108; Bahr v. Lombard, 53 N. J. L. 233; Jenney v. Brooklyn, 120 N. Y. 164; Reiss v. New York Steam Co. 128 N. Y. 107; Hunt v. New York, 109 N. Y. 134; Livingston v. Adams, 8 Cow. 175; Lehman v. Brooklyn, 29 Barb. 234; Kendall v. Boston, 118 Mass. 234, 19 Am. Rep. 446.

Bean, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In support of the judgment it is contended: First, that the waterworks belong to the city in its public or governmental capacity, and it is therefore not liable to a common-law action for negligence in constructing or maintaining the same; second, the water committee, under whose direction and control they were constructed, and were being maintained at the time of the accident, is an independent body, appointed by the state for public governmental purposes, over which the city has no control, and for whose negligence it is not liable under the common-law doctrine of respondet superior; and, third, there was not sufficient evidence of negligence given on the trial to carry the case to the jury as a question of fact. There is a well-established distinction made by the authorities between the liability of a municipal corporation for the acts of its servants, agents, officers, or employees done in the exercise of powers and duties granted to or imposed upon it as a mere agency of the state, and performed exclusively for public governmental purposes, and acts done in the exercise of powers granted to or privileges conferred for its own profit, advantage, and emolument, although inuring incidentally to the public. This distinction, though a very shadowy one at times, and though much difficulty has been experienced by the courts in determining within which class a particular case should be placed, nevertheless is well settled, and has governed the decision in many cases. It is alluded to by Mr. Justice Strahan in Caspary v. Portland, 19 Or. 496, and is very clearly stated by Folger, J., in Maximilian v. New York, 62 N. Y. 160, 164, 20 Am. Rep. 468. "There are two kinds of duties which are imposed upon a municipal corporation," he says. "One is of that kind which arises from a grant of a special power, in the exercise of which the municipality is as a legal individual; the other is of that kind which arises, or is implied, from the use of political rights under the general law, in the exercise of which it is as a sovereign. The former power is private, and is used for private purposes; the latter is public, and is used for public purposes. . . . The former is not held by the municipality as one of the political divisions of the state; the latter is. In the exercise of the former power and under the duty to the public which the acceptance and use of the power involves, a municipality is like a private corporation, and is liable for a failure to use its power well, or for an injury caused by using it badly. But where the power is entrusted to it as one of the political divisions of the state, and is conferred not for the immediate benefit of the municipality, but as a means to the exercise of the sovereign power for the benefit of all citizens, the corporation is not liable for nonuser, nor for misuser by the public agents." Accordingly it has been held that municipal corporations are not responsible for the negligence or wrongful acts of health officers or boards of health (Bryant v. St. Paul, 33 Minn. 289, 53 Am. Rep. 31; Ogg v. Lansing, 35 Iowa, 495, 14 Am. Rep. 499; Brown v. Vinalhaven, 65 Me. 402, 20 Am. Rep. 709; Barbour v. Ellsworth, 67 Me. 294); or of employees of the commissioners of public charities and correction (Massmitan v. New York, 62 N. Y. 160, 20 Am. Rep. 468); or of officers or members of their fire or police departments (Hafford v. New Bedford, 16 Gray, 297; New Orleans v. Abbagnato, 23 U. S. App. 533, 62 Fed. Rep. 240, 10 C. C. A. 361, 26 L. R. A. 329; Fisher v. Boston, 104 Mass. 87, 6 Am. Rep. 196; Burrill v. Augusta, 78 Me. 118, 58 Am. Rep. 788; Wilcox v. Chicago, 107 Ill. 334, 47 Am. Rep. 434; Richmond v. Long, 17 Gratt. 375, 94 Am. Dec. 461; Elliott v. Philadelphia, 75 Pa. 347, 15 Am. Rep. 591; Gillespie v. Lincoln, 35 Neb. 34, 16 L. R. A. 349; Calcell v. Boone, 51 Iowa, 687, 33 Am. Rep. 154); nor for the negligent construction, maintenance, or use of appliances for the extinguishment of fires (Hayes v. Oshkosh, 33 Wis. 314, 14 Am. Rep. 760; Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Keeseville, 148 N. Y. 46, 30 L. R. A. 660; Edgerly v. Concord, 62 N. H. 8; Tainter v. Worcester, 123 Mass. 311, 25 Am. Rep. 90); or for an injury caused by a negligent defect in a school building (Ham v. New York, 70 N. Y. 459; Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 344, 23 Am. Rep. 332); or for an injury received by the giving way of the floor of a town house used for holding town meetings and other public purposes (Eastman v. Meredith, 36 N. H. 284, 72 Am. Dec. 302). But when a special power or privilege is conferred upon or granted to a municipal corporation, to be exercised for its own advantage or emolument, and not as a mere governmental agency, it is liable to the same extent as an individual or a private corporation for negligence in managing or dealing with the property rights or franchises held by it under such grant. Thus if, in repairing a building belonging to the city, and used in part for municipal purposes, and in considerable part also as a source of revenue to the corporation, the agents and servants of the city dig a hole in the ground adjoining, and negligently leave it open and unguarded, so that a person rightfully walking on a path leading by the building, although not a public highway, falls into such hole, and is injured, the city will be liable to an action at common law for the injury (Oliver v. Worcester, 102 Mass. 489, 3 Am. Rep. 485). So, also, when the city owns a wharf, and receives and charges wharfage for its use, it is bound the same as a private individual to use ordinary care and diligence in keeping it safe and free from obstructions, and is liable in an action at common law for damages done to a vessel by reason of neglect of such duty (Petersburg v. Applegarth, 28 Gratt. 321, 26 Am. Rep. 357; Pittsburgh v. Grier, 22 Pa. 54, 60 Am. Dec. 65; Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Gibbs, 11 H. L. Cas. 686). In accordance with this distinction, it is quite universally held that when a municipal corporation voluntarily undertakes to construct and maintain water or gas works in pursuance of statutory authority, for the purpose of supplying the inhabitants thereof with water or gas at rates established by the city, it is liable for an injury in consequence of its acts in constructing and maintaining such works, the same as a private corporation or individual. "A municipal corporation, owning waterworks or gasworks which supply private consumers on the payment of tolls," says Mr. Dillon, "is liable for the negligence of its agents and servants the same as like private proprietors would be." 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 954. And the doctrine is well stated by Lewis, Ch. J., in Western Sav. Fund Soc. v. Philadelphia, 31 Pa. 183, 72 Am. Dec. 730, in speaking of a municipal corporation as the owner of gasworks. "The supply of gas light," he says, "is no more a duty of sovereignty than the supply of water. Both these objects may be accomplished through the agency of individuals or private corporations, and in very many instances they are accomplished by those means. If this power is granted to a borough or a city, it is a special private franchise, made as well for the private emolument and advantage of the city as for the public good. The whole investment is the private property of the city, as much so as the lands and houses belonging to it. Blending the two powers in one grant does not destroy the clear and well-settled distinction, and the process of separation is not rendered impossible by the confusion. In separating them, regard must be had to the object of the legislature in conferring them. If granted for public purposes exclusively, they belong to the corporate body in its public, political, or municipal character. But if the grant was for purposes of private advantage and emolument, though the public may derive a common benefit therefrom, the corporation quoad hoc is to be regarded as a private company. It stands on the same footing as would any individual or body of persons upon whom the like special franchises had been conferred." To the same effect, see also Bailey v. New York, 3 Hill, 531, 38 Am. Dec. 609; Hand v. Brookline, 126 Mass. 324; Perkins v. Lawrence, 136 Mass. 305; Stoddard v. Winchester, 157 Mass. 567; Aldrich v. Tripp, 11 R. I. 141, 23 Am. Rep. 434; 19

Am. L. Reg. N. S. 743; San Francisco Gas Co. v. San Francisco, 9 Cal. 453; Scott v. Manchester, 2 Hurlst. & N. 204; 2 Beach, Pub. Corp. § 1140; and 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 3d ed. § 58. Unless, therefore, there is something in the facts of this case to take it out of the general rule, the liability of the defendant to persons injured by the negligent manner in which the waterworks in question were constructed or are maintained cannot be questioned. The argument of the defendant in this connection is that, although the works in fact belonged to the city, and were paid for from funds derived from the sale of its bonds, they were built in pursuance of a public duty, involuntarily imposed upon the municipality by express legislative mandate, and therefore are owned and controlled by the city as a public or governmental agency, and not in its private or proprietary capacity; and also that the committee under whose direction and supervision the works were constructed and are now operated and maintained is an independent body appointed by and acting as an agent of the state, over which the city has no control, and for whose negligence it is not responsible. In support of the position that the works belong to the city in its public, as distinguished from its private, capacity, reliance is had principally upon the decision of this court in David v. Portland Water Committee, 14 Or. 98. That was a suit brought by a resident and taxpayer to restrain the water committee named in the act of 1885 from issuing and disposing of the bonds of the municipality, and constructing waterworks in pursuance of such act, on the ground that it was unconstitutional and void, and would unlawfully impose a burden upon the taxpayers of the city. The only ruling in that case which has any bearing upon the question now before us was that, under the circumstances, the supplying of the city of Portland and its inhabitants with water which had to be brought by means of pipes from some place outside of the city was not so essentially a private purpose that the legislature could not constitutionally appoint the agents of the city for the construction of such works. But it does not follow from this view that the works when constructed would not belong to the city in its private or corporate capacity. Indeed, the entire reasoning of the opinion permits the clear inference, it seems to us, that the court never lost sight of the fact that they would be the property of the city, but, notwithstanding this, concluded that the object sought to be accomplished was so impressed with a public purpose that the determination of the legislature as to the necessity for such an enterprise, and its selection of the agents of the city by whom the work should be undertaken, was valid, and conclusive upon the courts. The act authorizing the construction of the works and appointing the committee to have control thereof became a part of the charter of the city. Under it the city alone was authorized and empowered to construct and maintain them. The money therefor was to be raised by the sale of its bonds, and the court expressly held in the David Case that the members of the water committee were "no more than agents of the city required by the act to carry out its provisions," and should not be regarded as officers. So we conclude that there is nothing in the doctrine of that case to exempt the city of Portland from the general rule which applies to all municipal corporations owning and operating waterworks for the purpose of supplying its inhabitants with water for hire on the theory that the works are owned by it in its public or governmental, as distinguished from its private, capacity.

Nor do we concur in the position that the city is not liable for the negligent acts of the water committee and its servants and employees under the doctrine of respondet superior. It is true, this doctrine is grounded upon the right of an employer to select his servants, and discharge them if careless, unskilful, or incompetent, and to direct and control them while in his employ. But, whatever may have been the legal relation of the water committee to the city prior to the consolidation act of 1891, it is clear that thereafter it became as much the agent or representative of the municipality within the scope of the powers conferred upon it as any other officer or agent provided for in the charter. When the people of the cities of Portland, East Portland, and Albina by popular vote accepted the charter of 1891, containing, in substance, the same provisions as the act of 1885 creating and naming the water committee, and vesting in it and a commission thereafter to be appointed the power to construct, manage, and control the water system belonging to the city, they must be deemed to have thus accepted such committee and commission as their agents to carry out the work. By the terms of the charter, the water committee and commission are made agents or representatives of the municipality as much as the mayor, common council, or any other officer provided for therein. Each of these officers or agents is charged with the performance of certain municipal duties, and it takes all of them to constitute the corporation. The inhabitants within certain described territory were, by the act of 1891, created a municipal corporation, with certain defined rights, powers, privileges, and duties, to be exercised by agents and officers provided for in the act of incorporation. And it cannot be said that one of the officers thus provided for is any more the agent or representative of the municipality than the other. Nor is the manner of their appointment, if valid, of any consequence in determining their representative capacity. The legislature, in the exercise of its plenary powers over municipal corporations, thought best to provide that certain powers which it granted to the city of Portland should be exercised by officers and agents of its own selection. This legislation was held valid in David v. Portland Water Committee, but it does not make the agent so selected any the less the representative of the municipality. The power and authority given to the water committee by the charter is not, as counsel seem to think, exclusive of the city, but only exclusive of any other agent or officer of the city. The right and power to construct and maintain water-works is expressly vested in the municipality. Its exercise is devolved by the charter upon the water committee. But this is a duty which they discharge, not for themselves, nor for the public generally, but for the city. As said by Earl, J., in Ehrgott v. New York, 96 N. Y. 264, 48 Am. Rep. 622, in discussing the liability of a city for an injury received in consequence of a defective street which was under the exclusive control of a commission whose duties were prescribed and defined by the charter: "The city must act through officers and agents, and it is for the legislature to determine what powers and duties shall be devolved upon them. It matters not how ample or exclusive their powers may be, nor how independently they may act, nor how they are chosen. If they are provided by law, and authorized to discharge a corporate duty which rests upon the municipality, then, in the discharge of that duty, they represent the municipality, and it may be chargeable with their misfeasance and nonfeasance. . . . To determine whether there is municipal responsibility, the inquiry must be whether the department whose misfeasance or nonfeasance is complained of is a part of the machinery for carrying on the municipal government, and whether it was at the time engaged in the discharge of a duty, or charged with a duty primarily resting upon the municipality. For these views, the cases of Bailey v. New York, 3 Hill, 538, 38 Am. Dec. 669; 2 Denio, 433, and Barnes v. District of Columbia, 91 U. S. 540, 23 L. ed. 440, are ample authority, and the case of Richards v. New York, 16 Jones & S. 315, is a precise authority." The cases of Bailey v. New York, and Barnes v. District of Columbia, referred to by Mr. Justice Earl, are very much in point in the present discussion. In the former an action was brought against the city of New York by one who had been injured in his property by the careless construction of a dam across Croton river at a point about 40 miles distant from the city, for use as a part of the system for supplying the city and its inhabitants with water. The work was constructed under the control of water commissioners appointed by the governor, and in whose appointment the city had no voice; and it was contended there, as here, that the defendant was not chargeable for negligence or unskillfulness in the construction of the dam, because the commissioners were acting in a public capacity, and, like other public agents, not responsible for the misconduct of those necessarily appointed by them; and also on the ground that, inasmuch as the water commissioners were not appointed by the city, nor subject to its direction or control, it was not liable for their conduct. But Mr. Justice Nelson, in an opinion which, although it has been somewhat criticised, has stood the test of time, and is now generally regarded as sound, disposes of both of these objections in such a clear and lucid way as to leave but little to be said upon the subject. Examining the position that, "admitting the water commissioners to be the appointed agents of the defendants, still the latter are not liable.

43 L. R. A.

inasmuch as they were acting solely for the state in prosecuting the work in question, and therefore are not responsible for the conduct of those necessarily employed by them for that purpose," he says: "We admit, if the defendants are to be regarded as occupying this relation, and are not chargeable with any want of diligence in the selection of agents, the conclusion contended for would seem to follow. They would then be entitled to all the immunities of public officers charged with a duty which, from its nature, could not be executed without availing themselves of the services of others; and the doctrine of respondet superior does not apply to such cases. If a public officer authorize the doing of an act not within the scope of his authority, or if he be guilty of negligence in the discharge of duties to be performed by himself, he will be held responsible; but not for the misconduct or malfeasance of such persons as he is obliged to employ. . . . But this view cannot be maintained upon the facts before us. The powers conferred by the several acts of the legislature authorizing the execution of this great work are not, strictly and legally speaking, conferred for the benefit of the public. The grant is a special, private franchise, made as well for the private emolument and advantage of the city as for the public good. The state, in its sovereign character, has no interest in it. It owns no part of the work. The whole investment under the law, and the revenue and profits to be derived therefrom, are a part of the private property of the city; as much so as the lands and houses belonging to it situate within its corporate limits. The argument of the defendants' counsel confounds the powers in question with those belonging to the defendants in their character as a municipal or public body; such as are granted exclusively for public purposes to counties, cities, towns, and villages, where the corporations have, if I may so speak, no private estate or interest in the grant. As the powers in question have been conferred upon one of these public corporations, thus blending in a measure those conferred for private advantage and emolument with those already possessed for public purposes, there is some difficulty, I admit, in separating them in the mind, and properly distinguishing the one class from the other, so as to distribute the responsibility attaching to the exercise of each. But the distinction is quite clear and well settled, and the process of separation practicable. To this end regard should be had, not so much to the nature and character of the various powers conferred, as to the object and purpose of the legislature in conferring them. If granted for public purposes exclusively, they belong to the corporate body in its public, political, or municipal character. But if the grant was for purposes of private advantage and emolument, though the public may derive a common benefit therefrom, the corporation, quoad hoc, is to be regarded as a private company. It stands on the same footing as would any individual or body of persons upon whom the like special franchises had been conferred." And in answer to the objection that the commissioners were the agents of the state, and not the city, he says: "We have already given our views of the character of this work, and of the capacity in which the defendants hold the powers under which it has been executed. If we are not mistaken in that conclusion, and they are to be regarded as a private company, like any other body of men upon whom special franchises have been conferred for their own private advantage, such as banking and railroad corporations, then the appointment of the agents by the state did not make them less the agents of the defendants. The appointment in this way is but one of the conditions upon which the charter was granted, and stands on the footing of any other condition to be found in the grant, subject to which it has been accepted. By accepting the charter, the defendants thereby adopted the commissioners as their own agents to carry on the work." Barnes v. District of Columbia was an action brought to recover damages for a personal injury received by the plaintiff in consequence of the defective condition of one of the streets of the city of Washington. By the act creating the municipal corporation of the District of Columbia it was provided that there should be a board of public works, composed of the city governor and four other persons, to be appointed by the President, with the consent of the Senate, who shall have entire control of, and make all regulations which they shall deem necessary for keeping in repair, the streets, avenues, and alleys of the city; and the principal defense in the case was that, in view of these provisions, the municipality was not liable for the negligence of such board. But it was held that a municipal corporation, in the exercise of its duties, is a mere department of the state, having such powers as the state may, from time to time, at its pleasure, confer, and that it can act only by its agents and servants; but this does not mean or imply that the acts must be done by inferior or subordinate agents, but, on the contrary, the higher the authority of the agent, the greater is the responsibility of the principal. Mr. Justice Hunt, in speaking for the court, says: "A municipal corporation may act through its mayor, through its common council, or its legislative department, by whatever name called, its superintendent of streets, commissioner of highways, or board of public works, provided the act is within the province committed to its charge. Nor can it, in principle, be of the slightest consequence by what means these several officers are placed in their position,—whether they are elected by the people of the municipality, or appointed by the President or a governor. The people are the recognized source of all authority, state and municipal; and to this authority it must come at last, whether immediately or by a circuitous process. An elected mayor or an appointed mayor derives his authority to act from the same source, to wit, that of the legislature. The whole municipal authority emanates from the legislature. Its legislative charter indicates its extent, and regulates the distribution of its powers, as well as the manner of selecting and compensating its agents. The judges of the supreme court of a state may be appointed by the governor with the consent of the senate, or they may be elected by the people. But the powers and duties of the judges are not affected by the manner of their selection. The mayor of a city may be elected by the people, or he may be appointed by the governor with the consent of the senate; but the slightest reflection will show that the powers of this officer, his position as the chief agent and representative of the city, are the same under either mode of appointment. Whether his act in a case in question is the act of and binding on the city depends upon his powers under the charter to act for the city, and whether he has acted in pursuance of them; not at all upon the manner of his election. It is equally unimportant from what source he receives compensation, or whether he serves without it." These authorities would indicate the true rule to be that the responsibility of the municipality for the acts of its officers or agents does not depend upon the manner of their appointment, but upon the duty devolved upon them. If such duty appertains to mere political or governmental affairs, the municipality is not liable; but, if it pertains to the private affairs of the corporation, it is liable for their negligence, the same as a private individual.

Our attention is especially called by the defendant's counsel to the cases of Maximilian v. New York, 62 N. Y. 160, 20 Am. Rep. 468, Ham v. New York, 70 N. Y. 459, and Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Keeseville, 148 N. Y. 46, 30 L. R. A. 660. But, as pointed out by Mr. Justice Earl in Ehrgott v. New York, 96 N. Y. 264, 48 Am. Rep. 622, the Maximilian and Ham Cases were actions brought against the city for the negligence of employees of certain boards and commissions who were not engaged in the discharge of any duty which rests upon the city. And Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Keeseville, was an action to recover damages for a failure to keep the water system belonging to the city in condition to furnish protection from fires, and was defeated on the ground that the use of waterworks for the extinguishment of fire was a public, and not a private, purpose,—a distinction which is quite clearly pointed out in Edgerly v. Concord, 62 N. H. 8, which was an action brought to recover damages for an injury received through the negligent use of a fire hydrant by the officers and agents of the city.

We conclude, therefore, that the city of Portland is liable for the negligent act of the water committee charged in the complaint, notwithstanding the fact that its members were appointed by the legislature, and are independent of the control of any other department of the city government. And this brings us to the question as to whether there was sufficient evidence of negligence on the part of the servants or employees of the committee to carry the case to the jury. The evidence on behalf of the plaintiff was to the effect that the pipe in question was laid in 1892, by the water committee, and connected with the general water system of the city; that it burst twice, prior to the time of the accident which caused the injury to plaintiff's goods, under an ordinary pressure; that at the time of the accident there was no unusual or extraordinary pressure upon the pipe, or reason why it should have burst at that time. The evidence further shows that a water pipe of its size and dimensions, when properly constructed and laid, will not ordinarily burst under such a pressure; and these circumstances, in our opinion, were sufficient to carry the case to the jury. As a general proposition, a party who alleges negligence as a cause of action must, of course, prove it; but under some circumstances the accident itself and the consequent injury may be of such a nature as to raise a presumption of negligence, and thus cast upon the defendant the duty of showing that he was free from fault. The rule seems to be that whenever a thing which causes injury is shown to be under the management of the defendant, and the accident is such as, in the ordinary course of things, does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of an explanation by the defendant, that the accident arose from a want of care. Scott v. London & St. K. Docks Co. 3 Hurlst. & C. 596. And to the same effect, see 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. §§ 59, 60; Thomp. Neg. 1230; Mullen v. St. John, 57 N. Y. 567, 15 Am. Rep. 530; Warren v. Kauffman, 2 Phila. 259; Huey v. Gahlenbeck, 6 Am. St. Rep. 790, note (121 Pa. 238).

It follows from these views that the judgment of the court below must be reversed, and a new trial ordered.

S. A. HUDDLESTON, Admr., etc., of James Huddleston, Deceased, Appt.,

v.

City of EUGENE, Respt.

(.....Or.....)

A change of a county road to a city street in consequence of the incorporation of the city does not impose an additional servitude upon the real property over which the highway is constructed so as to require any new condemnation.

(January 23, 1899.)

APPEAL by complainant from a decree of the Circuit Court for Lane County in favor of defendant in a suit brought to enjoin the sale of certain property for a street-improvement assessment. Affirmed.

Statement by Moore, J.:

This is a suit to enjoin the marshal of the city of Eugene from selling certain real property to satisfy an assessment for an alleged street improvement. The material facts are that plaintiff, as executrix of the last will and testament of James Huddleston, deceased, is entitled to the possession of a tract of agricultural land, upon the north side of which the county court of Lane county located and constructed a county road; that subsequent to the establishment of said road the legislative assembly passed an act incorporating the city of Eugene, whereby said premises were included therein (Laws 1889, p. 273); that the common council of said city, deeming it expedient to lay out a street and establish the grade thereof upon the line of said road, attempted to do so in the manner prescribed in § 90 of said act, but failed to comply strictly with its provisions. An ordinance was passed and approved, in pursuance of which said street was graded and graveled, and a strip of said land, 128 rods in length and 160 feet in width, adjoining the same, was assessed for the improvement in the sum of $315.02, and the amount thereof entered in the docket of city liens; but, the assessment becoming delinquent, a warrant for its collection was issued, and the marshal, obeying the command thereof, levied upon and threatened to sell the premises assessed, to prevent which this suit was instituted. The cause, being at issue, was referred to A. C. Woodcock, Esq., who took the evidence, from which he found, in substance, that notwithstanding the council had not complied with the provisions of § 90, supra, in establishing said street § 98 of the charter authorized it to change the road into a street, and provided that, when so changed, jurisdiction thereof should be thereupon transferred from the county to the city, and recommended that the temporary injunction theretofore issued be dissolved and the suit dismissed. The court approved the report, and gave a decree in accordance therewith, from which plaintiff appeals.

Messrs. L. Bilyeu and Joshua J. Walton, for appellant:

A highway or county road is not a street. To change a county road into a street will add new and increased expenses to the highway, and subject the land of the owner to other and greater servitude. This additional servitude is property.

Dyckman v. New York, 5 N. Y. 439; Philadelphia v. Dickson, 38 Pa. 249; Heiple v. East Portland, 13 Or. 97.

A municipal corporation has no inherent or implied power in the nature of eminent domain to condemn lands or any interest, right, or title therein, or to condemn any property rights for local improvements.

Philadelphia v. Dickson, 38 Pa. 249; Watercorks Co. of Indianapolis v. Burkhardt, 41 Ind. 364; State, Durant, v. Jersey City, 25 N. J. L. 310; Harbeck v. Toledo, 11 Ohio St. 219; People v. Brighton, 20 Mich. 57; Sheldon v. Kalamazoo, 24 Mich. 383; Heiple v. East Portland, 13 Or. 97.

As a county road the property of the plaintiff was not liable to the assessment tax and burden now sought to be enforced, and to make it so liable it must become a street.

NOTE.—On the question, What constitutes an additional burden upon the fee of a street?—see note to Western Railway of Ala. v. Alabama 43 L. R. A.

Grand Trunk R. Co. (Ala.) 17 L. R. A. 474; also Willamette Iron Works v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. (Or.) 29 L. R. A. 88.

The city council has no authority to extend a street or alley without strictly conforming to the mode laid down in the statute; and in the case at bar the council undertook to extend Eighth street over and upon the county road, about a quarter of a mile, to the city limits.

Walsh v. Union, 13 Or. 589; Ladd v. East Portland, 18 Or. 87; Grafton v. Sellwood, 24 Or. 118.

Mr. E. R. Skipworth, for respondent:

The entire extension of Eighth street and the establishment of Blair street was upon, along, and within a county road within the corporate limits of the city of Eugene.

The respondent contends that nothing whatever was necessary to be done under the statute, and if anything on the part of the city was attempted to be done it was unnecessary and not binding.

There being no taking of property in this case, and no damages to appellant, she cannot be heard to complain.

Elliott, Roads & Streets, pp. 315, 316; Springfield v. Connecticut River R. Co. 4 Cush. 72; West Boston Bridge v. Middlesex County Comrs. 10 Pick. 272; East Portland v. Multnomah County, 6 Or. 62; Multnomah County v. Sliker, 10 Or. 65.

Where a new highway (street) is proposed to be established or laid out, notice etc., must be given, for the reason there is a taking of private property for public use, and therefore damages, hence § 90 of the city charter of 1880, and when there is no taking and no damage the converse is true, hence § 98.

1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 71; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 680, 681; Barnes v. District of Columbia, 91 U. S. 540, 23 L. ed. 440.

Whenever the legislature incorporates a city, or extends the corporate limits of a city, public roads or public highways are included in said incorporation or extension, and, such being the case, eminent domain was at the time of laying out said roads or highways duly exercised and all the forms of law complied with.

Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 240; Foster v. Collner, 107 Pa. 305; State, Blinburg, v. Mann, 21 Wis. 685; Chapman v. Miller, 128 Mass. 269; Elliott, Roads & Streets, pp. 313, 315, 316; Springfield v. Connecticut River R. Co. 4 Cush. 72; West Boston Bridge v. Middlesex County Comrs. 10 Pick. 272; East Portland v. Multnomah County, 6 Or. 62; Multnomah County v. Sliker, 10 Or. 65.

Agricultural lands within the corporate limits of a city can be made to respond for street assessments the same as other property within the city.

2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 795; Charter of the City of Eugene, 1893, §§ 67, 74; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1013; Linton v. Athens, 53 Ga. 588; Martin v. Dix, 52 Miss. 53, 24 Am. Rep. 661; Barker v. State, 18 Ohio, 514; Kelly v. Pittsburgh, 85 Pa. 170, 27 Am. Rep. 633.

Moore, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is contended by plaintiff's counsel that 43 L. R. A.

the public has an easement only in a county road, while a qualified fee in the street is dedicated to, or condemned for, the public use; that a county road is laid out, built, and kept in repair by taxes collected from residents of the whole taxing district, and from property situated therein, while a street is usually established and improved by assessing the real property abutting thereon and hence changing a county road into a city street imposes upon the premises claimed to have been improved additional burdens, and that this supplemental servitude constitutes private property, the taking of which for a public use is prohibited by the organic law of the state, except upon the payment of a just compensation (Const. Or. art. 1, § 18); that the power of a municipal corporation to exercise the right of eminent domain will not be implied, and, while § 98 of the charter authorizes the council to establish a street upon said county road, this can only be done by strictly pursuing the mode prescribed in § 90 of the act of incorporation, which is the measure of its power, but, the council having failed to observe such requirements, jurisdiction to improve said road was never acquired, and hence the assessment is void, and the court erred in dismissing the suit.

It is maintained by defendant's counsel, however, that § 90 only applies in cases where a street is to be established over premises where no highway theretofore existed, and, it being admitted that no additional land was appropriated by changing the road into a street, plaintiff sustained no injury in consequence thereof, and hence compliance with the requirements of said section was unnecessary.

The provisions of the charter to which reference has been made are as follows:

"Sec. 90. Whenever the council shall deem it expedient to open, layout, establish, widen, straighten or extend a street or alley it shall cause the city surveyor to survey such proposed new street or extension or line to which the width is to be changed or straightened, and make a report thereof containing a plat of the survey of such street or alley, of the portion of each lot or part thereof required to be appropriated for such street or alley, which report, if satisfactory to the council, shall be adopted by an ordinance embodying the same; provided, that before the adoption thereof, the recorder shall give notice of the filing of such report by publication for two weeks in some newspaper published in the city of Eugene, or by written notices posted for two weeks at three public places in said city, and at the next meeting of the council, after the expiration of such notice, present to it the said report, and attached thereto a copy of such notice, with the proof of publication or posting indorsed thereon. Thereafter and within thirty days from the adoption of such report, the council shall appoint three disinterested freeholders of the city of Eugene, no kin to any owner or person interested in any property to be appropriated, and possessing the qualifications of jurors in courts of justice in this state, to view such proposed street or alley, and make an assessment of the damages, if any, to the respective owners of the lots and parts of lots appropriated, and to report the same to the council. The said viewers shall meet at such time as may be designated by the council, and after having been duly sworn or affirmed to discharge their duties faithfully, shall proceed and view the whole distance of said proposed street or alley and ascertain and determine how much less valuable the premises of such owners, respectively, would be rendered by the opening of the same. If the council is satisfied that the amount of damages assessed by said viewers, or by the circuit court, upon appeal, as hereinafter provided, is just and equitable, and that the proposed street or alley will be of sufficient importance to the public to cause the damages so assessed and determined to be paid by the city, the council shall order the same to be paid to the said owners, respectively, out of the treasury as other claims against the city are paid; but if in the opinion of the council such street or alley is not of sufficient importance to the public to cause the damage to be paid by the city of Eugene, the council may refuse to open such street or alley or extend or widen the same, as the case may be, unless the damages, or such part thereof as the council may think proper, shall be paid by private parties."

"Sec. 98. The common council has authority and is hereby authorized, when it shall deem it expedient, to open, establish and locate streets upon the road-bed of, and upon or across any county road or public highway within the corporate limits of the city of Eugene; and when so located or established, said county roads or public highways shall be and become public streets of said city and subject to jurisdiction and control of the council the same as other streets."

It was virtually conceded at the hearing by counsel for the respective parties that if it was necessary to pursue the method prescribed in § 90, in order to establish a street upon the line of the county road, the means adopted were ineffectual to confer jurisdiction. An important question to be considered is whether a change, by authority of the legislative assembly, of a county road to a city street, imposes an additional servitude upon the real property over which the highway is constructed. In Lankin v. Terwilliger, 22 Or. 97, it is held that by the location of a county road the public only acquires an easement in the land, while the fee remains in the owner, and when the road is vacated by public authority the land immediately reverts to the owner, freed from the easement. The heirs of James Huddleston, deceased, therefore had a reversionary interest in the land over which the highway was located; and plaintiff, by reason of her trust, was entitled to the possession thereof when the road should be vacated by proper authority. Phillips v. Dunkirk, W. & P. R. Co. 78 Pa. 177. The statute regulating the recording of town plats and vacating streets provides, in general terms, that when a town is laid out the proprietor must record the plat thereof in the recorder's office in the county in which the same is situated. Hill's Anno. Laws (Or.) § 4178. Every donation or grant to the public of a street marked as such on said plat shall be considered to all intents and purposes as a general warranty to the donee or grantee for the uses and purposes intended by the donor or grantor. Id. § 4180. When a street is vacated, the land theretofore used as a highway shall be attached to the lots or ground bordering on such street, and all right or title thereto shall vest in the person or persons owning the property on each side thereof in equal proportion, according to the length or breadth of such lots or ground as the same may border on such street. Id. § 4184. In McQuaid v. Portland & V. R. Co. 18 Or. 237, it is held that the fee of a street is either in the adjacent lotowner, or remains in the dedicicator. Mr. Chief Justice Thayer, considering § 4180, supra, in deciding the case, and discussing the effect of a dedication or condemnation of a street, says: "The public may have an irrevocable right to the use of the street, but how can it acquire the fee to the land? The fee must vest in someone having a legal capacity to take it. It must be a natural or artificial person,—must be someone having a legal entity. The declaration that the fee in such case is in the public, meaning the general mass of the people, without regard to any legal organization, although often made use of, is, to my mind, absolutely absurd. The public, as a mass, does not, in my opinion, possess any such capacity." While the question considered in that case was not deemed very important, the reasoning convinces us that the public only acquires an easement in a street which has been dedicated or condemned for its use. The interest of the public in a street or road being an easement only, the title to the fee was not changed by converting the road into a street, and hence no necessity existed for acquiring a right which the public already enjoyed. People v. Kerr, 27 N. Y. 188. The public easement in a county road is limited to the uses to which such a highway is commonly subjected, and it must be presumed that the condemnation of the land for such road by the county court was made with reference to such uses. The road was undoubtedly established over the particular route selected to promote travel between objective points, thereby facilitating the transportation of passengers and property by the mode in vogue when the highway was adopted. The imposition of a new servitude upon the land, in addition to and distinct from that to which it was originally subjected when taken for a highway, the obstruction of the abutting proprietor's access to the street, or the impairment of his right to light and air, constitutes a taking of private property for a public use, within the meaning of the fundamental law of the state, for which compensation must be made for the damages which necessarily ensue. *Cooley, Const. Lim. *557*; Elliott, Roads & S. 155; Willamette Iron Works v. Oregon R. & Nav.

Co. 26 Or. 224, 29 L. R. A. 88; Imlay v. Union Branch R. Co. 26 Conn. 249, 68 Am. Dec. 392; Milbau v. Sharp, 15 Barb. 193; Story v. New York Elev. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 122, 43 Am. Rep. 146; State v. Laverack, 34 N. J. L. 201; Heard v. Brooklyn, 60 N. Y. 242; Strong v. Brooklyn, 68 N. Y. 1. The ordinary mode of travel in cities at the present time is the same as that in vogue in the rural districts when the road was established. The use of the highway as a street will not be in addition to or distinct from that originally appropriated, and hence the conversion of the road into a street does not constitute a taking which demands additional compensation therefor on account of such use. Williams v. New York C. R. Co. 18 Barb. 222; Fagan v. Chicago, 84 Ill. 227. "The legislature of the state," says Judge Dillon in his work on Municipal Corporations, 3d ed. § 656, "represents the public at large, and has . . . full and permanent authority over all public ways and public places." In Portland & W. Valley R. Co. v. Portland, 14 Or. 188, 58 Am. Rep. 299, it is held that an act of the legislative assembly granting the use of a public levee of the city of Portland for railway purposes was a valid exercise of the lawmaking power. Mr. Chief Justice Lord, in rendering the decision, says: "The interest in the use of the streets and highways and public places, and their uses, being publici juris, the power of regulating such use is in the legislature, as the representative of the whole people." To the same effect, see East Portland v. Multnomah County, 6 Or. 62; Multnomah County v. Sliker, 10 Or. 65. The legislature has plenary power to delegate to a municipal corporation or other agency the right to lay out, establish, and open highways for public use, and may also change its trustees, and impose upon the substituted instrumentality the duty of keeping such highways in repair. Simon v. Northrup, 27 Or. 487, 30 L. R. A. 171; Little Nestucca Toll Road Co. v. Tillamook County, 31 Or. 1. Judge Elliott, in his work on Roads and Streets (p. 313), in speaking of the effect of the incorporation of a city upon the highways therein established by county authority, says: "Where there is no statute, the incorporation of a city seems naturally to imply that the highways within its territorial limits become streets, and as such subject to the control of the municipality. The erection of such a corporation is, in truth, simply the creation of a new instrumentality of government; it comes into existence with the rights, powers, and duties of a governmental subdivision; and it is but reasonable to conclude that as to such matters as streets, which peculiarly pertain to municipal corporations, the authority of other governmental corporations is excluded." In McGrew v. Stewart, 51 Kan. 185, the limits of a city were extended so as to include territory upon which a public highway existed. After the extension of the city boundaries, the council caused a sidewalk to be built along the highway, and assessed the cost thereof against the abutting property; and, in a suit to enjoin the collection of the assessment, it was held that upon the annexation of the territory the highway was impressed with the character of a street, and became subject to the exclusive control of the city authorities, and to the liabilities and servitudes of all other streets within the city. To the same effect, see 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1017; Cowan's Case, 1 Overt. 311; McCullom v. Black Hawk County, 21 Iowa, 409; Clark v. Com. 14 Bush, 166; Ottawa v. Walker, 21 Ill. 605, 71 Am. Dec. 121. Section 98 of the charter, however, shows that the county court of Lane county was not divested of jurisdiction of the road, notwithstanding the incorporation of the city, until the council deemed it expedient to establish a street over it. In State v. Jones, 18 Tex. 874, it is held, under a similar provision contained in a charter, that until the council acts under the power conferred, the general authority of the county court over the subject-matter continues to exist, and may be exercised.

It is argued that the uses to which streets are ordinarily put are greater and more numerous than those to which a county road is subjected, and particularly so with reference to the laying of pipes and the construction of drains, sewers, and culverts in streets. 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 688. But Judge Elliott, in his work on Roads and Streets (p. 311), anticipating such contention, says: "Where land is dedicated or appropriated for a suburban road, the implication must be that it shall be used as the convenience and welfare of the public may demand, although that demand may be augmented by the increase in population, or by a town or city springing up in the territory traversed by the road." In Malone v. Toledo, 28 Ohio St. 643, a strip of land 100 feet wide in the city of Toledo was appropriated for use as a canal. Thereafter this strip was transferred by the state to said city in pursuance of an act of the legislature which authorized the city to enter upon, improve, and occupy said premises as a public highway, and for the use of water pipes for sewerage purposes. In a suit, by one claiming to own a portion of said tract, to enjoin the city from interfering with his possession, it was held that, a canal and street being public highways, the uses of either were of a public nature and of a like kind, and that the use of the canal for water pipes and sewers was not inconsistent with that to which it had been originally applied. To the same effect, see Crooke v. Flatbush Waterworks Co. 29 Hun, 245; Cummins v. Seymour, 79 Ind. 491, 41 Am. Rep. 618. The change of a road to a street renders the adjacent property liable to assessment for improvement to which it was not exposed under existing law prior to the change, and this presents the question whether such burden constitutes an additional servitude, for which compensation must be made. Mr. Mills, in his work on Eminent Domain (§ 34), says: "A change from a highway to a turnpike charging toll is not such an essential change as to require compensation to adjoining owners. When a highway is taken for a turnpike, it does not cease to be a highway, and the land does not revert to the owner. The payment of tolls to the turnpike company is in lieu of payment of taxes to support the road. The change is only a change of mode in sustaining the road, and not a change of use." See also Elliott, Roads & S. 161; Cooley, Const. Linn. *546; Benedict v. Goit, 3 Barb. 459; Walker v. Caywood, 31 N. Y. 51; Wright v. Carter, 27 N. J. L. 76; Douglass v. Boonsborough Turnp. Road Co. 22 Md. 219, 85 Am. Dec. 647; Callison v. Hedrick, 15 Gratt. 244; Panton Turnp. Co. v. Bishop, 11 Vt. 198; Carter v. Clark, 89 Ind. 238; Chagrin Falls & C. Pl. Road Co. v. Cane, 2 Ohio St. 419; Malone v. Toledo, 28 Ohio St. 643; Com. v. Wilkinson, 16 Pick. 175, 26 Am. Dec. 654; Murray v. Berkshire County Comrs. 12 Met. 455.

The right to compensation being founded upon a change in the use, and not upon an alteration in the manner of maintaining the highway, the assessment of benefits for the improvement of the street does not constitute such an additional taking of private property for public use, within the meaning of the organic act, as to necessitate compensation therefor. To hold that plaintiff is entitled to compensation by reason of the change in the method of keeping the highway in repair would be equivalent to maintaining that the legislative assembly could not alter the mode of collecting road taxes after the highway was once established,—a mere statement of which shows the fallacy of the argument. Judge Elliott, in his work on Roads and Streets (p. 315), in discussing this subject, says: "If we have not reasoned ill, a suburban servitude may not only be greatly augmented, but, in a measure, transformed, by the demand of the public welfare. This conclusion has for its ultimate foundation the old maxim, 'That regard be had for the public welfare is the highest law,' and it receives support from the principle that men are presumed, when they do an act, to contemplate the natural consequences which may result. It is also true that the benefit which the owner of the servient estate receives from the increase in population and the building up of cities far more than compensates him for the increased burden of the servitude which these things produce, so that he suffers no damages, and without damages there can be no right of action."

43 L. R. A.

The rule is well settled that the remedy prescribed by statute for the condemnation of private property for a public use must be strictly pursued, or the appropriation may be enjoined; for no prerogative of sovereign power should be watched with greater vigilance than that which takes the property of the individual, and devotes it to a public use. Decatur County Comrs. v. Humphrey, 47 Ga. 565; Dyckman v. New York, 5 N. Y. 434. In the light of this rule, we will examine §§ 90 and 98 of the charter, to ascertain, if possible, the legislative intent with reference to the manner to be pursued by the council in changing a road to a street. It will be remembered that § 90 requires the council to "cause the city surveyor to survey such proposed new street, or extension or line to which the width is to be changed or straightened;" thereby impliedly, at least, declaring it to be unnecessary to survey a public road already in existence within the limits of the city, since such highway, on being changed from a road to a street, is not thereby rendered a "new" street to be opened or widened, a "new" extension to be laid out or established, or a "new" line. Section 98 authorizes the council "to open, establish and locate streets upon the roadbed of, and upon or across any county road or public highway within the corporate limits of the city of Eugene;" and construing, as we must, §§ 90 and 98 in pari materia, it is quite apparent that the legislative assembly intended that the provisions of § 90, supra, should only be invoked when a "new" street is to be opened or widened, a "new" extension to be laid out, or a "new" line established, except when, in changing from a road to a street, additional property is required to be appropriated, or a new use is to be imposed upon the right already acquired. In the change made, no more land was taken, no different title acquired, and no alteration in the use effected; and, such being the case, the legislative assembly was not obliged to provide for a new condemnation, in view of which we are led to believe that the council, by adopting the ordinance referred to, accepted the terms of the grant, and changed the road into a street, under the provisions of § 98, and that § 90 relates to the opening of streets where no highway theretofore existed, or where a material change in the use is contemplated, and that the attempt in the case at bar to pursue the method prescribed in § 90 was unnecessary; and hence the decree is affirmed.

MAINE SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

AMERICAN GAS &amp; VENTILATING MACHINE COMPANY

v.

John N. WOOD.

(90 Me. 516.)

1. A promissory note and a contemporaneous written agreement referring thereto and providing that the maker may receive back the note on surrendering certain stock constitute an entire contract the stipulations of which are mutual and dependent rather than independent and collateral.
2. An estoppel in pais arises whenever an act is done or a statement made by a party the truth or efficacy of which it would be a fraud on his part to controvert or impair.
3. An estoppel against claiming that the maker of a note has lost his right to receive it back on the surrender of certain stock arises when his failure was induced by the acts and declarations of the other party assuring him that his right would not be waived by retaining the note.

(July 30, 1897.)

NOTE.—Contemporaneous agreements and their breach as a defense to a promissory note.

I. Scope of note.

II. Parol agreements.

- a. General rule.
- b. That note is not to be paid.
- c. That payment is to be conditional.
- d. As to time of payment.
- e. As to place of payment.
- f. As to medium of payment.
- g. As to mode of payment.
- h. As to amount to be paid.
- i. As to capacity of maker.
- j. As to negotiation.
- k. As to subject-matter of the consideration.

III. Collateral and independent agreements.

- a. General rule.
- b. What agreements are collateral and independent.

IV. Mutual and dependent agreements.

- a. General doctrine.
- b. What agreements are mutual and dependent.
- c. Must be between same parties.
- d. Mortgage contemporaneous with note.

V. Consistent agreements constituting parts of a whole transaction.

VI. Agreements constituting consideration for note.

- a. Scope of the subject.
- b. The general doctrine.
- c. Application to parol agreements.
- d. What agreements are within the rule.

VII. Agreements constituting condition of delivery.

VIII. Agreements constituting satisfaction or discharge.

IX. Executed agreements.

X. Effect on transferee of note.

I. Scope of note.

Owing to the large amount of material on this subject, and with a view to limiting the size of the note, it has been confined to promissory notes proper, negotiable or non-negotiable, ex-43 L. R. A.

REPORT by the Supreme Judicial Court for Androscoggin County for the opinion of the full bench of an action brought to enforce payment of a promissory note. Judgment for defendant.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. W. Mitchell, for plaintiff:

The case shows nothing more than an executory agreement between the parties for payment of the note otherwise than in cash; and while such an agreement, if made for a sufficient consideration, might entitle the defendant to an action for damages, if the plaintiff refused to stand by it, it can be no defense to this suit.

2 Parsons, Notes & Bills, chap. 15, § 2, and pp. 529-531; Walker v. Russell, 17 Pick. 280; Sexton v. Wood, 17 Pick. 116; Penn Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Crane, 134 Mass. 56; Pitkin v. Frink, 8 Met. 12; Waterhouse v. Kendall, 11 Cush. 128; Turner v. Rogers, 121 Mass. 12; Hodgkins v. Moulton, 100 Mass. 309; Wyman v. Winslow, 11 Me. 398, 26 Am. Dec. 542; Cushing v. Wyman, 44 Me. 121; Jenness v. Lane, 26 Me. 475; Noble v. Edes, 51 Me. 34.

cluding cases as to other negotiable paper such as checks, drafts, bills of exchange, etc., and it has been also confined to the contract comprised in the note itself, excluding contracts growing out of the indorsement of negotiable paper, or the signing of it as surety, and agreements contemporaneous therewith, which constitute different arrangements and relationships. With reference to parol contemporaneous agreements, an effort has been made to distinguish between cases in which there were two distinct contracts leading to different results, the one evidenced by the note and the other by parol, and those in which there was really but one contract, and the effort was to show that it was something different from what it purported to be on its face, with a view to the exclusion of the latter class of cases.

II. Parol agreements.

a. General rule.

In accordance with the general rule which prohibits oral evidence to contradict a writing, a contemporaneous parol agreement between the parties to a note, contradicting its terms, is insufficient as a defense in an action on the note. Clark v. Gramling, 54 Ark. 525; Linville v. Holden, 2 MacArth. 329; Calhoun v. Davis, 2 Ind. 532; Hays v. Davis, 6 U. C. Q. B. 396; Beals v. Beals, 20 Ind. 163; Western Mfg. Co. v. Rogers, 54 Neb. 456.

And an answer setting up such a defense is demurrable. Clark v. Gramling, 54 Ark. 525.

A promissory note affords the only evidence of its terms and conditions, and cannot be contradicted or varied by a previous or contemporaneous verbal agreement of the parties, as such agreements are all regarded as merged in the written contract. Mager v. Hutchinson, 7 Ill. 265; Woodall v. Greater, 51 Ind. 539; Linville v. Holden, 2 MacArth. 329.

And where the effect of a condition attached to a promissory note would be to change and alter the terms of the contract by changing the legal effect thereof or introducing conditions and stipulations which are not expressed in the written agreement between the parties, to allow its

Messrs. A. R. Savage and H. W. Oakes for defendant.

Foster, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action upon a promissory note of the following tenor:

Lewiston, Me., Oct. 15, 1890.

Four months after date, I promise to pay the American Gas and Ventilating Machine Co. one hundred and twenty-five dollars at Lewiston, Me., with interest. Value received.
J. N. Wood.

The plaintiff, having proved the note declared on, is entitled to judgment unless, upon the facts disclosed, the other party has shown a legal defense. In support of such defense, the defendant introduces an agreement in writing, signed by the plaintiff, executed at the same time when the note was given, and which reads as follows:

proof as a defense against the note would violate the rule that where a contract is reduced to writing the legal presumption is that the entire contract as finally settled is embraced therein, and all oral negotiations or stipulations between the parties which preceded or accompanied the execution of the instrument are to be regarded as merged in it. Durland v. Pitcairn, 51 Ind. 426.

While a contemporaneous agreement in writing may be adduced under some circumstances to vary or contradict the express terms of a note, it is not competent to give evidence of an oral agreement for that purpose. Brown v. Langley, 5 Scott, N. R. 249, 4 Mann. & G. 466, 12 L. J. C. P. N. S. 82.

The failure to reduce to writing a stipulation between the parties to a note in the absence of proof showing misrepresentations from dishonest motives, or of such circumstances as would authorize the implication of fraud, must be attributed to the unskilfulness of the person preparing the instrument, and does not constitute a ground for the admission of oral evidence in a court of law. Paysant v. Ware, 1 Ala. 160.

Parol evidence which does not go to the consideration, and the only tendency of which is to prove the existence of a contemporaneous verbal agreement inconsistent with the terms and conditions of a note, is not admissible in an action thereon. Coapstick v. Bosworth, 121 Ind. 6; Hunt v. Adams, 7 Mass. 518; Carter v. Hamilton, 11 Barb. 147; Dolson v. De Ganahl, 70 Tex. 620; Gregory v. Hart, 7 Wis. 532.

To admit proof of a parol agreement or understanding between the parties to a note entered into at the time it was executed, essentially varying the note itself, would be contrary to the rule of law which forbids any verbal agreement differing from a written one entered into before or at the time the written agreement was executed from being given in evidence. Caldwell v. May, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 425.

And parol evidence of an oral agreement alleged to have been made at the time of making a promissory note cannot be permitted to vary, qualify, contradict, or add to or subtract from the absolute terms of the written contract. Forsythe v. Kimball, 91 U. S. 201, 23 L. ed. 352; Brown v. Spofford, 95 U. S. 475, 24 L. ed. 508.

So, the rule that parol evidence of an oral agreement alleged to have been made at the time of making a promissory note cannot be permitted to contradict or alter the terms of the written contract, is the same in equity as at law. Forsythe v. Kimball, 91 U. S. 201, 23 L. ed. 352; Borden v. Peay, 20 Ark. 293.

And the making and violation of a contemporaneous parol agreement inconsistent with a promissory note at the time of its execution is not a fraud for which equity will vary or set it aside, where no sufficient reason appears why such agreement was not incorporated in the note. Dyar v. Walton, 79 Ga. 466.

So, a promissory note and a contract in writing out of which it arises, if both were executed at the same time, constitute but one agreement, and that agreement cannot be varied or its terms added to by parol evidence of other stipulations not embraced within them. Allen v. Nofsinger, 13 Ind. 494.

And a parol contemporaneous agreement changing the legal effect of a promissory note and a written contract constituting one agreement, that the payment of the note might be defeated by the termination of the contract by the voluntary act of one of the parties, cannot be set up as a defense in an action on the note and contract. Durland v. Pitcairn, 51 Ind. 426.

But objections to the admissibility of evidence cannot be raised by asking instructions to the jury, and if evidence is inadmissible as tending to show a contemporaneous agreement by parol, varying the terms of a written contract, it should be objected to on that ground. The objection cannot be raised by means of a request to instruct. Nalle v. Gates, 20 Tex. 315.

b. That note is not to be paid.

A contemporaneous parol agreement between the parties to a note, that it was not to be enforced as between the parties, constitutes no defense to the note. Davy v. Kelley, 66 Wis. 452; Dolson v. De Ganahl, 70 Tex. 620.

The maker of a note for which there was a consideration cannot be permitted to show an oral agreement that he was not to be liable at all upon the note. Tacoma Mill Co. v. Sherwood, 11 Wash. 492; Rodgers v. Donovan, 13 Phila. 51.

And evidence that at the time promissory notes were signed, the payees promised that the makers should not be called upon to pay them, is not admissible in an action on the note under the rule excluding parol evidence to contradict the terms of written instruments. Remington v. Wright, 43 N. J. L. 451; Wright v. Remington, 41 N. J. L. 48, 82 Am. Rep. 180; Davy v. Kelley, 66 Wis. 452; Moore v. Sullivan, 21 U. C. Q. B. 443.

And a plea in an action against the maker of negotiable promissory notes that he executed them with the understanding that he was not to be bound, and for a purpose wholly at variance with their plain tenor and import, is no defense where there is no denial that the construed together as part of one and the same transaction.

The plaintiff, on the contrary, contends that, although made at the same time as the note, it must be considered as independent and collateral to it, repugnant to the very terms of the note, and destructive of it; that it is but a promise to accept payment of the note in a different manner than is provided for in the note itself.

The certificates of stock mentioned in this agreement, and which, from the evidence, appear to have been the consideration of this note, were never surrendered by the defendant to the plaintiff prior to the commencement of this action.

Viewed in the most favorable light for the defendant, the transaction shows only an executory agreement or contract between the parties, requiring some further act to be done, or some good and sufficient reason for its omission, in order to render it available as a defense.

We are aware that there is a class of decisions which hold that independent, collateral agreements, though executed at the same time as the note, do not affect the construction of the original contract, or afford any defense to an action on the note.

Thus, an agreement in writing, executed at the time of the making of a note which was payable at a certain day, to give indulgence to the maker for an indefinite period, which might extend beyond the specified time of payment, has been held not to be a part of the note, but only a collateral promise, upon which the promisee must rely. Dow v. Tuttle, 4 Mass. 414, 3 Am. Dec. 226. There are other cases in the same line, and among which may be mentioned Pitkin v. Frink, 8 notes were made and delivered, and no suggestion that the understanding and purpose alleged were evidenced by any writing, or that they were omitted from the note by fraud, accident, or mistake. Hirsch v. Oliver, 91 Ga. 554.

Thus, a promissory note given to secure payment of a balance supposed to be due in a general settlement of accounts, errors excepted, with no uncertainty as to its object or meaning, must be presumed to contain the entire contract between the parties, the general settlement of accounts furnishing a sufficient consideration for the note to render it enforceable, and an agreement or understanding between the parties, that it should not be considered a promissory note or enforced as such, would be nudum pactum. San José Sav. Bank v. Stone, 59 Cal. 183.

And evidence that the maker of a note was only an accommodation maker, and that the president of the bank discounting it agreed orally with him that he should not be called upon to pay it, is not admissible in an action on the note, as it would go to contradict a written instrument. First Nat. Bank v. Tisdale, 18 Hun, 151, Affirmed 84 N. Y. 655.

And a parol contemporaneous agreement or understanding between the maker and the payee of a note which was an absolute and unconditional promise to pay a sum certain on a day specified, that it was never to be paid but was at some future date to be applied to the cancellation of an equal amount of indebtedness of the payee to the maker, cannot be permitted to control or defeat the terms of the note. McDonald v. Eltes, 61 Ind. 279.

So, parol evidence of an agreement between the parties to a note made payable at a designated bank, that if the note was sent to that bank the maker should be exonerated from payment, is inadmissible in evidence in an action on the note, as it contradicts one of the terms of the contract. Montgomery R. Co. v. Hurst, 9 Ala. 513.

But parol evidence of an agreement made at the time of the delivery of a note that it should be returned to the maker at a designated time if he should then demand it, and that he so demanded it, but that its return was refused, is not inadmissible in an action on the note as contradicting or varying the terms of the note. McFarland v. Sikes, 54 Conn. 250.

Nor can an agreement between the parties to a note given to the trustees of a college that it was obtained for the purpose of qualifying the trustees to obtain a grant from the legislature, and that the note should be given up after a half year's interest should be paid, which in fact was paid, be established by parol as a defense in an 43 L. R. A.

action upon the note. Warren Academy v. Starrett, 15 Me. 443.

And a parol contemporaneous agreement that notes executed to a bank would only be used by the payee for the purpose of showing the assets of the bank, and that the makers should not be held liable thereon, which was violated by putting them in circulation, simply amounts to a promise upon the part of the payee to perform certain things in the future concerning it, and is not of that character of fraud which the law will relieve against. Jackson v. Chemical Nat. Bank (Tex. Civ. App.) 46 S. W. 295.

But a note given pending a county-seat election as an inducement for the location of the county seat at a designated place, under an agreement that it was not to be collected, is without consideration, and where the payee pays the note to the county without the privy or request of the maker, he cannot recover of the maker thereon. Herman v. Edson, 9 Neb. 152.

So, parol evidence that it was intended between the parties that a note given should be a memorandum note only, giving no extension of credit, and intended only to fix the balance of an account, is inadmissible as tending to contradict the meaning of the instrument. Fellows v. Prentiss, 3 Denio, 512, 45 Am. Dec. 484.

And a verbal understanding between the parties to a note that it was not intended to be an obligation to pay the sum of money named, but that it was to be an understanding to furnish the payee with a satisfactory horse, would be a parol contradiction of the terms of the note, and therefore inadmissible as a defense in an action thereon. Ziegler v. McFarland, 147 Pa. 607.

And parol evidence of an understanding between the parties to a note that it did not represent a loan, but that it was to be regarded as a mere receipt for an advancement, which should be accounted for as such, is not admissible in an action on the note. City Bank v. Adams, 45 Me. 455.

And it may not be pleaded and proved, without a violation of this rule, that a note was not intended by the parties to operate as such, but rather as a receipt for a certain sum of money on which interest was to be calculated. Beals v. Beals, 20 Ind. 163.

And an agreement made contemporaneous with a note, that it is to be surrendered upon securing other sureties upon another note, does not relieve the maker from liability though they were obtained, and entitle him to a return of the note. State Bank v. Belk (Neb.) 77 N. W. 58.

Nor is parol evidence that a note was given as a receipt for money which the payee gave to Met. 12, where a note was given by the defendant, and the plaintiff at the same time gave the defendant a writing in which he agreed to take his pay in horse hire, and not call on the defendant for the note so long as he kept the horse and carriage in good order for the plaintiff's accommodation; and the court held the stipulations independent, and constituted separate and distinct contracts, for a breach of which by either an action could be maintained. So, also, Traver v. Stevens, 11 Cush. 167, Waterhouse v. Kendall, 11 Cush. 128, and Stanton v. Maynard, 7 Allen, 335, where similar agreements by the plaintiff, made in consideration of notes given, were regarded as mutual and independent, executory stipulations, the performance of which was not a condition precedent to a recovery upon the notes. Littlefield v. Coombs, 71 Me. 110.

the maker to be loaned by him in such manner as the maker might consider most advantageous, and that he loaned it, but that the parties to whom it was loaned failed and no part of it had been repaid, admissible as a defense in an action on the note. Shaw v. Shaw, 50 Me. 94, 79 Am. Dec. 605.

So, evidence that the agent of the payee of a note, who agreed with the maker that nothing should be paid on it but interest, is not admissible in an action on the note, as it would constitute an attempt to vary the written contract by parol testimony. True v. Shepard, 51 N. H. 501; Hammond v. Small, 16 U. C. Q. B. 371.

And its admission is a sufficient ground for a new trial. Hammond v. Small, 16 U. C. Q. B. 371.

And the maker of a note cannot show as a defense in an action thereon a prior or contemporaneous agreement that if he would execute the note and make a part payment thereon he should incur no further liability thereon. Ewing v. Clark, 76 Mo. 545, Affirming 8 Mo. App. 570.

And a parol contemporaneous agreement between the parties to a note whereby in consideration of the furnishing of collateral security the maker is not to be held liable thereon, furnishes no defense against the note, as it sets up a parol agreement to vary the written contract. Mitchel v. Noell, 39 Ind. 399.

So, an agreement between the parties at the time of making a note that one of the makers was to be liable for its payment only in the event it could not be collected of the other, is to be construed most strongly against the pleader when set up as a defense in an action on the note, and will be deemed to rest in parol, and therefore to be unavailing unless it is otherwise stated in the plea. Mager v. Hutchinson, 7 Ill. 267.

And that the maker of a note was a son of the payee, and that the father advanced certain moneys to him, which were intended as an advancement of his expected share of his father's estate, and that the note was given merely as evidence of such advancement and was not intended or expected to be paid, furnishes no defense in an action on the note, as the parol understanding would tend to destroy its legal effect. Frankboner v. Frankboner, 20 Ind. 62; Norman v. Norman, 11 Ind. 288; Porter v. Porter, 51 Me. 376; Weaver v. Fries, 85 Ill. 356; Street v. Beckwith, 20 U. C. Q. B. 9; Grey v. Grey, 22 Ala. 233.

And it cannot be pleaded as tending to show a failure of consideration. Weaver v. Fries, 85 Ill. 356.
43 L. R. A.

But there is another class of decisions wherein it is held that two contemporaneous writings between the same parties, upon the same subject-matter, may be read and construed as one paper; and this rule applies notwithstanding one of the writings is a promissory note, when the action is between the parties to it, or their representatives. Rogers v. Smith, 47 N. Y. 324; Hunt v. Livermore, 5 Pick. 395; Hill v. Huntress, 43 N. H. 480; Davlin v. Hill, 11 Me. 434.

In the latter case the court held that in an action on a promissory note writings connected therewith by direct reference or necessary implication are admissible in defense as parts of the same contract.

So, in Hill v. Huntress, 43 N. H. 480, an agreement made at the same time as the note contained a stipulation that the promisors of the note were to pay the amount of it

In Fennell v. Henry, 70 Ala. 484, 45 Am. Rep. 88, however, the court said that the statement in Grey v. Grey, 22 Ala. 233, supra, that parol evidence will not be received to show that at the time a note was taken it was intended that the transaction should be an advancement, and that the note did not represent a debt to be paid, was dictum.

Nor is evidence that on the day a note was given by a son to his father for property sold to him at a public sale it was stated by the father that the son could buy in a cow and any other property he wanted and give his note so that it would show that much money, and that would be the same as money advanced, and that the note was given pursuant to and on account of such statement, admissible, as it goes to show by parol that the note was intended only as a receipt. Mason v. Mason, 72 Iowa, 457.

And a note given by a son to his father, which is absolute and unconditional in its terms, cannot be varied or contradicted by proof of a contemporaneous verbal agreement that the note was executed for the purchase of the father's real estate with the agreement that only the interest and such parts of the principal as should be necessary should be paid to the father and mother during their lives, and that after the death of both the note should be paid to his sisters or their children, and that the mother was still alive. Fogiesong v. Wickard, 75 Ind. 258.

So, a parol understanding between the parties to a promissory note, that it was given merely to show that such an amount had been given by the payee to the maker's wife and was not intended to be paid, is inadmissible as a defense to the note as a plain contradiction of the writing. Gessler v. Rush, 2 W. N. C. 66.

And that a note was given by a husband to his wife's father for an advancement in the settlement of the father's estate, and was not to be repaid, and that it was made by the husband because the wife was insane, the money being received by him and held in trust for her, is not a good defense in an action upon the note, and evidence thereof is rightly stricken out. Gurth v. Engler, 71 Iowa, 61.

And declarations of the payee of a note who has since died, that it was given for moneys advanced by him to the defendant, who was his son-in-law, and was not to be paid until after his death nor then unless the amount received by him as his share should be greater than the amount received by the other children, or unless the payee should become insolvent, cannot be proved by parol in an action on the note. Graves v. Clark, 6 Blackf. 183.

in tanning hides for the payee, and the court held that the note and written agreement, made at the same time, relating to the manner of payment of it, were to be construed as one special agreement as between the original parties and those standing in like situation. The court there says, in speaking of the note: "As between the original parties, notwithstanding its form, this instrument is but one part of a special contract, the other part of which, as it was made, was contained in the written agreement of the same date, and purporting to be executed at the same time. Different instruments are to be construed together, as parts of the same contract, where it is necessary to carry into effect the agreement and intention of the parties."

Many of the cases relate to instances where the stipulation, agreement, or memorandum is written upon the face or back of the note itself,—as in Littlefield v. Coombs, 71 Me. 110; White v. Cushing, 88 Me. 339, 32 L. R. A. 590; Barnard v. Cushing, 4 Met. 230, 38 Am. Dec. 362; Costello v. Crowell, 127 Mass. 293, 34 Am. Rep. 367, and the cases therein cited,—and where such terms become a substantive part of the note, and qualify it, as if inserted in the body of the instrument.

But it was otherwise in the cases of Hill v. Huntress, 43 N. H. 480, Hunt v. Livermore, 5 Pick. 395, and Davlin v. Hill, 11 Me. 434, where the agreement was contained in writings independent of the notes, which they were held to modify and govern in accordance with the intention as expressed in the several instruments.

In Davlin v. Hill, 11 Me. 434, the language of our court, as expressed by Weston, J., is

In Bragg v. Stanford, 82 Ind. 234, however, it was held that the admission of parol evidence that a note given by a son-in-law to his father-in-law was for the purpose of evidencing an advancement made by the father to his daughter, is not within the rule forbidding the introduction of parol evidence to contradict or vary the terms of a writing, and is admissible in a suit to subject the daughter's real estate in which the money was invested to the payment of her husband's debts, as tending to show absence of consideration.

But see Weaver v. Fries, 85 Ill. 356, supra.

So, an agreement by which a bank discounts a note as an obligation of the indorser, and that it would look to the indorser alone for payment, is no defense in an action on the note against the maker, as the agreement is in conflict with the note. Armstrong v. Scott, 36 Fed. Rep. 68.

And where a broker negotiates a sale of land for $27,500, and the purchaser has only $22,500, and a mutual agreement is made between the vendor, purchaser, and broker by which the land is deeded to the broker, who receives the $22,500, less commission, and the note of the purchaser for the balance, which is secured by the broker's mortgage of the land, and he conveys it to the real purchaser subject to the payment of such note and mortgage, the deed and note and mortgage must all be taken together and construed as one instrument for the purpose of determining the character of the transaction and the intention of the makers, and the broker will be held absolutely liable to the vendor on such note, and cannot set up a contemporaneous oral agreement between them by which the vendor was to collect the note by foreclosure of the mortgage without holding him personally liable. Gillmann v. Henry, 53 Wis. 465.

A bill for the foreclosure of a mortgage by an administrator will not lie, however, where the mortgage was given to secure a note given by sons to a father, who had conveyed a tract of land to them by way of advancement, taking the note and mortgage to operate as a check upon their conduct and not to be collected, intending the land as a gift, subject to the support of himself and wife, which support was given, but which note and mortgage were surrendered to the administrator on his demand, by the makers thereof, without being informed as to their rights. Sherman v. Sherman, 3 Ind. 337.

This decision is probably explainable on the theory that the contemporaneous agreement had been executed and the note was thoroughly satisfied. See infra, VIII.
43 L. R. A.

So, in Blair v. Reid, 20 Tex. 310, it was held that a debtor may plead a covenant not to sue in suspension in an action on a note, and he may doubtless plead in reconvention against the covenantor, and that assignees of the note with notice of the covenant are bound by it in so far as it operates to suspend the right of action, but they are not liable for damages for its breach.

c. That payment is to be conditional.

A note which is absolute in its terms and an unconditional promise to pay money cannot be varied by evidence of a contemporaneous or prior parol agreement that payment should be contingent. Joyner v. Turner, 19 Ark. 690; Harwood v. Brown (Mo.) 5 West. Rep. 690; Foy v. Blackstone, 31 Ill. 538, 83 Am. Dec. 246; Walker v. Crawford, 56 Ill. 444, 8 Am. Rep. 701; Spofford v. Brown, 1 MacArth. 223; Curtice v. Hokanson, 38 Minn. 510; Western Mfg. Co. v. Rogers, 54 Neb. 456; Rodgers v. Donovan, 13 Phila. 51; Ellis v. Hamilton, 4 Sneed, 512; Sweet v. Stevens, 7 R. I. 375; Columbia v. Amos, 5 Ind. 184; Hatch v. Hyde, 14 Vt. 25, 39 Am. Dec. 203; And v. Magruder, 10 Cal. 282.

The failure of contingencies not expressed in a note, upon which the note is given, cannot be set up by parol as a defense to the note. Henshaw v. Dutton, 59 Mo. 189.

The subsequent or contemporaneous giving of a promissory note absolute on its face for an indebtedness is a waiver of the stipulation that such indebtedness was to be paid only upon a specified condition. Swank v. Nichols, 24 Ind. 199, 20 Ind. 198.

And parol evidence is not admissible, in an action on a promissory note made payable on its face on a certain date, to show that by agreement between the parties it was to be paid at that time only on a contingency mentioned in a written contract previously made between them. Miller v. White, 7 Blackf. 491.

So, an understanding between the parties to a note that it was not to be paid unless called for during the life of the payee cannot be established by parol, in an action on the note. Boody v. McKenney, 23 Me. 517.

And parol proof of an understanding between the parties to a note that the payee was not to claim payment unless she should become poor and afterwards need it cannot be given in an action on the note, as it would substitute a new and different contract by parol testimony. Atkinson v. Blair, 38 Iowa, 156.

And recovery on a promissory note for a desigthis: "It is manifest that the note, the plaintiff's agreement in writing of the same date, and the instrument upon the back of which it was written, and which is referred to therein, were intended to be evidence of the stipulations of the parties in relation to the transaction. It was not necessary that the contract should be written on one piece of paper. If written on several, connected by direct reference or necessary implication, they form, together, evidence of what the parties have agreed."

In the case at bar the agreement bears the same date as the note, and refers expressly to the note in suit. In that agreement it is mutually agreed that if the defendant, at the date of maturity of the note, does not want to pay the same, he shall receive it back upon surrendering to the plaintiff the shares of stock held by him.

nated sum to be paid semi-annually during each and every year that the payee might live cannot be defeated by evidence of a parol agreement between the parties thereto, at the time the note was given, that no demand should be made for payment unless the money should be actually needed and required for the payee's support during her lifetime. Osborne v. Taylor, 58 Conn. 439.

Nor is an oral agreement made when a note was given, that it should not be payable unless the maker should have certain funds in his hands, admissible as a defense in an action on the note. Adams v. Wilson, 12 Met. 138, 45 Am. Dec. 240.

And a verbal agreement between the parties to a note that it was not to be paid unless the maker should collect a note given him for property which he had sold for the payee, and that he was unable to collect such note, is inadmissible as a defense in an action upon the note given by him. Underwood v. Simonds, 12 Met. 275.

So, an agreement between the parties to a note, that if the payee did not procure payment out of a designated estate the note should be returned, cannot be established by parol, as a defense in an action on the note. McClanaghan v. Hines, 2 Strobh. L. 122.

And an agreement between the parties that the payment of a note made by an executor for medical services rendered to his testator should be conditioned upon the allowance by the ordinary of the claim made against the estate by the payee of the note cannot be established as a defense by oral evidence, and the executor will be held personally liable on the note. McGrath v. Barnes, 13 S. C. 328, 36 Am. Rep. 687.

Nor can an understanding between the parties to a note that it was to be paid only when a debt due the maker from another person was collected, and that such debt remained unpaid, be so established as a defense in an action on the note. Harvey v. Laffin, 2 Ind. 478.

Nor can a verbal contemporaneous agreement or understanding between the parties to a note that it was given conditionally, to be paid, if at all, out of insurance money if that should be paid without suit or litigation, and that it was not paid without litigation, be set up as a defense. Hyde v. Tenwinkel, 26 Mich. 95.

And oral evidence of an agreement made contemporaneous with a note which was an absolute promise to pay a stated sum on demand, that the sum named should be paid out of accruing commissions and not otherwise, is not admissible in an action on the note. Gorrell v. 43 L. R. A.

Can there be any doubt as to what the intention of the parties was? Are not the note and agreement "connected by direct reference or necessary implication"? We think so, and that the same should be construed together as an entire contract, the stipulations of which are mutual and dependent, rather than independent and collateral. Had there been a surrender or tender of the stock within the time limited by the contract, it would have constituted a defense to this action. There is no evidence or claim on the part of the defense that this was done.

What, then, is the justification offered by the defendant to exonerate him from the consequences of his failure so to surrender the stock? It is that by the acts and declarations of the authorized agent of the plaintiff corporation, the defendant was induced to retain the stock, and that the plaintiff is

Home L. Ins. Co. 24 U. S. App. 188, 63 Fed. Rep. 371, 11 C. C. A. 240.

In the above case, Burke v. Dulaney, 153 U. S. 223, 38 L. ed. 698, infra, VII. was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the attack was upon the delivery, and not, as in this case, upon the meaning of the terms of a note, of the delivery of which no question had been made.

So, a parol agreement between the parties to a note that it should not be paid unless another note then transferred by the payee to the maker could be set off by him against the maker of the latter, whom the maker of the former owed at the time, and the failure to secure such set-off cannot be set up in defense in an action on a former note, as it would not show failure of consideration, and would consist of a contemporaneous parol agreement tending to contradict or vary the terms of the note. McClintic v. Cory, 22 Ind. 170.

And evidence of a parol agreement made contemporaneously with a promissory note given for the payee's interest in his father's estate, that if the interest of other heirs of the estate could not be obtained in a specified manner the note and release should be void, is inadmissible as a defense in an action upon the note. Ely v. Kilborn, 5 Denio, 514.

And parol evidence that a note was made upon the understanding and agreement that it was to be binding only in the event of the payee being unable to make the money from another source is inadmissible in an action on the note. Jones v. Jeffries, 17 Mo. 577.

Nor can a parol condition that a note was to be void in case the estate of the payee should be indemnified against another claim be admitted in evidence to establish a defense in an action on the note. Converse v. Moulton, 2 Root, 195.

And evidence in an action upon a note of a parol contemporaneous agreement between the parties thereto that the note was only to be paid in the event that the affairs of a copartnership in which the maker was concerned should be prosperous, is inadmissible as violating the rule that oral testimony cannot be used to vary or contradict the terms of a written instrument. Jones v. Shaw, 67 Mo. 667.

So, a parol agreement between the parties to a note given for an extension of time of payment of an existing indebtedness, that in case certain other obligations were paid before or at maturity the note in question should not be required to be paid, cannot be set up in defense in an action on the note, though such other notes thereby estopped from claiming that the defendant was at fault in not making a surrender of the same before suit was commenced.

We think this position of the defendant is well founded.

It appears that C. W. Waldron was not only owner of one third of the capital stock of the plaintiff corporation, but was a director, secretary, and general manager of the corporation in this state, and was generally empowered to act in reference to all matters pertaining to the business of the corporation. When the time mentioned in the note and agreement had expired, it was deemed advisable that an extension should be given upon this and other similar notes held by the plaintiff against other parties, in order to test the machines manufactured by the plaintiff, and to ascertain if they could be made to produce satisfactory results. Such extension appears to have been granted, extending the time to May 15, 1891. But in the meantime letters were written in behalf of this defendant and others similarly situated, explaining the situation, and from all that appears in the case it is evident that all parties were co-operating to obtain a result in relation to the use of the machines that would be of value to all concerned. This appears from the correspondence, as well as from the whole tone of the evidence given by Mr. Waldron. The defendant and other stockholders had the assurance that the plaintiff would act in good faith for the furtherance of their material interests, and they were led to believe that the control and decision as to such matters was vested in Mr. Waldron. It appears from the testimony of Waldron that up to the time this note was were paid before maturity, as it would go to show that the note, although absolute in terms, was in fact conditional. Penny v. Graves, 12 Ill. 287.

And the maker of a promissory note is not entitled to show, in an action upon it by the payee, that at a settlement of accounts between the parties, upon which settlement the note was given, the payee agreed to give it up unless he could find a receipt from the maker for the payment for property which the maker had let him have, the parties differing as to whether the same had been paid for. Brown v. Hull, 1 Denio, 400.

And an oral stipulation by a landlord at the time of taking an absolute promissory note for rent of mills, to the effect that if the mills should be destroyed by fire the rent should cease, and that he would not require the tenant to pay rent for the balance of the term, is no defense to an action upon the rent note where it does not appear that there was any intention upon the part of either of the parties to insert the stipulation in the note, and that it was left out by mutual consent, and not by fraud, accident, or mistake. Stafford v. Staunton, 88 Ga. 298.

Nor is evidence that when notes and a mortgage were given to secure the purchase money for certain real estate upon which there was a mill, it was orally agreed when the purchaser signed the note that his liability was to be the same as the liability of an insurance company, and that he was only to be liable in case the property was destroyed by fire, in consideration whereof insurance upon the building was waived, admissible in an action for judgment on the note and foreclosure of the mortgage. Farmer v. Perry, 70 Iowa, 358.

So, a note made payable from the avails of logs bought of a designated person when there is a sale made is not payable upon a contingency, but absolutely, when a reasonable time has elapsed to make the sale, and parol evidence is inadmissible to show an agreement and understanding of the parties that if it turned out that on manufacturing the logs there was a total loss thereof to the owner, the note was not to be paid. Sears v. Wright, 24 Me. 278.

And a note given for professional services to be afterwards rendered payable at a certain time cannot be defended against by parol proof of an agreement of the parties that the note should not be paid unless the payees, who were attorneys, should be successful in the suit they were to bring, and for the bringing of which the note was given; as to allow it would be to allow parol evidence to change the intention of the parties as expressed in the note. West v. Kelly, 19 Ala. 353, 54 Am. Dec. 183. 43 L. R. A.

And that the payee of a note orally agreed contemporaneously with the note, and as part of the same contract, that he would have the sale of certain property in which the maker of the note was interested stayed until a designated date, and that in case the sale should be made before that date he would forfeit the sum of money specified in the note, and that he did not cause the sale to be suspended or delayed, cannot be set up to defeat an action on the note. Calhoun v. Davis, 2 Ind. 535.

Nor can a note absolute on its face be defended against by parol proof that it was conditioned to be void upon the immediate discontinuance of a suit between the parties without cost to either party. Farnham v. Ingham, 5 Vt. 514.

And an agreement between the parties to a note that if they compromised a suit the note should not be paid, and that they did compromise, cannot be established by parol as a defense in an action on the note, as it would go to vary the written contract. Dale v. Pope, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 166.

Nor can parol evidence be given in an action on a note made payable fourteen days after date to show that it was not to be paid in case a verdict was obtained in an action pending between other parties. Foster v. Jolly, 1 Crompt. M. & R. 703, 5 Tyrw. 239.

And it is not admissible to show that a note payable absolutely at a specified time would not be required until a certain case in court was decided. Van Effen v. Howell, 40 Neb. 850.

And a stipulation between the parties to a promissory note payable on demand having a memorandum on the bottom that one half was to be paid in twelve months and the balance in twenty-four months, which was written before the note was delivered, that the term of credit was provisional, conditioned on the maker remaining solvent, is not admissible as a defense in an action on the note. Heywood v. Perrin, 10 Pick. 228, 20 Am. Dec. 518.

So, a note absolute on its face cannot be defeated by oral evidence that it was given conditionally, to be void if it should be shown that the maker then in insolvency had included in his inventory the amount due the payee on his note. Erwin v. Saunders, 1 Cow. 249, 13 Am. Dec. 520.

And parol evidence that at the time a note was given it was agreed between the maker and payee that the note should be given up unless the maker should obtain a discharge from all his debts is not admissible in an action on the note, and cannot be considered either for purposes of varying the terms of the written con-sued the other directors agreed with him entirely. He had frequent conversations with the Lewiston stockholders, including this defendant, and he was in hopes they would be glad to pay their notes, and keep their stock; and it was understood that the result would be that, if they found the machines were good for nothing, they would want to get out of it. He had repeated conversations with the defendant, and told him, not only during the time covered by the extension, but afterwards, that he might hold on to the stock, and give it up when it was found that nothing could be accomplished with the machines.

tract or upon the question of the failure of the consideration upon which the note was given. Tower v. Richardson, 6 Allen, 353.

Nor is parol evidence admissible to show that the note was given for a turnpike subscription, and that it was agreed between the parties that payment was conditioned upon the building of a bridge at a designated point, which was not done. Railsback v. Liberty & A. Turnp. Co. 2 Ind. 656.

And a plea in an action on a promissory note given in payment of the subscription to a railroad and made payable when the track of said railroad should be laid through a designated county and cars should be run thereon, that the only consideration of such note was that the construction and completion of the said railroad through said county should be within three years from the date of giving such note, presents no defense and is demurrable. Cairo & V. R. Co. v. Delap, 7 Ill. App. 60.

And an agreement at the time a bond and coupon notes were given to a railroad company that the maker was not to be held liable until the whole amount of the capital stock required to build the road should be subscribed for and taken, and if the road was not built and completed within two years from the date of the bonds and coupons, then the bonds and coupons were to be given up, cannot be established by parol, as it would vary the terms of the note. Foy v. Blackstone, 31 Ill. 538, 83 Am. Dec. 246.

So, a parol agreement between the parties to a note executed in satisfaction of a lien note by which a lien on land was released, that it was not to be paid unless the boundaries of the patent were ascertained so that the owner might be enabled to defend against hostile claimants, is not admissible in defense in an action upon the note. Slusher v. Conant, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 660.

And proof of a parol agreement between the vendor and purchaser of lands for the purchase price of which notes were given, that if any of the tracts of land should be redeemed by minor heirs at any time before such notes became due then the agreement should be set aside and such notes given up, and that the notes were given in consideration of such agreement, is not admissible in an action on such notes. Lane v. Sharpe, 4 Ill. 566.

And an agreement between the parties to a note given for the purchase price of a horse, that in case the horse dies before a designated time no part of the price was to be paid, and the death of the horse within such time, cannot be established by parol as a defense in an action on the note. Gatlin v. Kilpatrick, 4 N. C. (1 Car. Law Repos.) 534, 6 Am. Dec. 557; Columbia v. Amos, 5 Ind. 184; Hatch v. Hyde, 14 Vt. 25, 39 Am. Dec. 203. But see Barlow v. Flemming, 6 Ala. 146, infra, VI. c.

So, in Mitford v. Finden, 8 Mees. & W. 511, a plea in an action by the payee against the 43 L. R. A.

It is needless to further discuss the testimony, and it is sufficient to say that, in view of the repeated statements of Mr. Waldron, and his requests to the defendant to retain the stock till it was found that the success of the enterprise could no longer be assured, and finally his assurance in his letter to the defendant that the note had been sent for collection by mistake, and that there was nothing due upon it, we think the plaintiff may properly be held to be estopped from claiming that the defendant was at fault in not surrendering the stock before suit was commenced, or is without remedy in consemakers of a promissory note that there was no consideration, and that it was made subject to a condition that the defendants should not be called upon to pay the same if they were not able, but that it should be renewed, was set aside, but it was put upon the ground of the plea being false and tricky and calculated to embarrass the plaintiff.

See also Isaacs v. Jacobs, 15 Daly, 490, infra, V.

As to effect of payees preventing the happening of the contingency, see Stockwell v. Gidney, 73 Me. 84, infra, IX.

d. As to time of payment.

Where notes are payable unconditionally and at a time certain, it is incompetent to prove by parol testimony a promise by the payee, contemporaneous with or antecedent to the execution of the notes, stipulating for a postponement of the time of payment, as such evidence would contradict the terms of the written instruments and vary their legal effect. Doss v. Peterson, 82 Ala. 258; Litchfield v. Falconer, 2 Ala. 280; Skillen v. Richmond, 48 Barb. 428; Ellis v. Hamilton, 4 Sneed, 512; Nelson v. White, 61 Ind. 139; Gardiner v. Papin, 80 Mo. 243.

And see also Cox v. Wallace, 5 Blackf. 199, infra, II. g.

Parol evidence of an agreement to pay a note at a different time than that which the note indicates is inadmissible in an action on the note, within the rule that the legal effect of a written contract cannot be varied by parol evidence. Slee v. Cunningham, 1 Cow. 397; Joyner v. Turner, 19 Ark. 690; Borden v. Peay, 20 Ark. 293.

And an agreement to forbear to sue on a promissory note for a designated time after maturity, though founded on a sufficient consideration, cannot be pleaded as a release or in bar of an action thereon brought within the time limited; in such case the defendant is left to his action for a breach of the agreement. Irons v. Woodfill, 82 Ind. 40.

And evidence of a parol agreement or conversation between the parties to a note that the maker was to be permitted to pay it at any time and thus stop interest though it was not yet due, and evidence of an offer of such payment and refusal, is not admissible in an action on the note, as it would tend to contradict it. Strachan v. Muxlow, 24 Wis. 21.

Thus, parol evidence of an agreement between the parties to a note payable in two years, that it should not be paid for four years or until after the death of the payee's father, is not admissible in an action on the note. McQueen v. McQueen, 9 U. C. Q. B. 536.

And a note consisting of a promise to pay a sum certain sixty days after date cannot be defended against by proof that the maker was to pay it in ten equal instalments. Barton v. Wilkins, 1 Mo. 74.

quence of such failure to return it to the plaintiff within the time stipulated.

This doctrine of estoppel in pais has been frequently applied to prevent a party from taking advantage of his own wrong. It was applied in Caswell v. Fuller, 77 Me. 105, wherein Haskell, J., makes use of the following language: "That a man should be allowed by his own speech and conduct to lead another astray, and thereby take substantial benefit from the error of which he was the cause, is subversive of natural justice." To the same effect may be cited Stanwood v. McLellan, 48 Me. 275; Ripley v.

Ætna Ins. Co. 30 N. Y. 136, 164, 86 Am. Dec. 362.

An illustration frequently given is that if a landlord, even without consideration, agrees that his tenant may pay after rent day, and by reason thereof he should omit to pay at the day, the landlord is estopped from enforcing a forfeiture.

Such an estoppel arises whenever an act is done or a statement made by a party, the truth or efficacy of which it would be a fraud on his part to controvert or impair. Marston v. Kennebec Mut. L. Ins. Co. 89 Me. 266, 272. Judgment for defendant.

And where a note is made payable in one year, parol evidence is inadmissible to prove that when it was given the payee declined to give two years, but promised that he would wait two years for the money. Eaton v. Emerson, 14 Me. 335.

So, parol evidence that it was understood and agreed between the parties to a note made payable in one day, that it was not to be paid until the maker got the money from a designated source, is inadmissible in an action on the note as tending to contradict or vary its express terms. Coughenour v. Suhre, 71 Pa. 462.

And a parol agreement made by the parties to a note payable one day after date, by which the note was not to be made the subject of legal proceedings to enforce collection for two years unless the payee became embarrassed and were in failing circumstances, is inadmissible in evidence in defense to the note for the same reason, and the enforcement of a judgment thereon will not be restrained. Cooper v. Tappan, 4 Wis. 362.

Nor is a parol agreement to extend the time for the payment of a note payable on demand for two years admissible in evidence in an action on the note brought before the expiration of the two years. Porteous v. Muir, 8 Ont. Rep. 127; Stott v. Fairlamb, 52 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 420, 48 L. T. N. S. 574. Reversed on another question, 53 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 47.

Nor is oral evidence of an agreement entered into by the parties at the time a promissory note payable on demand was made, that it should not be paid until a given event should happen, admissible. Moseley v. Handford, 10 Barn. & C. 729; Woodbridge v. Spooner, 8 Barn. & Ald. 235, 1 Chitty, 661.

So, the time of the payment of a note is a part of the contract, and if no time be expressed the law adjudges that the money is payable immediately, and evidence of an agreement between the parties that the money was to be paid on their arrival at a certain place, and that both arrived at that place at the same time, is inadmissible in an action on a note. Thompson v. Ketchum, 8 Johns. 189, 5 Am. Dec. 332.

And that a note calling for a definite sum of money at a fixed time was by the terms of an oral agreement to be paid from time to time until the note was paid and satisfied is a variance of its terms, and cannot be proved in defense. Trentman v. Fletcher, 100 Ind. 105.

And parol evidence tending to show that the maker of a note was not to be called upon for the principal while he should continue to pay the interest is not admissible as a defense in an action on the note. Church & Congregation in Second Precinct in Pembroke v. Stetson, 5 Pick. 506.

And a parol agreement to wait for the payment of a note made payable by its terms as soon as the maker could, until a certain draft should have been received, cannot be established 43 L. R. A.

as a defense in such an action. Kincaid v. Higgins, 1 Bibb. 396.

Nor can such an agreement that the note was not to be paid until a certain suit was decided. Van Etten v. Howell, 40 Neb. 850.

Nor is a parol agreement on the part of the payees of a note not to dispose of or call for payment of the note until certain debts for the payment of which the maker had become surety for the payee were settled, made at the time of giving the note, admissible in evidence. Frost v. Everett, 5 Cow. 497.

And that it was agreed between the parties to a note at the time of its execution that it should not become due and payable until the maker should sell a designated quantity of a specified article, the right to vend which formed the consideration for the note, and that he had not sold any of it and could not have done so by the use of due diligence, and that the holder of the note had notice of the agreement previous to the assignment of the note, is no defense in an action on the note, as it constitutes an attempt to vary its terms by parol. Harlow v. Boswell, 15 Ill. 56.

So, a plea to the declaration upon a promissory note that contemporaneous with the making of the note an agreement in writing was made between the maker and other designated persons and the plaintiff that the note should not become due and payable until a designated person attained the age of twenty-five, or in the event of his death before that age until certain moneys became divisible under the will of another, and that the former was still living and had not attained the age of twenty-five, is no bar to the right to recover. Webb v. Salmon, 19 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 34, 13 Q. B. 886.

And a verbal agreement between the parties to a note payable on demand for value received and for kindness of the payee, that the note should not be demanded until after the death of the maker, cannot be proved in an action on the note to show that it was not given for a valuable consideration. Woodbridge v. Spooner, 1 Chitty, 661, 8 Barn. & Ald. 233.

And evidence of a parol agreement between the parties at the time of making and indorsing a note that payment should not be demanded until after the sale of the estate of the maker cannot be received in evidence to establish a waiver of the right of the indorser to notice of nonpayment by the maker. Free v. Hawkins, 8 Taunt. 92, Holt, N. P. 550, 1 J. B. Moore, 535.

Nor is a verbal agreement contemporaneous with the making or indorsing of a note by which the note is not to be paid or become payable until the maker has realized the amount thereof from a specified source, admissible in evidence in an action on the note by the payee against the maker, or by an indorsee against his immediate indorser, where the alleged agreement and the bond connected with it do not show a failure of consideration. Lewis v. Jones, 7 Bosw. 370.

And an oral agreement to extend the time of payment of notes given for patent rights until the purchaser could make the money out of the business in which he intended to embark such patent rights, made at the same time and as part of the contract evidenced by the notes, is not admissible in evidence in an action upon them. Ockington v. Law, 66 Me. 551.

And an agreement between a vendor and a purchaser that the purchaser should buy a larger quantity of property than was first intended, and pay the vendor a designated sum for a specified purpose, in consideration for which the purchaser would wait for payment of the balance until he had made it out of the property purchased, which he carried out by a purchase of the property, for which the purchaser gave his absolute note, cannot be proved by parol as a defense in an action thereon, as it would be an attempt to prolong the date of payment of the promissory note by parol beyond the time specified in it. Campbell v. Upshaw, 7 Humph. 185, 46 Am. Dec. 75.

So, an agreement by the parties at the time a note was given that payment thereof was not to be asked or demanded until it was possible or convenient for the maker to spare from his business the amount thereof, and a demand for the payment and suit brought thereon at a time when the maker could not so spare the money, cannot be set up by parol as a defense. Clarke v. Allen, 132 Pa. 40.

And while parol evidence is admissible to show the consideration of a note, and to show a total or partial failure of consideration, an agreement by the payee with the maker of the note not to enforce payment faster than the maker should be able to pay is not provable by parol in an action on the note, as it would tend to contradict the note. Holsworth v. Koch, 26 Ohio St. 33.

And a bill in equity to restrain the collection of a judgment rendered on a promissory note will not lie upon the ground that a parol contemporaneous agreement was made by the parties that the note should not be the subject of legal proceedings to enforce its collection for two years, unless the payee became embarrassed and were in falling circumstances, though the two years had not expired before the commencement of the action. Cooper v. Tappan, 4 Wis. 362.

Nor can a parol agreement entered into by the parties when a promissory note was made, that it should be renewed and payment should not be demanded when it became due, be given in evidence in an action on the note. Hoare v. Graham, 3 Campb. 57; Bond v. Worley, 26 Mo. 253; Stiles v. Vandewater, 48 N. J. L. 67; Helst v. Hart, 73 Pa. 286; Anspach v. Bast, 52 Pa. 356; Ellis v. Hamilton, 4 Sneed, 512; Dukes v. Dow, cited in Chitty on Bills, 9th ed. p. 143.

And an agreement between the makers and payees of a promissory note, that the payees would receive 10 per cent of the amount of the note when it became due and accept a new note payable seven months thereafter for the residue, will not bar an action on the note where there was no pretense of performance upon the part of the makers. Dawson v. Bank of Illinois, 5 Ill. 56.

So, parol evidence cannot be received in an action on a promissory note expressing an unconditional promise to pay money, to show that by a written agreement entered into prior to the execution of the note the payee and other creditors promised to grant extensions on their claims if all the creditors would do the same, which was never signed by all the creditors. Garner v. Fite, 93 Ala. 405. 42 L. R. A.

And an agreement between a debtor and creditor by which the debtor was to convey certain lands to the creditor in trust to secure a note given for the indebtedness or any renewals thereof, pursuant to which the transfer was made and notes given and renewals made, but afterwards and before the expiration of the time for which the creditor contracted to renew he refused to do so, is not a good defense in an action on the note thus refused to be renewed, as it would go to vary the terms of the note sued upon by a parol agreement made prior to the note itself. Harper v. Paterson, 14 U. C. C. P. 538.

And an agreement entered into by the parties to a note at the time of its indorsement, that three notes should be executed and used as renewals of each other so as to make the amount fall due when the cotton crop should come in, cannot be proved by parol evidence as a defense in an action on the note. Diercks v. Roberts, 13 S. C. 338.

A court of equity may refuse to enforce a contract consisting of a promissory note, however, over a verbal agreement based upon a good consideration extending the time of payment for a definite period, which has not yet expired. Nelson v. White, 61 Ind. 139.

e. As to place of payment.

Where a note fails to designate the place of payment, parol evidence is not admissible to show an agreement between the parties that it was to be paid at a place different from that which the law implies from such failure to state the place. Moore v. Davidson, 18 Ala. 209.

And counsel in an action on a note will not be permitted to argue to the jury that an agreement existed between the parties that it was to be payable at a different place than that indicated in the note itself. Pierce v. Whitney, 29 Me. 188; Specht v. Howard, 16 Wall. 564, 21 L. ed. 348.

f. As to medium of payment.

The legal effect of a promissory note cannot be varied by proof of a contemporaneous oral agreement that the note should be discharged in any other manner than by the payment of money according to its terms. Rugland v. Thompson, 48 Minn. 539. And see Patrick v. Petty, 83 Ala. 420; Tuscaloosa Cotton-Seed Oil Co. v. Perry, 85 Ala. 154, infra, IX.

Thus, recovery on a promissory note cannot be defeated by showing a contemporaneous verbal agreement on the part of the payee that when the note became due he would receive payment thereof in a designated kind of money, and that such money was tendered and refused. Burns v. Jenkins, 8 Ind. 417.

And a parol agreement or understanding between the maker of a note and a bank discounting it for his use that the bank would receive payment of the note in the bills of a designated bank, is inadmissible in evidence in an action on the note as tending to contradict its terms. Racine County Bank v. Keep, 13 Wis. 210.

And parol evidence that a note for the payment of money was by the agreement of the party to be paid in the commonwealth's paper, is inadmissible in an action on the note as an attempt to vary a written agreement by parol, and the rule is the same in chancery as in common-law courts. Baugh v. Ramsey, 4 T. B. Mon. 155.

An agreement that a promissory note was not to be paid in money clearly contradicts the legal terms of the note, and cannot be established by parol. Linville v. Holden, 2 MacArth. 329.

Nor is parol evidence of an agreement that a note to be canceled by a cotton bond was to be paid in the notes of a certain bank which had been tendered by the principal debtor, who was still ready and willing to pay in such notes, admissible in an action upon the note, as this would establish an entirely different contract. Cole v. Hundley, 8 Smedes & M. 473.

And an understanding between the parties to a note which is absolute upon its face for a designated amount, that it was to be paid in confederate states' money, and that the word "dollars" therein should be understood to mean confederate dollars, constitutes no defense in an action on the note, and is demurrable when set up as such. Roane v. Green, 24 Ark. 210; Leslie v. Langham, 40 Ala. 524; Miller v. Lacy, 33 Tex. 351.

And that a purchaser of a note agreed at the time of the purchase that he would take confederate money from the maker in payment, provided payment be made immediately on presentation, cannot be given in evidence as a defense in an action against the maker on the note, as the promise was on a condition never performed, and was without consideration to support it. Johnston v. Josey, 34 Tex. 533.

So, parol evidence in an action on a note payable in the notes of the charter bank of Mississippi at par, that it was intended by the makers that it was to be paid in a different kind of funds, is not admissible in an action on the note, as there is no latent ambiguity in the note in this respect. Smith v. Elder, 7 Smedes & M. 507.

And that during the progress of a sale the auctioneer proclaimed to the by-standers that bank notes of a certain railroad company would be taken in payment for the notes given for the purchase money, if the same were punctually paid, and urged the by-standers to purchase upon the ground that they could obtain property with spurious money, cannot be proved by parol as a defense in an action on a note given for property purchased at such sale. Hair v. La Brouse, 10 Ala. 548.

And an agreement between the parties to a note which was absolute on its face that it was to be paid in work, and that collection was to be delayed to give the debtor the benefit of such agreement, cannot be established by parol in an action on the note. Borden v. Peay, 20 Ark. 293.

Nor is a verbal agreement between the parties to a note which was made payable in the usual way, that it should be paid in lumber, admissible in evidence as a defense in an action on the note, as parol evidence would thereby be used to change the notes in a material point. Lang v. Johnson, 24 N. H. 302.

And an agreement which was part of the contract which gave rise to a note, that if the maker after having made every reasonable exertion to pay the note at maturity should not be able to do it the payee would take goods for the debt, or give the maker further time until he should be able to pay it without sacrificing property, and that the maker had been at all times ready to pay the amount in goods, but had not been able to pay in money without a sacrifice of property, constitutes no defense in an action on the note. Cox v. Wallace, 5 Blackf. 199.

So, parol evidence that a note was given for a bill of goods and that it was agreed that land should be taken in payment if the purchaser had not the money to pay for the goods when the bills matured, is not admissible as a defense in an action on the note, as it would transform the note into an agreement payable in property. Barhydt v. Bonney, 55 Iowa, 717.

And a verbal agreement between the parties to a promissory note that upon the maker's giving a deed of certain property the note should be given up, is not admissible as a defense in an action on the note. Spring v. Lovett, 11 Pick. 417.

So, parol evidence in an action on a promissory note that at the date of its execution the parties were tenants in common of a tract of land, and that it was agreed between the parties that the payee should convey to the maker her one-fourth interest, and that in consideration thereof he should pay her thereafter an annuity, and that the note sued on was drawn up and signed for the purpose of securing the payment of the annuity, is not admissible. Coapstick v. Bosworth, 121 Ind. 6.

And parol evidence of an agreement between the parties to a note given in payment for goods that the note should be paid by a quitclaim and writing then made, and that a mortgage upon the goods should cease to have any legal effect, which was admissible only for the purpose of proving fraud in the written agreement, cannot be used in an action of trespass for damages for carrying away the goods under the mortgage to vary or control the terms of the agreement. Leonard v. Smith, 11 Met. 330.

On this subject, see also infra, VIII.

g. As to mode of payment.

Parol evidence of an agreement that a note for a sum of money certain should be paid in a particular mode is inadmissible in an action on the note. Murchie v. Cook, 1 Ala. 41, cited in Beard v. White, 1 Ala. 436; Borden v. Peay, 20 Ark. 293.

Thus, parol evidence of an understanding between the parties to a note which was unambiguous and made payable in money twelve months after date, that it was not to be paid in money, but that it was to be discharged by the crediting of certain unsettled accounts, is not admissible in an action on the note. Clark v. Hart, 49 Ala. 86.

And that at the time a note was given it was agreed by the parties that the payee was to hold it until it fell due, and receive his own note for the same amount in exchange therefor, and that the maker was ready to fulfil the agreement, having taken up the note from the holder, is not a good defense in an action on the note, as it would in effect change the mode of payment by a contemporaneous agreement not contained in the writing. Fields v. Stunston, 1 Coldw. 40.

And one who receives a sum of money from another, and gives his note therefor, cannot be allowed to show in defense by parol that he received the money at the request of the other and applied it as requested, in payment of a judgment against the other's son, and that it was not intended to operate as a note but merely as a memorandum of the amount received, and that it was agreed at the time that the payment of the money in the way agreed upon should be a satisfaction of the note, as such defense would transform the note by parol testimony into a mere memorandum or receipt. Dickson v. Harris, 60 Iowa, 727.

So, an agreement to allow a set-off to an indebtedness is waived by the subsequent or contemporaneous giving of a note therefor. Dayhuff v. Dayhuff, 27 Ind. 158.

And that the maker of a note for $100 was indebted to the payee at the time it was given in the sum of $75, and that the payee then and there agreed to pay him the difference between the note and the indebtedness, and the note was made and accepted on condition of such payment, but that the payee did not pay such difference, and that therefore he is entitled to recover

$75 only, is not a good defense in an action on the note. Kelly v. Lisk, 18 U. C. Q. B. 418.

Nor is an oral agreement between the parties contemporaneous with a note for money borrowed of an insurance company which was indorsed for accommodation, that such sum as should be found justly due from the company to the maker on a certain policy of insurance made by them to him should be set off and applied in satisfaction of the note, admissible in evidence in an action on the note by the insurance company against the indorser. St. Louis Perpetual Ins. Co. v. Homer, 9 Met. 39.

And an answer to an action on promissory notes, alleging that they were made for the purchase money of certain lands sold by an administrator, and that the purchaser had a probated demand against the estate of the intestate, and that at the time of the sale the maker had a verbal understanding and agreement with the administrator that payment of the notes would not be exacted, but that he might retain the amount thereof on his claim, and that the administrator had conveyed the lands but refused to surrender the notes pursuant to the agreement, presents no defense. Blahop v. Dillard, 49 Ark. 285.

So, that a note was signed and delivered on an understanding and agreement that the payee would hold it and present it as so much due from the maker in settlement of their partnership accounts, cannot be proved by parol in an action on the note. Wharton v. Douglass, 76 Pa. 273; Currier v. Hale, 8 Allen, 47.

And that a note was given upon the understanding that it was to be reckoned in by the maker as part of a sum of money which the payee was to pay in as his share of the funds to be contributed by them toward a contemplated partnership, but that the payee afterwards refused to complete the contemplated arrangement, is not a good defense in an action on the note, as it sets up a parol agreement in variance with the written instrument. Adams v. Forde, 13 U. C. Q. B. 485.

Nor can an agreement between the parties to a note that before it became due the payee would procure an adjustment of an account between the maker and a company of which the payee was a member, and the application of the amount due the maker in part or full payment of the note, and that suit should not be brought on the note until after the settlement, and the fact that no settlement had been made, be set up by parol as a defense in an action on the note. Mahan v. Sherman, 7 Blackf. 378.

And a contemporaneous verbal agreement, made by the parties to a note given by one partner to another, after dissolution, for money advanced to him, that the note should be paid out of the effects of the firm, and that if such effects were not sufficient then the lender should pay three fourths and the maker one fourth of the balance, cannot be proved by parol in an action on the note. Gridley v. Dole, 4 N. Y. 486.

And an oral agreement between the maker and payee of a note given in settlement of partnership affairs, that the note was to be delivered up and canceled on the delivery of a bill of sale of certain property of the partnership by the maker to the payee, is not admissible in evidence, as it would go to change an absolute note into a conditional one by oral evidence. Perkins v. Young, 16 Gray, 392.

So, an understanding between the parties to a note contemporaneous with it that it should be payable only out of a surplus arising from the assets of a debtor from property conveyed to the maker cannot be set up as a defense in an action on the note, as this would vary or add to the terms of the written contract by parol. Guy v. Bibend, 41 Cal. 322.

And a note payable in good, well-finished plows cannot be controlled by parol evidence that it was also agreed when the note was given that if there should be improvements in the pattern of plow the holder of the note should be entitled to have plows of the improved pattern. Gilman v. Moore, 14 Vt. 457.

Nor can a note payable to a designated person or order be shown by parol to have been made, by the agreement of the parties, payable to somebody else. Strachan v. Muxlow, 24 Wis. 21.

And a verbal agreement by the payees of a note that they would pay it themselves at maturity constitutes no defense in an action on the note, as it would tend to vary its terms by parol evidence. Miller v. Wells, 46 Ill. 49.

Nor can the maker of a note show by parol, in an action thereon, that a guaranty indorsed upon the note was accepted by the payee at the time it was made in full satisfaction of the note. Smith v. Stevens, 8 Ind. 332.

And an agreement by the payee in a note to collect a subscription from members of the church and apply the proceeds to the payment of the note, which he failed to do, cannot be established by parol as a defense against the note. Cianin v. Esterly Harvesting Mach. Co. 118 Ind. 372, 3 L. R. A. 863.

In Murchie v. Cook, 1 Ala. 41, however, it was held that parol evidence is admissible in an action on a note to establish an agreement contemporaneous therewith, to receive in part payment thereof a debt of another person, as such evidence would explain why the note was given and its consideration, but would not vary its terms. On this subject, see also infra, VIII.

h. As to amount to be paid.

While a verbal contract may constitute the consideration of a promissory note, and may be shown as such, a note for a given amount cannot be trammelled with a verbal condition which shall make it obligatory for a less sum or otherwise alter or vary it. Swank v. Nichols, 20 Ind. 198, 24 Ind. 199.

And parol evidence in an action on a promissory note absolute in form is inadmissible to show that the promise was a conditional one, and that in a certain event only part of the amount named in the note was to be paid. Smith v. Thomas, 29 Mo. 310.

Thus, that the payee of a note sold it to the holder for much less than the sum due upon it, and made a verbal arrangement with him that he should exact of the maker only about as much as he had given for it, in consequence of the insolvency of the maker, is no defense in an action thereon by the holder against the maker. Babson v. Webber, 9 Pick. 163.

And a parol agreement made at the same time with the execution of a promissory note, that a certain sum should be indorsed on it as paid of that date, is inadmissible in evidence in an action on the note. Walters v. Armstrong, 5 Minn. 448.

Nor is parol evidence admissible to prove that at the time a note was made there was an agreement that the value of certain peltries should be credited on the note when the amount should be ascertained. Featherston v. Wilson, 4 Ark. 154.

And where a promissory note is made, the consideration of which is to be defeated if certain bills of exchange shall not be paid in the hands of an assignee without notice, the nonpayment of the bills cannot be set up as a defense. Thomas v. Page, 3 McLean, 369.

So, no reduction in the amount of the recovery on a note given for an insurance premium can be secured by evidence of an understanding that the amount thereof was fixed with liberty to the insured to go to a certain place, and that it should be less if he did not go, and that he did not go. Phillips v. Halsey, 1 Root, 194.

And parol proof of an agreement between the parties to a note given for the hire of a negro, that if the negro was taken sick he was to be sent home and his owner was to lose the time of such sickness, is inadmissible in an action on the note, as it constitutes an attempt to add a condition to the contract not expressed therein. Lane v. Price, 5 Mo. 101.

And that a note was given for the hire of a negro, and that it was agreed between the parties that as the negro was sickly the hirer should deal tenderly with him, and that the value of the time which should be lost by him on account of sickness should be deducted from the promissory note, and that he was sick for a long time during the hiring, constitute no defense in such an action, and a plea setting up such facts is demurrable. Caldwell v. May, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 425.

Nor is parol evidence of an agreement between the maker and payee of a note that the payee, who was an attorney, should receive from the maker, who had engaged his professional services, $100 if he should be discharged on the preliminary examination, but if he should be held for bail and indicted the attorney should receive $300, pursuant to which the note was executed for $300, admissible in evidence in an action on the note, as it would tend to alter the conditions of the contract embodied therein. Atherton v. Dearmond, 33 Iowa, 353.

So, an agreement between the parties to a joint and several note that one of the makers was to be discharged from any further claim upon the note upon the payment of a less sum than was due by the other maker, and the payment of such less sum in pursuance of the agreement, is in direct contradiction to the promise contained in the note, and, whether verbal or in writing, cannot be set up in defense in an action thereon by the maker who was to be discharged by such payment, where the other maker had not appeared in the action. Shed v. Pierce, 17 Mass. 629.

And where a promissory note is given for a specific sum, evidence that at the time of giving the note it was agreed between the parties that an account which the maker held against the payee should be deducted from the note is not admissible in an action on the note. Eaves v. Henderson, 17 Wend. 190.

And a verbal agreement between the parties to a note given for the purchase price of certain accounts that the maker should have a set-off against the note to the amount of notes and accounts sold to him by the payee which he failed to collect, goes directly to add to and vary the writing, and unless a sufficient foundation is laid for its introduction, is clearly inadmissible in evidence in an action on the note. Paysant v. Ware, 1 Ala. 160.

Nor is parol evidence of an agreement between the parties to a note that if it was too large to pay the account between them a deduction was to be made, admissible in an action on the note, as it tends to vary the written contract. Godard v. Hill, 33 Me. 582.

And notes and mortgages given to close and settle an account cannot be defended against on the ground that when they were given it was agreed by parol that if they were found to be for too much they should be credited down and stand only for the true debt. Gyar v. Walton, 79 Ga. 466.

But see infra, VI.
43 L. R. A.

So, that a note was made and delivered to the payee in part consideration for a stock of goods bought of the payee, and of certain notes, books of account, etc., belonging to the payee and another and assigned to him, and that it was agreed between them that if any mistakes were discovered in the amounts due upon such notes, books of account, etc., the sum should be allowed and indorsed, one half upon these notes and one half upon another note given at the same time, is not provable by parol as a defense to a note. Gregory v. Hart, 7 Wis. 532.

And an answer in an action on a note given for the purchase price of plaster to be delivered that it was agreed between the parties that when the note matured the maker should only pay for the plaster which had been delivered, is bad on demurrer. Royal Canadian Bank v. Minaker, 19 U. C. C. P. 219.

And a contemporaneous oral agreement made at the time of giving notes for the purchase price of certain lands and timber thereon, by which in case the timber on the lands should fall short of a certain amount the maker was to be allowed a certain rate per thousand, and the fact that there was a shortage, cannot be set up as a defense in an action on the notes. Hubbard v. Marshall, 50 Wis. 322.

So, a verbal agreement between the vendor and purchaser of lands for the purchase price of which a note was given, that the vendor would get the land surveyed and if the amount fell short all difference should be indorsed on the mortgage given to secure the note, is merged in the deed given for the lands, which must be presumed to contain all the terms finally agreed upon, and would be inadmissible in evidence as tending to contradict and vary the note and verdict. Martin v. Hamlin, 18 Mich. 354, 100 Am. Dec. 181.

And a parol agreement between the parties to a note given in payment of the purchase price of lands, which was payable absolutely at stated periods, that if any repairs were necessary to the mills or dam upon the property purchased within three years they were to be made by the purchaser and allowed out of the last payment, is inadmissible in evidence in an action on the note, as it would tend to add to or diminish the written contract. Beard v. White, 1 Ala. 436.

Nor can the maker of a note prove as a defense in an action thereon that at the date thereof he purchased among other things a lot of wheat growing on the payee's farm at a designated price per acre represented to be a designated number of acres for which the said note was given, and that it was orally agreed that the wheat should be afterwards measured and the price should vary as the acres varied from the designated quantity, and that the measurement was afterwards made and the amount found to be much less. Carter v. Hamilton, 11 Barb. 147.

And a parol understanding between the parties to a note given for the support of a bastard child that if it should be born dead, or should die within a short time and should not occasion much expense and trouble, the maker should be required to pay only a part of the amount named in the note, together with proof of the death of the child, cannot be set up in defense in an action on the note. Potter v. Earnest, 45 Ind. 418. But see Fellows v. Carpenter, Kirby, 364, infra, VII.

And that it was agreed between the parties that a note made by a bankrupt was to be paid out of the bankrupt's allowance so far as it went, and the residue only to be paid by him, cannot be given in evidence as a defense in an action on the note. Rawson v. Walker, 1 Starkie, 361.

And a parol agreement between the parties to a promissory note given for a stock of goods which were sold to the maker, that neither of the makers would be required to pay any part of it farther than such sum as could be realized out of the goods, cannot be set up as a defense in an action on the note, as it would absolutely annul the written contract. Bowers v. Linn, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 889.

So, an oral understanding between the parties contemporaneous with the execution of a note given for goods which had been sold by a trustee under a chattel mortgage of merchandise given by a debtor for the benefit of certain creditors, one of whom was the purchaser, that it was anticipated that the goods remaining would produce enough to pay the other creditors interested in the trust in full; and if so the maker of the note would not be called upon for anything on it; but if the remaining goods in the trustee's hands did not produce sufficient to pay those interested in the trust in full the maker of the note would be called upon for enough in cash, so that the other creditors named in the mortgage would receive the same ratable proportion of their debts or claims as the purchaser,—is not admissible as a defense in an action on the note. Atkinson v. Weldner, 79 Mich. 575.

And an oral agreement annexed as a condition to the payment of promissory notes that if the maker should be forced to assign for the benefit of his creditor, the payees should file their claims on the notes with the assignee as provided by law and execute and file with the clerk of the court a full release to the maker of all claims other than such as might be paid by the assignee under the provisions of the statute, is inadmissible as a defense in an action on the note under the rule that a written contract cannot be contradicted, altered, added to, or varied by oral evidence, as the oral agreement relates to the very matters covered by the writings, and is inconsistent with their express terms; and it is not a case where the agreement was oral, and the writings executed in performance of part of it, leaving another and separate part of it still wholly in parol, or of a separate collateral agreement upon a matter distinct from that to which the writings relate, and upon which they are silent. Harrison v. Morrison, 39 Minn. 319.

So, where parol evidence of an agreement between the parties to a note given in settlement of partnership affairs, that it was subject to change with reference to the amount of assets collected, is relied upon as a defense if it were otherwise admissible, the maker of the note would effectually preclude himself from a resort thereto by an indorsement made just before the statute of limitations ran against it of a payment on account for the purpose of reviving the note. McSherry v. Brooks, 46 Md. 103.

And where, on an adjustment between partners of partnership affairs, a note is given by one to the other, under an agreement making it subject to future possibilities from a change of the amount that might be realized from the debts due, the amount to be made larger in case more was realized and to be charged with a proportionate amount in case of loss, the burden rests with the maker of the note as to any bad or doubtful debts, which would entitle him to a credit thereon. Ibid.

So, a verbal agreement between the parties to a note providing for the payment of lawful interest, to pay a usurious rate, does not invalidate the note. Butterfield v. Kidder, 8 Pick. 512.

43 L. R. A.

See also Makepeace v. Harvard College, 10 Pick. 298; Blake v. Blake, 110 Mass. 202, infra, IX.

1. As to capacity of maker.

An oral contemporaneous understanding between the parties to a note absolute on its face, that the maker acted only as the agent of another, cannot be set up in defense against the note, as it would tend to control the express terms of the written instrument. Hlatt v. Simpson, 8 Ind. 256.

And oral testimony is not admissible in an action on a note signed by the president and treasurer of a corporation in their individual names to show that at the time the note was given, and afterwards, it was understood and agreed by the parties that the note was the note of the corporation. Davis v. England, 141 Mass. 587.

And a note signed by an individual, adding to his name treasurer of a designated parish, is his note, and evidence that it was understood and agreed between the parties that it was to be the note of the parish is inadmissible in an action thereon between the original parties. Sturdivant v. Hull, 59 Me. 172, 8 Am. Rep. 409.

But an oral agreement between the holder of a note made in the name of a company by its treasurer and indorsed with the name of the company by its directors, made in a talk with the directors that there should be no personal liability on the note, means that there should be no statutory liability on the part of the stockholders, and is admissible in defense of a pleading in equity against the stockholders to enforce payment of a judgment, and is not merged in the judgment. Brown v. Eastern Slate Co. 134 Mass. 590.

So, where one signs his name to a promissory note with the addition of the word "trustee" he cannot defend against personal liability thereon by showing a parol agreement made at the time of the execution of the note that he was not to be personally liable but that the payment was to be made out of a trust fund of which he was trustee. Conner v. Clark, 12 Cal. 168, 73 Am. Dec. 529.

And that a note was given for money loaned by the payee to a congregation, and that the maker of the note was a priest of such congregation and the lands upon which security was given were held by him in trust for the congregation, and that it was understood and agreed between the parties that such congregation and not the maker was to repay the loan, cannot be set up by parol as a defense against the note. Benoit v. Schneider, 47 Ind. 13.

So, that two or more parties make a joint and several note, and two others indorse it, with an agreement, either verbal or written, that the maker shall be only jointly bound with them for its payment, would not affect the several character of the note or the liability of the makers thereon. Latham v. Houston Flour Mills, 68 Tex. 127. See also First Nat. Bank v. Tisdale, 18 Hun, 151, Affirmed, 84 N. Y. 655, supra, II. b.

And when the payee of a note sells it for value and before maturity, and at the request of the purchaser writes his name below that of the maker, he becomes joint maker and not indorser by the written contract, and where no fraud or mistake is shown parol evidence cannot be introduced to show that by the contract of the parties he was to be an indorser only. Cook v. Brown, 62 Mich. 474.

And though the absolute written contract between the parties contained in a note cannot be varied by parol in equity any more than in law, where an equity arises from a relation of surety and principal between the maker and another, and the holder had notice thereof at the time he took the note, a plea that the maker made the note jointly with such other person for his accommodation and as surety for him, and that the note was delivered and taken on an agreement that the maker should be liable as surety only, and afterwards and without the maker's consent it was given to the principal but for which the surety might have obtained payment, is good on demurrer. Pooley v. Harradine, 7 El. & Bl. 431, 20 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 156, 3 Jur. N. S. 438, 5 Week. Rep. 405.

So, a plea in an action against one of three makers of a joint and several promissory note, that the note was made by him as a trustee of a loan society and delivered to secure the repayment of money loaned to another, and that it was agreed in writing between the holder of the note and the person who received the money and the society that the loan should be repaid by the person receiving it by weekly instalments, and that if default should be made notice should be given to the maker, and that if the money was not paid according to such notice, legal proceedings might then be taken upon the note but not before, is not sustained by the production of the book of regulations of the society containing like provisions, where there was nothing to connect the book with the note sued on without the aid of oral testimony. Brown v. Langley, 5 Scott, N. R. 249, 4 Mann. & G. 466, 12 L. J. C. P. N. S. 62.

j. As to negotiation.

An agreement between the parties to a note that it was not to be transferred or assigned is not good as a defense in an action on the note. Dolson v. De Ganahl, 70 Tex. 620; Knox v. Clifford, 38 Wis. 651, 20 Am. Rep. 28.

And a condition that a promissory note was to be held by the payee and not made use of until the maker should return from abroad or should send a power of attorney to someone to receive the note and collect the amount, which had not been performed, cannot be given in evidence in an action on the note where it consists of a mere verbal understanding. Reed v. Reed, 11 U. C. Q. B. 26.

And a note made payable to the order of a specified person cannot be defended against on evidence of a contemporaneous oral agreement that it was not to be assigned or transferred except to a particular person named, as to allow such proof would be to violate the law of evidence that written contracts cannot be varied by parol agreement made at the same time. Johnson v. Washburn, 98 Ala. 258. See also Frost v. Everett, 5 Cow. 497, supra, II. d; Dow v. Tuttle, 4 Mass. 414, 3 Am. Dec. 226, infra, III. b; Wood v. Sheehan, 68 N. Y. 365, infra, IV. b.

k. As to subject-matter of the consideration.

A verbal agreement between the maker and payee of a note that the maker would save the payee harmless from any loss he might sustain by trading with the property for which the note was given, is inadmissible in evidence in an action on the note, as tending to contradict it. Harris v. Caston, 2 Ball. L. 342.

And parol evidence that the payee in a note purporting to have been given for the rental of land agreed to repair the fencing on the land, and that he failed to do so, in consequence of which the maker's property was damaged by the breaking in of stock, is not admissible in an action on the note. Evans v. Bell, 20 Ala. 509.

And where it is verbally agreed that a vendor should erect a house and build a well upon the 45 L. R. A.

premises conveyed according to certain plans and specifications agreed upon, and that the price of the house and well should be added to that of the real estate, and notes evidencing payments agreed to be made are given, a violation of the verbal agreement to erect the house and build the well cannot be set up in defense in an action on the notes, as the oral negotiations must be treated as merged in the writing. Worthington v. Gross, 72 Ill. App. 337.

But see infra, VI.

Nor will an oral agreement by the parties to a note given for an insurance premium, that the policy should constitute a part of the contract, and that the rights of the parties should be determined by a reference to it and the charter, be permitted to change the terms of the note. American Ins. Co. v. Gallahan, 75 Ind. 168.

And a purchaser of slaves for the purchase price of which he gives his note cannot show by parol in an action thereon that by the contract of sale the vendor was to deliver one of the slaves, and that he failed to do so, where the bill of sale contains no words of delivery. McCoy v. Moss, 5 Port. (Ala.) 88.

So, parol evidence of an agreement contemporaneous with a note given for a subscription to a railroad company and payable when the track of the railroad should be laid for a designated distance and the cars should have run thereon, to the effect that such completion of the road was to have been done within two years, is inadmissible in an action on the subscription note. Cairo v. R. Co. v. Parker, 84 Ill. 613.

And verbal promises of a corporation receiving a note in payment of a subscription for stock payable one year after its railroad shall be completed to a designated place if completed by a specified date, that it would construct and complete its line from such place to another more distant place within one year after the date fixed in the note for the completion to the former place, and proof that it had failed to perform such undertaking and entirely abandoned the project of continuing the road to the latter place, cannot be availed of as a defense, as it would be contradicting the terms of the written instrument by parol evidence. Blair v. Buttolph, 72 Iowa, 31.

And a parol contemporaneous agreement between the maker and payee of a note that the maker should be entitled to all the educational advantages of the educational institution of the payee for one person until the note became due and perpetually thereafter, and that the note should not be payable until the university issued to him such perpetual scholarship, and that in case of failure or refusal to give such rights the note should be null and void, and that such conditions were broken,—is inadmissible in evidence to establish a defense in an action on the note. Wayland University v. Boorman, 56 Wis. 657.

And in Craig v. Baptist Edu. Soc. 7 B. Mon. 73, it was said that where a note is absolute and unconditional on its face it may well be doubted whether any promise or representation as to the intended special application of the fund could be sustained by parol proof, as the absolute promise imports an undertaking on the part of the promisor to pay without stipulation or condition; but the case was decided upon the ground that parol proof could not be made to show the moving consideration when the objects and consideration were various.

So, a parol agreement between the maker and payee of a note given for the purchase price of a negro, that if the negro did not suit the purchaser when the note fell due the vendor should take him back and give up the note, cannot be proved by parol in an action on the note. Daniel v. Ray, 1 Hill, L. 32. See also Caldwell v. May, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 452, supra, II. h.

And that a note was given for a stove sold and delivered on the date of the note, and that it was then agreed between the parties that at the expiration of a year from the date of the note the purchaser might elect to pay the amount specified in the note or to return the stove in satisfaction of the note, and to pay him $6 for the use of it, and that he elected to return the stove, which he did and tendered the $6 which the vendor refused to receive, cannot be established by parol to defeat the collection of the note. Bradley v. Bentley, 8 Vt. 243.

Nor is parol evidence that upon the day of the date of a note given in part payment for a horse it was agreed, as an inducement to the sale, that if the purchaser within three months should become dissatisfied with the horse he might return him to the vendor and rescind the contract, and that within such time he offered to return the horse and demanded the note and money, admissible in an action upon the note, as it would go to annex a condition to an absolute promise in writing. Allen v. Furbush, 4 Gray, 504, 64 Am. Dec. 87; Isaacs v. Elkins, 11 Vt. 679.

No, a verbal agreement between the parties to a note given for a part of the purchase price of land that the purchaser should have the option of retaining the contract and paying the note, or of surrendering the contract and thereby discharging his liability, is not admissible in evidence as a defense in an action on the note in connection with proof of the exercise of the option to surrender the contract. McEwan v. Ortman, 34 Mich. 325.

And where at the time a note was given a writing was executed between the parties showing that the payee had sold the maker a designated amount of stock in a bridge company, and agreeing that if the company should reduce the amount of the old stock he was to account to the maker for the amount so reduced, parol evidence cannot be given to show that the reduction was to take place upon a particular consideration, and that none had taken place upon that consideration. Ferris v. Ludlow, 7 Ind. 517.

III. Collateral and independent agreements.

a. General rule.

The same rule applies to agreements contemporaneous with a promissory note, though in writing, and whether in writing or by parol when they are collateral and independent contracts, such agreements being held to be no defense on the ground that each contract is to be performed independently of the other, the nonperformance of either entitling the party injured to his remedy for the breach.

Thus, a written agreement between the parties to a note that if at the time of the maturity thereof it should not be convenient for the maker to pay it the payee would wait his convenience, in consideration of which the maker agreed to pay interest, and proof that at maturity it was not convenient for the maker to pay, constitutes no bar to an action upon the note, remedy for violation of such agreement, if any, being by suit for its breach. Atwood v. Lewis, 6 Mo. 392.

And a covenant to forbear to sue upon a note for a definite time for a valuable consideration is valid, but cannot be pleaded in bar of an action on the note before the time for forbearance has elapsed, the only remedy in such case being an action upon the covenant for damages. Brown v. Shelby, 4 Ind. App. 477; Mills v. 43 L. R. A.

Todd, 83 Ind. 25; Bridge v. Tierman, 36 Mo. 439.

And an agreement by the payee of a note to give it up at his death to the maker, reserving the right to collect the interest in the mean time, though made upon a valuable consideration cannot be pleaded as a defense to an action upon the note. Carrier v. Sears, 4 Allen, 338, 81 Am. Dec. 707.

Nor can the defendant in an action upon a promissory note in which the defense is confined to a denial of the execution of the note and of a consideration therefor, interpose the defense that the plaintiff failed to comply with an accompanying agreement that payment should not be compelled during the lifetime of the maker under an assignment that the court erred in refusing a general request to direct a verdict in his favor unless he failed on demand to secure such payment. Shattuck v. Hart, 98 Mich. 557.

And that the consideration of a promissory note was in part the compromise of a lawsuit, and that the residue was the execution and delivery to the maker by one of the parties to the action of a promissory note, and that in violation of the agreement the note was negotiated and delivered before payment of the other note, constitute no defense in an action by a holder for value. Stewart v. Anderson, 59 Ind. 375.

And an agreement that a note given in settlement of a slander suit and in consideration of the giving up of certain notes against the maker and an agreement to sign a retraction of the slander, that if the retraction was not signed the note was to be returned and to have no valid effect until such retraction was signed, does not invalidate the note on failure of the payee to sign the retraction, and an action may be maintained upon it. Payne v. Ladue, 1 Hill, 116.

And that a note was made upon consideration of the release of the maker from liability upon another note and of certain designated transfers, after receiving which the payee refused to release the maker from his liability and the transfers fell through, cannot be set up in defense in an action on the note. Henshaw v. Durton, 59 Mo. 139.

So, an action may be maintained on a note given in consideration of the payee's promise to the maker to pay the latter's debt to a third person without showing performance of such promise. Hubon v. Park, 116 Mass. 541.

And the remedy for the breach of an agreement between the maker and payee of a note, that in consideration of certain designated notes being deposited with the payee as a security which had a certain time to run, he would not sue upon the note in question until the other notes should become due, is by a special action for breach, and does not constitute a defense in an action on the note. Durand v. Stevenson, 5 U. C. Q. B. 336.

And proof that a note was given to raise money to pay a former note upon which the maker and payee were the first and second indorsers respectively, and that upon the request of the maker thereof the payee agreed that if they would get the maker on the second note to indorse the first he would also indorse it, and that the note was made accordingly, does not establish a defense in an action by the indorser against several makers, one of whom signed as surety. Sweet v. McAlister, 4 Allen, 353.

Nor can a note payable one day after date, given for the price of certain town lots, the title to which was to be made by the vendor to the purchaser on payment of the purchase money, be defended against on the ground that the deed had not been made or offered before the suit was commenced. Daniels v. Stone, 6 Blackf. 450.

And a certificate of scholarship for which a note was given and to which was appended an agreement that the note is to be returned if $10,000 worth of scholarships were not sold in designated counties within a specified time, does not constitute a defense to an action on the note where there has been no return or offer to return the certificate. Wood v. Ridgeville College, 114 Ind. 320.

So, it is no defense to a promissory note that the payee had failed to fulfil an agreement, made at the time of the execution of the note, to furnish an itemized account of the goods for which the note was given, in the absence of any allegation or proof of the correctness of the account. Crawford v. Saunders, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 225.

And that at the time a note was made the maker paid the payee $6, in consideration for which the payee was to send him $8 worth of fencing material, which it failed to do, does not constitute a fraud in the transaction sufficient to avoid the note. Van Vechten v. Smith, 59 Iowa, 173.

Nor is a promise of the payee in a note, made contemporaneous therewith, that if the maker would make it payable in dollars he would receive commonwealth's paper in payment if it continued to be current in the country at the maturity of the note, and his failure to comply with his promise, such fraud as will entitle the maker to relief in equity against any part of the note. Williams v. Beazley, 3 J. J. Marsh. 579.

And an agreement to manufacture certain books to be delivered, pursuant to which some of the books were delivered and during the period of such delivery certain promissory notes were signed and delivered in consideration therefor, after which the payee refused to carry out the rest of the agreement, does not constitute a sufficient defense in an action on the note in the hands of an attorney for the payee who was not a bona fide holder for value before maturity. Lovell v. Renweli, 1 Pa. Dist. R. 354.

b. What agreements are collateral and independent.

No rule for determining whether a promissory note and a contemporaneous agreement are collateral and independent seems to have been laid down by the courts. But they seem to have acted upon the theory that the question depends upon whether or not it was the intent of the parties that performance of the one contract should be dependent upon performance of the other, in determining which the time and place of performance and the subject-matter of the transaction are all to be considered.

Thus, where a debtor gives his promissory note in renewal of a past-due note which had been given partly in consideration of the conveyance to him of certain lots by the payee named in both notes, he cannot defeat an action against him on the renewal note in the hands of an assignee thereof before due by showing that at the time when said renewal note was executed the payee promised to cause improvements to be made which would enhance the value of the lots, the time fixed for the performance of such promise being subsequent to the date when the note was assigned. Nebraska Nat. Bank v. Pen-nock (Neb.) 75 N. W. 554.

And a stipulation by the payee of a note that he would deliver up to the maker a certain other note in consideration for which the former note was given, is an independent stipulation, executory in its character, the two promises being made to be performed at different times, and a recovery may be had thereon without proof of the surrender of the other note. Traver v. Stevens, 11 Cush. 167.

And a stipulation to procure and deliver up an execution on receiving a note is independent, and executory in its character; and while a failure to perform it gives a right of action against the party so stipulating, it is no defense to an action on the note. Waterhouse v. Kendall, 11 Cush. 128.

So, an agreement by the maker with the payee of a note, made at the time of its execution, that payment should not be demanded for five years, and that the payee should not sell or part with the note, and that he would wait on the maker for the money due until he turned his property to the best advantage, is not to be considered as a part of the contract with the note, and will not therefore bar an action on the note, but must be considered as a collateral promise, for the breach of which, if there be a legal consideration, an action will lie. Dow v. Tuttle, 4 Mass. 141, 3 Am. Dec. 226.

And an agreement by the payee of a note, made at the time of taking it, that he would transfer the note to a third person if on settlement he was found to be indebted to him, is collateral to the note, and cannot be set up in defense in an action upon it. Porter v. Pierce, 22 N. H. 275, 55 Am. Dec. 151.

And a note given in the settlement of an action on a note, and an agreement contemporaneous therewith, that in consideration of the giving of such note the payee would show the maker property belonging to a person indebted to him sufficient to secure his claim, though mutual promises, are independent, each party having a right of action against the other for non-performance, and the nonperformance of the agreement being no defense in an action on the note. Plumb v. Niles, 34 Vt. 231.

And where a suit on notes is discharged, and a new note is signed and delivered in settlement upon the condition that the original note be procured and sent to the maker in two weeks, the condition is a condition subsequent, the non-performance of which cannot be set up as a defense to an action on the last note. Goddard v. Cutts, 11 Me. 440.

Nor can a note given for a scholarship in a college be defended against on the ground of the violation of a scholarship bond received by the maker at the time of giving the note, reciting the note and that if he should pay the note with interest he should be entitled to the benefit of tuition in said college annually to the amount of the interest thereon, on the ground that the company had rented out its college building to ignorant and incompetent teachers who received their compensation from the tuition paid, and that the school was very bad, as he was called upon to pay his note according to the terms of the bond before being entitled to the tuition. Oskaloosa College v. Hull, 25 Iowa, 155. And see Wood v. Ridgeville College, 114 Ind. 320, supra, III. a.

And a note given for the purchase price of the business of a dentist, and a bond given by the vendor conditioned that he would not practise as a dentist within a certain distance of the business sold, are independent contracts so far as performance is concerned, and a violation of the condition of the bond is no defense in an action on the note. Clough v. Baker, 48 N. H. 254.

And a promissory note given for the purchase price of the furniture, fixtures, contents, and goodwill of a saloon, and an agreement upon the part of the vendor not to engage in the saloon business in the vicinity of the business sold, are each independent mutual agreements, on which the party has his remedy at law, and a violation of his agreement not to go into business in that locality, by the vendor, cannot be set up in defense in an action on the note, where the vendee remains in possession and does not rescind the sale. Monahan v. Lovece, 70 Ill. App. 69.

So, notes given in consideration of the transfer of certain railroad bonds and an agreement between the parties that the payee, the railroad company, would cause the bonds to be indorsed by another railroad company, are independent contracts, and therefore an action can be maintained on the notes, though the agreement respecting the indorsement of the bonds has not been performed. Stanton v. Maynard, 7 Allen, 335.

And where a note is given under an agreement between a railroad company and a car-equipment company for the purchase of rolling stock, which requires the railroad company to give the car-equipment company a three-months note for a portion of the purchase price, payable on the delivery of the rolling stock, concurrently with the railroad company's taking possession of the stock, the right of the equipment company or its transferees to enforce the note is in no wise dependent upon any of the subsequent provisions of the contract respecting future payments and future relations existing between the two companies. Post v. Green, 10 App. Div. 816.

And a plea in an action on a note that the note was made by the defendant in consideration of the giving of an indemnifying bond by the payee and others to defendant and others, who, as guarantors, were liable for the payment of specified bonds issued by a corporation, and that by the conditions of the indemnifying bonds the obligors were to pay such bonds if the corporation failed to do so, and were to indemnify the guarantors against the payment thereof, and that the obligors failed and refused to pay the same, shows that the payment of the note was not made dependent upon the performance of the conditions in the indemnity bond, and that a failure to fulfil such condition would not release the maker, and sets up no legal defense to the note sued on, as the execution and delivery of the bond to the guarantors, and the risk and burden assumed by the obligors, constitute the consideration for the note which is still retained by the guarantors. Kamp v. Branch Crooks Saw Co. 47 Ill. App. 548.

So, where notes are given pursuant to a stipulation for the settlement of two suits upon an agreement that upon the payment of $3,000 the suits should be discontinued, and that each of the plaintiffs should execute to the defendants a release under seal from all demands because of the subject-matter thereof, the release, however, not to become operative until the notes are paid, the notes to be paid absolutely and at a time specified, and not depending upon any condition, the case is one of mutual but independent promises, and the discontinuance of the suits is not a condition precedent to the payment of the notes. Bruce v. Carter, 72 N. Y. 616.

And a promissory note for $100, and an agreement between the parties to the effect that the payee would sell and deliver to the maker a certain vessel and execute and deliver to him a bill of sale, and that the maker would pay $200 in cash therefor, and $100 at a later date, for which $100 the note was given, are mutual promises, the one being in consideration of the other, and the payee may recover on the note without showing performance of the promise on his part, though he had failed to give the bill of sale, so that the maker could not obtain 45 L. R. A.

a license or lawfully use such vessel. Close v. Miller, 10 Johns. 90.

Nor can a note absolute upon its face be defended against upon the ground that it was given upon the agreement of the payee to deliver lumber, and that a part of the lumber was delivered, but he failed to deliver the residue; and an action may be maintained thereon without averring or proving performance. Pratt v. Gulick, 13 Barb. 297.

And an action upon a promissory note cannot be defeated upon the ground that it was given for two shares of stock in a company, and that at the same time the maker paid the payee $6, taking its due bill for that amount of fencing material, and that giving the note and taking the due bill constituted all together one transaction so that upon the failure of the payee to send the fencing material he had a right to rescind his agreement to take stock, and did so rescind it,—especially where he did not surrender or offer to surrender the due bill. Van Vechten v. Smith, 59 Iowa, 173.

And a note and agreement given at the same time by the payee to the maker to the effect that the payee had sold a horse and carriage to the maker and providing that the maker was under obligation to depend upon the payee for horse and carriage, etc., whenever he could be accommodated as well as elsewhere on reasonable terms at the price the maker made for his best customers, and that he was not to be called on for the note so long as he kept the horse and carriage in good order for the accommodation of the payee, are distinct and independent contracts, and the payee can declare on the note as an unconditional promise or give it in evidence on the money counts, and the maker cannot set off the damages for breach of the agreement in an action on the note. Pitkin v. Frink, 8 Met. 12.

So, the action of the court in a suit on a promissory note given for part of the arrears of alimony had in a separate maintenance suit, in which it was alleged as a defense that among the terms of the settlement was one that the payee should file a bill for divorce from her husband which he would not defend, and that upon that bill a decree should be entered against him with a gross sum for alimony, in both the divorce and separate maintenance cases secured by notes, one of which was the note in suit, in holding all propositions of law presented and deciding the case against the maker of the note upon evidence giving color to the theory that the settlement of the arrears of alimony was independent of the subsequent divorce, that being an inequitable defense, will not be disturbed on appeal where the judge trying the case without a jury had the advantage of seeing the witness. Paul v. Paul, 71 Ill. App. 671.

And an action may be maintained upon a note given for the purchase price of land, although the bond conditioned to convey the land upon the payment of the money at designated times contained a provision that it should be void upon the nonpayment of the money as therein provided. Shepherd v. Merrill, 20 N. H. 450. But see infra, IV. and VI.

And that it was agreed between the maker and holder of a note that the holder should receive in payment or part payment thereof certain real estate belonging to the daughter of the maker, is no defense in an action on the note, especially where it appeared that the holder never agreed to receive it in full satisfaction of the note, and the parties differed as to the sum at which it should be received. Woodin v. Foster, 16 Barb. 146.

So, where a person seized of an equity of redemption in land gives a bond to a stranger conditioned to convey to him a part of the land in fee with general warranty on the payment of certain notes given by him for the purchase money, and afterwards dies insolvent, the original mortgage remaining unpaid, the regular representatives of the obligor can recover the amount of the notes, the remedies of the two contracts being independent. Read v. Cummings, 2 Me. 82.

And that the proprietors of a township publicly proclaimed on the day of the sale of lots that they would build a storehouse in the town within a designated time and construct a bridge therein, but that they failed to do so, is no defense in an action on a note given for the purchase price of a lot sold at such sale. Miller v. Howell, 2 Ill. 499, 32 Am. Dec. 36.

And where a deed of lands for the purchase price of which promissory notes had been given with a payment in cash, contains an express condition that upon the breach of any of the covenants therein the damages might be payable by cash to the amount received in money and the residue by delivering up such notes as should remain unpaid, the defendant in an action upon one of the notes, the others having been paid, will not be permitted to show a breach of the covenant of seisin as to a parcel of the land to the value of the note declared upon, as the agreements of the parties are independent of each other, and an action will lie for breach of either. Lloyd v. Jewell, 1 Me. 352, 10 Am. Dec. 73.

And where a holder of real estate had executed a bond for title on a part thereof to another, and afterwards, desiring to borrow money on the security of a mortgage upon all the land, procured the consent of the purchaser to include the lands contracted to him in consideration that the vendor would at the maturity of the note given by him for the loan pay off and discharge the same and procure the release of the lien of the mortgage on the purchaser's land and turn over a part of the money raised to the vendee, which was done, the vendee giving his note for the moneys turned over to him, after which the vendor without the knowledge and consent of the vendee procured an extension of time on his note and continued the mortgage, such acts cannot be treated as absolving the vendee from his obligation to pay his note where it fell due some two weeks before the note given by the purchaser for his loan became due. Thompson v. Gage, 84 Tex. 654.

So, notes given for the purchase price of lands payable at a future day, and an article of agreement between the parties by which the payee covenanted that if the notes should be paid at maturity by the maker he would convey the land, and it was agreed that on failure of payment of such note the agreement was to be void, and the maker should be liable to pay all the damages that should have been thereby caused to the payee and to forfeit all he had previously paid, are independent covenants, and a suit on the note may be maintained without showing a conveyance, or offer to convey. The payee has his election either to compel payment of the notes and be answerable on the covenant to give a deed, or forfeit his right to the notes, and hold the maker answerable under his covenant to pay all damages; and if he takes the former course, and succeeds in enforcing payment, the maker may resort to his remedy under the agreement. Manning v. Brown, 10 Me. 49. See also Kelso v. Frye, 4 Bibb, 493, infra, VI. d; Lyons v. Stills, 97 Tenn. 514, infra, V.

And that a note was given for a part of the price of a grain warehouse, and that at the time of the sale the payee had an agency for another party to buy grain on commission at such warehouse, and that it was agreed that he should transfer such agency to the maker of the note, which he failed to do, and that such agency would have enabled the maker of the note to make the amount thereof during the grain season, constitute no defense in an action on the note, as, the agency being for no determinate period and dependent upon the will of another, it furnishes no method by which its value can be estimated. Burr v. Wilson, 26 Ind. 389.

See also infra, IV. Mutual and dependent agreements, which subject is the converse of this. And see Kelso v. Frye, 4 Bibb, 493, infra, VI. d, and Lyons v. Stills, 97 Tenn. 514, infra, V.

IV. Mutual and dependent agreements.

a. General doctrine.

On the other hand, when the promissory note and the contemporaneous agreement are mutual and dependent, and relate to the same subject-matter, they are to be read and construed together as one contract so that the nonperformance of one of the contracts will operate as a complete defense in an action for a breach of the other.

This is the doctrine of the principal case, and practically the same rule is laid down in Munro v. King, 3 Colo. 238; Rogers v. Smith, 47 N. Y. 324; Carrington v. Waff, 112 N. C. 115; Thomas v. Page, 3 McLean, 167.

And the same rule applies whether the action is between the parties to it or their representatives. Rogers v. Smith, 47 N. Y. 324.

A note, though absolute on its face, may be made payable on condition by a separate agreement as between the original parties, and in the hands of an assignee with knowledge of the condition it takes effect the same as between the original parties. Thomas v. Page, 3 McLean, 167.

And a judgment entered upon a note by warrant of attorney, which is subject to some defense growing out of the note or transaction or out of some agreement between the parties in relation to it, affecting it with equities, may be set aside on motion and leave given to answer, so as to adjust all matters in the same suit. Jones v. Keyes, 16 Wis. 563.

To escape the prohibition of the statute of frauds, however, against modifying written instruments by parol, the contemporaneous agreement should be in writing.

Thus, it has been held that a contemporaneous agreement modifying a note which is relied upon by the maker as a defense must be alleged to have been in writing. Peddle v. Donnelly, 1 Colo. 421.

And where the maker of a promissory note relies upon a contract with the payee that the payment shall not be required except on certain conditions in bar of an action brought against him, and pleads it as such, it must be alleged to have been in writing. Osborne v. Taylor, 58 Conn. 439.

And see also Gardner v. Matthews, 11 Mo. App. 269, infra, IV. b.

A book of a loan society which loaned money on the joint and several promissory note of the borrower and another, in which the society's rules were printed to the effect that after default by the principal notice would be given to the surety, and that if the money was not then paid proceedings would be taken, which book was delivered to the borrower but not signed, does not constitute an agreement in writing contemporaneous with the note so as to be admissible to vary the contract expressed in the note. Brown v. Langley, 4 Mann. & G. 466, 5 Scott, N. R. 249, 12 L. J. C. P. N. S. 62.

b. What agreements are mutual and dependent.

The question whether or not a note and contemporaneous agreement are mutual and dependent seems to depend upon whether they relate to the same subject-matter, and whether it was the intent that performance should be mutual, dependent, and simultaneous.

Thus, a note and an agreement entered into in consideration therefore are to be construed together, and the nonperformance of the agreement by the payee will prevent a recovery upon the note. Fink v. Chambers, 95 Mich. 508; Montgomery v. Hunt, 93 Ga. 438.

And the maker of a note in an action thereon by a purchaser before maturity for value may plead the failure of consideration and knowledge or notice on the part of the plaintiff of such failure. Montgomery v. Hunt, 93 Ga. 438.

So, where the consideration for a note is the promise to convey certain lands, the contract is wholly executory, and the payment of the purchase money and the tender of the deed should occur simultaneously, rendering the acts to be performed mutual and concurrent, so that upon an allegation of a failure of the consideration of the note it is the duty of the payee to meet the issue and prove a performance upon her part of all the terms of the agreement. Sayre v. Mohnney, 30 Or. 238.

And a note given on the same day as a written contract for the sale and purchase of certain lands, which was made due on the day the contract was to be consummated by the delivery of the deed and payment of the residue of the purchase money, cannot be recovered upon without showing a performance of the contract consisting of the execution and delivery of the deed, or a tender of performance such as the law requires. Hoag v. Parr, 13 Hun, 95.

Where a contract is made to convey lands and a note taken for a part of the purchase price made payable on the day the deed is to be given and the balance of the purchase price paid, if the purchaser wishes a conveyance it is his duty to go to the vendor and tender payment on his note and the residue of the purchase price, and demand a deed; and, on the other hand, if the vendor desires the money he is bound to go to the purchaser and tender him such a conveyance as is called for in the contract, and as would give him a clear title, and demand the money. Ibid.

And no action can be maintained upon a note given in consideration of an agreement by the payee to convey to the maker a lot of land on payment of the note, where he had not conveyed or offered to convey before the commencement of the suit. Mix v. Ellsworth, 5 Ind. 517.

And the action of the court in a suit on a promissory note in which it was established that the note was given for the purchase price of real estate sold by title bond, and that the deed which was to have been executed on payment of the note had not been tendered, in holding the case under advisement until the deed could be made and tendered, and then giving judgment for the plaintiff, is erroneous, as it would be equivalent to permitting a party to sue on a note before it was due, and then suspending judgment until it became due. Cook v. Bean, 17 Ind. 504.

And where the husband of a vendor of land for a part of the consideration of which a note was given made payable on the same day the deed was to be delivered and the balance of the purchase price paid, goes to the purchaser's house and states that he has his deed ready to deliver, but finds the wife of the purchaser there, the husband being away, and the wife tells him where he is, but he makes no further effort to find him, it is not a sufficient tender of performance to relieve him from liability on the note, though the wife tells him that he had better not try to see her husband as he is much excited over an important suit he has in court. Hoag v. Parr, 13 Hun, 95.

Nor can one who gives a bond for the conveyance of designated lands to the obligee upon the latter's payment of certain notes given for the purchase at maturity, and afterwards conveys away the land, enforce payment of the notes upon failure of the obligee to pay them according to their tenure. Little v. Thurston, 58 Me. 86.

And where an agreement is made between a vendor and a purchaser of lands that the vendor will deed the land upon the payment of the note given by the vendee for the purchase price accruing after its tender, and the note is not paid and the vendor brings ejectment against the purchaser and recovers possession of the land, he thereby rescinds the contract and cannot subsequently enforce payment of the note. Arbuckle v. Hawks, 20 Vt. 538.

So, where lands are sold and notes are given for the payment of the purchase money, and the vendor executes a deed with covenants waiving and relinquishing all right to recover the purchase price or any part thereof from any other lands or property of the vendee, the covenants in the deed are to be deemed a part of the original agreement, and the vendor is confined in his remedy on the notes, as to the extent of his recovery, to the property named in the deed. Richardson v. Thomas, 28 Ark. 387.

And a bond for the conveyance of a parcel of land and a promissory note not negotiable, payable on demand for the amount of the agreed consideration, for which a receipt was given, stating that if the bargain should be rescinded the note should be given up upon the surrender of the bond, all bearing the same date, constitute one contract, and an action will not lie on the note without a previous tender of a deed of the land. Hunt v. Livermore, 5 Pick. 395.

Nor will an action on promissory notes payable at different times, given for the purchase money of land sold to the maker by commissioners under an order of the probate court on condition that in payment in full of the purchase money the purchaser is to be entitled to a conveyance, lie if there has been no offer to execute the conveyance on payment at the same time of the purchase money. May v. Cole, 8 Blackf. 479.

Where by one and the same instrument a sum of money is agreed to be paid by one party and the conveyance of an estate to be at the same time executed by the other, the payment of the money and the execution of the conveyance may be considered concurring acts, and in that case no action can be maintained by the vendor on a note given for such sum of money until he executes or offers to execute the conveyance; but where the vendee, by a distinct instrument, agrees to pay part of the purchase money at a designated time, it will be deemed that he is to pay the money at that time at all events. Spiller v. Westlake, 2 Barn. & Ad. 155.

And the payee of notes cannot recover thereon on an allegation setting forth the execution of a contract for a deed and the making of the notes, and averring that the execution of the contract and the making of the notes were parts of the same transactions, and that the contract was the only consideration for the notes, where it does not appear whether or not he had tendered a deed, and he fails to set forth that part of the contract referring to the tender of the deed as a condition of his right to recover. Naftzger v. Gregg (Cal.) 31 Pac. 612.

And that notes were given for the purchase price of land, and that a written contract was then made reciting the purchase and a payment of one fifth of the purchase price and the giving of the notes for the residue, providing that should the maker pay the notes as they became respectively due the payees would convey the land to them by deed in fee simple with covenants of general warranty, is a good defense in an action on the notes, where neither the payees nor their successors had conveyed the land or tendered or offered to make a deed thereof, according to the tenure of the agreement on or before the day the last notes became payable, as the acts of making payment and of executing the deed were to be simultaneously performed. McCulloch v. Dawson, 1 Ind. 413.

And a lease by which the lessor binds himself to make certain improvements or repairs prior to the time when possession is to be given for the rental under which the lessee gives a note, is to be construed with the note as each constituting a part of the contract and both together the whole, and if the lessor fails to perform the covenant of the lease on his part, and the lessee refuses to accept possession for that reason, he may set up such failure on the part of the lessor as a defense in an action on the note. Hickman v. Rayl, 55 Ind. 551.

So, an obligation entered into to deliver a quantity of corn at a future date, and a note given by the purchaser for the contract price of the corn payable on the day the corn was to be delivered, are mutual and dependent contracts, and neither party can enforce his rights against the other without performance or offer to perform on his part. Kelly v. Webb, 27 Tex. 368.

And a note given for the purchase price of a negro girl, contemporaneous with which an agreement was made between the parties that before payment of the note should be demanded the payee should produce the necessary papers and indenture to prove that the girl was a slave or bound to serve under the laws of the state, is without consideration and void, and no recovery can be had thereon where such papers were not produced though demanded. Bailey v. Cromwell, 4 Ill. 71.

So, where a note is given subsequent to the date of a written contract, and identified therewith by its own terms, it is proper to permit evidence in an action upon the note to show the settlement or agreement under which it was given, as the plaintiffs are not enforcing a written contract in all its parts. Davidson v. Bodley, 27 La. Ann. 149.

And an agreement in writing between the maker and payee of a note, which describes the note and clearly refers to it though on a separate piece of paper, is to be read in connection with it as though it had been incorporated into it, and a breach thereof may be set up as a defense in an action by the payee on the note. Goodwin v. Nickerson, 51 Cal. 166.

Nor will an action lie by the payee of a note to recover the balance due on it in money, where it was agreed by a contemporaneous contract to be paid otherwise, and payment has been delayed solely in consequence of other arrangements made by mutual consent. Hill v. Huntress, 43 N. H. 480.

And notes given in settlement of a past-due bill of obligation, which the obligee had reason to believe was lost, mislaid, or destroyed, upon an agreement to return the bill if found, cannot be recovered upon where the creditor after finding the bill falls to return it. Beauford v. Patterson, 63 How. Pr. 81.

And when a note is made and the maker simultaneously subscribes a writing in which he promises on the same consideration to pay an additional sum on the happening of a contingent event, the writing will be regarded as the last expression of the understanding between the parties merging all prior stipulations, and what either may have previously said with reference to the consideration cannot be proved. Cuthbert v. Bowle, 10 Ala. 163.

So, an agreement that a note is not to be paid at maturity, but that the maker was to substitute another note secured upon real estate when the original note was to be returned to an accommodation indorser, constitutes a defeasance which can only be proved as a defense to the note by writing. Gardner v. Matthews, 11 Mo. App. 269.

And the giving of a note payable one day after date with interest annually, and the execution and delivery of a contemporaneous agreement reciting that in consideration of the receipt of the amount of the note the payee agreed to pay the maker annually during life a stated sum, the same being 6 per cent interest upon the amount named in the note, and a parol agreement between the parties that the note should be treated as a cash payment, are to be considered as in effect but one transaction, where no money was ever paid by either party to the other, though interest was regularly indorsed annually upon the note, and no recovery can be had thereon for failure of consideration. Montpelier Seminary v. Smith, 69 Vt. 382.

So, where a note is given for a draft, with the distinct agreement that in case the maker of the note could not collect or realize on the draft he was to be released from the payment of the note, no recovery can be had thereon, where the maker is unable to realize on the draft; and the fact that an assignee of the draft afterwards becomes indebted to the drawer does not change the rule, where no suit was ever brought by the drawer thereon. Hall v. Henderson, 84 Ill. 611.

And a note for $1,000 payable six months from date, given by one partner to another, and an agreement between them, made at the same time and delivered with the note, whereby it appears that the payee advanced $2,000 to the maker to be invested as his share of the capital in a firm of which he was a partner, and that the payee was to receive and retain the maker's share of the profit, until the $2,000 was paid, and thereafter one half of all the profits of the business, and that the note was given to secure the payee against one half the losses which the capital might sustain, are contemporaneous contracts to be construed as one paper, and no recovery can be had on the note for more than one half the loss shown to have been sustained. Rogers v. Smith, 47 N. Y. 324.

And where a sum of money is put into the hands of a solicitor, who lays it out on mortgages, and the deeds are deposited in the hands of the owner of the money, and, interest being in arrear, the solicitor gives a promissory note payable three months after date to the creditor for the amount of principal and interest, and it is agreed at the time that the creditor shall deliver up the deeds to the solicitor and hold the note until the sale of the mortgaged premises shall be completed, and the creditor sues the solicitor upon the note though the deeds had not been delivered up on its falling due, it is a question for the jury to say whether the note was given on a condition precedent that the deed should be delivered up, and what constituted the consideration of the note, and whether or not it had wholly failed. Richards v. Thomas, 1 Crompt. M. & R. 772.

So, the failure of an irrigation company to comply with a demand for water, made by the maker of notes given in consideration of an agreement to furnish him with water on demand, is a good defense to an action after demand for accrued interest, although the agreements to pay interest and to furnish water were not concurrent and dependent, and an action might have been maintained for interest before the company is required to do anything. Russ Lumber & Mill Co. v. Muscuplabe Land & Water Co. 120 Cal. 521.

And the payee of a note given in part payment for work done under a written contract by which he guaranteed all work and materials against defects for five years, cannot recover on such note when the work was not done according to such agreement, and there were defects for the repairing of which the maker was required to pay out more than the amount of the note. Louchheim v. Maguire, 6 Pa. Super. Ct. 635.

So, where an insurance agent agrees to furnish a person with two policies, one upon his own life payable to his wife, and one upon his wife's life payable to him, in consideration for which the insured is to give a premium note for a designated amount, and the note is given on the representation of the agent that the policies are sufficient, the stipulation of the agent and of the insured are dependent one upon the other, and as between them the failure of the agent to furnish a policy on the life of the wife of which the husband should be the beneficiary operates to relieve him from the payment of the promissory note. Sydor v. Boyd, 119 N. C. 481, 37 L. R. A. 734.

And a promissory note given for insurance upon the express understanding that it was to be of no effect and not be binding upon the maker until he passed the medical examination and received the policy of insurance from the company, has no inception in the hands of the agent to whom he gave it, where he did not pass the examination and never received the policy; and where it was transferred by the agent to an innocent holder at a discount, greater than that allowed by law, it was usurious in its inception, and the holder cannot recover thereon. Sweet v. Chapman, 7 Hun, 576.

And an agreement between a life insurance agent and an insurer that the company would insure him, issuing a policy containing special provisions for refunding the money paid for premiums if at the end of three years he desired to terminate the policy for which he gave his note, and the company tendered a policy without the provisions, which he refused to take, the transaction does not constitute a contract between him and the company, and the insurer is entitled to his money and note back, and if the company refuses to deliver them, or if they have been transferred to a bona fide holder, it will be liable for the amount thereon. Tift v. Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. 6 Lans. 198.

So, notes given by shareholders of a corporation pursuant to an agreement to donate to the company their promissory notes for the same amount as they held shares in such company, provided that shareholders then holding the paper of the company would donate as much paper as they held shares in the company, and such agreement, are to be considered as parts of the same transaction, and should be considered together as forming one contract, in a controversy between parties chargeable with notice thereof; and where some of the shareholders never executed their notes, no recovery can be had on the notes executed. Traders' Nat. Bank v. Smith (Tex. Civ. App.) 22 S. W. 1056.

And one who gives his own notes for the amount of other notes on which he was surety in consideration of the promise of the payee to release him from liability thereon and also to diligently collect such notes may set up the nonperformance of such agreement as a defense against the new notes, and that he had sustained damage by reason of the insolvency of the maker of the original notes. Holmes v. Redwine, 103 Ga. 252.

And that a note was given in a transaction by which the makers were given the sole agency to sell pianos made by the payees for a designated number of years, pursuant to which they bought a large stock of pianos and spent much money and labor in advertising and trying to sell, and that during such time the payees took away the agency and gave it to another, whereby they were unable to sell the stock on hand and lost the money spent in advertising, are a sufficient defense in an action on the note brought by one who represents the payees for the purpose of bringing suit. Ludington v. North, 141 Pa. 184.

So, where an agreement in writing is made at the time of making a note given for the purchase price of Bohemian oats as a part of the same transaction, to sell for the maker of the note out of the crop to be raised by him from such oats a designated number of bushels at a specified price within a specified time, and that he should not be called upon to pay any part of said note until and unless such sale should have been made, as a condition precedent to the validity of the note, the agreement and note are dependent covenants and the agreement and its breach may be set up in defense in an action on the note. Johnson v. First Nat. Bank, 24 Ill. App. 352; Sutton v. Beckwith, 68 Mich. 303; McNamara v. Gargett, 68 Mich. 454; Jacobs v. Mitchell, 46 Ohio St. 601.

In Johnson v. First Nat. Bank, 24 Ill. App. 352, supra, it was said that this case differs from those in which the consideration of a note simply rests on the covenants and agreements of a third party to do and perform some act, where the agreement does not make the consideration of the note invalid in case it is not performed.

And a condition to a subscription to aid in the formation of an endowment fund for a college for which a note is given, that it should be used solely for the purpose of maintaining a college then in operation at a designated place, and that no part thereof or interest therein should be expended for other purposes, which was violated by the establishment of a law school with such funds at a definite place, is a good excuse for withholding the consummation of the gift, and a defense in an action on the note. Simpson Centenary College v. Tuttle, 71 Iowa, 596. But see Oskaloosa College v. Hull, 25 Iowa, 155, supra, III. b, and Wood v. Ridgeville College, 114 Ind. 320, supra, III. a.

But a plea in an action on a note, that although by its terms it was due and payable, yet by virtue of another written instrument entered into by the parties at the same time it was not to be paid until the happening of a certain condition, which omits to deny that said condition had happened, sets up no defense. Averill v. Field, 4 Ill. 390.

And notes given for the purchase price of lands transferred under a contract to give a deed upon the payment of the notes are valid without reference to proof that a deed had been tendered, as the giving of the deed is conditioned upon the payment of the notes. Bacon v. Porter, 1 Root, 370; Bacon v. Pettibone, 2 Root, 285; Bourland v. Gibson, 91 Ill. 470.

Though a contract to convey land may be rescinded by the vendor upon failure or refusal of the purchaser to pay notes given on an agreement to make the conveyance on the payment of the notes, the signer of the notes cannot by any act of his alone discharge himself from payment. Crawford v. Roble, 42 N. H. 162.

So, where a vendee of land executes a note in consideration of the purchase money, and receives a bond for title from the vendor, and is put into possession, he cannot resist a recovery upon the note on the ground of the want of title in the vendor, where no effort was made to place him in statu quo by a surrender of the premises to him. Wade v. Killough, 3 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 431.

And it is no defense to a suit upon a note given for the purchase money of lands under a contract providing that the deed is to be given on payment being made of the purchase price as described therein, that the vendor brought a suit of forcible entry and detainer, and got possession of the lands, where the agreement did not provide for possession by the vendee. Babcock v. Hamende, 3 Ill. App. 426.

And an agreement under seal contemporaneous with a note, that if the note should not be paid at the expiration of ten years the payee would give it up to the maker provided the latter should execute to him a quitclaim deed of specified lands, whether or not the two constitute an entire transaction, does not preclude the promisee from enforcing payment of the interest, and such instalments thereof as become due yearly before the expiration of the ten years. Ewer v. Myrick, 1 Cush. 16.

So, where the vendor of land executes a bond conditioned to make title to the vendee generally, and in consideration thereof the vendee gives the vendor his promissory note payable on a date certain, the failure to complete the title before the note falls due is not available as a bar to an action at law upon the note, and the vendor can recover thereon so long as the contract remains unrescinded. George v. Stockton, 1 Ala. 136; Loveridge v. Coles (Minn.) 74 N. W. 1109.

And the maker of a note payable at a particular future day cannot defeat a recovery thereon upon the ground that in consideration thereof the payee agreed to perform certain services for the maker, and had not yet rendered such services, where no time was fixed for their performance and the payee was able and ready to comply with the contract. Walker v. Clay, 21 Ala. 797.

And delay in the completion of a railroad is not available as a defense to a promissory note given on a subscription for shares, unless the time of completion was made a condition by the parties as a term of the subscription, and mere statements made by an agent obtaining the subscription, that the railroad would be completed within a certain time and built upon a certain route, do not render the subscription voidable or constitute a defense to the note, though the road was not so built or completed. Jefferson v. Hewitt, 95 Cal. 535.

And an agreement between a railroad company and a subscriber in aid of the railroad that the road should be extended to a specified point within four months, weather permitting, which is not expressly made a condition precedent to the payment of the subscription nor declared to be of the essence of the contract, is not to be construed as a condition precedent in an action on notes given for the amount of the subscription, where other similar conditions in the contract were made conditions precedent, and a failure to complete the road to the designated point within the specified time would not operate as a defense. Witmer Bros. Co. v. Weid, 108 Cal. 569.
43 L. R. A.

And the breach of a condition subsequent to a gift of a note is not available as a defense to the maker of the note in an action on a renewal note given directly to the donee, as such defense would be personal to the donor. Grand River College v. Robertson, 72 Mo. App. 7.

But a finding in an action on a non-negotiable note given in payment of shares of railway stock, sustaining an answer alleging that the note and agreement to take stock were conditional upon the construction and completion of the railroad before the maturity of the note, and that such condition had not been performed, will not be disturbed on appeal where the evidence is conflicting and there is sufficient evidence to sustain the finding. Jefferson v. Hewitt, 103 Cal. 624.

So, a condition in a deed conveying a part of two patent rights, that the sale is to become void upon a default in either or any of the payments, is for the benefit and security of the vendors, which they alone can waive, and it cannot be given in evidence as a defense to an action upon notes given for the purchase price. Ockington v. Law, 66 Me. 551.

And an agreement between the parties to a note that if a suit pending between them should be decided in favor of the payee he would take the note in payment, cannot be set up as a defense in an action upon the note after it becomes due, though the suit had not yet been decided, as the promise to receive the note instead of cash if the suit was decided in favor of the payee was for his benefit, and not that of the promisor. DaCosta v. O'Rourke, 12 Phila. 224.

And a condition annexed to a promissory note, that if the amount of the note is not legally due upon other designated notes given by the maker upon which certain payments had been made, the note in question is not to be paid, otherwise to be paid in full, is in the nature of a defeasance or condition subsequent for the benefit of the maker of the note, and the burden of proof will rest with him as the person for whose benefit it was annexed. McDuffie v. Magoon, 26 Vt. 518.

So, where a note is made by an attorney for one of the parties to a litigation to the opposing party on settlement between them as collateral security for his client, and it is agreed between the parties that the client shall deliver up all the effects belonging to his opponent to the attorney, the delivery up of the effects is not a condition precedent to the right of the client to claim the money and maintain an action on the note. Irving v. King, 4 Car. & P. 309.

And an answer in an action on a note averring that it was given in consideration of a promise by the payee to cause a mortgage held by another securing several notes to be released and the land conveyed by a third party to the maker, and that these things were done, but that afterwards one of the notes which had not been surrendered was deposited with a bank and the mortgage foreclosed as against the purchaser, sets up no defense in an action on the note. Hutson v. Pressnall, 83 Ind. 163.

And where a debtor assigns a bond and mortgage to his creditor, and gives his promissory note as collateral, and the creditor agrees not to dispose of the note until due, and, if he sells the mortgage before that time to return the note, and in the event of his not disposing of the mortgage by a designated time to return either the mortgage or the note, the creditor is not bound to tender the one security in order to hold the other; and while the debtor could compel an election on the day named and the surrender of one of the securities, the creditor is not in default until a failure to elect in compliance with the agreement upon request made. Wood v. Sheehan, 68 N. Y. 365.

And that a note was given in consideration that the payee who carried on a machine shop would repair a threshing machine for which it was given, no time being fixed therefor, and that he had failed and refused to make such repairs though requested, is no defense against the note in the absence of anything to show that the machine was brought to the payee's shop. Mountjoy v. Mullikin, 16 Ind. 226.

So, in Coleman v. Sherwood, 8 U. C. C. P. 359, a replication de injuria, or that the defendant of his own wrong broke the promises in the declaration mentioned, was held good in an action on a promissory note by the indorsee against the maker, in which the defendant alleged that the note was given subject to the result of a suit in chancery, and that it was agreed that it should not be used except by order of some court of competent authority or with the consent of the defendant, and that no such order had been made or consent given, on the ground that the agreement and notes formed together one special agreement and not collateral agreements the one to the other, in which case the plea would not only have been in denial of the making and indorsing of the notes, but would be bad in itself as being argumentative and amounting to a double plea.

And in Clifton v. Litchfield, 106 Mass. 34, it was held that a written receipt given for a promissory note on account of bills rendered, providing that any errors shall be corrected and a discount of 5 per cent made on all bills without interest, should be construed so that the discount of 5 per cent did not apply to lumber thereafter to be delivered, but where there is other evidence as to the discount, the whole might properly be left to the jury.

The burden rests with a vendor of lands who takes a note from the purchaser in part consideration thereof, which is made payable on the same day the deed is to be given, and the balance of the purchase money paid, to prove a performance or tender of performance of the contract on his part in order to recover upon the note. Hoag v. Parr, 13 Hun, 95.

And in an action upon a promissory note given for professional services to be rendered by the payee as an attorney at law payable on a day certain, it rests with the defendant to show a failure of performance, and not upon the plaintiff to show performance. Douglass v. Eason, 36 Ala. 687.

And where the note was given in consideration of a promise to forbear to sue a third person for a designated time it rests with the maker to show that the promise to forbear has been broken, and not with the payee to show that he has performed it. Jennison v. Stafford, 1 Cush. 168, 48 Am. Dec. 594.

See also, on this subject, infra, VI. on Agreements constituting consideration for note, the two subjects being somewhat analogous, as the close connection required to make an agreement mutual and dependent frequently brings it within the domain of the consideration; and see supra, III. Collateral and independent agreements, which subject is the converse of this; and see particularly Lawrence v. Griswold, 30 Mich. 410, infra, VI. b; Cooper v. King, 73 Iowa, 137, infra, VI. d; Bradley v. Marshall, 54 Ill. 173, infra, IX.

c. Must be between same parties.

Unless an agreement contemporaneous with a promissory note be between the same parties the doctrine of circuity of action, which alone makes it an answer to an action on the note, does not apply, and in such case the only mode of enforcing it is by a cross action. Webb v. Salmon, 19 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 34, 13 Q. B. 886.

Thus, a collateral promise never to sue a note, made to a stranger who is not a party to the note or to the suit, is not a good defense in an action on the note brought against the maker, though a promise made upon good consideration to the maker of the note himself would operate to defeat the action. And a son who is the maker of a note cannot avail himself in an action upon the note of a promise not to sue it, made for his benefit to his father by the payee of the note. Marston v. Bigelow, 150 Mass. 45, 5 L. R. A. 43.

And the indorser of a note when sued thereon by a payee, who is not shown to have been a party to the contract when the note was made, cannot defeat a recovery by showing that the maker of the note agreed to have placed in his hands a sufficient amount of valuable notes and accounts to satisfy the note in suit, which he failed to do. Holt v. Moore, 5 Ala. 521.

So, where a property owner and capitalist agrees to donate a number of lots in consideration of the location of a glass factory at a designated place, and a subscription is circulated for the purchase of the lots donated, and a person subscribed for five lots and gave his note therefor to the banking firm of which the person agreeing to donate the lots is a member, pursuant to a representation on his part that if purchasers were not able to make payment when due and would make good notes, he would take them and advance the money, the notes thus given were not given for the purchase price of the real estate, but for money borrowed at the bank, and failure to convey the lots is no defense. Hockman v. Quick, 18 Ind. App. 560.

And the failure of an educational corporation to comply with representation and forms made by the trustees acting individually and not as a board for the corporation, that if a person who was one of their number would purchase certain lands, paying a price therefor greatly above their value, the corporation would build and maintain a college worth a designated sum, which purchase was made and the note of the purchaser given therefor, does not constitute a defense in an action on the note where the failure to purchase was ascribed to the insolvency, and the representations were made without fraud, and the facts of the situation at the time were equally open to all the trustees including the maker of the note. Kolp v. Specht, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 685.

But a written agreement between the parties to a note given for the purchase price of a machine by which the payee agreed to take a designated amount in work, which work was to apply on the machine, should be taken and construed with the note as tending to establish that the actual consideration to be rendered by the purchaser was labor and not cash, and it is unimportant whether the labor was to be received by the company or by its agent. Singer Mfg. Co. v. Haines, 36 Mich. 385.

d. Mortgage contemporaneous with note.

While the question as to the effect of a contemporaneous mortgage upon a note frequently arises where the mortgage is given to secure a series of notes maturing at different times, the mortgage providing that in case of default as to one all shall become due, differing provisions of a mortgage are very seldom interposed as a defense to the note. But it would seem from the few cases on the subject that they are to be regarded as mutual and dependent, and to be construed together as one contract.

Thus, where a mortgage and notes are contemporaneously executed, all relating to and constituting one entire transaction, they are to be read together, and if from the whole transaction it appears that the notes were only to be paid in a given event, they cannot be enforced except on the happening of that event. Robinson v. Smith, 14 Cal. 94; Bailey v. Cromwell, 4 Ill. 71.

And the holder of one of a series of notes secured by a trust deed, providing that none of them shall become due, and that the deed shall not be foreclosed, until the maturity of the note last payable, who purchased with knowledge of such provision, cannot recover judgment thereon until the last note matures, as the note and deed of trust are to be read together as one instrument. Brownlee v. Arnold, 60 Mo. 79.

And a deed of trust and the note secured thereby are to be deemed contemporaneous acts, and must all be read and construed together, and it is competent for the parties to contract that none of the notes shall fall due until such time as the last one by its terms becomes payable; but where by the agreement interest is to be paid annually, this constitutes a debt, and where the deed declares that if the parties of the first part fail or refuse to pay the debt or the interest when they become due, then the whole shall become due and payable, the whole principal and interest will become due at the election of the holder in case of failure to pay interest. Waples v. Jones, 62 Mo. 440.

So, a mortgage given by the maker of promissory notes to his indorsers for their indemnity, containing a covenant to pay at a period subsequent to the maturity of the notes, cannot be foreclosed before the time stipulated in the mortgage, and such covenant also prevents all recovery against the maker on account of the funds prior to that period, though the indorsers are compelled to pay at an earlier date. Duvall v. Farmers' Bank, 9 Gill & J. 31.

And such a covenant renders it unnecessary for the holder of the note to demand payment of the maker and give notice of dishonor to the indorsers to fix their responsibility; and where there is more than one indorser, and the mortgage is given to them all, demand and notice is not necessary to enable the succeeding to recover from the preceding indorsers, as they have all taken the mortgage and granted the maker indulgence, and the succeeding indorsers can have no recourse against the preceding ones until the expiration of the time limited in the mortgage for the maker's responsibility. Ibid.

That a mortgage was given to secure a promissory note which could not be enforced until after the decision of the United States authorities upon a certain title, but which contained no implication that because the mortgage could not be enforced until such decision the notes could not be collected before, however, does not prevent an action upon the notes after they are due, but before such decision. Robinson v. Smith, 14 Cal. 94.

But in Chick v. Willetts, 2 Kan. 384, it was held that a mortgage given to secure the payment of a note made payable one day after date, stipulating that if default was made in the payment of the note for two years from the date of the mortgage that instrument might be foreclosed, changes the terms of the note, and extends the time of payment to two years from the date of the mortgage; but the case was decided upon the question of the running of the statute of limitations against the note and mortgage.

V. Consistent agreements constituting parts of a whole transaction.

The rule that when a contract between the 42 L. R. A.

parties is reduced to writing it must be proved by the writing, and cannot be varied by any previous or contemporaneous verbal agreement or understanding, does not apply in a case in which the writing consisting of a promissory note does not pretend to record the whole transaction, and the verbal testimony in no way contradicts or varies it, but simply furnishes the whole transaction of which the note forms a part, and upon which it is dependent for its meaning and just application. Ruggles v. Swanwick, 6 Minn. 526; Juilliard v. Chaffee, 92 N. Y. 530.

Where it is proved that an instrument in writing contains but a part of the agreement entered into by the parties, then parol proof may be received to prove the entire contract, but the parts of the agreement proposed to be proved by parol must not be inconsistent with or repugnant to the intentions of the parties as shown by the written instrument. West v. Kelly, 19 Ala. 353, 54 Am. Dec. 193.

And while parol evidence is inadmissible to change or contradict the terms of a written contract, a parol contract may be made between the parties contemporaneously with the execution of the written agreement providing that it is separate and independent and its terms in no way conflict with or are contradictory of the written stipulations. Weeks v. Medler, 20 Kan. 57.

And where a note does not constitute the whole agreement between the parties, but is evidence of a part of the agreement, when relied upon by one party, the other may properly show in defense the whole transaction, the defense being made out, not by controlling the contract indicated by the writing, but by collateral agreement, with which it was incidentally connected, the execution of which insured as payment of the note in the manner directed. Juilliard v. Chaffee, 92 N. Y. 530.

So, parol evidence is admissible in an action on a note to show an agreement by an indorser waiving suit against the maker made contemporaneously with the written indorsement, such evidence not being a contradiction of the written instrument. Schmied v. Frank, 86 Ind. 250.

And a parol agreement between the assignor of the promissory note and the assignee, that the assignee should not sue the maker thereon until requested by the assignor, and that the assignor would stand liable as such without suit until he gave notice to sue, does not vary the effect of the written instrument, but merely goes to fix the degree of diligence required of the assignee to hold the assignor, and is admissible in evidence in an action against the assignor. Ibid.

And a parol contemporaneous understanding between the parties to a note given at the time of the taking of an assignment by the payee of an alleged claim for an amount equal to the face of the note held by the maker against strangers to the action, that payment of the note should be enforced only out of the proceeds of such claim, and that it should not be enforced at all unless the payee collected something out of such assigned claim, is admissible in evidence in an action on the note, as it does not contradict or vary the terms of the note, but goes to prove that the note was made in pursuance of a contract, and to show what the contract was. Isaacs v. Jacobs, 15 Daly, 490.

Nor is a parol agreement and direction by the assignor of a note at the time of assigning it, with the assignee, that the assignee is not to sue the maker, and that the assignor would stand liable as such without suit until he gave notice to sue, invalid as varying the effect of the written indorsement, but merely fixes the degree of diligence required of the assignee to hold the assignor. Schmied v. Frank, 86 Ind. 250.

And parol evidence that a note was given for the price of goods sold, and that at the time of the sale the payee made a promise to the defendant in respect to the goods which had been violated, is not objectionable as tending to alter, modify, or impeach the note, as it does not deny that such a contract was made, but sets up an engagement entered into by the other party on his part. Batterman v. Pierce, 3 Hill, 171.

So, an agreement between the vendor and the purchaser of a pony for which the note of the purchaser was given, that he took it on probation with the privilege of rescinding the sale at the end of six months, does not go to contradict the note, but sets up an independent agreement made at the same time, and parol evidence of such agreement is competent as between the original parties. Lyons v. Stills, 97 Tenn. 514.

And parol evidence as to how a slave was to be employed under a contract of hire is admissible in evidence in an action upon a note given in payment for his services, as the note does not constitute the whole contract between the parties. Western v. Pollard, 16 B. Mon. 315; Richardson v. Dingle, 11 Rich. L. 407; Knight v. Knotts, 8 Rich. L. 35. But see Caldwell v. May, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 425, supra, II. h, and Daniel v. Ray, 1 Hill, L. 32, supra, II. k.

And a negotiable promissory note and a written agreement between the parties by which the payee agrees to furnish hides and skins to the makers of the note as fast as they need them to tan, to such an amount that the proceeds after deducting costs, etc., shall pay the note and interest, reciting that it is the intention to pay said note in tanning, will be construed as one special agreement as between the original parties and those who stand in like situation, and the maker of a note cannot be held to pay the balance in money after the payee has ceased to furnish him with hides in accordance with the agreement. Hill v. Huntress, 43 N. H. 480.

And an agreement between an insurance agent and an insurer, who had taken a policy for $2,000 and given his note for the premium thereof, that if the insured after seeing his wife should prefer a $1,000 dollar policy the first policy and premium note were to be canceled and a new policy and note for the smaller amount were to be given, after which the agent sent the note to the general agent and refused to return it upon the decision of the insured to take the smaller policy, may be shown in an action on a note either by the agent or the general agent, as a defense, as it would not be contradicting the terms of the contract, but proving an additional verbal agreement. Bresel v. Crumpton, 121 N. C. 122.

So, parol evidence is admissible in an action on a conditional note to show that it was signed by the maker upon the understanding with the payee that it did not contain the terms of their agreement, and that they would afterwards at their convenience draw another instrument which would truly express the contract, but that the instrument had not been drawn. Hopper v. Elland, 21 Ala. 714.

And in Edwards v. Jones, 2 Mees. & W. 414, which was an action by an indorsee against the acceptor of a promissory note, the defendant pleaded that by agreement between him and the drawer the note was not to be enforced except upon certain terms which the drawer had not complied with, whereupon the plaintiff remitted all claim except as to the amount actually paid by him for the note, and obtained a verdict for that sum, it not appearing that the plaintiff was not cognizant of the agreement between the acceptor and drawer, and it was held that the 43 L. R. A.

defendant who had been arrested for the whole amount of the note, was not entitled to costs under 43 Geo. III. chap. 46, § 3.

And in Holt v. Miers, 9 Car. & P. 191, which was an action on a promissory note in which the defendant pleaded that the note was given under a parol agreement that he should renew it when due by paying discount and giving another note, which he had offered to do, evidence supporting the plea was admitted against the suggestion that the bill was bad as setting up a parol agreement to vary a written instrument upon the ground that the plaintiff had taken issue on the plea.

The rule that where an oral agreement has been but partially reduced to writing the whole agreement is open to proof, however, is not applicable to proof tending to convert an absolute note into an agreement that the sum named should be paid out of a particular fund. Gorrell v. Home L. Ins. Co. 24 U. S. App. 188, 63 Fed. Rep. 371, 11 C. C. A. 240. See also Davidson v. Bodley, 27 La. Ann. 149, supra, IV. b.

VI. Agreements constituting consideration for note.

a. Scope of the subject.

In dealing with the subject of this section it is not intended to go into the general subject of consideration for negotiable paper or failure of such consideration, and on account of the extent of the note cases with relation to agreements but remotely connected with the consideration of the note, such as warranty of title or quality, when a note is given for the purchase price, etc. etc., have been omitted. All that is intended to be treated in this section is the question of the effect of the breach of an agreement, whether written or parol, as a defense to an action on a note where the agreement constitutes either in whole or in part the consideration for which the note was given.

b. The general doctrine.

While parol evidence of a contemporaneous agreement or understanding is inadmissible to vary, contradict, or explain the terms of the note, it may be introduced to show that the note was given without a consideration, or that the consideration had in whole or in part failed. Penny v. Graves, 12 Ill. 287; Juilliard v. Chaffee, 92 N. Y. 529.

A note cannot be enforced if the agreement of the payee upon which its consideration is based has been violated. Simpson Centenary College v. Bryan, 50 Iowa, 293.

And the existence of a contemporaneous parol agreement between the parties under the influence of which a note or contract has been signed, which is violated as soon as it has accomplished its purpose in securing the execution of the paper, may always be shown when the enforcement of the paper is attempted. Clinch Valley Coal & I. Co. v. Willing, 180 Pa. 165.

Thus, that a note was given to renew a previous note upon the payee's agreement to return the previous note to the maker, which had never been done, is a good defense in an action upon the subsequent note as tending to show that it was without consideration. Miller v. Ritz, 3 E. D. Smith, 253.

And an agreement by the payee of a note with the maker that a third person should and would in all things conform to and execute a contract made by him with the maker of the note, which he wholly failed to do, and in consideration for which the note was given, is a good defense in an action on the note. Gale v. Harp, 64 Ark. 462; Goodwin v. Nickerson, 51 Cal. 166.

And where a note is given as a part of a particular fund the amount of which the payee agrees with the maker shall never be diminished and that it is to be used for specified objects, such agreement being the consideration for the note, an appropriation of such fund to other objects and its use so as to diminish its amount would constitute a defense to the enforcement of the note. Simpson Centenary College v. Bryan, 50 Iowa, 293.

So, where the consideration for a promissory note was an agreement by the payee to deliver certain goods, and they only delivered a portion of them, there can be no recovery on the note in excess of the value of the goods delivered. Shoe & L. Nat. Bank v. Wood, 142 Mass. 563.

And an agreement at the time of making a note given for the price of goods sold, that a deduction should be made in case the goods did not turn out to be as good as represented, is admissible in evidence in an action on the note. Shepherd v. Temple, 3 N. H. 455.

And a parol agreement contemporaneous with a note given for the purchase price of a given number of tons of hay at a given price per ton, that if it should fall short of the estimated or supposed quantity a corresponding credit should be given on the note, may be set up in an action on the note, where it appears that the estimated quantity fell short, to show that the maker was entitled to the proportionate reduction as against the payee or a holder with notice. Brady v. Henry, 71 Cal. 481.

And that a note was given in payment for logs cut by the payee and to be delivered by him to the makers, and was put in the hands of a third person with the understanding that he was to pay all claims against said logs, which should be considered a payment upon the note, and that he did pay certain claims, and that the payee did not deliver to the makers all the logs agreed upon, and that a part of those delivered were cut from the land of another person from whom the makers were obliged to purchase them, may be proved by parol in an action on the note, as tending to show failure of consideration. Smith v. Carter, 25 Wis. 283.

All that one who purchased a machine and gave his note therefor, relying upon the agreement of the vendor to have a defect in it repaired, can require, however, is to be allowed a discount, in case of failure to make such repairs of so much as such repairs would cost. Thomson v. Sexton, 15 S. C. 93.

So, a note given in consideration of an agreement upon the part of the payee to furnish certain secret recipes and chemical formula with instructions for their use, which the payee totally fails to perform, is invalid and uncollectible for failure of consideration. Booth v. Fitzer, 82 Ind. 66.

And evidence in an action on a promissory note given for a policy of insurance, of an agreement between the maker and the general agent of the insurance company that the maker could have sixty days to determine whether he would or would not be insured, and that if within that time he should decide not to be insured and so notify the company the policy should be taken back and the note returned, is admissible upon an issue as to whether there was a contract between the parties and a completed delivery of the policy and note under it. Watkins v. Bowlers, 119 Mass. 383.

And a note given for an insurance premium and a contemporaneous receipt referring to the note and stating how and for what it was received, in which the payee agreed to procure the appointment of the maker as agent of the insurance company as a part of the consideration of the note, and containing the mutual agreement 42 L. K. A.

and understanding that the note was not to take effect and be binding unless the maker should be so appointed, and that it was to be returned in default of such appointment, are to be considered together, and both must be read as evidence of what the contract of the parties was; and where such appointment was never received in pursuance of such agreement no recovery can be had on the note. Lawrence v. Griswold, 30 Mich. 410.

Nor can recovery be had on a note given for the purchase price of lands and deposited in escrow to be delivered to the payee when he and another executed a warranty deed sufficient to pass the title in fee of the premises contracted to be conveyed, where no deed in the proper form was deposited with the person holding the note. Glover v. Chase, 3 McCrary, 599.

And that a note was given for the purchase of a tract of land under an agreement in writing that the vendor should cancel and discharge the title of another to a part of the land before any portion of it should be payable, and that the vendor had failed to procure such discharge, constitutes a valid defense in an action on the note. Rogers v. Broadnax, 24 Tex. 538.

So, while ordinarily, where a person gives his note for a quitclaim deed he cannot on account of a defect in the title avoid the payment of the note, where there is an express written stipulation that the note should not be paid unless the land should be held by the purchaser, failure of title is a good defense. Bean v. Flint, 30 Me. 224.

And a note given by one of two joint owners of real estate to the other in consideration that he would say what he would give or take so that one might own the whole property, pursuant to which the payee named a price for which the maker agreed to sell, but the payee afterwards refused to carry out the bargain, is subject to the defense of failure of consideration. Hawks v. Truesdell, 12 Allen, 564.

And that an agreement was made contemporaneous with a note given for the purchase price of land, that the maker was to pay $100 for the land and a further sum of $100 in consideration that the payee should procure a highway to be established upon it, and that the payee had failed to procure the establishment of such highway, and the maker had paid all except the $100 upon the note, is a good defense in an action thereon, and is not open to the objection that it varies the terms of the contract embodied in it. Dicken v. Morgan, 54 Iowa, 684.

And the maker of a promissory note given for an instalment of rent of a warehouse for a term to begin in the future under a lease stipulating that in case of injury to the property by fire the lessor should rebuild in a reasonable time, a shed belonging to which was destroyed before the term commenced and the lessor failed to rebuild, may set up as a defense in an action on the note that he was induced to take possession at the beginning of the term and held under the lease because of a verbal promise made by the lessor to rebuild the shed, but for which he would have declined to enter. Lightfoot v. West, 98 Ga. 546.

So, where the settlement of a slander suit operates by agreement as the sole consideration for a note, failure to sign the settlement may constitute a defense to the note on the principle of showing want of consideration. Payne v. Ladue, 1 Hill, 118.

And an oral agreement contemporaneous with a note given by one against whom an action in garnishment was pending, for the whole claim against him, that in case of a judgment against him as garnishee the amount of it should be deducted from the note, and the fact that such judgment was afterwards rendered against him, may be shown by parol in an action on the note as a partial failure of consideration. Peterson v. Johnson, 22 Wis. 21, 94 Am. Dec. 581.

So, that work done and materials furnished were not in accordance with the contract therefor by which the persons supplying them guaranteed all work done and materials furnished for a period of five years and agreed to repair the work and keep it in good order for said period, is a good defense in an action on the note given for such work done and materials furnished. Louchheim v. Maguire, 186 Pa. 311, 6 Pa. Super. Ct. 635.

And an agreement contemporaneous with a promissory note given for one half of the commission to which the maker would be entitled on the sale of a designated quantity of an article of which he bound himself to use his best endeavors to sell, constitutes a complete defense in an action on the note, where he never sold or endeavored to sell any part of it, and never became entitled to any commission. Carrington v. Waff, 112 N. C. 115.

And that a promissory note was given in consideration of the agreement of the payee, who was an attorney at law, that he would procure certain papers for the maker of the note of value to him on or before a designated time, which he failed to do, is admissible in evidence in an action on the note as a defense by way of failure of consideration. Dodge v. Oatis, 27 Kan. 762.

So, the failure of an agent to perform his agreement with his principal to examine the records and report all encumbrances on lots, the agent was to take in exchange for his principal, whereby an encumbrance on one of the lots was not discovered, is a good defense in an action by the agent against the principal on a note given for his service, and it is not necessary to prove the exact value of the lot so lost. Harkness v. Briscoe, 47 Mo. App. 196.

And an agreement to build certain blind ditches on another's land under a warranty that they would carry off all surplus waters, and providing that if they did not fulfil the conditions of the warranty, the persons constructing them would return and dig open ditches in their place, and proof that the blind ditches constructed pursuant thereto were worthless for all purposes, and that the person constructing them left the state and did not dig the open ditches agreed upon, are a complete defense in an action on the note given for payment for the digging. Slater v. Foster, 62 Minn. 150.

And an oral agreement at the time of the execution of a note, between the maker and the payee, that the note which was given pursuant to an agreement in writing by which the maker gave the payee a right of way across his land to dig a ditch for irrigating purposes and to give him a certain sum per acre for all land irrigated thereby, should not be paid unless the canal was constructed and completed across the lands of the maker so that a designated number of acres could be irrigated therefrom before the maturing of the note, and proof that the payee had failed to complete the canal in accordance with such agreement, are competent as a defense to the note by way of failure of consideration. Billings v. Everett, 52 Cal. 661.

c. Application to parol agreements.

Where the note in suit is a completed contract entered into upon a valid and subsisting consideration, the writing must speak for itself, and contemporaneous parol agreements inconsistent with it are inadmissible to affect the liability thereby assumed; but in determining whether the contract was complete and founded upon such consideration the transaction out of which it grew is open to investigation. Leighton v. Bowen, 75 Me. 504.

And parol agreements and their breach may be pleaded and admitted in evidence as a defense in an action on a note where the agreement constitutes the consideration for the note, and the breach consequently constitutes a failure of consideration therefor.

Thus, parol evidence that a note was given 'n payment of the price of a horse, and that it was agreed between the parties that the note should be returned if the horse died, and that the horse afterward died and the return of the note was refused, is admissible as a defense in an action on the note. Barlow v. Flemming, 6 Ala. 146. But see Gatlin v. Kilpatrick, 4 N. C. (1 Car. Law Repos.) 534, 6 Am. Dec. 557; Columbia v. Amos, 5 Ind. 184; Hatch v. Hyde, 14 Vt. 25, 39 Am. Dec. 203, supra, II. c.

And where a note is given for a designated number of tons of hay at a given price per ton, for the estimated amount, and it is agreed by parol that if it falls short of the estimated quantity, a corresponding credit should be given on the note, and it is found to be a less number of tons than that estimated, a rebate is to be made and the parol agreement may be proved. Brady v. Henry, 71 Cal. 481.

And a parol contemporaneous agreement between the parties to a note given for the purchase price of a sewing machine, that the vendor would furnish the purchaser with work for such machine at a stipulated price and within an agreed time sufficient to pay for the machine, may, upon his failure to perform it, be pleaded as a set-off to the damages sustained thereby in an action upon the note. Weeks v. Medler, 20 Kan. 57.

So, an agreement by a bank discounting a note payable in gold, and giving the bills of a certain bank therefor, that it would within ninety days thereafter, whenever requested, redeem the bills at its counter with gold at a specified discount, which it afterwards failed and refused to do, is not liable to the objection that it constitutes an effort to contradict the terms of the written instrument by parol. Racine County Bank v. Keen, 13 Wis. 210.

And where a promissory note expressly recites that it was given in consideration of the indebtedness of a third party to the payee, which the maker thereby assumes, parol evidence is admissible to show that the assumed indebtedness was evidenced by a promissory note held by the payee, which was to be delivered to the makers of the new note, but which was not delivered but still retained by the payee. Powell v. Subers, 67 Ga. 448.

So, that a note was given to secure the support of the mother of the person making it during her natural life, and that it was agreed between the parties that the note was to be surrendered at her death, and proof of her death, constitute a sufficient defense in an action on the note by way of failure of consideration. Kirkpatrick v. Taylor, 43 Ill. 207.

And where a debtor pays part of his debt before it is due, and a note is given instead of a receipt, under an agreement that it should be mere evidence that interest should be allowed upon the amount paid until the whole should become due, the agreement is not a parol agreement, void under the statute of frauds as intended to vary a written one, but goes to show want of consideration, and in that view would defeat a recovery upon the note as between the original parties. Slade v. Halsted, 7 Cow. 322.

So, the failure to construct a railroad in accordance with an oral agreement accompanying a subscription for railroad stock for which a note is given which is not to be paid unless the road is constructed before its maturity constitutes a failure of consideration for the note; it is not necessary that the condition as to payment should be incorporated in the note to be valid. Jefferson v. Hewitt, 103 Cal. 624. But see Calro & V. R. Co. v. Delap, 7 Ill. App. 60; Foy v. Blackstone, 31 Ill. 538, 83 Am. Dec. 246, supra, II. c.

And parol evidence that notes apparently made in payment of insurance premiums were made upon the express agreement that the insurance company would loan to the maker upon his insurance and the execution of the notes a designated sum for as long a time as he would continue to pay premiums on the policy upon his furnishing satisfactory security for the loan, and that he complied with all the directions prescribed, and that the company refused to make him the loan, and upon such refusal he tendered his policy and demanded the surrender of his notes, is admissible in an action on the notes, as the notes and agreements constitute parts of the same contract, and only a part of it was put in writing. Life Asso. of America v. Cravens, 60 Mo. 388.

And an oral agreement between the parties to a note given for the whole claim of the payee against the maker, pending an action in garnishment against the maker by a judgment creditor of the payee, that in case of a judgment against him as garnishee the amount of it should be deducted from the note, after which judgment is rendered against him and paid by him, is not within the rule excluding evidence of a verbal contemporaneous agreement of the parties to vary or contradict the terms of their written contract, and may be shown by parol in an action on the note as evidence of a partial failure of consideration. Peterson v. Johnson, 22 Wis. 21, 94 Am. Dec. 581.

So, where the owner of a tract of land for the purchase price of which he had given three notes to the former owner sells it to another and it is agreed that the purchaser shall execute three notes for the same amount to fall due at the same time with the former notes, which the vendor agrees to substitute for those held by the original owner, and he fails to substitute one of them for one of the old ones, and the purchaser pays one of the notes then held by the original owner, such failure constitutes a valid defense in an action on one of the new notes when sued upon by the payee, who was the vendor for the use of another, and the agreement to substitute the new notes for the old is not subject to the objection that it is a varying of the terms of the written agreement by parol. Honeycut v. Strother, 2 Ala. 135.

And an agreement by one procuring the purchase of lands by another for the purchase price of which the latter had given notes which the former signed as surety made after the conveyance of the land to the former, and the execution by him of his notes corresponding to the notes already given by the latter to the vendor, that the first purchaser should deliver the second purchaser's notes to the vendee and take those originally given, does not vary the terms of the written contract, but goes to the consideration of the note and to show the relation of the joint makers to the payee, which might be done by parol evidence even if the legal effect of the writing was changed thereby; and where the first purchaser, in violation of the agreement, assigns the notes for his own before a second purchaser is compelled to pay the notes given to the vendor upon which he was surety, it is a good defense in an action on the notes last given. Rawlings v. Fisher, 24 Ind. 52.

And a contemporaneous parol agreement, on 43 L. R. A.

the faith of which notes given for a portion of the purchase money for certain town lots were signed, that the lots were to be at once reconveyed to a trustee, who should hold them as security for the sums due upon the notes, and should exhaust the security thus furnished before the payment of the notes should be required of the maker, and that he should only be required to pay the balance, if any remaining due upon the notes after the application of such security, and the fact that the lots were retained by the trustee, furnishes a good defense to the action on the note, and one which it is competent for the maker to make. Clinch Valley Coal & I. Co. v. Willing, 180 Pa. 165.

In the above case, Clarke v. Allen, 132 Pa. 40, supra, II. d, and Ziegler v. McFarland, 147 Pa. 607, supra, II. b, were distinguished upon the ground that in those cases the agreement set up was wholly inconsistent with the terms of the note, the written contract and the alleged parol contract set up as its inducement, being so inconsistent that both could not stand, while in the case at bar the note is left in full force by the averment of the contemporaneous parol agreement. See also Holzworth v. Koch, 26 Ohio St. 33, supra, 11 d, and Braly v. Henry, 71 Cal. 481; Smith v. Carter, 25 Wis. 283; Peterson v. Johnson, 22 Wis. 21, 94 Am. Dec. 581; Billings v. Everett, 52 Cal. 661, supra, VI. b.

d. What agreements are within the rule.

Whenever a defendant can maintain a cross-action for damages on account of a defect in personal property purchased by him or for a non-compliance by the plaintiff with his part of the contract, he may in defense to an action upon his note made in consequence of such purchase or contract, claim a deduction corresponding with the injury he has sustained. Peden v. Moore, 1 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 71, 21 Am. Dec. 649.

Thus, the failure to return a note, in consideration for the return of which another note was given, constitutes a total failure of consideration for the latter note and a good defense in an action thereon. Perry v. Connell (Tex. Civ. App.) 31 S. W. 685.

And that a note was given to replace another worthless note and upon an agreement and promise on the part of the payee that he would furnish the makers on credit with all the goods they might desire, and that thereafter they refused to fill their orders, is a good defense in an action on the notes by way of failure of consideration. Barnes v. Stevens, 62 Ind. 226.

And that a part of the sum in consideration for which a note was given was included in it, upon the express agreement between the parties that suit should not be brought upon it for sixty days, which time had not elapsed, is a good defense in an action on the note by way of showing a partial failure of consideration. Hill v. Enders, 19 Ill. 163.

And evidence that an action had been commenced against a debtor, and that another indorsed a note for the debtor upon the agreement of the creditor that he would discontinue the action and give at least one renewal thereof, but that he did not perform such agreement, but, on the contrary, entered up judgment in such action, goes to establish a failure of consideration of the note indorsed, and should be admitted in an action thereon as a defense. Bookstaver v. Jayne, 60 N. Y. 146.

So, that a note was given for designated articles which the payee agreed to deliver to the maker and which he never delivered, is a good defense in an action on the note by way of failure of consideration. Mitchell v. Stinson, 80 Ind. 324.

And no recovery can be had on a note given for medical services to a physician and surgeon upon the agreement that he would permanently cure the wife of the maker of the note, and that if he failed to so cure her he would not charge anything for his services, upon the representation to the maker of the note that she was cured, which afterwards proved to be false, such facts establishing a failure of consideration. Andros v. Childers, 14 Or. 447.

And a promissory note given by a client to an attorney for services to be rendered in a suit is void, though in the hands of an innocent transferee, under Georgia act of 1831, § 1, providing that contracts between a client and an attorney shall be held and deemed null and void whenever the said attorney shall fail to attend in person or by some competent attorney to the suit or suits which he contracted to attend to until the rendition of a judgment, where he thus fails to attend. Weed v. Bond, 21 Ga. 195.

So, where the payee of a promissory note procured the same to be executed by stipulating with the maker that he would procure employment for a third person for whose benefit the note was given and who received the entire consideration therefor by which the latter would earn enough money to pay the note, a total breach of such stipulation is a defense to an action brought upon the note by the payee. Toombs v. West, 94 Ga. 280.

And that a note was given for the difference between the value of two sewing machines on a trade, and that it was agreed at the time that the payee should repair the machine given by him in the trade, which he refused to do and the machine proved to be worthless, constitute a good counterclaim in an action on the note. Howe Mach. Co. v. Reber, 66 Ind. 498.

And where a note is given in consideration of the sale and delivery of a quantity of flour which was to be shipped on board a designated steamer then at the wharf to be transported to the purchaser, and only a small quantity was put on board, the transaction may be set up as a defense in an action on the note by way of failure of consideration. Corwith v. Colter, 82 Ill. 584.

So, where the consideration for a note consisted in part of an agreement to convey a valid and clear title to certain lands to the maker thereof, and such agreement was not complied with, there is a failure of consideration to the extent of the amount which the maker is required to pay to perfect his title, and such amount may be set up as a defense against any assignee of the note without regard to any question of notice of time of assignment. Holman v. Creagmiles, 14 Ind. 177.

And where the payee of a note was to convey to the maker a good title to land by a good and sufficient deed at the time of receiving a designated amount of cash and a note for the price, but failed to do so, but delivered instead a paper which conveyed no title, and never tendered or offered to execute and deliver a valid deed, both parties are to be treated as having rescinded the bargain, and the consideration for the note entirely fails. Curtis v. Clark, 133 Mass. 509.

And where a vendor agrees to convey her interest in certain land to the vendee upon the payment of a designated sum and the execution of notes for the balance, and she conveys a part of the land of less value than the sum paid and refuses to convey the rest, the consideration for the notes fails and no recovery can be had thereon, for the reason that the conveyance of the land was to be made upon the execution of the notes, and therefore the obligation of the maker to pay the notes is dependent upon the performance of, or an offer to perform, her contract by the payee. Cooper v. King, 73 Iowa, 136.

And the failure to fulfil an obligation to give a deed of certain lands in consideration for which a note was given is a sufficient ground to warrant relief in chancery against the note where the obligor is bankrupt, though the failure to perform the obligation was due to the fact that it had become impossible from the act of God. Williams v. Smith, 2 Root, 464.

So, that a promissory note was given for the purchase of a tract of land under an agreement in writing that the vendor should cancel and discharge the title of a third person to a part of the land before any portion of the note should be payable, and that he had failed to comply with the condition, is a valid defense in an action thereon by one who received it after maturity. Rogers v. Broadnax, 24 Tex. 538.

And that a note was given for the purchase money of a tract of land conveyed to the maker at the instance of the payee by a person who was insolvent, and that the payee had agreed to pay off a mortgage upon the premises of an amount greater than the note sued on, which he had failed to do and the maker had been compelled to pay it, constitute a good defense in an action on the note by way of failure of consideration. Miller v. Gibbs, 29 Ind. 228.

And that a note was executed in consideration of a lease of certain premises, and that at the time of the execution thereof the maker of the lease was not entitled to possession of the demised premises, and that the maker of the note never took possession of them, are a competent defense in an action on the note. Andrews v. Woodcock, 14 Iowa, 397.

And that the note in suit was one of six which had been signed by the maker, pending negotiations for a sale by the payee of a tract of land, and that the conveyance of the land had been drawn up, signed, and acknowledged by the payee and a mortgage blank had been drawn, signed, and acknowledged at the same time with the note, but that the transaction had not been completed by the delivery of such papers, and that they did not agree or mean to purchase absolutely, nor to bind themselves by the notes beyond the security of the land itself, amount to a failure to execute the instruments, and give the maker of the note the right to have it canceled, and are a defense in an action on the note. Scaife v. Byrd, 39 Ark. 568.

And that an agreement signed and sealed by the payee of a note, to sell to the maker thereof his possession as occupant of certain lands and deliver up such possession by a certain day, and that possession had not been delivered, are a good defense in an action on the note by way of failure of consideration. Miller v. Wood, 23 Ark. 546.

So, an answer in an action upon a note setting up that the consideration therefor was a verbal promise of the payee to the maker to procure the execution to the latter of a lease for a definite time of a building belonging to a third person and alleging a breach thereof, sets up a good defense by way of failure of consideration. Stanford v. Davis, 54 Ind. 45.

And where a note is given for a part of the purchase price of certain property and a milk route, and the payee delivers to the maker a writing stating the sale of the milk route, property, and fixtures, describing them, and for the same consideration it was orally agreed that the vendor would not peddle milk in the same locality while the vendee should continue in that business, which latter agreement is violated, the writing delivered by the payee is a mere bill of particulars, and oral evidence is admissible in an action on the note to prove the agreement actually made between the parties. Stacy v. Kemp, 97 Mass. 166.

But an agreement between the parties to a note given for the purchase price of lands reciting the sale, and that the payee was not able to procure a release of dower from certain persons and agreed to procure such release within nine months or forfeit the amount of the note, is not a promise to pay the amount, but is a forfeiture of the right to collect it in case of failure to procure such release, the note becoming discharged by his failure to comply with his contract. Phillips v. Longstreth, 14 Ala. 337.

That a note was given for an interest in a patent washing machine bought by the maker of the payee upon a verbal agreement that the maker should be required to pay no money on it unless it should be realized from the sales of the machine, however, and that it was wholly worthless and nothing was realized, cannot be set up in defense in an action on a note, as such parol agreement does not pertain to the consideration of the note, but goes to its validity and the obligation of the maker to pay it. De Long v. Lee, 73 Iowa, 53.

And an arrangement between debtors and a creditor that if the debtors would secure to the creditor the amount then due, each partner securing his one half of the debt, the creditor would sell them such goods on time as would enable them to continue in business, pursuant to which the debtors executed two notes in settlement, after which they applied for goods to replenish their stock and were refused credit, is not a defense in an action upon the notes, as it does not go to show a failure of consideration of the notes sued on, it being the precedent debt, and not the promise to furnish the goods, that constitutes the consideration. Wortham v. Cameron (Tex. App.) 16 S. W. 101.

And that a note was given in consideration of the purchase price of a horse, and that at the time of its execution the payee was indebted to the maker for work done and materials furnished at the payee's request in a sum greater than the amount of the note, and that it was agreed between the parties in consideration of such indebtedness that if the payee did not pay it by performing certain labor the horse should go in payment of such indebtedness, does not show a defense of want or failure of consideration, as the consideration consisted of the horse purchased, and does not show an accord and satisfaction, as it does not appear that payment was made by performing the work agreed upon, and cannot be proved by parol, as it would go to vary the legal effect of the note sued upon. Parks v. Zeek, 53 Ind. 221.

So, that a promissory note was made upon the payee's promise that the maker might collect the amount of it from a third person in payment for property which such person was to buy from the payee, and should not be liable on it if he could not make the collection, and that such third person had since become bankrupt and he could not collect, will not sustain the defense of want of consideration. Hodgkins v. Moulton, 100 Mass. 309.

And where notes are executed and delivered in consequence of the adjustment of a dispute and in settlement thereof, the fact that the maker was induced to give them by a promise by the payee's agent that he would sell property involved in the dispute for him at an advance price, which promise had never been performed or intended to be performed, does not authorize the maker to go behind the notes and avail himself of a defense in the way of failure of consideration and fraud in their procurement. Edison General Electric Co. v. Blount, 96 Ga. 272.

43 L. R. A.

And a breach of warranty of a clock, and an agreement that if the clock should not prove good the vendor would either make it good or replace it with a good one before the money should be paid, are not provable by parol as a defense in an action on a note given for the purchase price thereof, as the breach of such stipulations would form the basis of a particular action. Kelso v. Frye, 4 Bibb, 493.

Nor can a verdict for the defendant in an action upon a note given for agricultural instruments which the payees of the note promised to send to the maker within a certain time, but which were not delivered, be sustained on the ground of failure of consideration, where it appears that a small portion of the articles were forwarded and actually received by the maker before the commencement of the suit; the verdict should have been against him at least for some amount. Burrill v. Parsons, 73 Me. 286.

And one who gives a note for the purchase price of a machine purchased on the understanding that he was not to pay for it unless it proved satisfactory, the payment being put off a year, so that if the machine did not work well the purchaser would not have to pay the note, is limited in time within which he may refuse to accept the machine to the one year the note was to run, and after the maturity of the note he is precluded from setting up as a defense to an action thereon a claim that the machine was unsatisfactory. Hastings v. Adams, 67 Vt. 119.

So, the nondelivery of a deed does not constitute a failure of consideration of a note given for the purchase price of the land where the deed was not to be delivered until payment of the note. Bourland v. Gibson, 91 Ill. 470.

And, the maker of a note given for the purchase price of lands sold to him by parol agreement, after which a bond for title is given, conditioned for the making of title when the note should be paid, cannot resist a recovery on the ground of failure of consideration in the absence of a disturbance of his possession. White v. Beard, 5 Port. (Ala.) 94, 30 Am. Dec. 552.

And that a note was given for a deed of land described as bounded on one side by a street recently laid out, thus impliedly containing the covenant that there was such a street, when in fact no such street actually existed, and the failure of the grantor to join in the construction of such street, cannot be set up in an action on the note as a failure of consideration or as a set-off. Loring v. Otis, 7 Gray, 563.

So, where a grant is made by the owner of a patent milk can accompanying a sale of a number of cans, of the exclusive use of the invention within a designated territory, and it appears that the grantor had furnished cans and permitted their use in the same territory by others in violation of their agreement, such violation will not be held to constitute a defense in an action on notes given for such cans, where there is nothing tangible in the testimony upon which a jury can base an estimate of the loss of profits on account of competition in that territory with such cans used by other persons. Davis v. Davis, 84 Mich. 324.

And proof in an action on a promissory note given for the services of an attorney-at-law to be rendered, that the attorney was absent at the first ensuing term of the court in which the cause with reference to which he was engaged was pending, and that the cause was compromised by the parties before the next term, does not establish or tend to establish a failure of consideration. Douglass v. Eason, 36 Ala. 687.

See also Tower v. Richardson, 6 Allen, 353, supra, II. e.; Bailey v. Cromwell, 4 Ill. 71, supra, IV. b.

VII. Agreements constituting condition of delivery.

Where an agreement contemporaneous with a promissory note, whether oral or in writing, constitutes a condition which is to happen before the note is delivered or goes into effect, a failure to perform the agreement is a good defense to the note by way of showing that the contract was never completed by delivery, or that it never went into effect and therefore there never was a contract.

Thus, where it is shown that a promissory note was delivered to take effect only on the performance of some condition or on the happening of some future event, the contract is not operative and binding until the condition is performed or the event has occurred. Seymour v. Cowing, 1 Keyes, 535.

And parol evidence is admissible to show that a note was not to be delivered until the happening of a designated contingency or the performance of a specified condition which had not yet happened or been performed. Sweet v. Stevens, 7 R. I. 375.

And evidence that a note was never in fact delivered as a personal contract unconditionally binding upon the obligor according to its terms, but was left in the hands of another to become an absolute obligation in the event of the maker's electing upon examination or investigation to take an interest in property for which the note was given, does not contradict the terms of the writing or vary their legal import, and is therefore admissible in an action on the note. Burke v. Dulaney, 153 U. S. 228, 38 L. ed. 698.

And parol evidence that a note was delivered to the payee by the maker upon the understanding that it was to be delivered up to the latter on his demand within a specified time, and that it was so demanded, does not contradict the note or tend to vary its terms within the meaning of the statute of frauds, but merely goes to the point of its nondelivery. McFarland v. Sikes, 54 Conn. 250.

So, no recovery can be had on a note delivered by the maker to the payee upon the understanding that it was to be delivered up to the maker on his demand within a specified time, where he demanded its return within such time, as the contract cannot become binding until it has been delivered, and such delivery was conditional. Ibid.

The rule that parol evidence is not competent to alter, vary, add to, or take from a written instrument is not applicable in an action on a note where it was understood between the parties that it was to be binding only conditionally, and that it was to be held as an escrow, and that in violation of the agreement under which it was held the holder was seeking to enforce it before the condition was complied with. Breeden v. Grigg, 8 Baxt. 163.

And proof of an agreement between the parties to a promissory note that it was to be of no effect unless upon consultation with a designated counsel the maker should be assured of the legality of the transaction out of which it arose, and that upon such consultation he was advised that the transaction was illegal, shows that the instrument never went into effect and the condition upon which it was to become operative never occurred, and is not within the principle excluding evidence contradicting or varying a written instrument by parol. Ware v. Allen, 128 U. S. 590, 32 L. ed. 563.

And a note signed by a vendor of land and placed in the hands of a third person as an escrow, together with one signed by the purchaser upon the understanding that upon the failure of either to perform his part of the agreement his note should take effect and be delivered by depository to the other party, which conditions were performed by the vendee but not by the vendor, is not altered or varied by proof of such conditions by parol, and such proof is admissible in an action thereon, as they are not a part of the written contract but only the terms upon which it was to take effect. Couch v. Meeker, 2 Conn. 302, 7 Am. Dec. 274.

And that a note given as a subscription to an endowment fund was delivered to the payee in trust to hold until the endowment fund should be fully subscribed, in which event the delivery should be deemed final and complete, and that such endowment fund had never been subscribed, is not a sufficient defense to an action on the note. Roche v. Roanoke Classical Seminary, 56 Ind. 198.

And an agreement between the parties to a note given for the support of a certain child, that if the child should die before a designated time nothing should be paid on the note, and if within a further designated time only a sum proportionate to the time it should live though it was not annexed to the note, is to be considered as in the nature of a condition, and where the child dies during the second-named period the designated portion only is to be paid. Fellows v. Carpenter, Klrby, 364. But see Potter v. Earnest, 45 Ind. 418, supra, II. h.

And an agreement by shareholders to donate their notes for an amount equal to their shares if other shareholders would do the same is to be construed with the notes thus donated, and constitutes a defense to an action thereon, where some of the shareholders never executed their notes. Traders' Nat. Bank v. Smith (Tex. Civ. App.) 22 S. W. 1026.

In the above case State Nat. Bank v. Cason, 39 La. Ann. 867, and Patten v. Gleason, 106 Mass. 439, infra, X., were distinguished upon the ground that in those cases the notes were delivered with the understanding that they were to take effect immediately, the maker relying on the agreement of the payee to comply with his part of the contract; but in this case the note was not to take effect at all unless the condition was complied with.

So, promissory notes delivered by a person who has executed them upon the express condition that they shall not be deemed his notes or be considered as delivered, unless they are also executed by another person named as comaker, cannot be enforced by the payee against such person unless also executed by the person designated. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Faulkner, 7 S. D. 363; Mosher v. Rogers (Ill.) 20 Cent. L. J. 316; Leaf v. Gibbs, 4 Car. & P. 466; Miller v. Gamble, 4 Barb. 146.

Unless the jury are satisfied that such person, knowing the facts and being aware of his rights, had consented to waive his objection. Leaf v. Gibbs, 4 Car. & P. 466.

And the person suing upon such note is bound to show how it came into his hands without a compliance with the condition. Miller v. Gamble, 4 Barb. 146.

And parol evidence thereof is properly admitted, as it does not tend to vary the terms of the written instruments, but tends to prove that the notes were never in fact delivered as such, and therefore never took effect or became operative as promissory notes. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Faulkner, 7 S. D. 363.

And one who signed a note jointly with his brother on the representation by the brother that another designated person would also join, and that he should not be held responsible unless such other person joined, is not liable on the note in the hands of a holder with notice to whom it was delivered by the brother upon the refusal of a third person to sign. Awde v. Dixon, 5 Eng. L. & Eq. 512, 6 Exch. 869, 20 L. J. Exch. N. S. 295.

So, where a note was signed under an agreement that it should not be used except to take up another designated note or unless all the signers to the other note signed it, such understanding inducing the maker to sign, and the note was taken by the holder without the signature of such other persons knowing that the signer had been so induced to sign, the execution of the note and the agreement as to its use must be deemed to have been contemporaneous acts, and to have constituted one transaction, and such agreement may be shown by parol and constitute a sufficient defense in an action on the note. Harrington v. Wright, 48 Vt. 427.

And where a note is delivered in escrow to be delivered to the payee on the happening of a certain event, otherwise to be null and void, and the event never happened and the depository died, declarations of the depository respecting the terms and conditions on which he held the note are admissible in evidence in an action subsequently brought on the note by an indorsee. Goodson v. Johnson, 35 Tex. 622.

So, a note delivered by the maker to the supervisor of a town to be delivered to the payee on condition of his completion of a certain road, according to his contract with the town, by a certain date, is not binding upon the maker where the payee did not perform his contract, but after the expiration of the time therefor and after the maturity of the note the road was built by another person, and accepted by the supervisors, and the note delivered without the consent of the maker. McLean v. Nugent, 33 Wis. 338.

And the maker of a note may make its delivery conditional upon the completion of a road by the payee within a designated time, whether or not it appears that he had any special interest in the performance of the work, or whether or not he had an interest in its performance by that particular person. Ibid.

And a note made by a person not liable for the amount of a certain judgment, with others who were liable, which was left with one of the persons so liable, to be negotiated by him to raise money to pay the judgment, has no legal existence as such for want of delivery, where, instead of procuring its discount and negotiation, such person pays the judgment with his own funds, and he can recover nothing against the other maker on account of such payment. Thomas v. Watkins, 16 Wis. 550.

So, a non-negotiable note which had been discounted may be defended against by one of the signers on the ground that the note was not executed for the purpose of discount, but was executed by him with the distinct agreement that two other designated persons were also to execute it, and it was then to be delivered to the bank in part renewal of a debt due it, and that another of the signers was to pay the balance, and that he was in fact the surety of such other person and received no part of the proceeds. Rogge v. Cassidy, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 54.

And the fact that one who signs a note upon condition that there shall be another signer to make it valid had an agency or was active in procuring the indorsement of a payment made upon the note, does not constitute a waiver of his right to insist that the agreement for another signer should have been fulfilled. Miller v. Gamble, 4 Barb. 146.

And it has been held that a promissory note and a mortgage securing it, placed in the hands of a custodian with the express understanding that they were not to be delivered to the payee except on the happening of a certain event, which never occurred, but which were delivered without authority are void though they came to the hands of a purchaser in good faith for value before maturity, where nothing appears to charge the maker with negligence in allowing the instruments to be put into circulation. Chipman v. Tucker, 38 Wis. 43, 20 Am. Rep. 1.

This rule has been extended to a conditional delivery to the payee himself, and it has been held that the maker of a note sued by the payee may prove by parol that the instrument was delivered even to the payee, to take effect only on the happening of some future event. Julliard v. Chaffee, 92 N. Y. 530; Alexander v. Wilkes, 11 Lea, 221.

And that parol evidence of an understanding or agreement between the parties to a note that the makers were not to be bound by their signatures unless the note was signed by other designated persons, and that the note was placed in the hands of the payee to obtain such signatures, but that they were not obtained, is admissible in evidence as a defense in an action on the note. Robertson v. Evans, 3 S. C. N. S. 330.

And that the delivery of a note to the agent of the payee with an agreement that he should hold it until a designated time, and then return it if the maker should not decide to effect a designated purchase from the payee, and that in the mean time the note should not be considered as delivered, is of no effect where at the specified time the maker notified the agent that he had decided not to make the purchase and demanded a return of the note; and an allegation of such facts constitutes a good defense in an action thereon. Hillsdale College v. Thomas, 40 Wis. 661.

Upon the other hand, however, it has been held that parol evidence of an undertaking between the parties to a note is not admissible in an action thereon to show that the note was given to the payee himself as an escrow to take effect upon a condition, or to show delivery upon the condition that it was not to have any binding force at all. Guile v. Thornton, 76 Ala. 406; Massmann v. Holcher, 49 Mo. 87. And see Johnson v. Branch, 11 Humph. 521; Radcock v. Steadman, 1 Root, 87; Henshaw v. Dutton, 59 Mo. 139; Jones v. Shaw, 67 Mo. 667.

And that parol evidence that a note was given and received by the payee upon the condition that it was not to be used and the maker was not to be bound unless the signature of another designated person was obtained, and that such signature was never procured or asked for, is not admissible in an action on the note. Cianin v. Esterly Harvesting Mach. Co. 118 Ind. 372, 3 L. R. A. 863.

So, in Sherwin v. Brigham, 39 Ohio St. 137, it was held that where a letter of credit provides that negotiable paper drawn under its authority shall be used only for the purpose of being discounted at a particular bank, persons taking it with notice that it had been offered to the bank for discount and refused cannot recover thereon.

But an agreement between the maker and payee of a note that it was to be negotiated in a designated bank, which was violated by the payee by procuring the money thereon from an individual, is no defense in an action on the note, though the holder discounting it had notice of such agreement. Parker v. Sutton, 103 N. C. 191; Parker v. McDowell, 95 N. C. 219, 59 Am. Rep. 235.

And where a note is made or indorsed as accommodation paper with the understanding that

It is to be discounted at a certain bank or that money is to be obtained upon it in a particular manner, discounting it at another bank or obtaining money on it in a different way from that intended is not a fraudulent misappropriation of the note which will defeat an action upon it. Duncan v. Gilbert, 29 N. J. L. 521.

And the failure on the part of a payee of a note made for his general accommodation, where no restrictions have been placed upon him as to its use, to appropriate the proceeds according to a prior agreement, is no defense thereon in an action by the holder against the maker. Brooks v. Hey, 23 Hun, 372.

A note made for accommodation to the order of the cashier of a bank under an agreement that it should be discounted at that bank, which is not carried out, however, the bank refusing to discount it, whereupon it is discounted by a third person having no notice of any understanding or agreement that the note should be discounted by the bank other than what appears on the face of the note, is void, although the cashier indorsed it without recourse. Parker v. McDowell, 95 N. C. 219, 59 Am. Rep. 235.

And the rule would be different if the notes were not made for the purpose of raising money. Ibid.

And an agreement between the indorser and the maker of a negotiable promissory note that it was not to be delivered as an indorsed note until a bill of sale of a certain steamer was executed and delivered by her owners to the maker, and until a first lien was given thereon by the latter to the indorser, is not per se evidence in an action on the note by the holder against the indorser, but is admissible in evidence in connection with proof that the holder received the note from the maker with express notice and actual knowledge of the agreement; and the jury might infer from such evidence that the holder acquiesced in the agreement and accepted the note subject to it. Ricketts v. Pendleton, 14 Md. 320.

So, in Smalley v. Bristol, 1 Mich. 153, it was held, in an action on a promissory note, that a separate writing to the effect that the note was to be operative as such on a contingency or unless a certain event should happen, contained in a separate paper, is matter of defense only, and need not be noticed by the plaintiff in declaring on the note.

And in Massmann v. Holscher, 49 Mo. 87, it was held that an oral agreement between the maker and payee of a note that the note should be signed by another designated person, and if not so signed it should then become inoperative and void from the time of such failure and proof that such third person executed the notes and that it was mere accommodation paper, is inadmissible in evidence in an action on the note.

The law with relation to delivery in escrow is not intended to be covered, but is merely touched upon incidentally so far as the cases on that subject apply to the matter in hand.

VIII. Agreements constituting satisfaction or discharge.

A verbal agreement entered into by the parties at the making of a note, that it should be delivered up to the maker on his performing certain conditions, is admissible in evidence in an action by the payee thereon as the performance of the conditions amounts to payment of the note. Hagood v. Swords, 2 Ball. L. 305.

And such an agreement that a designated claim should be allowed as a credit thereon and entered as such on the note, which was not done, is not subject to the objection that it was 43 L. R. A.

a contemporaneous verbal understanding that would vary the terms of the written instrument, as the transaction amounted to an equitable payment. Nalle v. Gates, 20 Tex. 315.

And an agreement to apply on the notes whatever should be received from the debtors may be shown in defense of an action thereon to establish payment where, after the giving of the note, the creditor did receive and accept property from the debtor. Rugland v. Thompson, 48 Minn. 539.

So, it is competent to show by parol a collateral agreement that notes should be held for nothing if the makers compromised with all their creditors, as the rule that verbal evidence is not admissible to contradict or alter a written instrument does not exclude such evidence adduced to prove that the written instrument is totally discharged. Bissenger v. Gulteman, 6 Helsk. 277.

And an agreement between the parties to a note given in consideration of a sale of certain letter boxes, drawers, and other furniture in a postoffice, that each one should have and receive his proportionate share of the rent of boxes and drawers for a designated quarter, and proof that the payee had collected various sums for the entire quarter, the amount of which he agreed to apply as soon as definitely ascertained in liquidation and payment of the note, does not fall within the rule prohibiting a change of the terms of a written instrument by parol, as the effect of the agreement would merely be to show that at the time the note was given it was understood that a portion was to be paid in a particular manner, and that it had been so paid. Jones v. Keyes, 16 Wis. 563.

Proof of a parol agreement between the maker and payee of a note that it was to be surrendered to the maker at the death of the payee in satisfaction for services rendered to the payee by the maker merely constitutes proof of an agreement showing how the note had been in fact paid, and how upon the death of the holder it was to be surrendered, and is admissible in defense in an action on the note. Jilson v. Gilbert, 26 Wis. 637, 7 Am. Rep. 100.

So, where notes and accounts are transferred upon an agreement that if they could not be used in a specified manner they should be returned and the contract rescinded, the arrangement does not have the effect in any manner of contradicting the note, and as soon as the notes and account are offered to be returned after it is ascertained that they cannot be used for the purpose agreed upon the contract is discharged or rescinded and the note ought to be given up and canceled; and such facts constitute a good defense in an action on the note. Silmonton v. Steele, 1 Ala. 357. But see McClintic v. Cory, 22 Ind. 170, and Ely v. Kilborn, 5 Denio, 514, supra, II. c.

And where a note is made upon the understanding and agreement between the parties that when it falls due it shall go as a credit on a note given by the payee, and when it becomes due the payee applies to the maker to have such credit made according to the agreement, which she refuses to do, she becomes liable for the whole amount. Smith v. Lawrence, 73 N. C. 98.

An agreement between the parties to a note to renew it when it becomes due does not amount to a defeasance or release, however, and cannot be set up as a defense in an action on the note; it is only available as a basis of a separate suit. Bond v. Worley, 26 Mo. 253.

And an agreement under seal between the parties to a note given for the purchase price of a tract of land, that if there should be any suit concerning the land, the note should not be paid until the same had been entirely got rid of and cleared away, and that the expenses of the suit were to be deducted from the notes, cannot be set up in bar of a suit on the notes, as it does not amount to a defeasance or release, and the party aggrieved can only resort to his separate action on the covenant. Bircher v. Payne, 7 Mo. 462.

So, where the payee of a note agrees with the maker that upon the conveyance to him of certain land a designated sum should be allowed him upon the note, and if any sum should be paid in cash or otherwise double that amount should be indorsed upon the note, and that upon receiving a conveyance of the land and the maker's note for $500 payable in one year with interest the first note should be given up, the agreement to be carried into effect in three months, after which the land was conveyed and the designated amount indorsed as paid on the note in accordance with the agreement within the three months, but no other payment and no note for $500 was made or tendered within that time, the note is to be regarded, not as a penalty, but as evidence of a subsisting debt to the amount of it, and the agreement is to be regarded as in the nature of a composition the conditions of which must be strictly complied with, and the maker, not having complied with such conditions, is liable for the balance of the note after deducting the amount paid. Makepeace v. Harvard College, 10 Pick. 298.

But evidence that a mother delivered to her son a sum of money to relieve him from financial distress as an advancement, but took a note therefor to satisfy her other children, which was intended simply as evidence of such advancement, promising that the mortgage given to secure it should never be recorded, and that the instruments were delivered to him immediately after execution and had remained in his possession ever since until the mortgage was surreptitiously taken from him and recorded so that the note and mortgage were mere evidence of an advancement, constitutes a good defense to an action on the note. Peabody v. Peabody, 59 Ind. 556. See also Sherman v. Sherman, 3 Ind. 387, supra, II. b.

The foregoing subdivision should be read in connection with the subdivisions on "Parol agreements: As to medium of payment," and "As to mode of payment," supra, II. f and g. It will be at once seen that agreements constituting satisfaction or discharge of a note, and agreements as to medium or mode of payments, are very similar, if not the same thing, and the conflict between some of the cases on the question of parol proof of such agreements seems to be irreconcilable. It is thought, however, that the line of division between the cases rests upon the distinction between executed and executory agreements, and that on principle such agreements by parol are not admissible as a defense when they are wholly executory, and become so only when they are executed or when there is an attempt or offer to execute them.

IX. Executed agreements.

When an agreement contemporaneous with a promissory note is executed, it satisfies the note.

While an executory oral agreement made contemporaneous with the execution of a promissory note is not available as a defense in an action on the note, if it is agreed that if the maker do a certain thing it should operate as a payment and discharge of the note, and he thereupon does such thing, it will constitute a sufficient defense. Thompson v. Rawles, 33 Ala. 29.

43 L. R. A.

And where an oral agreement for payment in something besides money, contemporaneous with a promissory note, has been performed, it becomes a complete cancellation and discharge of the written obligation, and a defense to an action brought upon it. Patrick v. Petty, 83 Ala. 420; Hammond v. Cadmus, 10 N. J. L. J. 245.

Where there is a parol executory agreement made at the time of the execution of a note, if the collateral contract be not executed, it cannot be given in evidence to defeat an action on the note because that would be to contradict by parol the written agreement of the parties, but if the collateral agreement be executed it will be a good defense to an action on the note, not because such proof would show a different contract, but because it would show its discharge in the nature of an accord and satisfaction. McNair v. Cooper, 4 Ala. 660.

And it may be shown that a promissory note has been discharged by a parol agreement. Julliard v. Chafee, 92 N. Y. 529.

In the above case Hoare v. Graham, 3 Campb. 57, Moseley v. Hanford, 10 Barn. & C. 729, and Woodbridge v. Spooner, 3 Barn. & Ald. 233, 1 Chitty, 661, supra, II. d, were distinguished and explained, the court saying that they are in harmony with those which recognize a distinction between an agreement for the legal discharge of a contract and one which destroys its legal effect either by contradicting its terms or substituting a distinct and independent agreement.

So, parol evidence of an agreement between the parties to a note, made contemporaneously with the note, that merchandise should be taken in satisfaction of the amount to become due, coupled with proof that the merchandise was delivered according to agreement, is admissible as showing satisfaction, and does not infringe the rule that parol evidence of contemporaneous declarations is inadmissible to vary the terms of the written contract. Buchanan v. Adams, 49 N. J. L. 636, 60 Am. Rep. 666.

And such evidence of an agreement contemporaneous with a promissory note given for three clocks, that the vendor would take back one of the clocks if the purchaser's father did not like it, and that, the clock being disapproved of, an offer was made to return it, which was refused, is admissible in defense in an action on the note, as the evidence does not go to alter the terms of the note, but to show a return of the clock as authorized by the contract, and therefore a right of set-off against the note. Barnes v. Shelton, Harp. L. 38, 18 Am. Dec. 642.

So, where notes are given to secure the execution by the maker of a promise to support and take care of a designated person for life, and the promise is fulfilled, the notes are discharged, and parol evidence is admissible to prove such agreement. Howard v. Stratton, 64 Cal. 487. And see Kirkpatrick v. Taylor, 43 Ill. 207, supra, VII. c.

And an oral agreement entered into between the payee and maker of a promissory note at the time the note was made, which has been fully performed, that if the maker would pay interest on the note and support a relative of the payee for life the note should be considered paid, is a good defense in an action by the personal representatives of the payee against the maker of the note. McQuarrie v. Brand, 28 Ont. Rep. 69.

And parol evidence is admissible in an action on a note made payable upon the death of a widow to prove that the note was given for the estimated value of one third of the land of which the widow was dowable, on the agreement that if the maker should expend the amount of the note in her support the note should be void and that she had lived eighteen years after the note was given, and that the amount expended exceeded the amount of the note. Crosman v. Fuller, 17 Pick. 171.

So, a promissory note and a written agreement between the parties made at the same time, by which the maker was to furnish the payee his house at a stipulated rent and the payee was to satisfy the note with the accruing rent, should be considered as one agreement, and where it appears that the maker furnished the house as agreed, and was still ready to furnish it, performance or readiness to perform on the part of the maker is shown which will constitute a good defense in an action on the note. Bradley v. Marshall, 54 Ill. 173.

And parol evidence of an agreement between the parties to a note in satisfaction of an injury done to the payee by the circulation of false reports injurious to the character of his wife, that in case the maker would make it appear to the satisfaction of the payee that he did not originate the injurious reports the payee would give up the note, and proof that such evidence was furnished to the satisfaction of the payee, is admissible in evidence as a defense in an action on the note. Sanders v. Howe, 1 D. Chip. (Vt.) 365.

And that a note given for the purchase price of property purchased by an agent for his principal, given by the agent in his own name, was made under an agreement that when the principal returned the vendor would obtain his signature to the note, releases the agent and presents a good defense to an action on the note as against the original payee or an indorsee after maturity, where the vendor procured the principal's signature, but failed to release the agent. McNitt v. Helm, 33 Iowa, 342.

So, it is a good defense to a note in the hands of one not a bona fide holder that at the time of its execution there was a verbal agreement between the maker and the payee that the payee should transfer to the maker certain property for which the maker was to execute the note, and in case the payee was successful in settling the affairs of a person who had failed and for whom he was surety, who had assigned to him, then the said payee was to receive back such property from the maker and surrender the note, where evidence was produced that such property was surrendered to the payee from the maker in accordance with the agreement. Van Valkenburgh v. Stupplebeen, 49 Barb. 99.

And when it is charged, in an action on a note in which it is alleged that it was made and delivered for the purpose of securing credit to the payee upon an agreement that the first moneys paid by the maker to the payee should be applied on the note, that if such defense was believed the jury should find for the defendant whether or not such moneys were specially denoted to be applied on the note, a subsequent instruction that if the money paid had not been applied on the note it was not paid is erroneous as contravening the previous instruction. Merick v. Rogers (Tex. Civ. App.) 47 S. W. 801.

So, proof that a note represented a sum of money placed by the payee in the hands of the maker to be by him used in purchasing a controlling interest in a certain newspaper, so as to procure the support of the newspaper for the candidacy of the payee for office, and that the purchase failed and that thereupon the payee directed that the money be distributed in legitimate campaign expenses in a designated county, with evidence of a disbursement of considerable sums for livery teams to carry persons to political meetings, writing up proceedings of political meetings and other expenses, a verdict for the defendant based on the ground of payment will be upheld. Hitchcock v. Hassler, 16 Neb. 487.

And where a promissory note was given in settlement of a breach of promise suit and other proceedings, proof that on the day of the execution of the note it was mutually agreed between the parties that in consideration of the dismissal of the suit the maker would marry the payee, and that the note was executed as security that the defendant would faithfully keep and perform his agreement, and that thereafter he complied with his agreement and married her, would be a complete defense to an action on a note, as it would constitute an executed agreement; but where it appears that the agreement was that he should marry her and take care of her and treat her as a husband should treat his wife, and that although he had married her he had nevertheless treated her in a manner so cruel and inhuman as to drive her from his house so that she was compelled to obtain a divorce, his liability on the note would remain. Tucker v. Tucker, 113 Ind. 272.

So, an agreement contemporaneous with the giving of notes, that they should be void on the happening of certain contingencies, will invalidate the notes though the contingencies did not happen, where the act of the payee of the note prevented them from happening. Stockwell v. Gidney, 73 Me. 84.

And where an oral agreement for the payment in something besides money contemporaneous with a promissory note is performed in part, and full performance is prevented only by the death of a party, it will operate as payment or accord and satisfaction pro tanto, but pro tanto only. Patrick v. Petty, 83 Ala. 420.

And a note given by a person indicted for a crime to a lawyer to defend him cannot be defended against on the ground that the lawyer did not perform the particular service for which the note was executed, where before the trial the maker of the note committed suicide. Mitcherson v. Dosier, 7 J. J. Marsh. 53, 22 Am. Dec. 116.

And that a note was given to pay an attorney to defend the maker on an indictment for murder, but that the defendant died before a trial was had, and that the only service rendered consisted of advice and counsel which were not worth the amount of the note, constitute no defense against the liability on the note. Headley v. Good, 24 Tex. 232.

An executory agreement between the parties to a note, however, constitutes no bar to an action brought upon the note. Cushing v. Wyman, 44 Me. 121.

And an agreement signed by the payee of a note in which he acknowledges the receipt of the note on account of a claim held by him, and agrees to stop proceedings on a certain judgment then in the hands of the sheriff pending against the maker, and to enter satisfaction when notes to be agreed upon are given, constitutes no defense in an action on the note in the absence of proof of the giving of such notes. Klett v. Claridge, 31 Pa. 108.

Nothing short of the fulfillment of an agreement made contemporaneous with a promissory note for its compromise under certain conditions will discharge the original demand. Brown v. Spofford, 95 U. S. 474, 24 L. ed. 508.

And a collateral compromise agreement by the terms of which the original contract consisting of promissory notes is to be delivered up upon certain specified payments being made, can only be availed of to defeat a remedy on the notes when the party seeking to do so shows that he fulfilled it on his part. Spofford v. Brown, 1 MacArth. 223.

And an executory agreement by a payee of a note to accept a smaller sum in satisfaction of a larger cannot avail the maker as a defense where the undertaking is conditional and the condition has not been complied with. Makepeace v. Harvard College, 10 Pick. 298; Blake v. Blake, 110 Mass. 202.

And where the maker of a promissory note relies in an action thereon on a verbal promise by the payee to release him from the payment of the principal on the condition of the payment by him of a designated rate of interest during the life of the payee, it is incumbent upon him to show full performance of the condition. Harmon v. Adams, 120 U. S. 363, 30 L. ed. 688.

So, a contemporaneous oral agreement that a promissory note is to be discharged by the doing of something other than the payment of money so long as it remains executory is wholly inoperative, and no defense whatever to a suit on the note. Patrick v. Petty, 83 Ala. 420; Tuskaloosa Cotton-Seed Oil Co. v. Perry, 85 Ala. 158.

It is neither payment nor accord and satisfaction until performed, and on failure to perform such agreement the only advantage that can be taken of the failure is by action for damages for its breach. Tuskaloosa Cotton-Seed Oil Co. v. Perry, 85 Ala. 158.

And an agreement between the parties to a note that a note held by the maker against the payee should be set off against the new note so that the smaller would pay the larger, is executory and does not work an extinguishment of the smaller note. Cary v. Bancroft, 14 Pick. 315.

And such an agreement by which the maker had the liberty of substituting as collateral a certain contemplated issue of bonds, does not become operative so as to constitute a defense in an action upon the note, where no new mortgage was made and no new bonds issued. Coffin v. Grand Rapids Hydraulic Co. 46 N. Y. S. R. 851.

And that a note was given in part payment for the patent of a sewing machine for a designated state, and that at the time of the purchase and as part of the same transaction the vendors verbally agreed with the purchasers to furnish the machines to them from time to time as fast as they were wanted and as they might order them, at a designated price, and that numerous orders were sent which were never filled, by reason of which their sales were stopped and business spoiled, are no defense in an action upon the note in the absence of anything to show that they paid for the machines ordered, or that they were ready and offered to pay for them on delivery. Merrill v. Stanwood, 52 Me. 65.

And where the maker and payee of a note agreed under seal that the maker should make quarterly payments for ten years, the payee promising that, if such payments amounted in all to less than the amount of the note, the note should be canceled, and the quarterly payments were made up to the maker's death but not afterwards, the note is a valid claim against the estate of the maker for its full amount less the payment actually made. Blake v. Blake, 110 Mass. 202.

So, a purchaser of land for which he gives his note is liable on such note though he had an option to give up the land in payment of the note, and he afterwards tendered a deed thereof, which was refused, where such tender was not made within a reasonable time and he had placed it beyond his power to make an effectual reconveyance of such land by making a voluntary conveyance of it to a trustee to secure a debt; and an action will not lie to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment on the note. Bailey v. Boydston (Tex. Civ. App.) 33 S. W. 281. 43 L. R. A.

Where a note was given in consideration of the postponement of the sale of mortgaged premises for a designated time, and as collateral security for a mortgage debt, under an agreement that if the debt should be paid before that time, or if the premises should sell for an amount sufficient to pay the debt and costs, the note should be void, and in the event of a sale for a less sum, only so much of the note should be collected as would make up the difference, if by reason of the sale no part or only a portion of the note ought to be collected, it is the duty of the defendant in an action thereon to show it by way of defense, otherwise a full recovery can be had. Hancock v. Hodgson, 4 Ill. 330.

X. Effect on transferee of note.

A purchaser of a promissory note for full value before maturity is not affected by a contemporaneous agreement between the maker and payee unless he had knowledge thereof at the time of the purchase. Brown v. Spofford, 95 U. S. 474, 24 L. ed. 508; Spofford v. Brown, 1 MacArth. 223.

And an answer in an action on a note setting up a contemporaneous agreement by which the maker was not to be held liable furnishes no defense in an action by an innocent holder in the absence of an allegation of notice. Mitchell v. Noell, 39 Ind. 399.

And see also Stewart v. Anderson, 59 Ind. 375. supra, III. a; Nebraska Nat. Bank v. Pennock (Neb.) 75 N. W. 554, supra, III. b; Ricketts v. Pendleton, 14 Md. 320, supra, VII.

And evidence of the breach of contemporaneous agreement cannot be given to defeat a note as against a transferee where it is not accompanied with an offer to prove that the transferee knew the facts when he took the note. Foy v. Blackstone, 31 Ill. 538, 83 Am. Dec. 246.

One who takes a negotiable instrument for a valuable consideration before the same is due and without notice of any equities existing between the original parties has good title, and an agreement between such original parties that the payee shall either return or pay the obligation cannot operate to defeat his recovery; in order to affect him by such a defense, it must be shown that he had notice or knowledge of the facts. Spofford v. Brown, 1 MacArth. 223.

But it has been held that failure of consideration of a note consisting in part of an agreement to convey a valid and clear title to certain lands to the maker thereof, which had not been complied with, may be set up against an assignee of the note without reference to any question of notice at the time of the assignment. Holman v. Creagmiles, 14 Ind. 177.

And that a promissory note placed in the hands of a custodian not to be delivered to the payee except on the happening of a certain event, which never occurred, is void, not only in the hands of the payee, but also of a purchaser in good faith for value before maturity, where nothing appears to charge the maker with negligence in allowing the note to be put into circulation. Chipman v. Tucker, 38 Wis. 43, 20 Am. Rep. 1.

But an agreement between the parties, made contemporaneously with a note, providing that the goods for which the note was given might be returned, and proof that they were returned in accordance therewith, is not a defense to an action on the note brought by an innocent holder without notice. Maze v. Heinze, 53 Ill. App. 503.

Nor is a writing given by the payee of a note contemporaneously with it and as a part of the consideration, providing that the maker was not to pay the note until he could realize from the sale of a certain patented article sufficient money to pay it, admissible in evidence in an action on the note, brought by a bona fide purchaser for value. Wait v. Chandler, 63 Me. 257.

And a plea in an action on a promissory note payable on demand, that it was agreed by the parties at the time the note was made that it should be held by the payee as a security for the settlement of their future accounts, but that the payee had transferred it to the plaintiff, does not constitute a good defense in the absence of allegation or proof of a demand before the note was assigned and of notice to the indorsee. Harvey v. Geary, 1 U. C. Q. B. 483.

A note given for a premium on an insurance policy subject to a contemporaneous agreement between the parties made by the insurance company's local agent, which is violated, however, is subject to the same agreement in the hands of the insurance company, and its violation would be a defense in an action on the note brought by the company, though if the company should indorse it before maturity to a third person for value and without notice he would hold it discharged of the equity. Bresee v. Crumpton, 121 N. C. 122.

But a note is presumed to have been indorsed before due, and an agreement in writing between the parties to a note payable in meats when called for, in which the payee agreed to pay the maker for one half the meat which he should purchase and apply the other half on the note until satisfied, after which the note was indorsed to a third party without recourse, in the absence of anything to show that it was negotiated after due, will constitute no defense in an action on the note, and is not admissible in evidence therein. Patterson v. Hartsock, 1 G. Greene, 252.

And the violation of an agreement between the maker and payee of a note for money loaned, that the payee should procure insurance for the amount of the note on the adventure or charter of a certain brig of the maker for his benefit, and in case the vessel should be lost should collect the amount due on the policy for the benefit of the defendant in payment of the note, or should assign the policy to the maker and in case of the arrival of the vessel at any time before the expiration of ninety days the defendant should pay the note on her arrival, the brig having been lost on the voyage, cannot be set up as a defense in an action on the note by an indorsee for a good consideration, who took the note before any valid defense existed and before its maturity, though they knew that an oral agreement between the maker and payee accompanied the note. Patten v. Gleason, 106 Mass. 439.

And the rule that when by agreement of the parties the consideration of a promissory note is to be defeated if certain bills of exchange shall not be paid, the nonpayment of the bills cannot be set up as a defense against an assignee without notice, is not affected by the Indiana statute providing that the maker of a note may set up any defense against the assignee which he could make against the payee. Thomas v. Page, 3 McLean, 369.

And a collateral contemporaneous agreement providing that a note should not be paid in the event that an executory contract which was the consideration thereof should not be performed will not defeat the negotiability of a note in the hands of an indorsee though he had notice thereof, and affords no defense to the note where he purchased it before a breach occurred. Jennings v. Todd, 118 Mo. 296.

So, the fact that a note recites the consideration for which it was given, consisting of goods purchased, and that the goods had been received, does not afford notice to the transferee of a contemporaneous agreement that the goods might be returned. Mase v. Heinze, 53 Ill. App. 503.

And a mere conception on the part of a holder of a note at the time he took it that an executory contract which was the consideration thereof would not be carried out, and that therefore the note would not be paid under a collateral contemporaneous agreement providing that it should not be paid in the event that such contract should not be performed, is not sufficient to stamp his purchase with bad faith. Jennings v. Todd, 118 Mo. 296.

And knowledge by a transferee of a negotiable note that the consideration thereof was future and contingent does not affect his right to recover thereon. State Nat. Bank v. Cason, 39 La. Ann. 865.

And an indorsee for value before maturity of a negotiable promissory note may recover thereon in an action against the maker, though when taking it he knew that there was a written stipulation between the maker and the payee that upon a specified contingency the note was not to be paid, and though before maturity such contingency actually happened. Adams v. Smith, 35 Me. 324.

So, the words "secured by mortgage," written upon a promissory note, form no part of the note, and do not operate to limit or impair its value, and do not constitute notice to third persons of the contents of the mortgage or that it contains clauses inconsistent with the note, and are not sufficient to put them on inquiry. Hovry v. Eppinger, 34 Mich. 29.

And where an agreement was written upon the same paper with a note and signed by the parties, to the effect that the maker should do certain acts by a designated time, in which case the payee should release all claims upon the note, and the paper containing the note and agreement was placed in the hands of a third person who was to deliver the note if the maker failed to do the acts by the time stipulated, and who upon his failure to do such acts separated the note from the agreement and delivered it to the payee who transferred it to an indorsee, an action may be maintained thereon by such indorsee. Moody v. Leavitt, 2 N. H. 171.

But the maker of a note which was accompanied by a collateral contemporaneous agreement providing that it should not be paid in the event that an executory contract which was the consideration of the note should not be performed, does not estop himself from disputing the validity of the note in the hands of a purchaser to whom the payee has transferred it contrary to his agreement, by stating to such purchaser that as it was traded off already he would as soon he would have it as anybody else. Jennings v. Todd, 118 Mo. 296.

And the transferee of a note after-due acquires no interest in addition to that of the payee, where it was accompanied by a contemporaneous written agreement with relation to the manner of payment, which agreement had from time to time been modified by parol. Hill v. Huntress, 43 N. H. 480.

And the transfer of an overdue note which was given only as an acknowledgment of the maker's liability to the payee on account of a surety debt he had paid for him and with the understanding that it was to be a credit in the settlement between them in respect to his legacy or portion in his mother's estate, and not as an absolute obligation, is a fraud on the maker, contrary to the intent and understanding with which it was made, and, having been made after maturity, confers no greater rights upon the holder than the payee had, so that he can recover nothing except what might be found due on the settlement of the estate. Williamson v. Doby, 36 Ark. 639.

An oral agreement contemporaneous with a promissory note, that if on looking over and settling the account for which the note was given it was not found to be right, the purchaser would make it so, which is proved without objection, is as fully operative as though it had been reduced to writing as a part of the note itself, and takes away the prima facie effect of the note as evidence of consideration, and compels the holder suing upon it to show consideration, and in case of failure so to do he cannot recover. Hathaway v. Hagan, 59 Vt. 75.

As to the rule under the Georgia statute with relation to attorneys, see Weed v. Bond, 21 Ga. 195, supra, VI. d.

F. H. B.

Annie E. McLANE, Admr., etc., of Martin H. Russell, Deceased,
v.

Frank G. PERKINS et al.

(.....Me.....)

1. Freedom from contributory negligence must affirmatively appear in evidence, or, at least, by some legitimate inference from the evidence, and is not to be presumed.
2. Failure to prove freedom from contributory negligence precludes recovery for the drowning of an employee who, with others, was going to his work in an old punt, with a crack in one side calked with waste, and a part of one end split off, when all were drowned and there is no evidence as to the cause or manner of the accident.

(August 10, 1898.)

EXCEPTIONS by plaintiff to rulings of the Supreme Judicial Court for Penobscot County granting a nonsuit in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. P. H. Gillin and E. C. Donworth for plaintiff.

Mr. C. F. Woodard, for defendants:

It is necessary for the plaintiff to establish three propositions: First, that there was negligence on the part of the defendants; second, that this negligence was the cause of the death of the plaintiff's intestate; third, that there was no negligence on the part of the plaintiff's intestate contributing to his death.

Wormell v. Maine C. R. Co. 79 Me. 397.

It is not enough to establish negligence and an accident. It must also be shown that the negligence was the cause of the accident.

State v. Maine C. R. Co. 76 Me. 357, 49 Am. Rep. 622; Nason v. West, 78 Me. 253; Buzzell v. Laconia Mfg. Co. 48 Me. 113, 77 Am. Dec. 212.

In the absence of all testimony as to the boat after it was last seen lying at the wharf, and the men in it, everything is left to conjecture and to conjecture alone.

Nason v. West, 78 Me. 253; Maguire v. Fitchburg R. Co. 146 Mass. 379; Chase v. Maine C. R. Co. 77 Me. 62, 52 Am. Rep. 744. Mr. O. F. Fellows also for defendants.

Emery, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff's evidence goes only to the following extent: The defendants were operating in Bucksport, on the Penobscot river, a mill for the manufacture of barrel staves and heads from wood. They had occasion, in the course of their business, in September, 1897, to send some eight of their employees, including the plaintiff's intestate, up the river some 2 or 3 miles to raft and drive some logs down the river to the mill. The party detailed for this purpose assembled at the wharf near the mill a little before 4 o'clock on the morning of September 21, when it was quite dark. One of the defendants (Perkins) was in charge of the party, and accompanied it. They launched into the water two small boats of the defendants, known as "punts," put into them the pick poles and other implements necessary for rafting and driving the logs, and then embarked. In one boat was Mr. Perkins with four men. In the other boat were the other four men, including the plaintiff's intestate. In this boat also was a lighted lantern. The first boat—that of Perkins—started off about 4 o'clock, while the second boat, on which was the plaintiff's intestate, was still at the wharf. The first boat went safely up the river to its destination. The second boat did not arrive, and was not seen for some days afterwards, when it was found on the shore. Its crew were never afterwards seen alive, and their drowned bodies were found at intervals afterwards at different places up and down the river; that of the plaintiff's intestate among the rest.

After the first boat started, its crew did not see the second boat on account of the darkness, but they saw a light as of a lantern moving after them for some fifteen minutes, or half a mile, when it disappeared. They heard no cries, and saw and heard nothing else indicating any disaster. At this time the river was comparatively smooth, with little wind; but later, towards 7 o'clock it became rough from a rising gale of wind. The plaintiff's intestate was a young man nearly 22 years of age, and unacquainted with boats, as the defendants knew.

The boat itself was an old punt, made of inch pine boards, with bottom and sides almost flat and straight, and with ends nearly square. It was about 14 feet long, 3½ feet wide, and 19 inches deep in the center. Along one of its sides was an old crack, which had been calked with waste. The top part of one end had been split off, so that only about 7 inches of height of that end remained, while the other end was 14 inches high. It did not appear which, or whether

NOTE.—As to the presumption with respect to the negligence of a person who is found dead as a result of the alleged negligence of another party, see note to Hendrickson v. Great North- 43 L. R. A.

ern R. Co. (Minn.) 16 L. R. A. 261; also Suburban Electric Co. v. Nugent (N. J.) 32 L. R. A. 700.

either, of the crew was in charge of the boat more than the others.

The four men in the boat were undoubtedly drowned in the river some time that morning, but where, how, and when that morning they were drowned is utterly unknown. Whether they fell overboard, or the boat capsized or foundered, is left completely to conjecture.

The plaintiff insists that it can be logically inferred from this evidence that the drowning was the direct result of the unseaworthiness of the boat furnished by the defendants, and hence was the direct result of their fault. The defendants insist that it cannot be reasonably inferred from the evidence that the plaintiff's intestate at the time of the accident did not, by his own want of care, contribute to produce the accident.

The plaintiff admits that contributory negligence on the part of her intestate would bar her action, but she argues that such contributory negligence should not be presumed, and that, if her evidence does not indicate its existence, she is entitled to recover, unless the defendants adduce evidence that it did exist. Her counsel have argued the proposition ably and vigorously with many citations, especially from other states. The law of this state, however, is unmistakably and inexorably against her. More than a generation ago, in Gleason v. Bremen, 50 Me. 222, this court declared through the able, learned, and liberal-minded Mr. Justice Kent that "the law is clear and unquestioned that the plaintiff must satisfy the jury as an affirmative fact, to be established by him as a necessary part of his case, that at the time of the accident [he] . . . was in the exercise of ordinary care." This clear and unqualified statement has been often affirmed since. In State v. Maine C. R. Co. 76 Me. 357, 49 Am. Rep. 622, the court again said more tersely, but not less unmistakably: "The burden is upon the party prosecuting to show that the person injured or killed did not, by his own want of ordinary care, contribute to produce the accident." It also said that sometimes the plaintiff's own evidence shows that he, by his own carelessness, did thus contribute; but that it is equally fatal to him if his evidence fails to show that he did not thus contribute. The court has not made this repeated declaration by way of dicta, but has made it the foundation of its judgment in several cases. Buzzell v. Lacomia Mfg. Co. 48 Me. 113, 77 Am. Dec. 212; Lesan v. Maine C. R. Co. 77 Me. 87; Chase v. Maine C. R. Co. 77 Me. 62, 52 Am. Rep. 744; State v. Maine C. R. Co. 81 Me. 84; Giberson v. Bangor & A. R. Co. 89 Me. 337. It is useless to try to move the court from this ground so long and firmly maintained.

The plaintiff's counsel further urge that in dealing with moving railroad trains persons should be apprehensive of danger, and hence in case of accident should be held to adduce affirmative evidence of their own care, and that the rule in question has grown out of such cases, and should not be extended to cases like this, where the plaintiff's intestate had no acquaintance with boats, and could not apprehend danger. The rule, however, will be found to have been applied to all cases of negligence in this state. The inquiry has always been whether the plaintiff's evidence showed affirmatively, either directly or by inference, that he did not, by his own fault, contribute to the accident.

Counsel again urge that the rule has been too broadly stated, and that the true rule, even in this state, as to the burden of proof upon the issue of contributory negligence, may be stated thus: If the circumstances disclosed and left unexplained indicate any contributory negligence, then the burden is on the plaintiff to explain the circumstances, and to show that after all he was free from fault; but that, if the circumstances disclosed do not indicate any contributory negligence, there can be no presumption of any such negligence, and there is nothing for the plaintiff to rebut or explain.

It is true that the plaintiff's freedom from contributory negligence can sometimes be reasonably inferred from the circumstances without direct evidence of what he did or left undone. When a plaintiff is injured while merely passive in the care of the defendant, without any active agency of his own in the matter, it is fairly inferable that he did not contribute to the injury. In the case of an injury to a passenger in his seat in a railroad train, caused by the train leaving the track, or by a collision, he is merely passive in the care of the railroad company, and his freedom from fault affirmatively appears from the shown circumstances. In his seat, in the place assigned to him by the railroad company, he evidently could do nothing to bring about or prevent such an accident. In the case of the engineer or conductor of the train, or in the case of any person who might be exercising any active agency in the matter, such freedom from fault would not be apparent. So, in a disaster to an unseaworthy ship, a person on board, shown by the evidence to be merely passive in the place assigned to him, would affirmatively appear to be without fault, while other persons on board, not shown by the evidence to be merely passive in their proper places, would need to show by other evidence their freedom from fault.

But in all cases the plaintiff's freedom from contributory negligence in the particular case must affirmatively appear in evidence, or at least by some legitimate inference from the evidence. It is not to be presumed. If sought to be established by inference, it must be by inference from facts in evidence in the case. It cannot be inferred from general conduct, nor from the habits or instincts of mankind, nor from the argument that men are likely to be careful in danger. It is as true that men are careless as that they are careful. It is as true that men negligently contribute to their own injury as that they do not. We maintain the statutory rule stated in Chase v. Maine C. R. Co. 77 Me. 62, 52 Am. Rep. 744, that the plaintiff must affirmatively show by evidence that in his case he was free from contributory negligence.

The plaintiff in this case cites Guthrie v. Maine C. R. Co. 81 Me. 572, as such a departure from the rule as to authorize her to proceed with this action. That case, however, was decided strictly in accordance with the rule. Guthrie, a brakeman, was injured by the coming together of two box freight cars, the bumpers and drawbar upon one of them having been broken off, so that the cars came much nearer together than usual, and sufficiently near to injure a person between them. The defective car was stationary, and the plaintiff was on top of a moving train of freight cars backing up to couple on the defective car. He was directed by the conductor to run to the rear car and "make the hitch,"—meaning for him to go down between the cars and couple them. In compliance with this order, he ran along over the top of the train, and was seen to begin the descent of the ladder on the end of the car first approaching the defective car. In descending, his back was to the defective car, and he would not know of its defective condition. While no one saw him at the moment of the injury, and he instantly became unconscious, and had no memory of it himself, it was apparent that he was injured by the absence of the drawbar and bumpers from the defective car, which permitted the cars to come so close together as to crush him while between them in the performance of his duty. He was in his proper place,—the place assigned to him. As to the condition and movement of the cars he was passive. He could not see the defect. He did nothing to bring the cars so close together. He could do nothing to prevent it. The collision was too sudden to give him any chance to extricate himself by any amount of care, after he had begun to descend the ladder. The evidence for the plaintiff tending to show all these facts affirmatively, the court properly decided that the case should go to the jury.

In several cases decided by this court the application of the rule led to a different result. In Chase v. Maine C. R. Co. 77 Me. 62, 52 Am. Rep. 744, the plaintiff's intestate, while driving in a sleigh over a railroad crossing, was hit and killed by a passing train. No one saw him at the time. No evidence was given as to how the accident happened. It did not appear from the evidence that in approaching the railroad track he had taken any precautions to ascertain whether a train was coming. It did not affirmatively appear from the evidence that he could not have avoided the collision by the exercise of due care on his part. In State v. Maine C. R. Co. 81 Me. 84, the plaintiff's intestate, a passenger, was last seen alive as he was passing through the train towards the rear, while the train was in motion. He was found next morning, dead, upon the track, with severe wounds and fractures. The plaintiff claimed that he fell off the train solely by reason of a defective platform on one car in the rear, but there was no evidence as to what he was doing, or attempting to do, at the time of the accident, nor how the accident happened. He was not shown to be in his seat, nor to be merely passive in the matter. As in the Case of Chase, it did not appear from the evidence that he could not have avoided the accident by the exercise of due care. In Giberson v. Bangor & A. R. Co. 89 Me. 337, it could not be inferred from the evidence that the plaintiff's intestate took the proper precautions in crossing the railroad track.

Recurring now to the plaintiff's evidence in this case, it is painfully wanting upon the affirmative of the proposition that the plaintiff's intestate, at the time of the accident, did not by his own negligence, contribute to produce the catastrophe. He was alive in the boat at the wharf at 4 o'clock on the morning of September 21, and days afterwards was found dead on the shore. All between is a blank. Perhaps it sufficiently appears that he came to his death by drowning within a few hours after the preceding boat left the wharf, but that is all. If the following light, observed by the crew of the first boat, was the lantern in the second boat, its disappearance is no evidence of disaster at that time. The lantern may then have been placed in the bottom of the boat, as would be usual. No sounds indicating trouble were heard at that time or ever. There is nothing indicating where or how the drowning took place, nor what the plaintiff's intestate was doing or attempting to do at the time, nor that he was passive. He may have fallen out of the boat, and the others swamped the boat in trying to rescue him. He may himself have swamped the boat by his own acts. The boat may have come in contact with a floating log, or run upon a ledge, or may have been capsize by the rough water, or by the swell of a passing steamer, or may have sunk for want of balling, or, as contended by the plaintiff, may have foundered solely by being overloaded in its defective condition. All is conjecture, however. The evidence does not indicate any one course of events more than another. The sad result is all that is shown. The evidence does not show that the plaintiff's intestate did in any way contribute to the drowning, but it does not show affirmatively that he did not; and this latter lack in the evidence is fatal to the plaintiff's action. State v. Maine C. R. Co. 76 Me. 357, 49 Am. Rep. 622.

The rule herein affirmed may seem to work a hardship in such a case as this, where the plaintiff is prevented from compliance with the rule by the suddenness and magnitude of the disaster itself sweeping away all possible evidence; but, if the rule were otherwise, it would work equal hardship to a defendant. It is not a peculiar hardship, however. Many meritorious claims and defenses often fail for want of legal evidence to establish them. Judgments of courts, however, should never be based upon conjecture, but always and only upon evidence.

Exceptions overruled.

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

YALE UNIVERSITY, Appt.,

v.

Town of NEW HAVEN.

(71 Conn. 316.)

1. Buildings used by a college exclusively as dormitories and dining halls for its students are exclusively occupied as a college, within the meaning of Gen. Stat. § 3820, providing for the exemption of such buildings from taxation.
2. A statute exempting college property from taxation in accordance with a well-settled and long-established public policy is to be construed reasonably so as to give full effect to the policy declared, as well as to avoid abuse and frustrate evasion, and is not within the rule of strict construction.
3. Students' fees, whether apportioned to room rent or tuition, cannot be treated as income of real estate, and land occupied and reasonably necessary for the plant of a college is not productive real estate, within the meaning of a statute providing that a college shall not hold real estate exempt from taxation which shall afford more than a specified annual income.
4. Real property substantially owned and enjoyed by a private person, although the title remains in a college, is not within the exemption of college property from taxation.

(January 4, 1899.)

RESERVATION by the Superior Court for New Haven County of an appeal by Yale University from a proceeding of the taxing officers assessing certain of its property for taxes which was alleged to be exempt. Judgment for appellant advised.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Charles R. Ingersoll, Louis H. Bristol, and Henry Stoddard, for appellant:

The court will so construe the statute as to promote the policy of the state and the manifest purpose and intent of the legislature.

People, American Geographical Soc., v. New York Tax Comrs. 11 Hun, 505; New York Infant Asylum v. Westchester County Supers. 31 Hun, 116; Re Miller, 45 Hun, 244; Brown University v. Granger, 19 R. I. 704, 36 L. R. A. 847; People, Seminary of Our Lady of Angels, v. Barber, 42 Hun, 27; Griswold College v. State, 46 Iowa, 275, 26 Am. Rep. 138; State v. Ross, 24 N. J. L. 497; Detroit Home & Day School v. Detroit, 76 Mich. 521, 6 L. R. A. 97.

A municipality often derives great advantages from the presence of an institution ex-

NOTE.—As to exemption of property of colleges or schools from taxation, see brief note to Auditor General v. University of Michigan (Mich.) 10 L. R. A. 376; also Philadelphia v. Overseers of Public Schools (Pa.) 29 L. R. A. 600; and Kentucky Female Orphan School v. Louisville (Ky.) 40 L. R. A. 119.

As to the exemption of property used by such institutions for revenue, see also note to Book Agents of M. E. Church, South, v. Hinton (Tenn.) 19 L. R. A. 289.
43 L. R. A.

empted from taxation,—advantages which much more than offset any losses that are real.

The appellant's buildings are within the exemption.

The practical construction of the statutes has been such that prior to the list of October, 1896, returned by the appellant to the assessors of the town of New Haven, none of the college dormitories were ever in fact taxed or set in the list of New Haven or elsewhere for that purpose.

The controlling force of such long continued and universal practice is a matter of elementary law.

Yudkin v. Gates, 60 Conn. 429; Flynn v. Morgan, 55 Conn. 130; Hawley v. Parrott, 10 Conn. 486; Whittlesey v. Fuller, 11 Conn. 337; Sage v. Wilcox, 6 Conn. 83; People, Academy of Sacred Heart, v. New York Tax & A. Comrs. 6 Hun, 109, Affirmed in 64 N. Y. 656; Easton v. Pickersgill, 55 N. Y. 311.

The buildings are exclusively occupied as colleges.

Webster's International Dict.; 6 Encyclopædia Britannica, 9th ed. p. 142; First Unitarian Soc. v. Hartford, 66 Conn. 368.

The test whether a given building is exclusively occupied as a college is whether it is used and occupied exclusively by the college corporation for college purposes,—that is, the purposes expressed in its act of incorporation. And the true inquiry should be, not what is actually necessary, but what is proper and appropriate to effectuate the objects of the institution.

Griswold College v. State, 46 Iowa, 277, 26 Am. Rep. 138.

The following decisions in analogous cases form a body of authority which puts an end to any further discussion or argument.

State v. Ross, 24 N. J. L. 497; Northampton County v. Lafayette College, 128 Pa. 132; House of Refuge v. Smith, 140 Pa. 387; Ramsey County v. Macalester College, 51 Minn. 437, 18 L. R. A. 278; Griswold College v. State, 46 Iowa, 275, 26 Am. Rep. 138; Detroit Home & Day School v. Detroit, 76 Mich. 521, 6 L. R. A. 97; Davis v. Cincinnati Camp Meeting Asso. 57 Ohio St. 257; Wesleyan Academy v. Wilbraham, 99 Mass. 599; Massachusetts General Hospital v. Somerville, 101 Mass. 319; Mount Hermon Boys' School v. Gill, 145 Mass. 139; People, Academy of Sacred Heart, v. New York Tax & A. Comrs. 6 Hun, 109, Approved in 64 N. Y. 656; People, Seminary of Our Lady of Angels, v. Barber, 42 Hun, 27.

The buildings are also exempt from taxation, as belonging to and used exclusively for a scientific and literary society, within the meaning of the statute.

Detroit Home & Day School v. Detroit, 76 Mich. 521, 6 L. R. A. 97.

The amount received by the appellant for the use and occupation by its students of living, study, and sleeping room is not income within the meaning of the act of 1834 and the Revised Statutes of the state, § 3822.

The limitation applies only to productive capital invested in land.

The buildings are non-income producing. West Hartford v. Hartford Water Comrs. 44 Conn. 360; State v. Ross, 24 N. J. L. 497; Ramsey County v. Macalester College, 51 Minn. 437, 18 L. R. A. 278; First Unitarian Soc. v. Hartford, 66 Conn. 368.

The amounts received by the appellant for the use and occupation of said rooms are not a means of profit to the funds of the institution.

Episcopal Academy v. Philadelphia, 150 Pa. 565; Gooch v. Association for Relief of Aged Indigent Females, 109 Mass. 558; McDonald v. Massachusetts General Hospital, 120 Mass. 432, 21 Am. Rep. 529.

Messrs. W. H. Ely, J. W. Alling, and Stoddard & Goodhart, for respondent:

The charter provides a rule for taxation as follows: That all the lands and ratable estate belonging to said college not exceeding the yearly value of 500 pounds sterling, lying in this government, etc., shall be free and exempt from all rates, taxes, military service, working at highways, and other such like duties and services.

As the university accepted this charter, it is bound by its provisions relating to taxation.

1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 88; Cooley, Taxn. 2d ed. p. 71; Hartford v. Hartford Theological Seminary, 66 Conn. 482.

The amendment to the charter in 1834 (Private Acts, vol. 1, p. 481), which is now contained in our statute, § 3822, simply increases the exemption from the yearly value of £500 sterling, to the right to hold real estate affording an annual income of not more than $6,000. It also exempts from taxation other funds absolutely.

The charter and the statute laws should be strictly construed.

Gillette v. Hartford, 31 Conn. 357; Hartford v. Hartford Theological Seminary, 66 Conn. 482; Brainard v. Colchester, 31 Conn. 410.

The finding is not that the buildings are used for college purposes, but that the income is applied for college purposes.

A building rented for living and sleeping purposes is not such occupation of buildings as is intended by the statute, § 3820.

Cincinnati College v. State, 19 Ohio, 110; New Haven v. Sheffield Scientific School, 59 Conn. 166; Manresa Institute v. Norwalk, 61 Conn. 228; Northwestern University v. Illinois, 99 U. S. 309, 25 L. ed. 387; Hartford v. Hartford Theological Seminary, 66 Conn. 475; Gibbons v. District of Columbia, 116 U. S. 404, 29 L. ed. 680; Williams College v. Williamstown Assessors, 167 Mass. 505; Philips Exeter Academy v. Exeter, 58 N. H. 306; St. Joseph's Church v. Providence Tax Assessors, 12 R. I. 19; Griswold College v. State, 46 Iowa, 275, 26 Am. Rep. 138; Gillette v. Hartford, 31 Conn. 351; Connecticut Spiritualist Camp-Meeting Asso. v. East Lyme, 54 Conn. 152; Chapel of Good Shepherd v. Boston, 120 Mass. 212.

Before any construction of the statutes in question can be claimed by force of alleged acquiescence, it must be shown that the assessors knew of the facts which exposed the property of the appellant to taxation.

King v. Hogg, 1 T. R. 721; Dwight v. Boston, 12 Allen, 316; Landon v. Litchfield, 11 Conn. 263.

Hammersley, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In 1887 the corporation of the President and Fellows of Yale College in New Haven was authorized to use the title "Yale University," and gifts received and contracts made under either of said names were declared to be valid. The powers of the corporation were not otherwise changed. 10 Spec. Laws, p. 467. In October, 1895, the university filed with the assessors of the town of New Haven a list of the property owned by it subject to taxation for the year 1896. The list contained seven pieces of land, valued at $57,680. To this list the assessors added certain buildings used for dormitories and dining hall, with the land on which they stood, valued at $214,990, and also added certain vacant building lots, dwelling houses, and factories, valued at $167,112. The plaintiff appealed to the board of relief, which confirmed the action of the assessors. This appeal is an application to the superior court, alleging that the board of relief acted illegally in confirming the action of the assessors, and praying for appropriate relief. The alleged illegality depends on the meaning given to two statutes, viz., § 3820 of the General Statutes, and the act of 1834, amending the charter of the college, which appears also in § 3822 of the General Statutes.

1. Section 3820 of the General Statutes provides that "buildings or portions of buildings exclusively occupied as colleges, academies, churches or public schoolhouses, or infirmaries" shall be exempt from taxation. If buildings used by the college exclusively as dormitories and dining halls for its students are buildings exclusively occupied as a college, then the action complained of, in adding to the list dormitories and dining hall, was illegal; if such use is not a college occupation, then said action was legal. The word "college," used to denote a constituent of or the equivalent of "university," has acquired a definite meaning. As first used, "college" indicated a place of residence for students, and occasionally a "universitas," or "studium generale." The expressions "universitas studii" and "universitatis collegium" occur in early official documents. A suggestion of the modern university appears in the College and Library of Alexandria, founded and endowed by Ptolemy Soter. Here the Museum provided from the first lodgings and refectory for the professors, and later similar provisions were made for the students. A writer of the twelfth century speaks of the "handsome pile of buildings, which has twenty colleges, whither students betake themselves from all parts of the world." The university in Europe developed about the year 1200. It was a community organized for the study of all the branches of knowledge, and authorized by pope, king, or emperor to confer degrees upon those found competent to instruct others. At Bologna—perhaps the earliest organized university—we find colleges almost from the beginning. Such college was a separate house, with a fund for the maintenance of a specified number of poor students. Similar colleges existed in Paris, Oxford, and other universities. At first little more than lodging rooms and refectory, they grew, especially in England, to be the home of the students for all purposes. The instruction and discipline of the university were through the colleges. The conditions of the early universities were peculiar. Vast throngs of students were gathered at one place. They were divided into "nations," each—as at Paris—with its own proctor or procurator. They were further divided among faculties, each with its dean. The divisions into nations and faculties were cross divisions; and another cross division was that into colleges and halls (hall sometimes meaning an unorganized college, and sometimes used as synonymous with college). With changes in conditions, the college was largely eliminated from the continental universities, while in England the university became practically the associated colleges. Merton College, Oxford, founded in 1264, was the prototype of the English college. That college consisted of the chapel, refectory, and dormitories. Here the scholars, called "fellows," in token of the spirit of equality and companionship, lived under one government, educational and moral, and prepared to take the degree granted by the university. As the colleges increased, all noncollegiate students were driven away. The vagabonds or chamberdekyns,—i. e., camera degens,—living in lodgings, as opposed to those who lived in a college, disappeared. Each student in a college must belong to the university, and each student of the university must be attached to a college; and the heads of the colleges administered the university. Thus was developed the English theory of the university, where the honors and influence of the studium generale are gained and enjoyed by students living and working under the government of their respective colleges. As Newman says, the university, to enforce discipline, developed itself into colleges, and so the term "college" "was taken to mean a place of residence for the university student, who would there find himself under the guidance and instructions of superiors and tutors, bound to attend to his personal interest, moral and intellectual." See, passim, 3 Newman, Hist. Sketches; Lyte's History of University of Oxford; 1 and 2 Huber's English Universities; Enc. Brit. Universities. The College and university, however, were sometimes united in one corporation. Newman says, "The University of Toulouse was founded in a college; so was Orleans." Trinity College, Dublin, styled in its charter (1591) "The College of the Holy Undivided Trinity of Queen Elizabeth, near Dublin," is both university and college. It was founded by the Queen as a "mater universitatis"; but the hope was not realized, and the university and college have ever since remained one, called in common speech indiscriminately "Trinity College, Dublin," "Dublin University," "The University of Trinity College, Dublin." Marischal College, Aberdeen, was founded in 1593 as a college and a university, with power of conferring degrees. And so at the beginning of the seventeenth century the students of an English university lived in colleges; were instructed and governed through colleges, whether the university included a number of colleges or a single college; and among the buildings indispensable for every college were the great hall, or dining room, and the living rooms, or dormitories.

In establishing universities in the new world the limitations of the people compelled the founders to follow the example of Trinity College, Dublin, and Marischal College, Aberdeen, and not that of Oxford and Cambridge. Upon the same corporation was conferred the power of the university in granting degrees and of the college in government, and such community and the buildings required for its use were known as "the college." The first appropriation to endow a university in Virginia was made in 1607. In 1680 an act of the colonial legislature endowed "The College," and in 1693 William III. established the university, described in the charter as "a certain place of universal study, or perpetual college of divinity, philosophy, languages, and other good arts and sciences," and named it "The College of William and Mary in Virginia." The settlers of New England early felt the need of a local university, and the first step was the erection of a college; i. e., a building where the students were to be lodged, fed, and instructed while pursuing the university studies and qualifying for its degrees. In 1630 the general court of Boston advanced £400 for this purpose, and subsequently appointed Newtown as the seat of the university, and for this reason changed the name of the town to Cambridge. 2 Mather's Magnalia, pp. 7-9, 19, 20; Quincy's History of Harvard. In 1642, the court established overseers of "a college founded in Cambridge," and in 1650 the charter was granted. The statutes immediately adopted provided that all students admitted to the college "must board at the commons," and also provided for conferring the first and second degrees in arts. While the college exercised some of the privileges of a university, doubt was felt as to the power of the general court to confer such privileges. The colonial charter of 1692 was construed as authorizing the court to erect a university, and immediately, as Mather says, the general assembly granted "a charter to this university," authorizing it to grant degrees "as in the universities in England." This charter expired within three years, from failure to receive the royal approval, and the college was subsequently reorganized under the charter of 1650. The degree of D. D. was conferred by the college in 1693 on Increase Mather, its president, who, in conferring the degrees at the first commencement after the new charter, maintained that "the right of establishing universities (academias) is reserved to all those, and to those only, who hold the sovereignty in the state," and that the general court, under the charter of 1692, possessed such sovereignty. No other degree of doctorate was conferred until 1771, when Nathaniel Appleton was made doctor of divinity; and a few years later George Washington was made doctor of laws. The Massachusetts Constitution of 1779 recognized "the University at Cambridge," and ratified and confirmed all the rights and privileges it had been accustomed to exercise.

The colonies of Connecticut and New Haven were at first unable to erect a college by themselves, and for some years contributed to that of Cambridge. The plan of the college at New Haven was early mooted, and in 1654 steps were taken towards its consummation. Davenport wished to direct the benefaction of Gov. Hopkins to the founding of a college, and the court of that colony acceded to that plan. The difficulties attending the union of the colonies of New Haven and Connecticut obstructed the execution of the plan, and eventually the funds were appropriated to the Hopkins Grammar School. In 1698 the plan was revived, and ten of the principal ministers agreed to stand as trustees to found, erect, and govern a college. They formed themselves into a society at New Haven in 1700, and the same year, at a meeting at Branford, they (in the language of Trumbull) "founded the University of Yale College." 1 Trumbull, Hist. Conn. 402. In 1701 the general court of Connecticut granted to said trustees the privilege of founding, endowing, and ordering a "collegiate school," and authorized them to acquire and hold real estate, not exceeding the value of £500 per annum, and personal property to any amount, for the use of said school, and for erecting and endowing the same. 4 Col. Rec. 363. The act did not purport to establish a college and university, unless by indirection; but the trustees, following the example of Harvard, proceeded at once to grant degrees in arts. Until 1716 the school was migratory. The trustees then decided that it should be established at New Haven, and this decision was confirmed by the legislature the following year. 6 Col. Rec. 30. In pursuance of this authority, aided by appropriations by the colonial government, as well as by gifts from Gov. Yale and other benefactors, a college house "for the entertainment of the scholars" was so far finished, in 1718 as "to be fit for the reception and accommodation of all the students." It contained nearly fifty studies, and was furnished with a convenient hall, library, and kitchen. At the commencement for that year, in the presence of the authorities of the colony, the trustees did, "with one consent, agree, determine, and ordain that our college house shall be called by the name of its munificent patron, and shall be named Yale College." 2 Trumbull, Hist. Conn. 11. In 1745, under the energetic rule of President Clapp, a body of statutes was drawn up, derived partly from the laws and customs of the college, partly from the laws of Harvard, and partly from the University of Oxford; and the same year the general court, assuming the right of exercising within its jurisdiction the powers of sovereignty belonging to an independent government, not inconsistent with express statutes of England, which it always claimed, though with much fear and trembling, and with great caution, granted a charter somewhat like in form to a royal patent, erecting a corporate university and college under the name of "The President and Fellows of Yale College in New Haven," endowing it as university and college, with the power of self-government, and of making all reasonable laws and ordinances for that purpose, and with the power of conferring all such degrees as are usually given in colleges or universities, and with the power to appoint a scribe or register, a treasurer, tutors, professors, steward, and all such other officers and servants usually appointed in colleges or universities for the promotion of good literature, and for the well ordering and managing the affairs of said college. It is plain that the college thus erected involved as an essential feature the education and government of university students in college houses under college officers. The "colleges or universities" referred to in the charter were the universities in England administered by associated colleges, or the single colleges endowed with the privileges of a university. In both the "college" involved necessarily buildings for the residence and entertainment of the officers and students. The general court again and again contributed to the erection of such buildings. When, in 1753, the trustees of the College of New Jersey (now Princeton University) applied to the general assembly of Connecticut for leave to set up a lottery to raise money "to build a public house for entertaining the students, and better answering the good ends designed in founding and erecting said college," the assembly granted the liberty, "on consideration of the matters in said petition, and for the encouragement of religion and learning." 10 Col. Rec. 217. The "college" and the buildings for entertaining the students under college government were inseparable. In 1818, Yale College consisted of three college buildings for housing the officers and students, a lyceum, a chapel, a kitchen, and large dining room; and it was this college whose charter was confirmed by our Constitution of 1818.

The settled meaning of "college" as a building or group of buildings in which scholars are housed, fed, instructed, and governed under college discipline, while qualifying for their university degree, whether the university includes a number of colleges or a single college, is now attacked. We have deemed it proper to trace this meaning with sufficient detail to demonstrate the utter unreason of the attack. This peculiar function of a college is inherent in the best conception of the university. This meaning has been attached to the English word for 800 years; it was the only meaning known at the time our first American colleges were founded; it was recognized and distinctly affirmed in the charter of Yale College; it has since been affirmed by repeated acts of legislation, and has received the sanction of constitutional confirmation. It was impossible for the legislature to express its meaning more clearly than in the language of § 3820, "buildings occupied as colleges." If it had said, "dormitories, dining halls, and other buildings occupied as colleges," the meaning would have been the same, and the amplification would have added nothing to the precise certainty of the language used. State v. Ross, 24 N. J. L. 497; Northampton County v. Lafayette College, 128 Pa. 132; Ramsey County v. Macalester College, 51 Minn. 437, 18 L. R. A. 278; Griswold College v. State, 46 Iowa, 275, 26 Am. Rep. 138.

The fact that certain sums are paid for use of the rooms occupied does not alter the character of the occupation. A church is none the less a church because the worshippers contribute to the support of services by way of pew rent. A hospital is none the less a hospital because the beneficiaries contribute something towards its maintenance. And a college is none the less a college because its beneficiaries share the cost of maintenance; and it is immaterial whether such contribution is lumped in one sum, or apportioned to sources of expense, as tuition, room rent, lecture fee, dining hall, etc.

The defendant further claims that, even if some dormitories may be occupied as a college, yet § 3820 must be construed strictly, because it is a statute exempting property from taxation; and that, so construed, the finding of the committee requires the court to hold that the dormitories assessed are not in fact buildings erected for the use of students, but in substance constitute an investment in the business of furnishing apartments for rich men of highly remunerative rates; and that the student, as student, is in fact, and by the very necessity of the case, excluded from any occupation of the buildings; and therefore, upon the principle laid down in American Sunday School Union v. Philadelphia, 161 Pa. 307, 315, 316, 23 L. R. A. 693, "if such institution sees fit to engage in trade for the purpose of increasing its revenue, or making any part of its business 'self-supporting,' the trade part of its business can be taxed, and ought to be." Cincinnati College v. State, 19 Ohio, 110. Neither contention is correct. The rule that laws exempting property from taxation should be strictly construed is well settled, and is based on solid reason. But it is often referred to—and several times in our own reports—in cases where it has no application, and is not, in fact, applied. Gillette v. Hartford, 31 Conn. 351, 357; Brainard v. Colchester, 31 Conn. 407, 410; First Unitarian Soc. v. Hartford, 66 Conn. 368, 374; Hartford v. Hartford Theological Seminary, 66 Conn. 475, 482. The last two cases mark the distinction in treating a mere charter exemption and a statute declaring public buildings nontaxable. The rule is limited by the reasons which brought it about. These are two: exceptions to a general rule should be distinctly stated; private privileges are obnoxious to the law, and must be clearly expressed. The rule, in truth, is based on a presumption of intention. The legislature ordinarily intends its laws to apply to all equally. It does not intend to grant privileges to select individuals. So, when exceptions or special privileges are claimed under a statute, this ordinary or presumptive intention is entitled to weight according to the circumstances in ascertaining the actual intention expressed by the language used.

These reasons do not fully apply to the law under discussion. The nontaxation of public buildings is not the exception, but the rule. The corporations, whether municipal or private, which own and are by law charged with the maintenance of such untaxed buildings, are not the recipients of special privileges in any sense obnoxious to the law. This clause of § 3820 does not exempt any individuals from the burden of taxation that is common to all. It does not grant to one particular privileges denied to all others. It declares that lands and buildings sequestered to certain public uses—i. e., taken out of the body of private property, and devoted exclusively to the common good, from which no individual can derive any profit—are not taxable property. And this has been, not the exception, but the rule, from the foundation of our government. The seats of government, state or municipal, highways, parks, churches, public schoolhouses, colleges, have never been within the range of taxation. They cannot be exceptions from a rule in which they were never included. Our theory of taxation was laid down in the Code of 1650, and has not been changed, except so far as the corpus, rather than the revenue, of the estate may have become the basis of assessment. "Every inhabitant shall contribute to all charges both in church and commonwealth whereof he doth or may receive benefit proportionably to his ability;" his ability to be determined by his occupation and the amount of his ratable or taxable estate. It is the person enjoying the benefits of government who is taxed according to his ability. The mere stuff of land and buildings is not the subject of taxation, except as it may be the source of profit, present or prospective, to some person bound to contribute to the charges of government. And this same Code compelled each town to tax itself for the support of schools, that youths might "be fitted for the university," and appointed commonwealth collectors to demand of every family gifts for the maintenance of scholars at Cambridge. 1 Col. Rec. pp. 547, 555. Buildings erected by means of such taxes and gifts were not a source of profit to any person. Towns and trustees charged with the maintenance of such buildings were contributors to the public benefit, rather than recipients. So these public buildings were not taxed. They were not exempted, because they had not been within the range of taxation. They were simply not mentioned in our tax laws. It was different with exemptions in the more strict sense. The polls and estates of individuals were from time to time exempted. In 1667 those of commissioners or magistrates in the plantations were so exempted, and a like exemption was tendered Winthrop to induce him to accept the appointment of governor. 2 Col. Rec. 59, 64. In 1699 the estates of settled ministers were exempted from paying rates, and in 1703 the polls of students at the Collegiate School were exempted. 4 Col. Rec. 287, 440. And many like exemptions occur. When the legislature, in 1702, adopted our statute of charitable uses, it not only secured the perpetuation of gifts for pious uses according to the intent of donors, but also declared that estates so given shall be "free from payment of rates." This was an exemption of a very wide range and somewhat uncertain description. The language is, perhaps, broad enough to cover some public buildings which previously had been and afterwards remained untaxed because of the nature of the property, and not by reason of special legislative exception; but the main purpose of this declaration of exemption related to productive funds, lands, or personal estate, given for charitable uses, possibly with special reference to the gifts of Hopkins, Gibbons, and Talcott, which had recently come into use for the support of grammar schools, to anticipated gifts for the support of the Collegiate School, and to appropriations made for payment of ministers' salaries. 4 Col. Rec. 31; Atwater v. Woodbridge, 6 Conn. 223, 227, 16 Am. Dec. 46. And so we find that subsequent laws of taxation except or exempt from payment of rates not only prior personal exemptions, but "in like manner" "all lands in this colony sequestered to or improved for schools and other pious uses" (8 Col. Rec. 133), and that this special exemption, in the same words, continued until 1821, when the act of 1702 was changed by the omission of the tax exemption. Since then the only exemption from taxation of funds given for "pious uses" is to be found in special charters or in general acts passed from time to time. But public buildings, whether belonging to the state or to some trustee appointed by the state, occupied as colleges, schoolhouses, and churches, were not specially named in the tax laws as exempted, because they were not included in "ratable estate" as taxable property. When the legislature, in 1822, saw fit to formally declare that property of the United States, of the state, and of municipal governments, and "the buildings occupied as colleges," etc., should be exempt from taxation (Pub. Acts 1822, p. 25), it did not alter the character of the property, or the reason of its not being taxed. The declaration was not an exemption, in the strict sense of the word, as to buildings occupied as colleges and schools, any more than as to property of the United States. They were untaxed, as they had been for nearly 200 years without any legislative declaration, because they are not "ratable estate," because they had been placed in that class of property which ought not to be taxed by virtue of a public policy too clear to be questioned, and which had been followed without any specific legislation by our government from its very beginning.

The reason of such a public policy is apparent. The principle that property necessary for the operation of state and municipal governments, and buildings occupied for those essential supports of government,—public education, and public worship,—ought not to be the subject of taxation, has been with us accepted as axiomatic. It has been incorporated into the Constitution of several states. It has been inseparably interwoven with the structure of our government and the habits and convictions of our people since 1638. It is not based merely on the theory of the general benefit resulting from an increase of pious uses. All exemptions imply some public benefit; otherwise they are invalid. It is not merely an act of grace on the part of the state. It stands squarely on state interest. To subject all such property to taxation would tend rather to diminish than increase the amount of taxable property. Other conditions being equal, the happiness, prosperity, and wealth of a community may well be measured by the amount of property wisely devoted to the common good in public buildings, parks, highways, and buildings occupied as colleges, schoolhouses, and churches. To tax such property would tend to destroy the life which produces a constant increase of taxable property, as well as some benefits more valuable. It is a misnomer to call the nontaxation of such property an exemption in favor of the governmental agency in which the legal title is vested. When sequestered to such public use, the whole property, by that act,—equivalent to a single taxation to the extent of confiscation,—passed out of the domain of private property, lost all value as ratable estate, and became incapable of measuring the ability of any person to contribute to the charges of the commonwealth whereof he receives the benefit. These are, in brief, the positions which the history of Connecticut shows to have been the foundation of our taxation laws. This clause of § 3820 is not strictly so much an exemption from taxation as the declaration of a public policy well settled and long established. It must, therefore, be construed reasonably, so as to give full effect to the policy declared, as well as to avoid abuse and frustrate evasion.

The argument urged by the defendant in support of its claim that the dormitories assessed are practically used for the purposes of trade is substantially this: The college is intended primarily for scholars who are poor, and the great majority of foundations express this purpose more or less clearly. No one shall be prevented by limitations of birth or means from the full development of his capacities for the service of the state. An essential feature of the college is equality. No special privileges nor honors can be secured, except through personal worth. When, therefore, in the apportionment of rooms, the students are practically divided on the right hand and left according to the marks of wealth, and, as the finding shows, the poor student is relegated to the unsightly discomfort represented by 75 cents a week and the rich student promoted to the comparative luxury represented by $10 a week, a rule of apportionment is adopted, which violates the essential conditions of college life, and the buildings or portions of buildings appropriated to the rich students cease to be college buildings, because the average student is excluded from their occupation. There would be force in this argument, so far as it is supported by facts, if addressed to the college authorities. We do not care to minimize its force for that purpose. It goes without saying that the most costly gifts cannot compensate for any loss of that spirit of independent equality which is the life of the university, and which has heretofore especially characterized this plaintiff. But the argument does not touch the essential condition that the dormitories are used for trade, and not as college buildings. The committee finds that these buildings "are occupied by students of the college as study and living rooms under the supervision and management of college officers resident therein for that purpose"; and that they "are unfitted for any other use or purpose"; and such is admittedly the fact. This is conclusive. The criticism of the defendant goes deeper, and claims that the rules for ordering the occupation of college buildings tend to the perversion of the purpose of the college. But the power to make these rules is vested in the trustees by the charter. Wise or unwise, they are an exercise of charter power. As to their effect thus far, the committee finds that the corporation administers a college within the true intent and meaning of its charter, "wherein all such persons of good moral character as desire to avail themselves of its advantages, irrespective of nationality, domicile, color, creed, or religious belief, are, at a moderate cost, to the number of about 2,500 annually, instructed in the arts and sciences." There are no special facts found necessarily inconsistent with this conclusion. We are not now, therefore, called upon to decide whether a complete perversion of college purpose involves a forfeiture of college rights. All the dormitories occupied by students, the building used as a dining hall, the observatory buildings, the two houses furnished by the college for the officers of the observatory, the adjoining land found to be reasonably necessary for the purposes of the observatory, and No. 121 Elm street, used as a college yard in connection with the college buildings, are nontaxable property, under § 3820. Some suggestion was made in argument that this section might include buildings occupied, but not owned, by the college. We do not admit this interpretation, but express no opinion, as the question is not involved in this case.

2. The act of 1834 amending the charter of Yale College is as follows: "That the funds which have been or may hereafter be granted, provided by the state of Connecticut, or given by any person or persons to the corporation of the President and Fellows of Yale College in New Haven, and by them invested and held for the use of that institution, shall, with the interest thereof, be and remain exempt from taxation: provided, however, that the said corporation shall never hold in this state real estate free from taxation affording an annual income of more than $6,000, and provided also that the private property of the officers of the institution shall not be exempt from taxation, and that the said corporation shall on or before the first day of September, A. D. 1834, give its assent to this act, and transmit the evidence thereof to the secretary of the state, to be by him recorded." 1 Private Laws, p. 481. The same language in respect to taxation is repeated in § 3822, which was passed in 1882 (Pub. Acts 1882, chap. 98), to exclude the charters of the colleges, which were claimed to be in the nature of contracts, from the operation of acts affecting taxation.

Some of the considerations suggested in discussing the clause of § 3820 apply to the construction of this charter. In granting such a charter the state constitutes the corporation its agent for a purely public purpose, and intrusts it with the authority, which can only be derived from the state, to confer degrees in scholarship and learning upon those found worthy. The legislative intent is indicated in the charter of Wesleyan College, which provides that the act "shall be liberally construed for every beneficial purpose hereby intended." 1 Private Laws, 472. The state has been very careful to treat its colleges precisely alike in the matter of taxation, and it is hardly possible that one rule of construction was intended for Wesleyan and another for Yale and Trinity. But it is unnecessary, in treating the question now before us, to invoke any special rule of construction. The charter, in the broadest terms, exempts all the property of the college from taxation. This possibly may cover the buildings occupied as colleges, which are nontaxable by virtue of our settled public policy as declared in § 3820; but its main purpose was to exempt all estate and funds invested and held lawfully,—i. e., "for the use of the college,"—including both principal and income. The only limitation on this absolute exemption is contained in the proviso: "Provided, however, that said corporation shall never hold in this state, real estate, free from taxation, affording an annual income of more than $6,000." The contention of the defendant is that, whenever the income from real estate exceeds the sum of $6,000, not only the real estate producing such excess of income, but also all the unproductive real estate the college may hold, becomes at once liable to taxation. We think this requires us to interpolate into the charter a limitation it does not contain. By the original charter "all the lands and ratable estate belonging to the said college, not exceeding the yearly value of £500 sterling," as well as the estates of the president and professors were freed from rates, etc. It is not easy to determine the precise meaning of this language without a detailed examination of the conditions of 1745, in reference to which it was used. This is unnecessary. It is certain that by this provision it was intended to exempt all the property the college was likely to own for an indefinite period, and that the provision served that purpose for nigh a hundred years. The precise restriction the legislature of 1745 had in mind is now immaterial. It was abandoned in 1834. A new provision in respect to taxation different in form and substance, was then adopted in reference to a new future. This new provision was intended to be broader than the old, as shown, not only by the language used, and by the wider field of public usefulness opening to the college, but also by the controlling fact that, in view of the full exemption of the college property,—i. e., the funds devoted to public use,—the college surrendered the existing exemption of the private estates of its president and professors. The act of 1834 plainly exempts all the property of the college from taxation, and the proviso qualifies this exemption only for the purpose of imposing a limited restraint on the mode of investment. It is not an absolute limitation to the holding of real estate, but it is a provision which makes it the interest of the college to itself limit its holding. It is not presumed that the college will, to any considerable extent, invest its funds in unproductive property, so there is no direct limit to its holding of such land; but the college might well be tempted to put all its funds into productive real estate, and the proviso directly restrains this tendency by limiting its right to hold real estate producing more than $6,000 a year, unless it pays taxes on the excess. If the college finds in any year that its revenues from land exceed $6,000, it must choose between its unlimited exemption from taxation and its unlimited right to hold real estate. If it chooses the former, it must sell so much of its productive land as will reduce its income within the limit; if it chooses the latter, it must pay taxes on the land, instead of selling it. In this way the state sought to exempt all the funds of the college from taxation, and, through the potent operation of self-interest, to keep the investment of those funds in real estate within reasonable bounds. Counsel for the plaintiff urged with great force, in further support of this view, the fact that here the enacting clause is a total exemption, and a proviso can withdraw from the enacting clause nothing that is not fairly within its terms. In speaking of this rule, Justice Story said: "We are led to the general rule of law, which has always prevailed, and become consecrated almost as a maxim in the interpretation of statutes, that where the enacting clause is general in its language and objects, and a proviso is afterwards introduced, that proviso is construed strictly, and takes no case out of the enacting clause which does not fall fairly within its terms. In short, a proviso carves special exceptions only out of the enacting clause; and those who set up any such exception must establish it as being within the words as well as within the reasons thereof." United States v. Dickson, 15 Pet. 141, 165, 10 L. ed. 689, 698.

For reasons before given, we think that students' fees, whether apportioned to room rent or tuition, cannot be treated as income of real estate, and that land occupied and reasonably necessary for the plant of the college is not productive real estate, within the meaning of the proviso in the act of 1834. The vacant lots added by the assessors are exempt from taxation. The dwelling houses and factories added by the assessors are also exempt, unless some one or more of these must be added to the list returned by the plaintiff in order to reduce its net income from all its other real estate within the prescribed limit.

Certain questions as to a few items of property were submitted without argument. The nature of these questions is not quite clear. It appears that a lot on Cannon street was sold to one Robert Brown, a professor in the university, by parol, and the money needed to build a dwelling house advanced to him; that he has built and occupied the house, and has repaid a portion of the loan, but has paid nothing on the purchase price. This presents a case of property substantially owned and enjoyed by a private person, while the title remains in the college. The lot and house should be added to the plaintiff's list. Its charter does not exempt from taxation property held for private use. It appears also that a number of lots have been leased to private parties on long leases, the tenants agreeing to pay the taxes. So far as the town is concerned, such agreements by the tenants are inoperative. If the revenue from these leases is in excess of the $6,000 derived from the other real estate, the lots should be added to the plaintiff's list. It will be necessary for the superior court to proceed to a further hearing for the purpose of ascertaining these facts, unless the parties shall agree.

The record does not show any impropriety on the part of the plaintiff in dealing with its exemption, unless, possibly, in the case of the Brown house; but, in order to exclude any false implication, we deem it proper to add that the charter does not authorize the college to hold any property exempt from taxation for any private use, and does not authorize any commercial dealings with its exemptions, whether by way of mere speculation in vacant land, of selling land on long leases at nominal rents, or otherwise. This statute was intended to serve a great public use in pursuance of a most beneficial public policy, and the construction to be given such a statute requires that the intent shall not be defeated either by clear evasion or undue restriction.

The Superior Court is advised to render judgment ordering the board of relief to strike from the plaintiff's tax list all the items added by the assessors except the Brown house, and except such items, if any, of productive real estate, as it may find to be necessary to retain in order to bring the net income from all other real estate within the sum of $6,000; and to take further proceedings for the purpose of ascertaining this fact, unless it shall be settled by agreement of the parties.

The other Judges concur.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

T. L. WHITE et al., Trustees of St. Peter's Roman Catholic Church, Appts.,
v.

William H. SMITH, Collector of Delinquent Taxes, et al.

(189 Pa. 222.)

1. A school building erected and maintained entirely by voluntary contributions and the school in which is open to all free of charge, without regard to creed, color, race, or condition, is a purely public charity which may be exempt from taxation under Const. art. 9, § 1.
2. A convent building used solely as a residence for the teachers in a school maintained as a charity, and which is a part of the school property and is necessary for the efficient operation and management of the school, is included in the exemption of the school property from taxation as a purely public charity.
3. The fact that the legal title to school property is in a bishop, with no declared trust in the grantee for a charitable use, so that the charity may be terminated at any time by a sale of the property, does not prevent the exemption of the property from taxation while used as a charity.
4. The fact that all the trustees of property used for a school maintained as a charity are Catholics does not prevent the exemption of the property as a purely public charity, when there is no evidence to show the exclusion of any children because of their belief.

(January 2, 1899.)

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from a decree of the Superior Court reversing a decree of the Court of Common Pleas, No. 1, for Allegheny County in plaintiff's favor in a suit brought to enjoin the enforcement of taxes against property alleged to be exempt from taxation. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John Marron, F. C. McGirr, Johns McCleave, and D. T. Watson, for appellants:

The free public school which has been founded and maintained by the trustees of St. Peter's congregation, is a purely public charity, and exempt from taxation.

Jackson v. Phillips, 14 Allen, 556; Fire Insurance Patrol v. Boyd, 120 Pa. 624, 1 L. R. A. 417; Episcopal Academy v. Philadelphia, 150 Pa. 565.

Many charities whose benefits have been more restricted and hampered with conditions, pecuniary, sexual, racial, or confined to a class, have been held by this court to be purely public charities.

Donohugh's Appeal, 86 Pa. 306; Philadelphia v. Women's Christian Asso. 125 Pa. 572; Philadelphia v. Pennsylvania Hospital for Insane, 154 Pa. 9; Burd Orphan Asylum v. Upper Darby School Dist. 90 Pa. 21; Episco- pal Academy v. Philadelphia, 150 Pa. 565; Philadelphia v. Masonic Home, 160 Pa. 572, 23 L. R. A. 545.

It is the purely public use of the property which secures the exemption from taxation, not the mode of dedication, or the title by which it is held, nor the character of the instrument by which it is controlled.

Gerke v. Purcell, 25 Ohio St. 229; Humphries v. Little Sisters of the Poor, 29 Ohio St. 201; Hennepin County v. Grace, 27 Minn. 503; Philadelphia v. Church of St. James, 134 Pa. 207; Mullen v. Erie County Comrs. 85 Pa. 291, 27 Am. Rep. 650; Willard v. Pike, 59 Vt. 203; Episcopal Academy v. Philadelphia, 150 Pa. 575; Burd Orphan Asylum v. Upper Darby School Dist. 90 Pa. 21.

The title to this land being in the bishop in trust for the congregation of St. Peter's the property is as fully devoted to a charitable use as if the congregation were incorporated, although no definite charitable use is expressed in the deed.

Phipps v. Jones, 20 Pa. 260, 59 Am. Dec. 708; Charitable Soc. of Evangelical Asso.'s Appeal, 35 Pa. 320; Yard's Appeal, 64 Pa. 95; Domestic & F. Missionary Soc.'s Appeal, 30 Pa. 425; Thomas v. Ellmaker, 1 Pars. Sel. Eq. Cas. 98.

The objection that the property may at any time be diverted from the public charitable use for which it was contributed, and lawfully so, is not well considered. This property could not be appropriated to any other uses than those for which it has been donated, and it must be applied in furtherance of the charitable work of St. Peter's Church.

Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 1187-1191; Bethlehem v. Perseverance F. Ins. Co. 81 Pa. 445; Henry v. Deitrich, 84 Pa. 292; Thomas v. Ellmaker, 1 Pars. Sel. Eq. Cas. 98; Humane Fire Co.'s Appeal, 88 Pa. 389; Donohugh's Appeal, 86 Pa. 314.

The objection that the property in question is not permanently devoted to purposes of public charity is not tenable.

The establishment of schools of learning has always been held a charitable and benevolent use.

Vidal v. Girard, 2 How. 127, 11 L. ed. 205; Price v. Maxwell, 28 Pa. 23; Miller v. Porter, 53 Pa. 292.

If it is the public use which secures the exemption, so long as the public secures the benefit of the property without any gain or profit resulting to the church, it is and should be exempt.

Northampton County v. Lafayette College, 128 Pa. 132; Pennsylvania Hospital v. Delaware County, 169 Pa. 305; House of Refuge v. Smith, 140 Pa. 387; Woman's Home Missionary Soc. v. Taylor, 173 Pa. 456; Episcopal Academy v. Philadelphia, 150 Pa. 565.

In the event of a lease or sale the property would at once become taxable.

Boyd v. Insurance Patrol, 113 Pa. 279.

If the property in question should cease to be devoted to the purely public charity for NOTE.—As to exemption of property of educational institutions, see also preceding case of Yale University v. New Haven (Conn.) ante, 490.

43 L. R. A.

which, it is now used, and become a source of revenue, it would then become taxable, but so long as it serves its present use it is exempt.

Moore v. Taylor, 147 Pa. 481; Philadelphia v. Jewish Hospital Asso. 148 Pa. 454; American Sunday School Union v. Philadelphia, 161 Pa. 307, 23 L. R. A. 695; Philadelphia v. Barber, 160 Pa. 123; Episcopal Academy v. Philadelphia, 150 Pa. 575; Greenl. Ev. § 41; Miller v. Henry, 84 Pa. 33.

The public school being exempt from taxation because a purely public charity, it follows that the building contiguous and annexed thereto and necessary for the efficient maintenance thereof, used as a residence for the teachers therein, is also exempt.

Northampton County v. Lafayette College, 128 Pa. 132; Ramsey County v. Macalester College, 51 Minn. 437, 18 L. R. A. 278; Woman's Home Missionary Soc. v. Taylor, 173 Pa. 456; Pennsylvania Hospital v. Delaware County, 169 Pa. 305; House of Refuge v. Smith, 140 Pa. 387; Wesleyan Academy v. Wilbraham, 99 Mass. 599; Hennepin County v. Brotherhood of Church of Gethsemane, 27 Minn. 460, 38 Am. Rep. 298; Hennepin County v. Grace, 27 Minn. 503; State v. Ross, 24 N. J. L. 497; Griswold College v. State, 46 Iowa, 275, 26 Am. Rep. 138.

Messrs. E. P. Douglass and T. C. Jones, for appellees:

There is not a case in the state of Pennsylvania that holds that property belonging to a congregation or church and used for other than religious purposes, even although it may apparently be used for that which would seem to be a charitable use, has been exempt from taxation, on the grounds that it is a purely public charity.

Miller's Appeals, 10 W. N. C. 168; Philadelphia v. Women's Christian Asso. 125 Pa. 572.

No corporation or institution is a purely public charity which is not under the control or supervision of the public authorities, or at least subject to public visitation, or is founded and endowed so as to give the general public, under reasonable restrictions, an absolute right to receive its benefits, and in case of a failure of its managers to carry out the founders' will to compel a compliance therewith by an application to the courts. In case of a dissolution of such a charity its property must vest in the public authorities for charitable purposes.

Delaware County Inst. of Science v. Delaware County, 94 Pa. 163.

The parochial school of St. Peter's Roman Catholic congregation is not a purely public charity within the meaning of the Constitution and the act of assembly.

Donohugh's Appeal, 86 Pa. 306; Mullen v. Juenet, 6 Pa. Super. Ct. 1; Philadelphia v. Women's Christian Asso. 125 Pa. 572; Thiel College v. Mercer County, 101 Pa. 530; Philadelphia v. Masonic Home, 160 Pa. 572, 23 L. R. A. 545.

Dean, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

St. Peter's Roman Catholic Church of McKeesport owns ground fronting 280 feet 43 L. R. A.

on Market street, and extending back 140 feet to an alley, all inclosed as one property. The legal title is in the bishop of the diocese, in trust for the congregation. The church fronts 60 feet on the street; then, 22 feet distant, the convent fronts on the same street 40 feet; then, 22 feet distant from that, is the school building, having a frontage of 100 feet. The school building was erected in 1887, wholly by the voluntary contributions of the members of the congregation, and has since been maintained by such contributions. It is open to all, free of charge, without regard to creed, color, race, or condition. At the commencement of this proceeding there were in attendance about 760 children. No revenue whatever is derived from it. The teachers of the school live in the convent building, which is occupied exclusively by them, and no others. They are paid for their services a small salary, in addition to the privilege of residence in the convent building. They are not lessees, and have no right or interest in it, except that of residence while teaching. Both buildings, when projected, designed, and erected, were intended for the use to which they have since been put. The city conceded that the church and school buildings were exempt from taxation under the act of 1874, but assessed and levied a tax on the convent building. The collector, this defendant, was about to seize and sell the personal property on the premises in payment, when the trustees filed this bill for an injunction to restrain him. After full hearing of evidence in the court below, the facts were found as we have narrated them, and the collector was restrained. From this decree the city appealed to the superior court, where the decree was reversed and the injunction dissolved. The reasons given for the reversal by the superior court are that the title is in an individual; that it is under the control of one denomination, and there is no perpetual dedication of the property to public charity. Was the decree a correct legal conclusion from the facts found, and not controverted, in the court of common pleas?

We concede that, under our cases arising since the act of 1874, the exact line dividing taxable from nontaxable property is not at once discernible. We may even go further, and admit that taking all that was said, instead of just what was decided, in some of the cases, that line is not exactly a straight one; nor could it well be so, under the circumstances. Previous to the Constitution and act of 1874, the legislature, by special act, relieved from taxation just what property it saw fit, whether the property was charitable, religious, or even devoted solely to purposes of corporate or private gain. The legislative habit had grown into a great abuse. Then came the new Constitution, which at once put a stop to the abuse of power by the legislature. Whether, in its sweeping provisions, it did go somewhat further, and prevent good as well as evil, is a question with which we have nothing to do. Section 1, art. 9, provides that "all taxes shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects, within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax, and shall be levied and collected under general laws; but the general assembly may by general laws exempt from taxation public property used for public purposes, actual places of religious worship, places of burial not used or held for private or corporate profit, and institutions of purely public charity." As is said in Donoghue's Appeal, 86 Pa. 306, a case decided by our Brother Mitchell, when sitting in the common pleas, within four years after the adoption of the Constitution, that instrument exempted nothing from taxation; it only withheld from the legislature power to exempt property of any kind, except that mentioned in this section, and exemption of such property must be by general laws. It is evident, by the use of the words "general laws" the Constitution intended that exemptions should be as uniform on the same class of subjects as the uniformity enjoined in the preceding sentence of the same section, as to taxation. The legislature being powerless to particularize, by bill, exemption for any one institution, necessarily, if it intended to exempt any property under this power, it must adopt such general designation or words of description as would include all of that class of property, and thus promote uniformity. And palpably, on this view, the act of May 14, 1874, was framed as follows: "All hospitals, universities, colleges, seminaries, academies, associations and institutions of learning, benevolence, or charity, with the grounds thereto annexed, and necessary for the occupancy and enjoyment of the same, founded, endowed, and maintained by public or private charity, . . . be and the same are hereby exempted from all and every county, city, borough, bounty, road, school, and poor tax." This at once imposed upon the courts a most difficult and often perplexing duty of interpretation from the facts in the cases as they arose. No hard and fast rule adapted to the varying facts of the different cases could at once be confidently laid down. The natural scientist depends for the soundness of his deductions on the copiousness of his facts. The value of a rule of law often depends on the experience and observation of courts derived from many cases raising the same question, but not involving the same facts. One thing was clear at the start, no matter what was the legislative language; the exemption could not extend to any property not a "purely public charity." This was not so clear to taxpayers, for it is seldom anyone, whether individual or association, displays any great alacrity in rendering "unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's." Hence there were many attempts by parties clearly not within the act to escape taxation, and by others where the question was doubtful; and while it was easy to say the institution making claim was not exempt, unless purely a public charity, the varying facts presented by the different cases resulted in apparently conflicting legal conclusions as to the application of the designation. The first case raising fairly the question as to what was a purely public charity is Donoghue's Appeal, 86 Pa. 306. In that case the institution claiming exemption was the Philadelphia Library Company, having a library of over 100,000 volumes. It was an ancient institution, and had been founded and endowed by voluntary gifts. The use of the books was absolutely free to all persons who chose to use them in the library building, but, as with all public libraries, many persons desired to take books away, and read them at their homes or lodgings. To such persons a small fee was charged, and they were further required to make a deposit as security for the return of the book. Another class of readers who took the books away were called "commuters." These were allowed to make a lump deposit annually as security for and hire of the books, the number so taken in one year being limited. The amount deposited, however, in the latter case, was less than if each book used had been taken out singly, and the charge then deposited. The entire sum thus realized was a comparatively small one, and was used in replacing wornout books and purchasing others. Not one of the twelve managers of the company received any compensation. The library, except from the small sum for book hire, was maintained, and from year to year enlarged, by voluntary contributions. The opinion on what constitutes a public charity, although the subject is more elaborately discussed, is compressed in these few words: "The essential feature of a public use is that it is not confined to privileged individuals, but is open to the indefinite public. It is this indefinite or unrestricted quality that gives it its public character. The smallest street in the smallest village is a public highway of the commonwealth, and none the less so because a vast majority of the citizens will certainly never derive any benefit from its use. It is enough that they may do so if they choose." Further, as to what constituted a "purely public charity," he says: "In this connection, and in its ordinary sense, the word 'purely' means completely, entirely, unqualifiedly, and this is the meaning we must presume the people to have intended in adopting it in their Constitution." Then, as to the charge for a special use of the books taken away from the building, it is held to be but a regulation necessary to the proper management of such an institution, and does not destroy its character as a purely public charity; and, further, if it had such effect, a regulation in violation of its fundamental character would be void. It will be noticed that the small fee charged is held to be merely an administrative regulation for the preservation of the library, and not a provision whereby, by hire to the public, the library is to be maintained. And this seems to us to be clearly sustained by the facts. When the book is taken from the custody of the librarian and other employees, carried to another building, and probably used by others, it is subject to rougher usage than when in the library, and will become worn and useless sooner. The primary object is the preservation of the book to the public. Incidentally, the fee may net a profit. That will depend on the wear and tear of the book. But it is in no real sense a hiring to support the alleged charity, or a charge which excludes from the privileges of the library those unable to pay it, for they have free access to the books in the building. The conclusion was that the charity was a purely public one. While it is not so said, yet it is clearly implied from this opinion that if any part of the public had been excluded from the use of the library because of inability or refusal to pay for books, or if its support had been derived from hiring of its books to the public, the conclusion would have been the opposite one to that adopted.

In the many cases that have come before us in the more than twenty years since Donohugh's Appeal, our effort has been to adhere to it. We have noticed no case in which it has not been cited either by counsel or the court. In Miller's Appeals, 10 W. N. C. 168, the school was supported largely by tuition fees. It was held not exempt. In Thiel College v. Mercer County, 101 Pa. 530, the college was incorporated to furnish an education to the youth of both sexes at as reasonable rates as possible. No profit was derived by the corporation, although the students paid for their board and tuition. It was held that as the school was maintained by those who attended it, and not by voluntary contributions, it was not exempt. In Hunter's Appeal, 22 W. N. C. 361, some income was derived by the academy from property which had been donated, but a considerable part of its revenues was from tuition fees at low rates. It was held not exempt. All these cases were based on the principles announced in Donohugh's Appeal. Three cases (Philadelphia v. Women's Christian Asso. 125 Pa. 572; Episcopal Academy v. Philadelphia, 150 Pa. 565; and Philadelphia v. Pennsylvania Hospital for Insane, 154 Pa. 9), professedly follow Donohugh's Appeal; but it is difficult to bring them, on their facts, within the rules of that case. The facts are much alike in the three, and really the last two merely follow the first; but it seems to me,—and as to these cases I speak only for myself, and not for the court,—on their facts, they have but slight resemblance to Donohugh's Appeal. They can be sustained only by a very liberal construction of the act of 1874, and they go in the direction of exemption to the uttermost limit of such construction. In the Women's Christian Asso. Case, the expressed object of the charter was the temporal, moral, religious welfare of women; by its organized methods, it furnished regular board for young women, restaurant meals, employment bureau, lectures, and library. The cost of the building was $70,000,—one half furnished by charitable contributions, the other half borrowed. The privileges of the institution were granted only to those who earned less than $6 per week in wages. These paid $3.50 per week for board and washing. Those out of employment and unable to pay were taken in free, if there was any vacancy, until the employment bureau secured places for them. In the year preceding the trial of the cause, out of 2,100 young women who enjoyed the privileges of the institution, but 100 did not pay. About one seventh of the gross expenses were charitable contributions, and six sevenths were paid by those who had meals, board, or lodging. Not one of the officers or managers received any compensation. It was held to be a purely public charity, and exempt, mainly on the ground that it was free from any taint of corporate or private gain. I doubt if the decision can be sustained on this ground alone; but the facts that board and lodging were furnished by the corporation at less than actual cost to a worthy class, and to some of them free, and that the deficiency was made up by voluntary contributions, would perhaps warrant the conclusion that the association was purely a charity. But it will be noticed how narrow was the margin between gross expenses and gross receipts from boarders. If they had been equal, or if the receipts from that source had exceeded the expenditures, it would have been difficult to discern the element of charity in the association, for there would have been no place for voluntary contributions. In that case it seems to me, it would have been purely a co-operative boarding and lodging house, managed by benevolent women, who gave their services without charge. Paxson, Ch. J., who delivered the opinion of the court, says at the close of it: "It may be these views conflict slightly with what has been said in some of the cases referred to [meaning Thiel College, Miller's Appeals, Hunter's Appeal, and other cases which strictly followed Donohugh's Appeal]: It does not conflict, however, with the points decided in either of them, while they are believed to be in entire harmony with Donohugh's Appeal." I think the distinction between a public charity supported almost wholly by voluntary contributions, but which, by a reasonable regulation necessary for the preservation and care of its property, incidentally realizes a small income, and a charity which collects from its beneficiaries six sevenths of its whole income, is quite obvious. We have no desire to disturb the judgments in the three cases cited. They stand on the facts peculiar to them, and are outside the line of cases which follow Donohugh's Appeal. After this lapse of time, and our observation of the litigation which has had its source in the act of 1874, and the Constitution which suggested the act, we are adverse to any departure from the law of that case. We therefore adhere to it now as the settled rule of interpretation of that act. It is a safer guide than the Women's Christian Asso. Case, which gives such prominence to the one fact,—the absence of corporate or private gain. Carry that a little further, and it would exempt a carrying corporation from taxation, whose receipts are less than its expenditures, whose stockholders received no dividends, and yet the road is opened for the benefit of the whole public on exactly the same terms. We will not open the road further in that direction, because both the Constitution and the statute obstruct it; and it is immaterial whether the courts break through or go around this obstruction, the end is the same; the very thing which the Constitution sought to cure as a legislative abuse will become a judicial one. These remarks are prompted by the fact that appellants here have cited and relied on these cases, while we desire it to be understood we rest our decision on Donohugh's Appeal, and cases following it. Under them, the law is clearly with appellants. This school is a purely public charity, and is embraced by the general words of the act. While it is not specifically designated by the word "school," yet it is clear, from the juxtaposition of the words in the sentence, and the character of the institution, that it is included in "associations and institutions of learning." The preceding part of the sentence is an attempt to specify institutions of learning by the words "universities, colleges, seminaries, academies;" then, as if mindful of the constitutional mandate that exemption must be by general law, and therefore, impliedly uniform, it uses the all-embracing words "associations and institutions of learning." That a school for children preliminary to the academy or college is an institution of learning, in fact, no one can doubt. Its purpose and methods place it within the general term.

It is further argued that, even if the school building proper be exempt, the teachers' residence is not, because it is not part of the school building. This argument assumes the fact to be in direct contradiction of that found by the court,—that is, that it is used solely as a residence for the school teachers; that it is a part of the school property, and is necessary for the efficient operation and management of the schools; that it was constructed solely from voluntary contributions, and no revenue whatever is derived from it. Assuming, as we must, this finding of the court to be the fact, the property is exempt; for it is part of the school building, and exclusively used for school purposes.

It is argued further that the legal title to the property is in an individual, the bishop, with no declared trust in the grantee for a charitable use; that, therefore, the charity may be terminated at any time by a sale of the property. There is nothing in the act of assembly which requires that the grant of property to a purely public charity shall be stamped by perpetuity. The only requirement is that, when the institution seeks exemption, its character, whether created by charter, conveyance, articles of association, or voluntary rules and regulations, shall be that of a purely public charity. If it violates its implied duty towards its contributors, equity will afford relief. If it ceases to be that on which it depends for exemption, the property at once becomes subject to taxation.

Nor, in view of the other facts in the case, is it important that the trustees are all Catholics, and, therefore, the institution is controlled and managed by Catholics. If there was evidence tending to show exclusion of non-Catholic children because their belief did not accord with that of the trustees, the fact would have some weight; but, standing as it does by itself, it is of but little consequence. There is nothing either express or implied, in the law, which disqualifies a board of trustees composed of members of a single church from managing and supervising a public charity. A Presbyterian, Jewish, or other charity may have boards of managers composed exclusively of persons of the faith indicated by the name; but if the benefits are open to all, without regard to creed, it does not affect the public character of the charity. Purely public charities are neither so abundant nor so effective that we can afford to discriminate against them because of the creed of the managers. Our discrimination must rest solely on the fact as to whether they discriminate in favor of or against any part of the public.

We are of opinion the superior court erred in its decree reversing the court of common pleas. Therefore the decree of the Superior Court is reversed, the decree of the common pleas affirmed, and the injunction reinstated; costs of appeal to be paid by appellees.

David P. REIGHARD et al.

v.

Phillip S. FLINN, Appt.

(189 Pa. 355.)

1. Citizens and taxpayers who will be deprived of free access to a public landing and river, and of the free enjoyment of light and air from the landing, by the unlawful erection of a building thereon by a lessee, can maintain a suit for an injunction against the structure.
2. A lease of part of a public landing to a private person is not within the lawful power of a city council,—especially when the city charter conferring rights of property on the corporation provides that it shall not be construed to authorize the sale, lease, or alienation of such landings.

(January 3, 1899.)

APPEAL by defendant from a decree of the Court of Common Pleas, No. 1, for Allegheny County in favor of complainants in a suit brought to enjoin defendant from erecting a structure on a portion of a public landing on the Allegheny river. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Clarence Burleigh and Watson & McCleave for appellant.

Mr. George W. Guthrie, for appellees:

The ordinance and lease under which appellant claims are illegal and void.

The town of Pittsburgh was not incorporated until many years after the dedication of this space; no legislative action was taken in regard to it, and no attempt was made to grant to the borough or to the city subsequently created any right in or control over it, either in the acts of incorporation or any other acts, until the act of March 31, 1836.

NOTE.—As to the trust for the public in a wharf or landing, see also Roberts v. Louisville (Ky.) 13 L. R. A. 844; and St. Paul v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (Minn.) 34 L. R. A. 184; and Louisiana Constr. & Improv. Co. v. Illinois C. R. Co. (La.) 37 L. R. A. 661.

It was enacted that "the space so graded and lying between said way and low-water mark of the Allegheny river shall forever thereafter be occupied, used, and employed as a public landing.

The act of April 6, 1867, which consolidated into one city the old city of Pittsburgh, the borough of Lawrenceville, and various townships adjoining, provided that "nothing herein contained shall be construed to empower said corporation to sell, mortgage, lease, or in any manner alienate any lands which are held by any of the said former corporations as public squares, common grounds, or river-shore landings."

Public lands are held by the state "in trust for the public uses of navigation."

Stockton v. Baltimore & N. Y. R. Co. 32 Fed. Rep. 9; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 387, 36 L. ed. 1018.

The lease and ordinance being null and void, appellant's possession and the structure erected by him, having no other authority, are also illegal.

A public landing is one which is held under public control for public use in water commerce, subject only to such rules, regulations, and charges as may be enacted by public authority.

Subordination to public control, and freedom from the will of a private owner, are essential to the existence of a public use as distinguished from a public interest.

Re New York, 135 N. Y. 253; Re Eureka Basin Warehouse & Mfg. Co. 96 N. Y. 42.

However important the business of a common carrier by land may be, it is not "navigation," and a public landing cannot be appropriated to it without a perversion of its use.

Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 324, 24 L. ed. 224; Belcher Sugar Ref. Co. v. St. Louis Grain Elevator Co. 10 Mo. App. 401, 82 Mo. 122, 101 Mo. 192, 8 L. R. A. 801; Lord v. Oconto, 47 Wis. 386; Gale v. Kalamazoo, 23 Mich. 344, 9 Am. Rep. 80.

When the proprietors laid out the plan of the town of Pittsburgh, they—by leaving an open space along the rivers—dedicated this space to the lotowners "as a means of public access to and along the rivers."

Schenley v. Pittsburgh, 104 Pa. 472.

If the plan and deeds carry title to the river's edge, then the appellees, without any specific grant, are the owners of a riparian right which "is valuable, and, though it must be enjoyed in due subjection to the rights of the public, it cannot be arbitrarily or capriciously destroyed or impaired."

Yates v. Milwaukee, 10 Wall. 497, 19 L. ed. 984; Gould, Waters, § 48.

Such rights are entitled to protection from any illegal obstruction, and the fact that the obstruction is also a public nuisance does not impair the power of a court of equity to remove it by injunction.

Hacke's Appeal, 101 Pa. 245.

Appellees as owners of property to which 43 L. R. A.

the use is appurtenant, and in front of which the illegal obstruction is placed, may maintain an action for its removal.

Miller v. Lynch, 149 Pa. 460; Fereday v. Mankedick, 172 Pa. 535; Clad v. Paist, 181 Pa. 148; Pennsylvania R. Co.'s Appeal, 115 Pa. 514; Groff's Appeal, 128 Pa. 621, 5 L. R. A. 661; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Reading Paper Mills, 149 Pa. 18; Westhæffer v. Lebanon & A. Street R. Co. 163 Pa. 54; Potts v. Quaker City Elev. R. Co. 161 Pa. 396; McDonald v. Newark, 42 N. J. Eq. 136; Callanan v. Gilman, 107 N. Y. 360; Flynn v. Taylor, 127 N. Y. 596, 14 L. R. A. 556.

Green, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The authority of the city to make the lease in question to the defendant is derived from the 3d section of the act of March 31, 1836 (Pub. Laws, 318). By that act the councils of the city of Pittsburgh were authorized to define, locate, and cause to be opened a public street, to be known as "Duquesne Way," of at least 40 feet in width, and at least 420 feet north of Penn street. By the 3d section it was provided that, after Duquesne Way was located and opened, the councils were authorized to grade and improve the space lying northwardly from the line of the way, "and the space so graded and lying between the said way and low-water mark of the Allegheny river, shall forever thereafter be occupied, used, and employed as a public landing, and the said councils shall have full power to make such rules, regulations, and by-laws regulating the use of such public landing as they may think proper, and shall not be inconsistent with the existing laws of this commonwealth; . . . and to exercise in every respect over the said public street and public landing, when the same shall be opened, the same powers and authority which they may or can exercise by law over the other public streets and landings within the said city." The answer of the defendant avers that, in pursuance of the authority thus conferred, an ordinance was passed by the councils on the 25th of January, 1897, authorizing the department of public works to lease to the defendant, for the term of five years, the part of the public landing now in question. Other averments are made in the same connection, which are not necessary to be considered. The contention turns upon the question whether the city councils had the lawful power to make a lease of such a piece of public property to a private person. The learned court below decided that they did not have such power, and therefore granted a restraining injunction against the defendant. The propriety of this ruling is the question before us.

The plaintiffs are citizens and taxpayers of the city, and are the owners of property fronting on Duquesne Way immediately opposite the proposed structure which the defendant is about to erect. The plaintiffs allege that they have held and owned their lots, with buildings on them, from a time before the lease to the defendant was made, and have always been accustomed to have a free and unobstructed passage to and over the public landing in front of their lots, and that the erection by the defendant of any buildings or structures on said leased premises will prevent their free access to and use of the public landing at that place, and will also deprive them of free access to the river, and of the free enjoyment of light and air over said space. We do not think there is any doubt of the right of the plaintiffs to maintain the present bill, if they incur a liability to the injuries complained of, and we do not think it necessary to expend time in the discussion of that question. They are injuries which are personal to themselves, and they are direct and positive in character. As it seems to us, the fate of the contention depends upon the question of the right of the defendant to occupy the public landing and to erect structures thereon, as is averred in the bill and admitted in the answer. But that question depends exclusively upon the lawful right of the city to make such a lease and to authorize such structures. On this question, it seems to us, the weight of authority is against the defendant. Passing by the very important consideration that, if the right now claimed for the city be sustained, the entire public landing system of the city on its river fronts would soon be destroyed and become vested in private persons for their own emolument, it is enough to know that, in the fundamental grant to the city by the legislature of power over the landings, there is a most serious restriction upon any disposition of the control over the landings which will interfere with the free, perpetual, public, and unrestrained use of them by the whole community. The specific and positive language of the act of 1836 is that "the space so graded and lying between said way and low-water mark of the Allegheny river shall forever thereafter be occupied, used, and employed as a public landing." Now, if a system be inaugurated of leasing out to private persons portions of the space thus formally dedicated to a perpetual public use, we are unable to see how the public character of the landing is to be preserved, as is required by the act; because it is of no consequence, as it seems to us, that the people generally may have the right to make use of the landing by purchasing the consent of the lessees with a price for such use,—it is no longer the free, unrestrained use by all the people, as of a public and undisputed right thereto. The privilege would be something that belongs to private persons who are lessees of the city, and, in order to be enjoyed by the general public, it must be purchased from those persons, and a private gain must therefore be subserved in order that a clear public and free right of enjoyment can be exercised.

The authorities which are directly pertinent seem to be conclusive on this subject. In Illinois C. R. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 453, 36 L. ed. 1042, Mr. Justice Field, delivering the opinion, said: "The trust devolving upon the state for the public, and which can only be discharged by the management and control of property in which the public has an interest, cannot be relinquished by a transfer of the property. . . . The state can no more abdicate its trust over property in which the whole people are interested, like navigable waters and soils under them, so as to leave them entirely under the use and control of private parties, . . . than it can abdicate its police powers in the administration of government and the preservation of the peace." This ruling appears to be quite applicable to the present case, because the act of 1836, while it does confer the power to make rules and regulations concerning the space between the way and the river, does not confer any power upon the city to divest itself of its authority or control over the space which it designates as "public landing." Rules and regulations concerning the use of the whole of this space called "public landing," are radically different from an absolute conveyance of the right of use, whether by lease or deed. The intention of the legislature, moreover, is made still more manifest upon this subject in the consolidation act of April 6, 1867, in which it is specially provided (§ 35) that "all rights of property of every kind and description, excepting schoolhouses and lots, which were vested in any of said former corporations or townships, shall thereafter be deemed and held to be vested in the corporation created by this act, . . . provided that nothing hereinafter contained shall be construed to empower said corporation to sell, mortgage, lease, or in any manner alienate any lands which were held by any of said former corporations, as public squares, common grounds, or river shore landings, but such lands shall be held for general public use in the same manner as before the passage of this act." Besides being specially restrictive as to the classes of property described, this act is confirmatory of the policy established by the act of 1836, particularly enjoining that the new municipal corporation shall not sell, mortgage, or lease, or in any manner alienate, any lands which were held by any of the former corporations, as public squares, common grounds, or river-shore landings, "but such lands shall be held for general public use in the same manner as before the passage of this act." It is plainly manifest, therefore, that the contest here is not to be affected by decisions which are predicated of municipalities which do have the whole power of disposition of water fronts, wharves, docks, and landings, such as on tide water and lake ports, or ports of great cities on the large rivers of the country, but only of such where the municipal control is limited by specific restrictions, within which alone the municipal authority must be exercised. Judged by this test, the solution of the present controversy seems to be quite simple, and it appears to us that the learned court below arrived at the correct result in granting the injunction prayed for.

Decree affirmed and appeal dismissed, at the cost of the appellant.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT (In Banc).

Annie GANNON, Respt.,
v.

LACLEDE GAS LIGHT COMPANY, Appt.

(145 Mo. 502.)

1. Unproved allegations of knowledge and want of care on the part of an electric-light company will not prevent recovery for death of a fireman killed while in the discharge of his duty by stepping on a live grounded wire in a public alley, if sufficient is proved to establish the fact and manner of death, defendant's negligence, and due care on the part of deceased.
2. An electric company maintaining overhead wires along a public alley is prima facie liable for injuries caused to persons rightfully in the alley by live grounded wires.
3. An allegation in a suit for damages for injuries caused by a live grounded electric wire in a public alley, that its owner permitted it to become broken and to remain down a long time when it knew or ought to have known its condition, does not shift the burden of proof as to care of the wire from defendant to plaintiff.
4. A verdict cannot be directed for defendant in an action to recover damages for negligent injuries, although his evidence is uncontradicted and sufficient, if true, to overcome the prima facie case made by plaintiff.

(Sherwood, Brace, and Marshall, JJ., dissent.)

(June 7, 1898.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for the City of St. Louis in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's husband. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Mr. Henry Hitchcock, for appellant:

In such an action the negligence proved must conform to that charged in the petition; and a fortiori if the plaintiff fails to prove the negligence alleged against the defendant, a demurrer to the evidence should be sustained.

Gurley v. Missouri P. R. Co. 93 Mo. 445; Haynes v. Trenton, 108 Mo. 123; Buffington v. Atlantic & P. R. Co. 64 Mo. 246; Price v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 72 Mo. 414; Waldhier v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 71 Mo. 514; Leslie v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 88 Mo. 50.

While the court will not weigh conflicting evidence to ascertain whether a verdict can be supported if there be any evidence upon which it can rest, on the other hand, a verdict which has no substantial evidence to support it ought to be set aside.

Raichenbach v. Ellerbe, 115 Mo. 588; Long v. Moon, 107 Mo. 334; Carroll v. Interstate

NOTE.—As to liability for electric wires in streets, see note to Denver Consol. Electric Co. v. Simpson (Colo.) 31 L. R. A. 566; also Snyder v. Wheeling Electrical Co. (W. Va.) 39 L. R. A. 499, and other cases cited in footnote. 43 L. R. A.

Rapid Transit Co. 107 Mo. 653; Hunt v. Missouri R. Co. 89 Mo. 607; *Spohn v. Missouri
P. R. Co.* 87 Mo. 74; *Powell v. Missouri P.
R. Co.* 76 Mo. 83; *Marion County Comrs. v.
Clark*, 94 U. S. 284, 24 L. ed. 61; *Hearne
v. Keith*, 63 Mo. 84; Schmeiding v. Ewing, 57 Mo. 78; Doering v. Saum, 56 Mo. 479;
Routson v. Pacific R. Co. 45 Mo. 236; Nelson v. Boland, 37 Mo. 432; Morris v. Barnes, 35 Mo. 412.

On rehearing.

What proof will make a prima facie case of negligence depends upon what, in a legal sense, constitutes actionable negligence. Unless the proof offered conforms to that in each essential particular, a prima facie case is not made out.

Actionable negligence is the inadvertent failure of a legally responsible person to use ordinary care under the circumstances in observing or performing a non-contractual duty implied by law, which failure is the proximate cause of injury to a person to whom the duty is due.

16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 389; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 3; Ray, Negligence of Imposed Duties (Passenger Carriers), § 183a.

Defendant must owe plaintiff a legal duty of care.

Brown v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 20 Mo. App. 222.

The proof must affirmatively show a breach of such duty by defendant.

Holman v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 62 Mo. 564; Harlan v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 65 Mo. 22; Dowell v. Guthrie, 99 Mo. 663, 116 Mo. 654; Baker v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 122 Mo. 593; Rutledge v. Missouri P. R. Co. 123 Mo. 121; Hite v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 130 Mo. 138; Thompson v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 140 Mo. 141.

Such breach of duty must result in damage to plaintiff.

Harlan v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 65 Mo. 22; Powell v. Missouri P. R. Co. 76 Mo. 83; Stapp v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 85 Mo. 233; Mathiason v. Mayer, 90 Mo. 585; Hite v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 130 Mo. 132.

Such breach of duty must be the proximate cause of the injury complained of.

Stoneman v. Atlantic & P. R. Co. 58 Mo. 503; Harlan v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 65 Mo. 22; Stapp v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 85 Mo. 233; Stanley v. Union Depot R. Co. 114 Mo. 606; Thompson v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 140 Mo. 125; Nolan v. Shickle, 3 Mo. App. 305, 69 Mo. 336; Banks v. Wabash Western R. Co. 40 Mo. App. 464; Hoag v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 85 Pa. 293, 27 Am. Rep. 653; Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 24 L. ed. 256.

The proof offered by plaintiff in this case completely failed to show breach of duty or proximate cause.

Nolan v. Shickle, 3 Mo. App. 305; Thompson v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 140 Mo. 141.

There is no absolute rule as to negligence; that which is negligence in one case will become by change of circumstances ordinary care in another, or gross negligence in a third.

Brown v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 50 Mo. 467, 11 Am. Rep. 420; Wilkins v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 101 Mo. 93.

Common carriers, though bound to exercise toward passengers the highest degree of care of a very prudent person, are not insurers of their safety, nor responsible for injuries occurring when all reasonable skill and diligence had been used, and a fortiori are not liable for mere accident or misadventure or for an unknowable insufficiency of some part of their road.

Sawyer v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 37 Mo. 240, 90 Am. Dec. 382; Huelsenkamp v. Citizens' R. Co. 37 Mo. 537, 90 Am. Dec. 399; Morrissey v. Wiggins Ferry Co. 43 Mo. 380, 97 Am. Dec. 402; Leslie v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 88 Mo. 50; O'Connell v. St. Louis Cable & Western R. Co. 106 Mo. 482; Willmott v. Corrigan Consol. Street R. Co. 106 Mo. 535; Smith v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 108 Mo. 243; Jackson v. Grand Ave. R. Co. 118 Mo. 199; Clark v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 127 Mo. 197; Hite v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 130 Mo. 132; Sullivan v. Jefferson Ave. R. Co. 133 Mo. 1, 33 L. R. A. 167.

If at the trial defendant offers testimony after a demurrer to plaintiff's evidence is overruled, he takes the chance of aiding the plaintiff's case, but is not thereby deprived of the right to ask the court to direct a verdict for defendant on all the evidence.

Guenther v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 95 Mo. 286; Eswin v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 96 Mo. 290; McPherson v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 97 Mo. 253; Weber v. Kansas City Cable R. Co. 100 Mo. 194, 7 L. R. A. 819; Jennings v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 112 Mo. 274; Hite v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 130 Mo. 141; Stanley v. Union Depot R. Co. 114 Mo. 606; Kelsay v. Missouri P. R. Co. 129 Mo. 362; Payne v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 136 Mo. 562; Vogg v. Missouri P. R. Co. 138 Mo. 172; Thompson v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 140 Mo. 125; Powell v. Missouri P. R. Co. 76 Mo. 80.

Mr. T. J. Rowe, for respondent:

In passing upon a demurrer to the evidence, the court is required to make every inference of fact in favor of the party offering the evidence, which a jury might, with any degree of propriety, have inferred in his favor, and if, when received in this light, it is insufficient to support a verdict in his favor the demurrer should be sustained.

Wilson v. Lee's Summit Bd. of Edu. 63 Mo. 137.

A case should not be withdrawn from the jury unless the conclusion follows, as a matter of law, that no recovery can be had upon any view which can be properly taken of the facts the evidence tends to establish.

Beatty v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assn. 44 U. S. App. 527, 75 Fed. Rep. 65, 21 C. C. A. 231.

The jury and the trial judge found that the plaintiff made a prima facie case when 43 L. R. A.

she proved that her husband met his death on a public highway, by coming in contact with a deadly fluid placed on the highway by defendant, and it was their exclusive province to decide what facts were proved.

Haynes v. Raleigh Gas Co. 114 N. C. 208, 26 L. R. A. 810; Ray, Negligence of Imposed Duties, Personal, p. 145; Mullen v. St. John, 57 N. Y. 570, 15 Am. Rep. 530; Kearney v. London, B. & S. O. R. Co. L. R. 5 Q. B. 411; Suburban Electric Co. v. Nugent, 58 N. J. L. 658, 32 L. R. A. 700; Loveland v. Gardner, 79 Cal. 317, 4 L. R. A. 395; Sisk v. Crump, 112 Ind. 504; Powers v. Harlow, 53 Mich. 507, 51 Am. Rep. 154.

The maxim Res ipsa loquitur is directly applicable.

Clarke v. Nassau Electric R. Co. 9 App. Div. 51; Jones v. Union R. Co. 18 App. Div. 267; Gilmore v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. 6 App. Div. 117.

Robinson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was begun by the respondent, Annie Gannon, against appellant, to recover $5,000 for the death of her husband, William Gannon, alleged to have been caused by the fault of the defendant company as set out in her petition, containing the following substantial averments: "That the Laclede Gas-light Company, defendant, is a corporation under the laws of Missouri, engaged in the business of furnishing and selling electric light throughout the city of St. Louis, Missouri. That in conducting said business the defendant had erected and strung upon poles along the streets and alleys of said city wires charged with a certain dangerous and life-destroying fluid and current known as electricity; and that on the 18th day of April, 1894, on a certain public highway of said city, to wit, in an alley running east and west through the block bounded on the north by Sheridan avenue, on the south by Thomas street, on the east by Elliot, and on the west by Leffingwell avenue, through and along which alley it then and there had erected and maintained as aforesaid its said wires, so as aforesaid charged with electricity, in the conduct of its said business, and at a point in said alley in the rear of residence No. 2737 Thomas street, the defendant negligently and carelessly permitted its said wires, to the number of six or seven, then and there charged as aforesaid, to become broken in two, and to fall to the pavement of said alley, and to remain broken in two and down for a long time then and there, while full charged with electricity as aforesaid, when it knew, or ought by the exercise of any care and caution to have known, that the said wires were so as aforesaid broken and down, and liable, if touched by any human being while so broken down and charged as aforesaid, to destroy human life. And plaintiff states that, while the said wires were then and there in said alley broken in two and down and charged as aforesaid, her said husband, while walking along in the said alley at said point, struck with his foot against one of said defendant's said wires, and was thereby instantly killed, by the fault and recklessness and carelessness of the said defendant then and there in the premises as aforesaid, to her damage in the sum of $5,000, for which sum plaintiff prays judgment."

Defendant's answer was a general denial, coupled with a plea of contributory negligence on part of plaintiff, to which plaintiff replied, denying the allegation of new matter contained in defendant's answer.

At the close of plaintiff's testimony in chief the defendant asked the following instructions: "The court instructs the jury that, on the pleading and evidence, the plaintiff cannot recover, and the verdict will be for defendant;" which being refused, the defendant offered testimony on its part to the effect that the wires belonging to defendant, that killed plaintiff, were melted or burned in two by reason of a fire originating in a stable that was fronting on the alley in which its wires were strung; that said fire was not caused by the wires, and that its origin was unknown; that the defendant was not notified of the existence of the fire, or that its wires were broken down in the alley where the fire occurred, until after plaintiff's husband had been killed, and that said wires were down upon the ground in the alley only a short while before plaintiff's husband was killed; that there was no appliance at defendant's power house at the time to indicate when one of its wires was grounded; and that defendant had at the time of the fire a contract with the city for lighting certain streets and alleys with electricity, and also certain public and private institutions, which required it to keep in operation during the day a constant current of electricity passing over its wires. At the close of all the testimony in the case, defendant again prayed the court to instruct the jury "that, upon the pleading and all the evidence, the plaintiff cannot recover;" which being refused, the jury, under proper instructions submitted by the court, found a verdict for plaintiff for $3,000, on which in due time judgment was entered, and to reverse which, on account of error alleged in refusing defendant's two peremptory instructions, this case is here. No objection is made now to the proposition of law announced in the instructions given by the court, if the refusal of defendant's instruction at the close of the case is held good. The sole controversy has grown out of the application of the law to the facts, under the peculiar averments of the petition.

The plaintiff, to sustain her case, offered testimony tending to show that William Gannon, in respect to whose death this action was begun, was the husband of plaintiff; that he came to his death by stepping upon an electric wire belonging to the defendant company that was broken in two and lying upon the ground in one of the public alleys of the city of St. Louis, charged with an electric current of more than double the voltage necessary to kill a human being; that plaintiff's husband was at the time in the discharge of his duty as one of the city firemen, trying to extinguish a fire that had originated in a stable fronting on the alley where he was killed, and along which defendant, by permission of the city, had strung its electric wires, for the purpose of enabling it to furnish light to the city and for various private consumers along the course of the line; that two of a series of seven of defendant's wires strung overhead in said alley were down when plaintiff's husband arrived at the fire, and two other of the firemen engaged with him were also stunned and knocked to the ground at and near the same time and place.

The defendant's contention here is that no testimony was offered which tended to prove that the death of plaintiff's husband was caused by negligence on part of defendant, after the manner as alleged in her petition; that no substantial evidence, nor any evidence whatever, was offered by plaintiff tending to show, either that the wires in question became broken in two or fell to the ground in consequence of any negligence on part of defendant or its agent; or that said defendant knew, or ought by the exercise of ordinary care or caution to have known, that said wires were so broken and down at or before the time when plaintiff's husband was killed; or that defendant or its agents, with knowledge or notice, actual or constructive, that said wires were broken and down in the alley where plaintiff's husband was killed, did negligently permit said wires to remain so broken and down for a long time after notice thereof. And in the second place it is contended by defendant that, if it be conceded that a prima facie case was made by plaintiff in the first instance, it was entirely overcome by the positive and uncontradicted testimony of defendant's witnesses, and for that reason a finding should have been directed for defendant by the court at the close of the case.

While there is no doubt of the general proposition, so vigorously and repeatedly asserted by the counsel for appellant in his elaborate and able brief filed herein, "that a party cannot declare upon one cause of action, upon one negligent act, and recover upon an entirely different act of negligence, without a disregard of all rules of pleading and practice," it must be borne in mind that it has likewise been a rule of long practice, and frequently asserted in this court, based upon the plainest principles of propriety and fairness, that a party will not be driven out of court merely from the fact that he or she has alleged more than has been proved, when the unproved allegations are shown to be unnecessary averments to authorize a recovery; nor will plaintiff's action be denied merely because the testimony offered does not support certain averments in his or her petition when it does support other averments which are sufficient to authorize a recovery. Know County v. Goggin, 105 Mo. 182, and cases cited. Here the plaintiff in her petition not only alleged the act from which defendant's negligence might be inferred when shown, but went further, to say that the act of negligence was committed or suffered under circumstances that admit of no excuse, that is, after notice, etc.

Plaintiff's petition was complete when the charges had been made that her husband had met his death upon one of the public alleys of the city, when in the discharge of his duty as fireman, and without fault upon his part, by stepping upon an electric wire of the defendant charged with electricity, that defendant had negligently suffered to become broken in two and fall to the pavement of the alley. The other averments of carelessness on part of defendant, that it knew, or ought by the exercise of care and caution to have known, that said wire was broken and down, and liable, if touched by a human being, while so broken and down, and charged with electricity, to destroy human life, were not necessary allegations, and the fact that the act of negligence as alleged to have occurred after the particular manner detailed in the petition was not shown in all its fullness, is not fatal to a recovery, if sufficient was shown to have made a prima facie case of negligence under any of the charges made, and this announcement is no disregard of the rule of pleading and practice that prohibits variance between allegations made and proof shown. Surely, no harm could be said to have come to defendant because of plaintiff's failure to establish all that was alleged, if what was proved under the allegations disclosed, showed defendant liable; nor can defendant be said to be surprised at the variance between the proof and the allegations of the petition, if that shortage or variance was in the failure to establish facts that were alleged which defendant must have affirmatively asserted, and shown not to have existed, in order to relieve itself from the prima facie case made by the facts proved. It is scarcely necessary to assert that it was the duty of the defendant company to so keep at all times its electric wires, over which was continuously being transmitted that most dangerous energy, force, or fluid known to man called "electricity," out of the way of the citizen, that contact with them would not occur as he went to and fro in the prosecution of his business. It was a matter of the plainest duty for the defendant to see that the streets and alleys of the city, along which, by permission, it was suffered to place its overhead wires for its own private gain, were at all times maintained in the same condition, as to safety from the danger of electricity, as they were before its overhead use thereof was begun; and a most imperative duty was placed upon defendant, in assuming the overhead use of the public alley with its wires, to see that persons passing along and using the alley were not injured thereby; and when proof, under the allegations of plaintiff's petition, was made showing that one or more of defendant's wires charged with its death-dealing force was down upon one of the public alleys of the city, and that plaintiff's husband met his death in the discharge of his duty, a prima facie case of negligence was made out against defendant, and the burden was then put upon it to show that its wires were down in the alley through no fault of its agents and servants, notwithstanding the plaintiff had alleged, further, that said wires were permitted to become broken in two and to remain down and broken in said alley for a long time, when it knew, or ought to have known, by the exercise of care and caution, the broken condition thereof. The unnecessary or additional allegations made on part of plaintiff cannot have the effect of changing the presumption that the law raises from the proof of a given state of facts, and, when that presumption attaches from proof made of facts alleged, the after allegation will not stay the course of procedure resulting therefrom.

43 L. R. A.

Plaintiff by her testimony made out a prima facie case of negligence against defendant, although her proof was not in full after the manner the negligence was charged in her petition. The proof of facts that were alleged was adequate to cast the burden upon defendant of showing the nonexistence of negligence on its part, notwithstanding plaintiff went further in her petition, and charged that the negligent act complained of was done under circumstances that could not be defended against. In the case of Gurley v. Missouri P. R. Co. 93 Mo. 445, so often quoted, and so much relied on by appellant, the proof was of an entirely different act of negligence from that alleged in the petition. It was not mere variance, resulting from incomplete proof of unnecessary averments, as in the case at bar. There the proof was that defendant negligently left certain of its cars on its track without securing them, by reason of which a collision occurred, causing an injury to plaintiff, while the allegation of the petition was that defendant's agents negligently drove a loose car against certain other cars standing on its track, whereby plaintiff was injured. There the negligence shown was no part of the negligence charged, and had no tendency to establish, either presumptively or conclusively, the existence thereof. In fact the proof on part of plaintiff, in the Gurley Case, showed the nonexistence of the allegations of negligence made in the petition, and the court properly held there was a fatal variance between allegations made and proof shown, or a want of proof to support the allegation of the petition.

If, then, it is determined that a prima facie case of negligence on part of defendant was made out by the testimony offered in behalf of plaintiff in the first instance, and that the plaintiff is not to be defeated on the grounds of variance between the facts alleged and the proof made, we are brought to the consideration of the other questions raised by the presentation and refusal of defendant's second peremptory instruction asked at the conclusion of all the testimony offered in the case; that is, had the court the right to determine upon the conclusiveness of defendant's uncontradicted testimony offered to sustain its burden of proof (made by plaintiff's prima facie case), by an instruction to find for the defendant? It must be said that in our Reports quite a contrariety of opinion has been expressed on the proposition, and that, to some extent, the bar is left in doubt as to the absolute rule of practice; one line of decisions, prominent among which the case of Reichenbach v. Elzerbe, 115 Mo. 588, so much relied upon by appellant in his brief, holding that when the uncontradicted and unimpeached testimony in the case shows a complete defense to plaintiff's prima facie case, it was the plain duty of the trial judge to have directed a verdict for defendant, and not have submitted the case to the jury, and that for having refused to so direct at the time, or afterwards, when its attention was called to the fact by the motion for a new trial, this court would reverse the case. The converse of that proposition, which was assumed by the trial judge in this as in the Reichenbach Case, that, when either party to a controversy submits testimony (other than written instruments that call for the court's construction of their meaning and import) to sustain his or her burden of proof, the other party, though offering nothing to contradict it, is entitled to have the jury pass upon the whole case, and to determine the credibility of the witnesses and the weight to be given to their testimony, has from our earliest reported cases been often asserted with much positiveness. This court, as far back as the 4th Mo. report, at page 106, in the case of Bryan v. Wear, when the plaintiff had offered uncontradicted evidence of his title, in an action of ejectment, announced as a rule that it was error to instruct the jury as to the weight of evidence by telling them that plaintiff had shown a good title, because it was practically telling the jury that they must believe the evidence. Also, in the early case of McAfee v. Ryan, 11 Mo. 365, this court refused to disturb a verdict rendered against the undisputed testimony of a witness when nothing appeared in the record to impeach his veracity or to indicate why it should not have been believed. If this court can now set aside the finding of the jury on the matters of fact involved in the issue raised by defendant's answer, we must assume to ourselves the prerogative which the writer has always thought, under our Constitution and laws, rested exclusively with the jury. If we can set aside this finding on the ground that the defendant's proof was undisputed, and sufficient as a defense, we ought to reverse the case, and in that we have made the finding of facts and passed our judgment thereon contrary to the finding of the jury, with the apparent sanction of the trial court, as indicated by its refusal to set aside the finding so made by them.

Upon the broad simple proposition that the juries are the triors of facts in all cases of this character, certainly no question can be made. Here, by the well-established facts a prima facie case was made out by plaintiff, and the onus was cast upon the defendant of relieving itself from responsibility by showing that plaintiff's husband met his death as the result of an accident, not occasioned by that want of care and caution which the law made obligatory upon defendant to bestow, in using its highly dangerous agency, electricity, through overhanging wires upon the public streets and alleys of the city. That issue of fact was addressed to the consideration of the jury, for their determination, and the trial court in the first instance had no right to say to them, by an instruction, when they should become satisfied with the facts of the defense, and to have done so would have substituted the judgment of that court for that of the jury. The plaintiff was entitled to have the jury determine the credibility of the testimony offered, even though she offered nothing to contradict that offered in behalf of defendant, and it is not to be assumed by the court, as a matter of law, that evidence is true, satisfactory, or convincing to the body called upon to hear it, from the mere fact that no one by words contradicts what has been uttered. The right to judge the weight of evidence and the credibility of witnesses implies, of necessity, the right to resist the influence of any part of what the witnesses may have testified to,—of saying that it wants in the power to convince. If the mere presentation of evidence of a fact is to be called its proof, because undisputed by any other witness or witnesses, then the right to judge the weight of evidence and the credibility of witnesses in such cases means nothing. There must not only be the presentation of the evidence of a fact by a witness or witnesses, but its acceptance by the jury, before proof can be said to have been made complete upon any given point; and, if what has been uttered or said by a witness or witnesses fails to convince the mind or intelligence addressed,—has not been accepted by them,—then no sufficient proof has been made, however positive or unqualified the utterance of the witnesses upon which a finding can be predicated. The office of the court in the trial of a case by the jury is not to say when proof has been made sufficient for a verdict, but is limited to instructing when testimony offered tends, or does not tend, to establish a given fact or facts in issue. Testimony may tend in many instances to prove a given issue that falls far short of convincing proof. Suppose that a suit has been brought upon an open account for goods forwarded by plaintiff to defendant at his request, upon which issue has been joined by answer. A jury is called to try the cause, and the most positive testimony is offered as to the existence of every averment of plaintiff's petition, and defendant offers no proof whatever. Surely, no one would say that the court had the right to direct a finding for plaintiff upon the uncontradicted testimony; and why? Because defendant asked to have the facts of the case determined by a jury, and not by the court, as would be done if the court could direct a given finding. Because the right of trial, as heretofore enjoyed, shall remain inviolate, etc. Mo. Const. art. 2, § 28. See § 2131, Rev. Stat. 1889. Again, suppose that suit has been instituted on a note of hand, and issue joined by a plea of payment on part of defendant. A jury is called to try the case. The burden is then upon defendant, and he swears positively that, at a given time and place, he paid plaintiff the amount of the note in full, principal and interest. No witness is called to contradict his statement. The payee in the note may have been absent from the state, and unable to be present at the trial, or we may suppose that the suit had been brought by an administrator, and some witness had been called to the stand, who swears positively that he either saw the defendant pay the deceased payee of the note the full sum due thereon, or that the deceased had told him that the notes had been paid in full. The administrator cannot dispute the statement thus sworn to by any known witness; neither is he able to impeach the character of the witness who thus testified, by any other witness, on the ground that his past reputation for truth and veracity was bad, or to effect, by the most rigid cross-examination, a self-impeachment. Would the trial court, under either of the circumstances above named, be compelled to instruct the jury to find for defendant on the uncontradicted and unimpeached testimony? We think not. The jury, in the exercise of its prerogative of judging the weight of evidence and the credibility of witnesses, might say, "It fails to convince us;" "It fails to satisfy our mind;" "We do not believe it." Something in the action, in the manner, in the bearing, of the witness upon the stand (which finds no place in the transcript that reaches this court), might have repelled belief in the minds of the jurors of the facts; and, without belief in the existence of the truthfulness of a given statement or statements made, no verdict predicated thereon can be reached, and, when not reached or believed, a verdict cannot be ordered by a mandatory instruction from the court. If the jury in this as in all cases have the right to judge of the credibility of witnesses and the weight of their testimony, how could the trial court have dictated its verdict, contrary to that afterwards made, without an abridgment of the exercise of that right,—without substituting its beliefs and finding for that of the jury? The occurrence of undisputed testimony during the progress of the trial should furnish no occasion for a change in the rule of practice of asking the opinion of the jury on questions of fact, unless we are willing to announce, for the future guidance of the bench and bar, that uncontradicted and undisputed testimony is to be held and treated as facts agreed (and if this is done, to make proof and pleading consistent in this case, plaintiff should have been required to withdraw her replication denying the allegation of new matter set up in defendant's answer, and thus new complications would arise). To be logical and consistent, under our Constitution and laws, we think the only course that can properly be pursued and maintained is that all questions of fact, in suits at law, must finally and conclusively be determined by the jury, subject only to the corrective action of the trial court; to set aside the finding of facts, which, in the opinion of that court, is not warranted by the testimony, but never to coerce an opinion by a mandatory instruction directing a finding of fact in favor of one or the other of the parties litigant, according to its judgment of the facts. To the question of facts the jury alone, and not the court, must respond.

43 L. R. A.

The judgment of the Trial Court will be affirmed.

Gantt, Ch. J., and Burgess and Williams, JJ., concur.

Sherwood, Brace, and Marshall, JJ., dissent.

Rehearing denied.

Marshall, J., dissenting (Filed November 16, 1898):

The importance of the legal principles involved in this case, and the fact that in some respects it is the first case of its kind that has reached this court, demands that I shall give my reasons for my dissent from the opinion of the majority of the court. To understand the points involved, and to appreciate the force of my dissent, it is necessary to state the case more fully than is done in the opinion of the majority.

The suit is an action for damages for the death of plaintiff's husband. The petition avers that the defendant is a duly-incorporated Missouri corporation, organized for the purpose and engaged in the business of furnishing electric light in the city of St. Louis; that it had wires strung on poles set up on the public streets, conveying and charged with "a certain dangerous and life-destroying fluid and current, known as 'electricity,'" that on April 18, 1894, it had such wires, so strung and charged, in a public alley in the rear of house No. 2737 Thomas street, and that "the defendant negligently and carelessly permitted its said wires, to the number of six or seven, then and there charged as aforesaid, to become broken in two and to fall to the pavement of said alley, and to remain broken in two and down for a long time, then and there, while full charged with electricity as aforesaid, when it knew, or ought by the exercise of any care and caution to have known, that the said wires were so as aforesaid broken and down, and charged as aforesaid to destroy human life;" that, while the wires were so down, plaintiff's husband, while walking along the alley, struck his foot against the wires, and was instantly killed. The answer is a general denial and a plea of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff's husband. The reply denied contributory negligence.

The evidence for plaintiff was substantially as follows:

Annie Gannon testified that she is the widow of William Gannon, who was killed on April 18, 1894; that he was thirty-eight years old, employed in the fire department, and was a strong, healthy man.

Ernst Hilgendorf testified that he is the city telegraph operator; that it was his duty to receive alarms of fire, and distribute them to the engine houses and other city departments; that on April 18, 1894, at 10:56 A. M., he received an alarm from box No. 129, in the neighborhood of Leffingwell avenue and Thomas street; that the Laclede Gas Light Company have connection with his office, but he could not say whether they were given the alarm on that occasion.

Peter J. Dolan testified that he was standing on Glasgow avenue, between Sheridan and Cass (three blocks from the fire), when he heard the alarm; that he ran to the fire, saw smoke coming from the shed, went into the alley about 10 feet, to a point 30 or 40 feet from the burning shed, and saw two wires down, and there may have been more; that the fire department got there two or three minutes later, and within two minutes after that he was put out of the alley by a policeman; saw a man (not identified as the deceased) lying in the alley when the policeman was putting him out of the alley; that at that time the flames had not burst out of the top of the shed.

Frank J. Hildebrand testified that he was at work in his barber shop, 2601 Sheridan avenue, cutting witness Sullivan's hair; that when the fire alarm sounded he and Sullivan ran to the fire, which was a block and a half west of his barber shop; that the smoke was dense, and it was "pretty hot;" that he went into the alley, and saw an electric wire lying north and south across the alley; that from two to four minutes later the fire department arrived; that Gannon came into the alley from the south, and was killed very soon after he got there; that he (witness) assisted in pulling the hose into the alley, and got a pair of nippers and gloves to cut the wire; that he was excited on account of seeing Gannon lying on the wires, and he got the nippers after the man was hurt.

John Sullivan, a police officer, whose hair Hildebrand was cutting, testified: That he heard the alarm at half-past 11 o'clock in the morning, or between 11 and 12. That he ran to the fire. Noticed a lot of smoke, and the adjoining shed, across from it, was smoking, too. That he went into the alley, but as it was getting "pretty hot" he went into the yard. That "three or four minutes after that the fire department came, and when the fire was over—pretty near over—I seen Mr. Gannon, a fireman, coming out from the hallway; and I noticed a black wire about 2 feet from where he stepped out, and I noticed him having a nozzle in his hand. As he came out, I saw him step on this wire. I think it was the right foot. And I noticed him give a groan, and halloo 'Oh!' That is all I noticed." Witness further testified that the wire was down when the fire department arrived, and that when he saw the wire the flames had burst out on top of the shed.

James Cain testified that on April 18, 1894, he was pipeman in No. 17 company, which was stationed on Easton avenue, between Leonard and Compton, five blocks west of the fire; that his company was among the first to reach the fire; that they started down the alley, when somebody hallooed that the wires were down, and to look out for the horses, just in time for them to stop; that the alarm came in about 11 A. M.; that Gannon belonged to chemical No. 4 company, and got there after he (witness) did; that Gannon came into the alley, from Thomas street, through the yard, out of a hallway or door in the alley, with a pipe in his hand; that he saw him fall; was 10 or 12 feet from him; that a man threw a rope around him and pulled him away from the wire as soon as possible; that the fire was nearly under control when Gannon was killed, which was twenty minutes after witness reached the fire, and he reached the fire two or three minutes after the alarm came in; that the wire which killed Gannon was a large wire, and hung down along the pole; that Hester, assistant chief, tried to cut it with an ax, striking it against the pole; that Gannon's engine was stationed on Washington avenue and Twentieth street, about ten blocks south and five blocks east of the fire; that the defendant's power house or plant was located at the foot of Mound street, which was about twice as far from the fire as Gannon's engine house was from it; that everybody knows that when wires are down they are dangerous; that firemen carry wire cutters; that he could see from the west end of the alley that the wires were down; that his company played on the fire quite a while before Gannon's company arrived; that No. 5 company came in from Sheridan avenue on the north side of the alley, and that Dolan and then Shively were knocked down by the wires, and a few minutes afterwards Gannon fell; that he did not see any one attempting to cut the wires before Gannon or Dolan fell.

Luke McConn testified that he is a member of hook and ladder company No. 8, which was stationed at the same engine house with Gannon's company; that they went to the fire together; that he, Gannon, and Cronin worked on the Thomas street side of the shed ten or twelve minutes before going into the alley, and then someone called to bring the chemical line into the alley, and witness and Gannon pulled the pipe into the yard, on the Thomas street side; that he and Gannon stepped into the alley, when he got a shock, jumped to another part of the alley, and shouted, "Look out, Billy!" that Gannon was right behind him, and, as he looked around, Gannon stepped out into the alley, reeled, and fell over; that there was from 4 to 6 inches of water in the alley, from the hose and the rain, it being just after a thunderstorm; that the wires came down in a looped shape, and looked pretty big to him when he stepped into the alley; that all those wires were insulated, "if they don't get burned or torn off"; that he did not know how the insulation got off of these wires.

Robert E. Cronin testified that he belonged to the same chemical company with Billy Gannon; that he was at the fire; that they took the hose through the yard to the shed; that he did not see the accident to Gannon; that it was a pretty fierce fire for a shed fire; that it was a two-story shed, with a hallway through it; that all firemen know that electric wires are dangerous if they are down or disarranged.

Charles Swingley testified: That he is chief of the fire department. Knew Gannon, as a fireman, about four years. That he was at the fire. That, on arriving there, found a fire raging. "It was a pretty fierce blaze when they commenced playing on it.

Q. by the Court: When did you first notice those wires that were down there?

A. On entering the alley.

Q. And then, you say, the fire was raging?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It had been for some time?

A. It appeared to me so.

Q. by counsel for defendant: It was raging pretty fierce, with the flames away up in the air?

A. Yes, sir."

Andrew J. O'Reilly testified that he has been a professional electrician for twelve or fifteen years, and is supervisor of city lighting in St. Louis; that he is acquainted with the electric-light wires in the city; that he arrived at the fire about twenty minutes after it started, when it had burned out; that he found seven wires down,—one telephone wire belonging to the city fire department, and six copper wires belonging to defendant; that the wires were strung on poles, east and west, in a public alley. Witness produced six wires which were cut on the day of the fire from the wires in the alley, and testified that the five copper wires were used by the defendant to furnish electricity for light and power purposes under contract with the city, and for private lights and power north of Washington avenue; that the large wire produced by him was part of the Brush incandescent light system, being the main wire supplied with electricity from defendant's power house on the Levee and Mound street, and carried a charge of 2,200 to 2,300 volts; that the power circuit carried about 500 volts, which would shake one up seriously and burn him; that 1,100 volts will kill a man; that there was no current at that time on the small wires of the alley-lighting circuit, except at night; that when he arrived at the fire he found the big wire burnt in two; that, if a wire breaks, the defendant has no automatic method of knowing where the break is; that the only way it finds out that the wire is broken is that the lights beyond the break go out, and the customer reports the fact to defendant, who then sends out a man to repair it; that defendant uses the multiple system; that there is less danger in using the multiple system than the series system, because the latter requires more voltage; that the voltage used in these wires was no more than was required by defendant's contract with the city; that all the electric companies in St. Louis have a system of receiving fire alarms; that the defendant, under contract with the city, furnishes electric light to the various engine houses and other public institutions along the line, and is required by that contract to keep the circuit of electricity in operation all the time,—day as well as night; that the pieces of wire exhibited by him were cut off for him by an inspector of the lighting department while he was at the fire, and that in his opinion these wires were broken by reason of heat underneath; that when he saw the wires, the day of the fire, quite a length of the insulation was burned off; that before the fire the wires were strung in accordance with the city ordinances, without any unusual sagging between the poles, and were 25 feet above the ground; that he knew Gannon, and had talked with him about his work; that all firemen know the dangers of electric wires, and he thought Gannon had spoken to him about it; that Gannon was a lineman before he was a fireman; that the defendant's contract with the city required it to keep the lights burning on this circuit all the time, to furnish light to the engine houses Nos. 28 and 29 and the mounted police station; that in his opinion those wires could not have set fire to the shed; that the large wire belonged to defendant's incandescent Brush system, which was a metallic circuit, having no ground connection, and was supplied with electricity generated at defendant's station at the foot of Mound street; that defendant has appliances which show when both wires of the circuit are down, but that in this case only one of the wires was down, and that defendant had no way of knowing the fact in such cases; that defendant's contract required it to keep a constant current of 2,000 volts for that part of the city, which was a proper current for that purpose; that the large wire was strung almost over the shed, and that the burning of the shed would have produced heat enough to affect the wire; that in his opinion the breaking of these wires was caused by "the wires becoming overheated at this particular point, lost their strength, and there was a reduction of cross section, due to the tension in the wires, and a consequent break"; that in his opinion the break in the wires was caused by the fire; that he examined the wires at the time of the fire, and there was no sagging; that if the wires between these poles had sagged enough to cause the wires to touch the shed, the wires on the other spans would have sagged, too, but they were all taut, and there was nothing to indicate that the wire had sagged and set fire to the shed; that engine house No. 28 is west of where the fire occurred, and that a telephone message was received that day at about ten minutes past 11 o'clock, from engine house No. 28, that its lights went out at 11 o'clock, which was a short time after the fire alarm was given, which occurred at about five minutes before 11 o'clock; that it was impossible for these lights to have continued burning after the break in those wires; that at fifteen or twenty minutes past 11 the defendant was notified from witness's office that the lights were out at No. 28 engine house; that the firemen had gone to the fire before the notice was given to defendant.

This was all of plaintiff's evidence. Thereupon defendant demurred to the evidence, the court overruled the demurrer, and defendant duly excepted. The defendant then introduced evidence as follows:

S. A. Keightley testified that he was present at the fire; was filling an ice box right north and a little northwest of the fire when his attention was first attracted to the fire; that he ran to the fire, and at the request of a lady he ran to the alarm box on the northeast corner of Leffingwell avenue and Dickson street, a block and a half from the fire, and turned on an alarm, and then came back to the fire; that the firemen arrived in three or four minutes; that before he turned on the alarm there was considerable fire,—“the whole back part of the stable was blazing”; that he noticed the electric wires on the poles before he turned on the alarm; that none of the wires were down, or he would have noticed it; that on coming back, after turning on the alarm, he noticed three or four wires down.

J. W. Beyer testified that his attention was called to the fire when Keightley was fixing the ice box; that he ran to the alley, walked into it 10 or 15 feet and watched the fire; that when he arrived the whole back of the shed was ablaze; that the wires were then up on the poles; that about a minute after he went into the alley, and before the firemen came he saw the wires fall, and because of the wires being down and because of the heat he got out of the alley; that he saw Gannon when he reached the fire, when he went into the alley, and when he fell.

E. M. Wordsworth testified that he lived at 2733 Thomas street, the second house from the fire; that he heard the commotion, and went to the alley and saw the fire; that the wires were all up when he arrived at the fire; that he saw the wires burn in two and fall, and thinks some of the firemen were there when they fell.

August Keil testified that he lived on Leffingwell avenue, on the corner of the alley that runs midway between Thomas street and Sheridan avenue (which is the alley in question, and would make his house about 75 feet from the fire); that he was in the second story of his house when he noticed the smoke coming out of the shed; that he ran into the stable, and saw it was on fire downstairs; there was some wash strung up in the stable, which he took down and laid it on the steps, and by this time a man got a garden hose and began squirting it on the stable, but it got so hot that he could not go back through the alley; that when he went through the alley the wires were all up on the poles, and when he got out of the stable the blaze was shooting up, and he saw the wires curl up and drop down into the alley; that this was two or three minutes before the firemen arrived.

Miss Josie Keil testified that she is a sister of August Keil, and lived with him; that she smelt the smoke, and her brother called “Fire,” and ran out of the house; that she looked out of the window; could only see smoke at first; then someone burst open the door, and the flames shot out; that the electric wires were all up on the poles; that when the flames shot up, the covering of the wires caught fire, and the wires burned in two and fell.

John Fitzgerald testified that he reached the fire before the firemen came; that he stood at the entrance of the alley on Leffingwell avenue, and saw the smoke burst out around the windows and doors; that the electric wires were all up; that he helped a lady to get her surrey out of a stable on the opposite side of the alley from the fire, and pulled it out through the alley; that the wires were up then; that he saw the wires fall, and he got out of the alley as soon as he could.

Thomas J. Foster testified that he went to the fire with Fitzgerald; that he saw wires burn in two a few minutes after he arrived at the fire; that he warned the driver of No. 17 reel that the wires were down, and he just had time to stop; that the rubber around the wires caught fire and burned, and the wires fell close to him, and he hallooed to Mr. Sweeney that the wires were coming down, and Sweeney got his pants burned in getting out of the alley.

William Gallagher testified that he is the general foreman of the electric-light department of the defendant company, and remembered the fire; that the alarm was given about 11 o'clock; that defendant's lines and circuits in that vicinity were at that time in first-class condition; that defendant has an instrument known as a “circuit breaker,” when both of the wires are down, but that it would not indicate the falling of only one wire, if the other was up, and that he knows of no device which would do so; that the first notice defendant had that the wires were down was about seven minutes past 12 o'clock, which was received by telephone from the city lighting department, and up to that time there had been no indication of any disturbance on that circuit; that he immediately went out to repair it; that, if one wire of a circuit is down, it is not necessarily dangerous, but if both are down, and you touch one of them, it is very dangerous; that if both wires are down, and resting in a pool of water, the circuit would be continuous, and the circuit breaker would give no indication of the break; that there was no indication at the company's works that morning that there was any grounding of the circuit; that defendant furnishes light for the city institutions, and is required by contract to keep the lights burning all day; that defendant got the fire alarms at the same time the fire department did, and that on this occasion the alarm came from the box at Leffingwell avenue and Dickson street; and that defendant had no live wires in that neighborhood, and knew nothing about any disturbance until the report came that the lights were out in No. 28 engine house.

Robert Quain testified that he is general foreman of the city fire and police department; that he was familiar with the wire in question; and that it was in good condition when put up, and was a well-constructed line, erected in compliance with the city ordinances.

M. B. Fittsworth testified that he is a city inspector of fire and police telegraph; that he was at the fire at 11:30, and cut the wires off the poles; found the line in good condition, except some of the wires were down.

This was all the evidence in the case. The plaintiff introduced no evidence in rebuttal. Thereupon defendant asked, and the court refused to give, the following instruction,—defendant duly saving its exception: “The court instructs the jury that, upon the pleadings and all the evidence, the plaintiff cannot recover.” The court then instructed the jury in various respects, but as no point is urged here as to the correctness of the rulings in this respect, it is unnecessary to refer to that feature of the case. There was a verdict for plaintiff for $3,000, and, after unsuccessful motions for new trial and arrest, the defendant appealed to this court.

1. The opinion of the majority of this court, after laying down the undisputed proposition that a petition which alleges facts sufficient to authorize a recovery is good, notwithstanding it contains other allegations not necessary to make out the plaintiff's case, holds that "plaintiff's petition was complete when the charges had been made that her husband had met his death upon one of the public alleys of the city, when in the discharge of his duty as fireman, and without fault upon his part, by stepping upon an electric wire of the defendant, charged with electricity, that defendant had negligently suffered to become broken in two and fall to the pavement of the alley." And after thus adjudging the petition sufficient, and disregarding the other allegations of the petition as unnecessary, the opinion proceeds: "It is scarcely necessary to assert that it was the duty of the defendant company to so keep at all times its electric wires, over which was continuously being transmitted that most dangerous energy, force, or fluid known to man, called 'electricity,' out of the way of the citizen, that contact with them would not occur as he went to and fro in the prosecution of his business. It was a matter of the plainest duty for the defendant to see that the streets and alleys of the city, along which, by permission, it was suffered to place its overhead wires for its own private gain, were at all times maintained in the same condition as to safety from the danger of electricity as they were before its overhead use thereof was begun; and a most imperative duty was placed upon defendant, in assuming the overhead use of the public alley with its wires, to see that persons passing along and using the alley were not injured thereby; and when proof, under the allegations of plaintiff's petition, was made showing that one or more of defendant's wires, charged with its death-dealing force, was down upon one of the public alleys of the city, and that plaintiff's husband met his death in the discharge of his duty, a prima facie case of negligence was made out against defendant, and the burden was then put upon it to show that its wires were down in the alley through no fault of its agents and servants, notwithstanding the plaintiff had alleged further that said wires were permitted to become broken in two and to remain down and broken in said alley for a long time, when it knew, or ought to have known by the exercise of care and caution, the broken condition thereof. . . . Plaintiff by her testimony made out a prima facie case of negligence against defendant, although her proof was not in full after the manner the negligence was charged in her petition. The proof of facts that were alleged was adequate to cast the burden upon defendant of showing the nonexistence of negligence on its part, notwithstanding plaintiff went further in her petition, and charged that the negligent act complained of was done under circumstances that could not be defended against." And, having reached this conclusion, the opinion holds that when the burden is thus shifted to defendant to exonerate itself, and it does so by positive evidence that it was wholly without fault or negligence, and when the plaintiff introduces no evidence whatever countervailing defendant's complete exoneration, the court must submit the case to the jury, and cannot direct a verdict for defendant, because the jury are the triors of all questions of fact, and have the right in any case to say, "The uncontradicted testimony does not satisfy or convince us," and to find a verdict in the teeth of the evidence, and that, unless the trial court sees fit to set the verdict aside, this court is powerless to interfere. These conclusions are so much at variance with my understanding of the law and of the prior decisions of this court, that I feel compelled to dissent, and to express my reasons.

Analyzed and reduced to syllogisms, the majority opinion asserts two propositions: First. A live electric wire down on a public highway; the plaintiff injured by contact with it. Conclusion: A prima facie case of negligence made out against defendant. Second. A prima facie case made by plaintiff as stated; the burden shifted to defendant to exonerate himself, which he does by competent testimony which is not assailed or contradicted by plaintiff nor the witnesses attempted to be impeached. Conclusion: A question of fact is presented, which the jury alone has the right to determine. I cannot agree to either proposition, and especially so under the facts in this case. The reasoning of the court may be expressed in a nutshell. It is that it is the duty of a person having such wires strung over a public highway to see that the pedestrians on the highway are as safe from the danger of electricity as they were before the wires were placed there. This can only mean that such users of the highway are at least quasi insurers of the traveling public. No American case that the industry of learned counsel has cited holds such a doctrine. The opinion cites none. After patient research I have found none. Thompson, Electricity, § 65, refers to the decision of Mr. Justice Blackburn, in the court of exchequer chamber, in the case of Fletcher v. Rylands, L. R. 1 Exch. 205, where the obligation of a landowner who collects water on his own land, and it escapes and injures others, was decided, and says: "It may be doubted whether persons or corporations, employing for their own private advantage so dangerous an agency as electricity ought not to be regarded as quasi insurers, as to third persons, against any injurious consequences which may flow from it." The distinguished author cites no authority to support the intimation of his opinion contained in the text quoted, but contents himself with a reference to Fletcher v. Rylands, L. R. 1 Exch. 265, which even a casual consideration will show is not applicable. Water collected on one's land for his own purpose is not, like electricity, conveyed along a public highway for the public purpose of lighting the streets, and furnishing light and power to citizens in their business houses or residences abutting the streets. However, the author says (§ 66) that the doctrine of Fletcher v. Rylands has not met with approval in all American jurisdictions, and cites, inter alia, the case of Morgan v. Cox, 22 Mo. 373, 66 Am. Dec. 623, in which Leonard, J., speaking for this court, held that negligence in the performance of a lawful act confers a right of action upon one injured thereby, and that "reasonable care" means such care as is proportionate to the probability of injury that may arise to others. The cases cited by plaintiff's counsel do not maintain the doctrine that the defendant is an insurer. A fair type of those cases is City Electric Street R. Co. v. Conery, 61 Ark. 381, 31 L. R. A. 570, in which the rule is stated to be: "In cases where the wires carry a strong and dangerous current of electricity, and the result of negligence might be exposure to death or more serious accidents, the highest degree of care is required. This is especially true of electric-railway wires suspended over the streets of populous cities or towns. Here the danger is great, and the care exercised must be commensurate with it. But this duty does not make them insurers against accidents; for they are not responsible for accidents which a reasonable man, in the exercise of the greatest prudence, would not, under the circumstances, have guarded against." The degree of care required in law is proportionate to the dangers that reasonable men would apprehend under the circumstances. The failure to exercise such degree of care is negligence. But negligence is the gravamen of the action, and there is no element of insurance or quasi insurance in it. There may be a difference in the degree of care required of an electric company and of a steam or street railway company using or crossing a public highway. All increase the dangers to the pedestrians. But none are required to see to it, at their peril, that the danger to the pedestrian is no greater after they use the highway than it was before. The danger to the pedestrian on a highway increases in proportion to the increased travel and methods of travel on the highway, and in proportion to the ever-increasing burdens cast upon the highway in large cities by the exercise of new and necessary uses, which are lawful because they subserve a public purpose.

The case of Haynes v. Raleigh Gas Co. 114 N. C. 203, 26 L. R. A. 810, more nearly resembles the doctrine announced in the majority opinion in this case than any case that has been cited, or that I have found. It announces the doctrine that proof of a "live" wire down in the highway, and injury to a pedestrian, makes a "complete prima facie case of negligence," and the burden is cast upon the defendant to show that the live wire was in the street through no fault of its servants or agents. That court undertook to support the doctrine by reference to other cases and authorities, but an examination thereof easily shows that they go only to the extent of holding that care commensurate with the dangers to be apprehended must be used. In our progressive day, electricity is a recognized necessity,—as much so to light the streets and alleys, the business houses, and the private residences, as to furnish the motive power for rapid transportation. It can only be conveyed by means of wires strung above or below the highways. It is lawful to so string them, under the laws of this state, if proper consent of the public authorities is obtained, for such uses of the highway subserve a public purpose. Being lawfully on the street, the duty is cast upon those who erect and maintain them to use such care and skill in the erection and maintenance of them as is commensurate with the dangers that reasonable and prudent men would apprehend or expect to flow to the public from their presence, and no further. But it is not the law that it is their duty to see to it, at their peril, that the highway is kept as safe and as free from danger after they were erected as it was before. Their very presence and nature increase the dangers on the highway. If the doctrine announced by the majority opinion is the law, then one of two conclusions must follow: Either it is not lawful to put them there, or else those who do so do it at their peril, and become insurers. I respectfully disagree with such conclusions. The cases in other jurisdictions upon liability in such cases do not proceed upon the idea that the defendant is under such a duty to the public. They are predicated upon the theory that the defendant is liable only for negligence, and turn upon a question of practice as to the proper manner of presenting the case. They hold that when the plaintiff proves that such a wire is down, and that he was injured thereby, he has made out a good prima facie case of negligence, because such things would not usually occur where the defendant has exercised care, and the fact that they did occur in the particular case is presumptive evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant, and that, as the defendant is in a better position than the plaintiff to know and show whether or not there was negligence, the burden is shifted to defendant to disprove negligence. The cases of Uggle v. West End Street R. Co. 160 Mass. 351; Clarke v. Nassau Electric R. Co. 9 App. Div. 51; Gilmore v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. 6 App. Div. 117; Jones v. Union R. Co. 18 App. Div. 267; and Mullen v. St. John, 57 N. Y. 570, 15 Am. Rep. 530 (a leading case on the subject),—cited and relied on by plaintiff, assert this doctrine, but none of them hold that it is the duty of the defendant to keep the highway as safe after the erection of wires upon it as it was before. If such is the duty of the defendant, then it may well be asked, what defense could a defendant interpose in such a case? He could not show there had been no negligence on his part; for, in the language of the majority of the court, "a most imperative duty was placed upon defendant, in assuming the overhead use of the public alley with its wires, to see that persons passing along and using the alley were not injured thereby;" and again: "It was a matter of the plainest duty for the defendant to see that the streets and alleys of the city, along which, by permission, it was suffered to place its overhead wires for its own private gain, were at all times maintained in the same condition as to safety from the danger of electricity as they were before its overhead use thereof was begun." Yet, in spite of this duty, with its resultant consequences, the majority opinion holds that proof that the wires were down in the highway, and that the plaintiff was injured by coming in contact with them, makes only a prima facie case of negligence against defendant, and shifts the burden upon defendant to disprove negligence. Manifestly, the defendant cannot be liable at all events simply because the highway is not as safe from the dangers of electricity after the wires are strung above it as it was before they were put there; at the same time it has a right to disprove negligence. Against an absolute liability there is no defense. The fact that the majority opinion holds that, once a prima facie case is made out, the burden shifts to defendant to disprove liability, establishes beyond cavil that there is no absolute liability, and that negligence is imputed to the defendant, and that he may rebut the imputation by showing that he exercised all the care commensurate with the dangers to be apprehended which careful and prudent men would have exercised under the circumstances. If he does this, he has discharged his full duty to the public, and is not liable. Suburban Electric Co. v. Nugent, 58 N. J. L. 658, 32 L. R. A. 700; Hutchinson v. Boston Gaslight Co. 122 Mass. loc. cit. 222; American Brewing Assn. v. Talbot, 141 Mo. 674. It is fair, therefore, to assume that the majority opinion inadvertently announced an absolute liability, and intended only to assert the doctrine commonly called res ipsa loquitur. The reasoning employed in this doctrine is doubtless based upon the common-law rule of pleading that "less particularity is required when the facts lie more in the knowledge of the opposite party than of the party pleading." Stephen, Pl. § 194. It is applicable only in rare cases. Ordinarily "the obligation of proving any fact lies upon the party who substantially asserts the affirmative of the issue." 1 Greenl. Ev. 15th ed. § 74. It is often loosely said the burden of proof shifts, but, strictly speaking, the burden of proof never shifts. In cases where the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is applied, the presumption of negligence supplies the want of proof of negligence, and the defendant is obligated to rebut a presumption, instead of evidence; but the case remains one of negligence, and the burden of proof is always on the plaintiff. The question always is, Was the defendant negligent? The presumption of negligence arises only in cases where the circumstances surrounding the accident are such as to indicate that the accident could only have happened through some negligence of the defendant, and are inconsistent with any other theory. The case of Hutchinson v. Boston Gaslight Co. 122 Mass. 219, fairly 43 L. R. A.

illustrates the rule. In fact, when properly read, Mullen v. St. John, 57 N. Y. 567, 15 Am. Rep. 530, asserts nothing more, although it is frequently referred to as holding a broader doctrine. Many cases might be cited illustrative of this doctrine, but for present purposes it will suffice to refer to those collated in 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 449, note 1. As before stated, the rule simply supplies the want of proof by plaintiff of negligence of defendant by a legal presumption, arising from the nature of the accident and the circumstances surrounding it, that, if care had been used by defendant, the accident would not have happened; and, as the facts lie more in the knowledge of the defendant than of the plaintiff, the burden of the evidence (not of the proof) is shifted to defendant to show that he was not guilty of negligence. In bearing the burden thus cast upon him, the defendant is not required to show that he used every absolutely necessary precaution, care, and skill known to science to prevent the happening of the accident, for this would make him liable in all cases except cases of inevitable accident; but it is sufficient to relieve him from liability if he shows that he used the degree of care commensurate with the dangers which men of prudence would have anticipated under the circumstances. If a defendant makes such a showing by competent testimony, he overcomes the presumption of negligence; and if then the plaintiff introduces no countervailing testimony, and does not impeach defendant's witnesses, the defendant is entitled to a judgment, as a matter of law. Read v. Morse 34 Wis. 315; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Stumps, 55 Ill. 367, 375; Hutchinson v. Boston Gaslight Co. 122 Mass. 219-222; Ward v. Atlantic & P. Teleg. Co. 71 N. Y. 81, 27 Am. Rep. 10; Allen v. Atlantic & P. Teleg. Co. 21 Hun, 22; Suburban Electric Co. v. Nugent, 58 N. J. L. 658, 32 L. R. A. 700. The same principle is applicable in ordinary civil cases arising in the commercial world. Hamilton v. Marks, 63 Mo. 167; Johnson v. McMurry, 72 Mo. 278; Henry v. Sneed, 90 Mo. 407.

Applying these principles of law to the case at bar, and giving the fullest force to the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, it cannot, in my judgment, be successfully maintained that a presumption of negligence attaches to defendant. Prior to the fire the wires were in good condition. If they had been down or grounded, it would at once have been discovered by the lights going out in the engine house. The fire alarm was sounded at 10:56 A. M. When plaintiff's witnesses, who resided in the neighborhood, arrived, the fire had progressed so that it was "pretty hot" in the alley. The fire department began to arrive in two or three minutes. At ten minutes after 11 A. M. the office of the city supervisor of electric lighting was notified by engine house No. 28, which was on the line of wire west of the fire, that the electric lights went out at 11 A. M. This establishes beyond doubt that the wires were rot down at 10:56, when the alarm of fire was turned on, and also that the wires broke and fell at 11 A. M. The fire was then burning fiercely, and so hot that the spectators had to retreat from the proximity of the fire. This fact is corroborated and confirmed by the testimony of James Cain, a pipeman in No. 17 company, and one of plaintiff's witnesses, that when his engine reached the fire and started down the alley the bystanders warned them the wires were down. Andrew J. O'Reilly, the city supervisor of electric lighting, a witness for plaintiff, testified to the proper and safe construction of the wires before the fire; that they were in good condition when he reached the fire, except those that were down, and that in his opinion the wires had not sagged or set fire to the stable, but that the insulation around the wires had been burned off and the wires broken by the heat; that there was no device known to art or science by which the defendant could have ascertained when only one of the wires composing the metallic arc or circuit was down, and that the wires were only charged with the amount of electricity required of defendant by its contract with the city to keep lights constantly burning in the engine houses and public institutions by day as well as by night; and that defendant was notified at fifteen or twenty minutes after 11 o'clock that the lights were out at No. 28 engine house. Plaintiff's testimony further showed that her husband was killed about twenty-two or twenty-three minutes after the alarm was sounded, which would be about eighteen or nineteen minutes after 11 A. M. Upon this showing, no presumption of negligence on defendant's part can properly be indulged. Admitting that properly erected and maintained wires do not ordinarily break in two and fall without some negligence on the part of those having them in charge, it is equally true that the rubber insulation around any wire will burn when subjected to heat, and that the wires themselves will also burn and break when so subjected. That it was the fire which burnt the wires, and not the wires which caused the fire, and that the wires did not fall until after the fire affected them, is clearly shown by the fact testified to by plaintiff's witness, O'Reilly, that when he reached the fire, before it was out (it burned out in about twenty minutes), he found seven wires down,—one telephone wire belonging to the city fire-alarm system, and six copper wires belonging to defendant, of which five were small wires, and had no current of electricity in them except at night, and then only enough to shake a person up and burn him, but not half enough to kill him, and one, the large wire, which carried 2,200 to 2,300 volts all the time, day and night. It was therefore this large wire which caused the accident in this case. Manifestly, therefore, it was the fire which burnt the seven wires in two; for it cannot be presumed that all seven wires went on a strike simultaneously, of their own accord, without any outside interference. This being the condition presented by plaintiff's case, and the circumstances surrounding the accident, instead of a presumption of negligence attaching to defendant, it appears plainly and affirmatively that the accident was not caused by any defective construction or any improper or negligent maintenance of its wires, but by the fire; and as defendant was not notified that the wires were down until fifteen or twenty minutes after 11 A. M., and as the accident occurred at eighteen or nineteen minutes after 11 A. M., the defendant had no actual notice of the condition of its wires at that point, and as sufficient time had not elapsed after the wires fell, and before the accident occurred, for the defendant to have ascertained the fact by the exercise of the greatest care, no notice can be presumed; and hence it follows that this is not a proper case for the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, but that, instead of its being a case of presumed negligence of defendant, it is clearly apparent from plaintiff's testimony that defendant was not negligent, and is in no wise liable for the death of plaintiff's husband. Therefore, in my judgment, the circuit court erred in overruling defendant's demurrer to the evidence at the close of plaintiff's case.

43 L. R. A.

2. Assuming, however, for the purposes of further discussion of the case, that a presumption of negligence arises from the facts and circumstances shown by plaintiff, and that the burden of the evidence was shifted to defendant to exonerate itself by showing that it had taken care commensurate with the danger which men of prudence would have expected under the circumstances, it is practically conceded by the majority opinion, and will be at once conceded by everyone who examines the defendant's proofs, that the defendant proved that it was guilty of absolutely no negligence whatever. It showed by the testimony of Keightley, Beyer, Wordsworth, Keil, Miss Josie Keil, Fitzgerald, and Foster,—all reputable witnesses,—that they were at the fire before the fire department arrived, and before the alarm was turned on, and that the wires were all properly up on the poles when they reached the fire, and that they saw the wires burn in two, curl up, and fall after it became too hot for the people to remain in close proximity to the fire. It also showed that the wires and circuits before the fire were in first-class condition; that there is no device known to science which will indicate when only one wire is down (there was only one of the two composing the metallic current down in this instance); that the first notice defendant received that the wire was down was at seven minutes past 12 o'clock, and it sent at once and had it repaired; that it received the alarm of fire which was turned in from the box at Leffingwell avenue and Dickson street; and that defendant had no live wires in that neighborhood, and had no idea that there was any disturbance with the wires until the report aforesaid was received. The plaintiff introduced no evidence in rebuttal. The majority opinion concedes that the defendant proved that it was not negligent. But it is held that the jury, under our Constitution and laws, are the sole judges of all questions of fact, and of the credibility of all witnesses, and that they had the right to say, "It fails to convince us. It fails to satisfy our minds. We do not believe it;" and that this is true notwithstanding the witnesses testify positively, are not contradicted, and no attempt is made to impeach them. The majority opinion concedes that this court held otherwise in Reichenbach v. Ellerbe, 115 Mo. 588, but says that the converse of that proposition was held by this court as early as the cases of Bryan v. Wear, 4 Mo. 106, and McAfee v. Ryan, 11 Mo. 365. It is true that Bryan v. Wear and McAfee v. Ryan so decide, but the principles so announced have long since been overruled, by implication, at least, in this state; and the rule so clearly and forcibly announced by Brace, J., in rendering the opinion of this court in Reichenbach v. Ellerbe, is now the settled law of our state. In speaking of verdicts rendered in such a state of the case, he aptly says: "Such a verdict can be accounted for only on the ground of ignorance, partiality, prejudice, or passion, and, under the repeated rulings of this court, cannot be permitted to stand. Long v. Moon, 107 Mo. 334; Caruth v. Richeson, 96 Mo. 186; Avery v. Fitzgerald, 94 Mo. 207; Garrett v. Greenwell, 92 Mo. 120; Spohn v. Missouri P. R. Co. 87 Mo. 74; Whitsett v. Ranson, 79 Mo. 258. 'When the evidence is of that character that the trial judge would have a plain duty to perform, in setting aside the verdict as unsupported by the evidence, it is his duty and prerogative to interfere before submission to the jury, and direct a verdict for defendant.' Jackson v. Hardin, 83 Mo. 175; Powell v. Missouri P. R. Co. 76 Mo. 80." See also Ackley v. Staehlin, 56 Mo. 558, and Hearne v. Keath, 63 Mo. 84.

In addition to these cases, attention may also be called to the following: In Hipsley v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 88 Mo. 348, it was held that this court would reverse a judgment where the verdict is so clearly against the weight of evidence as to show passion or prejudice. In Wilson v. Albert, 89 Mo. 539, this court said that, while it would not weigh evidence in law cases, yet it would interfere where there was no evidence to support the verdict. In Davis v. Fow, 59 Mo. 125, and in Cornet v. Bertelsmann, 61 Mo. 118, this court held it would interfere on questions of fact where the judgment below is clearly erroneous. In McCartney v. Finnell, 106 Mo. 445, it was held that this court would look into the evidence, and would reverse the judgment below where apparent injustice had been done. In Bruen v. Kansas City Agri. & H. Fair Assn. 40 Mo. App. 425, it was held that where the material facts were undisputed it was the duty of the appellate court to review the action of the trial court, and to render such judgment as the facts warranted. In Rhodes v. Fariah, 16 Mo. App. 430, it was held that where the defense was the statute of limitations, and the evidence in support thereof was definite, undisputed, and not open to suspicion, the appellate court would direct the proper judgment to be entered by the trial court. In Hewitt v. Doherty, 25 Mo. App. 326, it was held that a verdict for one party, where the conceded facts show that the adverse party is entitled to a judgment, 43 L. R. A.

will be vacated on appeal as being unsupported by the evidence. The same rule obtains in other jurisdictions. In Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Stumps, 55 Ill., loc. cit. 375, it is said: "The decision of this case, it is true, involves the question of the credibility of witnesses, and the jury are peculiarly the judges of that question. Still they have not an arbitrary discretion in this respect. This court has said that a jury cannot wilfully, nor from mere caprice, disregard the testimony of an unimpeached witness." In Read v. Morse, 43 Wis. loc. cit. 319, it is said: "But we think the court erred in submitting the question to the jury, in any form, as to whether the boat was provided with the necessary means and appliances to prevent the escape of fire. After a careful examination, we think the uncontradicted testimony proves that the boat was properly equipped. . . . Such being the case, it was error to submit the question to the jury." In Wise v. Freshley, 3 McCord, L. loc. cit. 548, it is said: "Where evidence is of a doubtful character, or where there is a conflict among the witnesses of the plaintiff and defendant, the juries are the proper persons to decide. But they have no such arbitrary and capricious power as to give to a citizen one cent for property indisputably proved to be worth $500 or $1,000." The same rule is laid down in 1 Greenl. Ev. 15th ed. § 74, and is supported by the numerous cases and illustrations contained in note "a" to the text. See also Turner v. Haar, 114 Mo. 335. In Seibert v. Erie R. Co. 49 Barb., loc. cit. 586, it is said: "The testimony of these two witnesses is clear, positive, and circumstantial. They could not be mistaken. Their testimony is true, or they both committed wilful and corrupt perjury. I think the jury, so far as anything to the contrary appears in this case, were bound to give credit to their testimony. It was not contradicted. It was really no contradiction for the plaintiff to say he did not hear the whistle or bell. They were not impeached or in any way discredited. The positive testimony of an unimpeached, uncontradicted witness cannot be discredited or disregarded arbitrarily or capriciously by court or jury. Lomer v. Meeker, 25 N. Y. 363. If juries are permitted to discredit or disregard such testimony, there is no safety in the administration of justice, and parties might just as well let the result of a litigation abide the cast of a die or a game of chance. It belongs to a jury, I admit, in considering the weight of evidence, to pass upon the credit due to the respective witnesses; but this does not imply that they may, without reasonable or justifiable ground, disbelieve any witness. They have no right to discredit an unimpeached, uncontradicted witness, who testifies fairly, and gives clear, rational, consistent, and relevant testimony. For judicial purposes, all witnesses stand upon a par, and must be believed in their testimony, unless discredited by the inconsistency, incredibility, or improbabilities of their statements on cross-examination, or otherwise contradicted by other witnesses, or impeached in respect to their general character for integrity or truth." And, because the jury arbitrarily disregarded the uncontradicted testimony of the unimpeached witnesses in the case, the judgment was reversed and a new trial awarded. To the same effect, see Jackson v. Hardin, 83 Mo. 175; Hite v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 130 Mo. 132; Payne v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 136 Mo. 562; Morgan v. Durfee, 69 Mo. 469, 33 Am. Rep. 508; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Selden, 42 U. S. App. 253, 78 Fed. Rep. 285, 24 C. C. A. 92.

In Crawford v. State, 44 Ala. 382, it appeared that the lower court, in referring to a portion of the testimony for the defense, said in its charge to the jury: "Yet you are not bound to believe one word of this testimony, unless you are satisfied it is true, and of this you are the judges." And upon appeal the supreme court said: "This clause of the charge must have some meaning. It cannot be construed in support of the veracity of the testimony referred to. It may be construed into an assault upon it, and it would justify the jury in its rejection as unworthy of any influence upon their verdict. In this view of it, it would be erroneous. If the testimony delivered upon the trial is unimpeached, either by the manner of the witness, his knowledge of the facts, his connection with the parties, or by contradictions, or for some other legal reason, the jury must treat it as true. They have no legal right causelessly to discredit any portion of the evidence, unless there are legal grounds for such a discrediting. Any other course would imperil the fairness and impartiality of the trial. If the jury can capriciously and causelessly discredit a portion of the testimony for the defense, they may discredit the whole. If the law exists as intimated by the learned judge on the trial below, it exists without limit; and it may be applied to the testimony of the defense or to the testimony of the prosecution. This would give the jury power to convict or to acquit according to their discretion, and not according to the evidence. This is not a correct statement of their duty. They must try the issue joined according to the evidence." In People v. Lyons, 51 Mich. 215, the case presented the converse of the proposition. The lower court instructed the jury that, "although a witness may be completely impeached, they might still believe him," or, in other words, as the supreme court put it, that they were at liberty to convict the defendant on the testimony of one who was shown by impeaching evidence to be unworthy of belief. The supreme court said of this charge: "Of course it was not the intention of the circuit judge to convey that idea to the jury, but unfortunately his language was so chosen as to carry that meaning," and granted a new trial to the defendant. In a word, the reason is this: Juries try questions of fact; that is, controversies about the facts. Where there is no controversy (meaning an affirmation of a fact on one side, and a denial on the other), there is no question as to the facts. If the facts are shown by competent evidence on one side, and the evidence is not contradicted on the other, and there is no attempt to impeach the witnesses, there is no question of fact involved in the case, but a simple question of law is presented. To permit a jury to say that it will not believe competent, uncontradicted, and unimpeached testimony, and to return a verdict in the teeth of such evidence, is to give the jury plenary power to take a man's life or property as caprice or wilfulness may dictate. If this is the power of a jury in this state, then courts are unnecessary, and the study of the law a waste of time; for what shall it profit us to carefully sift the grain of competent testimony from the bushel of chaff of hearsay testimony, if, after it is all done, the jury can capriciously, arbitrarily, perhaps wantonly, say, "We don't believe it," and find for the litigant who has introduced no testimony, and has not impeached the testimony that has been introduced? Briefly, bluntly, I say this is not the law.

For these reasons I dissent from the second proposition decided by the majority opinion, and think it was the duty of the circuit court to give the instruction asked by defendant at the close of the whole case. It follows that in my opinion the judgment of the circuit court ought to be reversed.

Sherwood and Brace, JJ., concur in all that has been said herein.

Sherwood, J., dissenting:

To the foregoing elaborate and exhaustive opinion I desire to add that outside of this state, "without variation or shadow of turning," the mere conjunction of accident and injury affords no basis for a cause of action; that, if a defect occurs from which an injury results, no cause of action, prima facie or otherwise, arises, unless the party whose duty it was to repair that defect had either actual or imputed notice thereof. In this case the evidence shows no actual notice, and also shows no such lapse of time as to amount to imputed notice. Where, then, is your so-called prima facie case?

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

Richard FIELDS et al., Appts.,

v.

F. C. DANEHOWER.

(65 Ark. 393.)

1. The lien for the unpaid balance of the mortgage debt is not restored upon a redemption by the mortgagor under statutory authority by repaying the amount for which the property was sold at the trustee's sale, although such amount is less than the face of the mortgage.

NOTE.—On the subject of redemption from foreclosure sale in general, see note to Horn v. Indianapolis Nat. Bank (Ind.) 9 L. R. A. 676. 43 L. R. A.

2. A tender by a mortgagor seeking to exercise his statutory right to redeem from the trustee's sale of the amount bid at such sale which is less than the face of the mortgage is ineffectual if coupled with a condition that the mortgagee release all claims upon the land, although the payment would have cut off the mortgage lien, since that question is one which the mortgagee had a right to test in the courts.

(Bunn, Ch. J., dissents from proposition 2.)

(June 11, 1898.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Lee County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover possession of certain real estate. Affirmed.

Statement by Riddick, J.:

Action of ejectment by F. C. Danehower against Richard Fields and Jack Dawson to recover possession of a tract of land held by defendants. The land was formerly owned by F. Trunkay, and he sold and conveyed the land to defendants, Fields and Dawson, upon credit, for the sum of $1,381. To secure payment of the purchase price, Fields and Dawson executed and delivered a deed of trust to R. D. Griffis, as trustee with power of sale. The debt not being paid, the trustee sold the land under the power contained in the deed, and, Trunkay having died, the land was purchased by his widow and heirs for the sum of $900, leaving several hundred dollars of the purchase price still unpaid. The trustee conveyed the land to the widow and heirs of Trunkay, and they in turn sold and conveyed the land to Danehower. Within one year from the date of the sale by the trustee the attorney of defendant Fields, who had purchased the interest of Danehower in the land, tendered to the attorney of Danehower and the Trunkays, who was authorized to receive same, $1,000, to redeem the land from the sale under the deed of trust. But this tender was made on the condition that the attorney for Danehower and the Trunkays would execute a receipt for his clients releasing the lands from all liens held by either Danehower or the Trunkays. The attorney for Danehower and the Trunkays admitted that Danehower and the Trunkays had no other claim or lien on the land except such as were claimed by virtue of the trust deed, and admitted that the $1,000 was sufficient to cover the amount of the purchase price for which said land sold at the sale under the trust deed, together with interest at 10 per cent thereon, and costs of sale, and offered to accept the same as a redemption from said sale, but contended that to release the land from the lien of the mortgage it was necessary to tender, not only the amount for which the land was sold under the trust deed, interest, and costs, but also the balance of the mortgage debt remaining unpaid; and he declined to execute the receipt or accept the tender on the conditions imposed, solely because the effect of the execution of the receipt and the acceptance of the tender would be the absolute redemption of said lands from the mortgage lien. The answer of the defendants set up this tender as a defense to the action of ejectment, stated that they had at all times been ready and willing to pay it, and 43 L. R. A.

offered to bring the money into court. The finding and judgment of the circuit court was in favor of plaintiff.

Mr. James P. Brown, for appellants:

A statutory right of redemption is vastly different from a mere equity of redemption. Makibben v. Arndt, 88 Ky. 180; Todd v. Davey, 60 Iowa, 532; Escher v. Simmons, 54 Iowa, 269; Blake v. Black, 55 Iowa, 252; Curtis v. Cutler, 40 U. S. App. 233, 76 Fed. Rep. 16, 37 L. R. A. 737, 22 C. C. A. 16.

Absolute and entire redemption may be effected by paying or tendering the amount that the land brought at the foreclosure sale, with interest and costs of sale.

Wood v. Holland, 57 Ark. 198; German Nat. Bank v. Barham, 57 Ark. 533.

The sole excuse, fully discussed at the time, was a waiver of all other objections to the tender.

Harriman v. Meyer, 45 Ark. 37.

If the required receipt may deprive the creditor of any right which the law does not deprive him of, as the effect of being paid in full by his debtor, then such a condition would invalidate the tender. But it is otherwise where the receipt that is required shows on its face merely the legal effect of full payment, as required by law, for the object intended by the tenderer.

Johnson v. Cranage, 45 Mich. 14; Halpin v. Phenix Ins. Co. 118 N. Y. 165; Bailey v. Buchanan County, 115 N. Y. 297, 6 L. R. A. 562; Wheelock v. Tanner, 39 N. Y. 486; Cass v. Higenbotam, 100 N. Y. 248; Loughborough v. McNevin, 74 Cal. 250; Mankel v. Belcamp, 84 Wis. 218; Strafford v. Welch, 59 N. H. 46; Engelbach v. Simpson, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 188.

Messrs. McCulloch & McCulloch, for appellee:

In neither the terms nor spirit of the redemption act can be found a purpose to enable the mortgagor to scale his debt and discharge it less than "dollar for dollar." It does not provide a "new way to pay old debts," and its beneficent design cannot be so perverted. It is a shield and not a sword.

Wood v. Holland, 57 Ark. 198, 53 Ark. 69, 64 Ark. 104; German Nat. Bank v. Barham, 57 Ark. 533.

If a mortgagor is entitled, as a legal right, to redeem property from a mortgage sale and hold it free from the balance of the mortgage debt by merely paying the purchase price at the sale, a court of equity would not impose such a condition upon him merely because the purchaser or mortgagee has denied him such legal right by refusing the offer and he is forced to go into a court of equity to enforce his clear legal right.

Equity follows the law.

Hanson v. Keating, 4 Hare, 1.

The mortgagor either has a clear legal right after the sale to redeem from the mortgage absolutely by payment of the price, which right he can assert under any circumstances or in any form of action, or his legal right under the statute extends only to a redemption from the effects of the sale, and to redeem from the mortgage he will be required always to pay the balance of the mortgage debt.

Jones, Mortg. § 1075; Kerr's Supp. to Wiltzie, Mortgage Foreclosures, pp. 1627-1628; Pingrey, Mortg. 2011; Collins v. Riggs, 14 Wall. 491, 20 L. ed. 723; Benedict v. Gilman, 4 Paige, 58; Martin v. Fridley, 23 Minn. 13; Baker v. Pierson, 6 Mich. 522; Adams v. Brown, 7 Cush. 220; McCabe v. Bellows, 7 Gray, 148, 66 Am. Dec. 467; Jones v. VanDoren, 130 U. S. 684, 32 L. ed. 1077; Parker v. Dacres, 130 U. S. 43, 32 L. ed. 848; Hosford v. Johnson, 74 Ind. 479; Hervey v. Krost, 116 Ind. 268; Bradley v. Snyder, 14 Ill. 263, 58 Am. Dec. 564; McGough v. Sweetser, 97 Ala. 361, 19 L. R. A. 470; McArthur v. Franklin, 16 Ohio St. 193; Rorer, Jud. Sales, § 1178.

In Ogle v. Koerner, 140 Ill. 170, and Anderson v. Anderson, 129 Ind. 573, it is held that a junior encumbrancer or any other person not liable for the debt may redeem by paying the purchase price at the sale without paying the balance of the mortgage debt, but the rule is clearly recognized in these cases that where the mortgagor himself redeems he must pay the whole debt.

The agreement in the face of the mortgage whereby the mortgagors expressly waived their right of redemption under the statute is binding upon them.

Jones, Mortg. §§ 1542 et seq.; Quartermous v. Kennedy, 29 Ark. 544.

Even if the mortgagor had the right to redeem absolutely from the mortgage by paying only the purchase price at the sale, the tender was not shown sufficient for that purpose.

2 Benjamin, Sales, §§ 1074 et seq., and note; 1 Addison, Contr. § 357, and note; 2 Wharton, Contr. § 997; Preston v. Grant, 34 Vt. 201; Foster v. Drew, 39 Vt. 51; Draper v. Hitt, 43 Vt. 439, 5 Am. Rep. 292; Moore v. Norman, 52 Minn. 83, 18 L. R. A. 359; Henderson v. Cass County, 107 Mo. 50; 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 912; 7 Wait, Act. & Def. p. 588; Jones, Mortg. § 900; Hepburn v. Auld, 1 Cranch, 321, 2 L. ed. 122; Storey v. Krcuson, 55 Ind. 397, 23 Am. Rep. 668; Thayer v. Brackett, 12 Mass. 450; Loring v. Cooke, 3 Pick. 51; Richardson v. Boston Chemical Laboratory, 9 Met. 42; L'Homme-dieu v. The H. L. Dayton, 38 Fed. Rep. 926.

Riddick, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case presents the following question: When land is sold under a power contained in a mortgage for an amount less than the debt secured by the mortgage, does the redemption allowed by the statute from such sale leave the premises still subject to the mortgage lien, or does such redemption restore the land to the grantor relieved of both the sale and the mortgage lien? In other words, can an absolute redemption be effected in such a case by a tender of the amount for which the property sells at the mortgage sale, together with interest and costs of sale, or is it necessary that the full amount of the mortgage debt shall be paid? The statute provides that real property sold under a mortgage "may be redeemed by the mortgagor at any time within one year from the sale thereof by payment of the amount for which said property is sold, together with 10 per cent interest thereon, and cost of sale." Sandels & H. Dig. § 5111. If the effect of a redemption under this statute, when the property has sold for less than the mortgage debt, is to restore the mortgage lien, it is obvious that there is no limit to the number of sales that may be made under the same mortgage. So long as any balance of the debt remains unpaid, and the mortgagor redeems, the mortgagee may, if this be the meaning of the act, continue to sell the property; thus piling up the costs against the mortgagor. Mortgages and deeds of trust to secure debts can, in this state, be drawn so that the creditor may bid at the mortgage sale (Ellenbogen v. Griffey, 55 Ark. 268), and this is now usually done; but under such construction of the statute the creditor would be encouraged to bid less than the value of the property, for in that event, if the mortgagor redeemed, the creditor could still hold and sell the property for any balance remaining unpaid, while, if the necessities of the mortgagor prevented him from redeeming, the creditor would obtain the property for less than its value, and have the remainder of the debt as a personal claim against the mortgagor. There is little reason why a creditor should be allowed thus to subject the property of his debtor to repeated sales under his mortgage; and a construction which permits it should not be adopted unless clearly required by the language of the statute. Hervey v. Krost, 116 Ind. 268. On the contrary, it would seem to be good public policy to allow the creditor to sell only once under his mortgage, and to make it to his interest to secure a fair price for the property at such sale. Anderson v. Anderson, 129 Ind. 573. Poverty may prevent the debtor from bidding the value of this property, for he must pay or secure the price he bids; but the creditor is usually in a position to make the property bring its value, at least, to the extent of the debt for which he exposes it for sale. If the mortgage does not permit him to bid at the sale, he can foreclose in a court of equity, and thus place himself in a position to make the property bring its value. It is not, therefore, unjust, as between him and the mortgagor, to presume that the amount for which he permits the property to sell represents its true value. And this is the basis upon which rests the redemption statute. For the purpose of redemption, the statute conclusively presumes that the price for which the property sells at the mortgage sale represents its actual value, and it allows the mortgagor within a reasonable time after the sale to redeem and reclaim the property by substituting therefor its money value as determined by such facts.

There is nothing in the statute to support the contention that when a redemption is made the mortgage lien is restored, and remains upon the property for any unpaid balance of the debt. We do not believe that the legislature intended any such result. Previous to the passage of this act allowing a redemption, the mortgage lien did not exist after the sale under the power contained in the mortgage. After such sale, the mortgage was functus officio, except as a part in the chain of title from the mortgagor to the purchaser at the mortgage sale, for the mortgage lien was exhausted and discharged by the sale. Makibben v. Arndt, 88 Ky. 180. Now, the statute does not attempt to make any change in the law in this respect, but recognizing that the mortgage lien was terminated by the sale, and that afterwards there was not a mortgagee holding under a mortgage, but a purchaser holding under a sale, it provides for redemption from such sale only. The language of this statute granting the right to redeem upon payment of amount for which the property sells, with interest and costs of sale, means, we think, an absolute redemption, and the mortgage lien is not revived by such redemption. Anderson v. Anderson, 129 Ind. 573; Hervey v. Krost, 116 Ind. 268; Makibben v. Arndt, 88 Ky. 180; Todd v. Davey, 60 Iowa, 532. Counsel for appellee contend that the case of Wood v. Holland, 53 Ark. 69, 57 Ark. 198, is opposed to this view, but we do not think so. In that case, as in this, there had been a sale of land on credit, and the vendee had executed a mortgage to a trustee to secure payment of the purchase money. The land was sold by the trustee under a power contained in the deed, and purchased by the vendor for less than the debt secured by the mortgage. The vendor took possession of the land under his purchase at the mortgage sale. Afterwards the mortgagor commenced a suit in equity to redeem, and to compel the vendor "to account for the rents and profits, and for other relief." The court, in its first opinion in that case, upon which the two later opinions were based, conceded the right of a mortgagor under our statute to redeem land sold under a mortgage by tendering the amount bid, with interest and costs, whether the debt secured be for the purchase money or not; but the court said that, "when the party goes into a court of equity to redeem, he must offer to pay the whole purchase money due." Wood v. Holland, 53 Ark. 69. The court did not, in that opinion, nor in either of the two subsequent opinions rendered in said case, state the reason for requiring the plaintiff to pay the whole amount of the purchase money when he goes into a court of equity to redeem. But in the case of German Nat. Bank v. Barham, 57 Ark. 536, it was said that courts of equity in such cases required the payment of the whole debt, upon the principle that "he who seeks equity must do equity"; and this seems to be the correct basis for the decisions in Wood v. Holland, 53 Ark. 69. While it may seldom be necessary for a mortgagor to resort to a court of equity to enforce his right to redeem after sale, that being a right conferred by statute, and concerning which he has a remedy at law; yet if, by reason of the fact that an account must be stated, or if, for the purpose of removing a cloud from his title, or to obtain other equitable relief, he comes into a court of equity to redeem, he must submit to such conditions as are imposed by the general rules of equity. And it is an ancient rule of equitable jurisprudence that a court of equity will not confer its equitable relief upon the party seeking its aid unless he will concede and provide for all the equitable rights justly belonging to the adversary party and growing out of the subject-matter of the suit. 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 385. Now, in the case of Wood v. Holland the mortgagor was asking the aid of a court of equity to allow him to redeem, and to compel the creditor to account for the rents and profits of land, while on his part he was offering to pay less than half the purchase money he owed the creditor for the land he sought to redeem. The land was the subject-matter of the action to redeem, and, the creditor having a legal demand against the mortgagor for the price of the land, it was right, and in accordance with the rules of equity, that the court should refuse to lend its aid to the mortgagor in the matter of redeeming and reclaiming the land, and calling the creditor to account, until he had offered to pay the balance due for the land. Anthony v. Anthony, 23 Ark. 479; Ruddell v. Ambler, 18 Ark. 369; Loney v. Courtney, 24 Neb. 580; Comstock v. Johnson, 46 N. Y. 615; Booth v. Hoskins, 75 Cal. 271; 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 385, 393. Whether this rule would be applied to other mortgages than those to secure the purchase money of the land mortgaged is immaterial to consider.

The appellant in this case is not asking the aid of a court of equity. He is defendant in an action at law, and therefore the decision in Wood v. Holland does not support the contention that he cannot redeem without paying the whole debt, for the decision in that case is, we think, based on the rule that "he who asks equity must do equity." To avoid confusion, it must always be remembered that the question here concerns the statutory right to redeem after sale, and has no reference to the equity of redemption before sale,—a right originating with courts of equity, and enforced only upon equitable principles. In actions to enforce the mortgagor's equity of redemption before foreclosure the rule is that the whole debt must be paid. "The debt being a unit, no party interested in the whole premises . . . can compel the mortgagee to accept a part of the debt, and to relieve the property pro tanto from the lien." 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1220. The same rule is applied, even after foreclosure, when one having an interest in the mortgaged property—such, for instance, as a junior encumbrance—is not made a party to the foreclosure proceedings, and afterwards comes into court for the purpose of enforcing his equity of redemption. He must pay or tender the whole mortgage debt. In such cases "the party offering to redeem proceeds upon the hypothesis that as to him the mortgage has never been foreclosed, and is still in existence. Therefore he can only lift it by paying it." Collins v. Riggs, 14 Wall. 491, 20 L. ed. 723; Hosford v. Johnson, 74 Ind. 479. But the rules applied by courts of equity in enforcing the equitable right of redemption before foreclosure, and the decisions based thereon, have little bearing upon the question here, which is one of statutory construction only. After considering the able argument of counsel for appellee, and the many cases cited by him, our conclusion, as before stated, is that the contention of appellants on this point is correct. He tendered a sum sufficient to cover the amount for which the property sold at the sale under the mortgage, with interest at 10 per cent, and costs of sale; and this was all the law required.

But this tender was made upon the condition that appellee and the Trunkys should waive their claim to a lien upon the property for any further sum by virtue of the mortgage. Appellant Fields demanded that Danehower and the Trunkys should sign a writing in which was the following stipulation: "We hereby agree with said Richard Fields that by virtue of his payment of said sum of $1,000 to us all the liens or other claims on said lands ever held by us, or either of us, as the representatives of the said Frank Trunkys, deceased, are released, and the said Fields redeems said lands free from any further lien or claim of interest thereon or therein by us or either of us." The appellee and the Trunkys admitted that they had no claim against the land except that existing by virtue of the mortgage and the sale thereunder. But the mortgage was executed by appellants to secure the purchase price they had agreed to pay for the land. At the sale under the mortgage the land sold for much less than the amount due for the purchase price, and appellee and the Trunkys in good faith contended that appellants could not redeem without paying the full amount due for the land. There was a difference of opinion between the parties as to the law on this point, and the object of appellant Fields in requiring the receipt and agreement was to compel both appellee and the Trunkys, in the event they accepted the tender, to abandon their claim of a lien against the land for the balance of the purchase money. This balance represented a considerable sum; and while, in view of the unsettled state of the law on that point, we can appreciate the caution which led appellant to impose this condition, we yet have reached the conclusion that it was one he had no right to impose, and it rendered the tender of no effect. It is well established that a tender must be without conditions to which the creditor can have a valid objection. Noyes v. Wyckoff, 114 N. Y. 204; Moore v. Norman, 52 Minn. 83, 18 L. R. A. 359; Wood v. Hitchcock, 20 Wend. 47; Jones, Mortg. § 900; 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 912; Benjamin, Sales, Bennett's ed. 733. If appellant had only asked appellee to sign a receipt showing the amount of money paid, this would have been a condition to which appellee would have had no reason to object, for it would have barred none of his rights. But appellants had not paid the mortgage debt in full, and there was no statutory or legal requirement that appellee and the Trunkys should enter a satisfaction in full on the record, or grant a release, or agree that they would not prosecute their claim for a lien for the balance due. Whether the acceptance of the sum tendered would revert the title of the land in the mortgagor freed from the mortgage lien for the unpaid balance of the purchase money was a question which appellee and the Trunkys had the right to litigate, and to demand of appellee that in accepting the money tendered he and the Trunkys should sign an agreement which would estop and prevent them from litigating that question was a condition which appellants had no right to couple with his tender. Noyes v. Wyckoff, 114 N. Y. 204. For these reasons we are of the opinion that the circuit court correctly ruled that appellants did not make a valid tender, and that no redemption was made.

The judgment in favor of plaintiff was therefore right, and is affirmed.

Bunn, Ch. J., dissenting:

I concur in the opinion of the court in this case in so far as it sustains the mortgagor's right to redeem by paying the sum bid at the foreclosure sale, and the percentage and costs provided by statute; but I dissent from that portion of the decision which holds that the tender made by the mortgagor was insufficient, and therefore unavailable. The case of Noyes v. Wyckoff, 114 N. Y. 206, is relied upon to sustain the decision of the court. The court of appeals of New York said: "The tender is best tested by the effect its acceptance would have had upon the defendant, and it needs no argument to show that, had it been accepted, it must have been upon the terms offered, viz., in payment of the debt and extinguishment of the lien of the chattel mortgage, for the words used have no other meaning. This was a condition which plaintiff had no right to attach to its acceptance. He could not say, 'I offer you this money in payment of your debt, but, if you take it, you must extinguish your lien upon the iron ore.' Whether its acceptance would extinguish the mortgage was a question which defendant had a right to litigate, and to demand that in accepting the money offered defendant should create an estoppel which would prevent him from litigating the amount due on the mortgage was a condition which plaintiff could not attach to the offer, and which, being coupled with it, made the tender bad." That was a case where the defendant held a chattel mortgage on a quantity of iron ore lying upon the farm owned by the mortgagor, to secure a debt, or rather several debts, of uncertain amounts. The mortgagor sold the farm to a third party, afterwards plaintiff in the suit, subject to existing liens. The plaintiff purchaser tendered the defendant mortgagee $3,000 "in payment and extinguishment of the lien of the mortgage," and defendant refused to accept it. It was conceded, in an action for the conversion of the ore (which had in fact been appropriated by the defendant), that the tender was sufficient in amount, but the refusal to accept it was because of insufficiency in form. Held, that the tender was insufficient, because it stipulated for an extinguishment of the lien as well as for the satisfaction of the debt, which question of lien the plaintiff had a right to litigate, and thus the tender was coupled with a condition. The reasoning of the court would be applicable to every case of ordinary tender in payment of debt, for in every case the creditor has a right to litigate the question of amount, unless he considers that the amount of the tender is correct; and yet, if he refuses to accept a tender of the proper amount, he will lose in the question of tender, and will be compelled to take the tender, and pay costs not covered by the tender. The distinction attempted to be drawn between rules governing the tender of the debt and the tender of the amount to secure which the mortgage lien exists, involves a nicety which I feel incapable of exactly comprehending. After all, it may be that the court in that case only meant to hold that, notwithstanding the admission of the correctness of the amount of the mortgage lien being fully covered by the tender during the progress of the trial, yet, since the amount of the lien was undetermined when the tender was made, the purchaser had the right to litigate, and that, therefore, the tender was not good. In Halpin v. Phenix Ins. Co. 118 N. Y. 175,—a later case,—the same court said: "It is claimed that the tender was not effectual to entitle plaintiff to the judgment, for the reason that it was conditional on the execution by defendant of a satisfaction of the mortgage. The cases cited by the learned counsel for the appellant do not sustain this claim. The distinction must be observed between cases in which terms are added, not embraced in the contract, or which the acceptance of the tender would cause the creditor to admit, and those [cases] in which the conditions are such as the debtor, on payment of the debt, has a right to insist upon, and to which the creditor has no right to object." Such, undoubtedly, is the true rule.

In this state, when a mortgage debt is paid, it carries with it the satisfaction of the mortgage lien; and hence, by statute, the mortgagee, at the demand of the mortgagor, is required to indorse in writing, signed by himself or his duly-authorized agent, on the margin of the record of the mortgage, a satisfaction of the same in full, and a neglect to do so subjects him to a penalty. The execution of such a quittance, receipt, or release was all that was contained in the alleged condition accompanying the tender in the case at bar, and the condition, of course, was no more than the mortgagee was bound by law to perform in any event. The statutes referred to are §§ 5096-5098, Sand. & H. Dig. The controversy, stripped of all mere technical coatings, is whether or not in order to redeem his land from the foreclosure sale to the purchaser, the mortgagor should be required to pay the amount of the bid, the costs, and statutory percentage, or the amount of the mortgage debt, costs, and interest. The purchaser contended that he should pay the latter sum and because he did not tender that sum his tender was refused, and for no other reason. This court has decided that his tender was for the proper amount and it is inconsistent to hold the tender insufficient, I think. So far as the mere form of the tender is concerned, it is not perceived that the case of a tender made to the mortgagee as purchaser is different in effect, from that of a tender to a third party as purchaser. I think the tender should have been held good.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT (Department 1).

Ellen M. WILSON, Respt.,

v.

William DONALDSON et al., Defts., and

C. L. DONALDSON, Appt.

(121 Cal. 8.)

A statutory laborer's lien for harvesting grain is not superior to a chattel mortgage executed and recorded before the grain was ready for harvesting, where the statute does not provide for such superiority.

(May 31, 1898.)

APPEAL by defendant C. L. Donaldson from a judgment of the Superior Court for Sacramento County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover possession of certain grain. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. A. E. Miller and W. A. Gett, Jr., for appellant:

The Constitution, § 15, art. 20, gives laborers of every class a lien on property on which they bestow labor.

Everyone who, while lawfully holding personal property, renders service to its owner by labor or skill, has a special lien thereon.

NOTE.—For the effect of a mortgage of future crops, see extensive note to Dickey v. Waldo (Mich.) 23 L. R. A. 449.
43 L. R. A.

Civil Code, § 3051.

One who makes, alters, or repairs personal property, at request of the owner or legal possessor, has a lien for reasonable charges for work and materials, and may retain it until paid.

Civil Code, § 3052.

Appellant's services come within these sections.

Rohrbough v. Johnson, 107 Cal. 149; Douglass v. McFarland, 92 Cal. 656; Dano v. M. O. & R. R. Co. 27 Ark. 564; Emerson v. Hedrick, 42 Ark. 263; Chuck v. Garrison, 75 Cal. 199.

The person making repairs had a lien against the mortgagee.

Hammond v. Danielson, 126 Mass. 294; Williams v. Allsup, 10 C. B. N. S. 417; Scott v. Delahunt, 5 Lans. 375; Smith v. Stevens, 36 Minn. 303; Cuse v. Allen, 21 Kan. 217. 30 Am. Rep. 425; Paine v. Woodworth, 15 Wis. 302.

In cases like the one at bar, the laborer's lien is prior.

Howes v. Newcomb, 146 Mass. 76; Lynde v. Parker, 155 Mass. 481.

Mr. Albert M. Johnson for respondent.

Garoutte, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Respondent, owning a certain tract of land, leased it to defendant William Donaldson for a share of the crop as rent, to be delivered in the sack to her. He also gave her a chattel mortgage upon all his interest in the growing crop to secure a then existing indebtedness. William Donaldson hired appellant, C. L. Donaldson, to harvest the crop at an agreed price of $1 per acre. The grain was harvested under this contract, and upon the completion of the work this appellant took possession of 250 sacks of the grain, claiming a lien thereon to the extent of his contract price for the labor performed. Respondent claims the property under her chattel mortgage, executed and recorded before the grain was ready for harvesting.

Appellant contends that he is entitled to a lien upon the grain by virtue of §§ 3051 and 3052 of the Civil Code, which relate to statutory liens created when labor is performed upon personal property under the various circumstances there enumerated. Upon principle, Douglass v. McFarland, 92 Cal. 656, to some extent at least, supports the right of appellant, Donaldson, to claim a lien upon the grain for his labor under the circumstances we have detailed. For the purposes of the case alone it may be conceded that he is entitled to a lien. Such concession being made, the important question at once presents itself, Does this statutory laborer's lien of Donaldson take priority over the lien created by the chattel mortgage? An examination of the authorities upon the question from the various states of the Union discloses a conflict of judicial opinion. A well-considered case upholding the priority of the statutory or laborer's lien may be found in Case v. Allen, 21 Kan. 217, 30 Am. Rep. 425. But the great weight of authority is the other way. Pingrey, Chat. Mortg. §§ 730, 731; Jones, Liens, § 691; Jones, Chat. Mortg. § 472; Storms v. Smith, 137 Mass. 201; Ingalls v. Vance, 61 Vt. 582; Hanch v. Ripley, 127 Ind. 151, 11 L. R. A. 61. It is well said in the case last cited: "As the agister's lien depends alone upon the statute, it can have no greater force than the statute gives it, and as the legislature has, as we have said, manifested no intention of giving to it superiority over other liens, it can have none." In the absence of the statute, the appellant would have no lien whatever. All his rights come from the statute, and therefore must be weighed and limited by the statute. If the legislature had desired to give such lien claimants a priority over contract liens, it was an easy thing to have said so. And a declaration to that effect, not violative of constitutional rights, might be in line with a sound public policy. But here there is no such declaration, and it is not for the courts to ingraft such an amendment upon the law.

We have in this state a legislative declaration as to priority of liens in general which reads as follows: "Other things being equal, different liens upon the same property have priority according to the time of their creation except in cases of bottomry and respondentia." It may well be said that "other things" are equal in this case. If not equal, then they preponderate largely in favor of the chattel mortgage. This is no question of balancing existing equities between the chattel mortgagor and the chattel mortgagee, but a question of equities between the chattel mortgagee and a third party,—a stranger,—and such equities are all in favor of the chattel mortgagee. We find none in favor of the third party, the statutory lien claimant. The chattel mortgagee gave full value for her right of lien, and was first in point of time. She notified all the world of her rights, and warned the world to deal with the property at their peril. She made a contract expressly authorized by the law, and did all that the law demanded of her in order to preserve the fruits of her contract. No court of equity can suggest a single defect in her conduct. Upon the other hand, this appellant, with full knowledge of the existence of the chattel mortgage, contracted to harvest the crop. He did this voluntarily, and if he suffers loss by such conduct it is his own fault. It was a matter of choice upon his part to do the work, and he assumed the risk of losing his hire when he entered into the contract. To be sure, his labor may have been necessary for the preservation of the crop. At the same time it may be said that the chattel mortgage lien was occasioned by the advance of money to furnish the seed and plow the ground. If the words "other things" found in the statute quoted refer to equities (which we do not decide), then it may readily be seen that those words furnish no comfort to appellant.

It would seem that a great number of the cases cited from other states, tending to support appellant's contention as to the priority of a statutory lien over a contract lien, may be distinguished from the principle we deem controlling in this state. In many jurisdictions where these decisions are found a chattel mortgage carries with it title to the property and the immediate right of possession. In this state there is no such law, either as to the title or the right of possession. As the law stands in those states, the mortgagor by consent retaining possession of the property, the courts seem to hold that repairs necessary for its preservation, when ordered by the mortgagor in possession, being made upon the mortgagee's property, are deemed in equity to be made at his request. It may be said that in such cases the question is hardly one of priority of liens. The remaining contention relied upon by appellant has no substantial merit.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: Van Fleet, J.; Harrison, J.

Rehearing in banc denied.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

John P. RANSDALL, Plff. in Err.,

v.

Louisa BOSTON et al.

(172 Ill. 439.)

1. Parol testimony is not competent to prove a testator's declarations prior to or after the execution of his will to aid in its construction.
2. A condition attached to the vesting of an absolute estate under a devise or bequest to a son, that he shall procure a divorce from his present wife, in default of which his interest shall be restricted to a life estate, will not be deemed void as contrary to public policy, where the divorce action between the son and his wife was pending when the will was executed.
3. The condition attaching to the absolute vesting of the fee under a devise in trust to pay the income of real property to the testator's son until he shall procure a divorce from his wife, and upon the happening of that event to convey the fee to him, with a limitation over to "other devisees under the will in case he dies childless without having obtained a divorce,"—is a condition precedent, and if broken prevents him from taking the fee, even if it is invalid as contrary to public policy.
4. The interest of the son during the life of his mother is at most a mere expectancy under a will bequeathing property to a trustee to hold for the benefit of the widow during her life, and upon her death to vest absolutely in the son if he shall procure a divorce from his wife, so that he cannot, during her life, maintain a bill to have the gift to him declared absolute for invalidity of the condition.

(April 21, 1896.)

ERROR to the Circuit court for Morgan County to review a judgment in favor of defendants in an action brought to annul certain conditions in the will of Eli C. Ransdell, deceased. Affirmed.

Statement by Wilkin, J.:

Plaintiff in error filed his bill in the court below to set aside certain conditions in the last will of his father, Eli C. Ransdell. The facts alleged in the bill material to a decision of the case are as follows: Eli C. Ransdell died, testate, August 28, 1880, leaving him surviving, Ann Ransdell, his widow, plaintiff in error, John P. Ransdell, his son, and Louisa Boston, his daughter, the latter having a son, William Boston, and a daughter, Olga May Robinson. On July 10 prior to his death, he executed, in due form of law, his last will and testament, which was duly admitted to probate. By the first clause of that will he directed the payment of all his just debts. By the second he gave to his wife lot 161, in Jacksonville, Illinois, for life, and at her death to be disposed of as afterwards stated, and also certain personal property to be owned by her absolutely. By the third he gave the daughter, Louisa, 80 acres of land in Morgan county for life, and at her death to go to her children in equal parts; also the benefit of $1,000 for her life, the same to go to her children at her death, in equal parts. The fourth and fifth clauses, being those upon which the bill is based, are as follows: "Fourthly, I give, devise, and bequeath to my executors, as trustees, as hereinafter stated, the west half of the southwest quarter of section number twenty-nine (20), the east half of the east half of southeast quarter of section number thirty (30), the west half of the east half of the southeast quarter of section number thirty-one (31), all in township fifteen (15) north, and range nine (9), in Morgan county, Ill. being one hundred and sixty (160) acres, in trust, however, to permit my son, John P. Ransdell, to take and apply the rents, issues, and profits of the same, or to use and occupy the same without rent, if he shall so elect, until such time as he, the said John P. Ransdell, shall become sole and unmarried; and, upon the happening of that event, my said executors, or the survivor of them, trustees as aforesaid, shall release and convey the title to said lands to the said John P. Ransdell in fee; but if the said John P. Ransdell shall die never having had the bonds of matrimony dissolved between him and Julia Ransdell, his present wife, and he shall die childless, then said lands so bequeathed in trust, as last aforesaid, shall be held in trust for the other devisees under this will; but, if the said John P. Ransdell shall die having issue, the said real estate last aforesaid shall belong to said issue in equal parts, excluding the said Julia E. Ransdell from any and all interest whatever in the same. I enjoin upon my son, John, as a duty, that he furnish his mother the necessary firewood and such articles from the farm as she may need, and that he carefully look after her affairs so long as she may live. Fifth. All and singular the remainder of my said real and personal estate I will and bequeath to my executor, William Ransdell, in trust, however, for the following purposes, to wit: To have, hold, and manage and control the same for the use and benefit of my wife, Ann Ransdell, so long as she shall live. Said trustee shall collect the interest annually on the moneys invested, and pay over the same, less the necessary costs and expenses of managing the same; and the rents and profits of all my real estate not specifically devised shall be paid over to her, or for her use, during her natural life. At the death of my wife, Ann Ransdell, the principal of the fund so directed to be put at interest for her benefit during her life, and all the real estate devised to her for life, and in trust for her benefit during life, shall be held by my surviving executor in trust for the use and benefit of the said John P. Ransdell and

NOTE.—Many authorities upon testamentary conditions in restraint of marriage are found in a note to Phillips v. Ferguson (Va.) 1 L. R. A. 837. See also Mann v. Jackson (Me.) 16 L. R. A. 707.
43 L. R. A.

Louisa E. Boston, in equal parts, so that they shall share equally in the rents, issues, and profits of the same during life. If the said John P. Ransdell shall during his life be legally absolved from the bonds of matrimony whereby he is now joined in wedlock to Julia Ransdell, then, upon the happening of such event, but not before the death of Ann Ransdell, as aforesaid, the one half of the residue of my estate hereinbefore devised to my wife for her life, or in trust for her for life, shall immediately vest in the said John P. Ransdell absolutely. If the said bonds of matrimony shall be dissolved between the said John P. Ransdell and Julia Ransdell during the life of Ann Ransdell, said dissolution is not to affect in any way the devise for life to my wife, Ann Ransdell. If the said John P. Ransdell shall not be dissolved from the bonds of matrimony, but remain bound in wedlock to his now wife at the time of his death, then the one half of said residue of my estate, at the death of my wife, Ann Ransdell, shall go to and vest in his, the said John P. Ransdell's, issue, if any such there be, to the exclusion of the said Julia F. Ransdell, his present wife. If the said John P. Ransdell shall die without issue, then the said one half of said residue of my estate, after the death of my wife, Ann Ransdell, shall be held by the said William Ransdell, my surviving executor, to and for the use of the said Louisa E. Boston during her natural life, and after death to her children, in equal parts; and the other or remaining half of the residue of my said estate, after the death of my said wife, Ann Ransdell, shall be held by my said surviving executor for the use of the said Louisa E. Boston, with the right for her to receive, use, and apply the annual income arising from the same for and during her life. At her death the same shall vest in the children of her, the said Louisa E. Boston, in fee, in equal parts." The sixth clause empowered his executors named to make, execute, and deliver any and all deeds necessary to be executed in order to carry into complete effect all the provisions of the will, and by the seventh he nominated his brother, William Ransdell, and his wife, Ann Ransdell, to be his executors.

It is alleged in the bill that the testator was unduly prejudiced against the wife of complainant, Julia E. Ransdell, and was desirous that he should procure a divorce from her, and, being so influenced, provided in the fourth clause of his will that complainant should have the occupancy, use, rents, and profits of 160 acres of land for life or until the dissolution of said marriage relation between himself and his wife, when said lands should be by the executors conveyed to him in fee; but if he should die without issue, never having had said marital relations dissolved, then the land should descend to his sister, and at her death to her children. By an amendment to the bill it was further alleged: "That said testator, by the fifth clause of the said will, also devised and bequeathed to your orator one half of certain moneys and land, at the expiration of the life estate of his widow, Ann Ransdell, to be owned and enjoyed absolutely and in fee simple, conditioned upon the dissolution of the marriage relation existing between your orator and the said Julia E. Ransdell; but, if said marriage relation should not be dissolved, then your orator should only have the use and income of the same for life, and at your orator's death, in default of issue, the same should descend to your orator's sister, Louisa Boston, and at her death to her two children." It is then alleged in the bill that the provisions in said fourth and fifth clauses, being intended by the testator to induce the complainant to secure a divorce from his wife, are void in law, being contrary to good morals and public policy, and, as such, should be so held and decreed. It then sets out that Louisa Boston is the mother of the two children named who are tenants in fee as remaindermen under the provisions of the will, in the event complainant should die without issue, not having been divorced from Julia E. Ransdell; that complainant is not the father of any child or children living, or of any which have been born since the death of the testator. Louisa Boston, her children, and the husband of the daughter, Joel Robinson, together with John A. Ayers, administrator de bonis non of the estate of the testator with the will annexed, were made parties defendant. The prayer is that, upon a hearing, "the provisions of said will requiring your orator to procure a divorce from his wife as a condition precedent to the enjoyment of the fee of the 160 acres of land be decreed to be absolutely null and void, and that the title to said land be declared to be vested in your orator in fee;" and, by an amendment to the prayer, that he be decreed "the owner in fee of the property devised and bequeathed to him by the fifth clause of said will, subject to said widow's life estate, free from said illegal and immoral provision." There is also a prayer for general relief. Louisa Boston, her two children, and Joel Robinson filed a general demurrer to the bill, which was overruled, and leave given to answer. By their joint and several answer, they admit the allegations of the bill as to the execution of the will and death of the testator; deny that the testator was unduly prejudiced against Julia E. Ransdell, or that he desired the complainant to procure a divorce from her, or that he intended, by the terms of his will, to induce the complainant to secure a divorce; deny that the provisions of the will are contrary to good morals or public policy; but aver that the same are just and in accordance with sound policy and good morals, and valid and binding upon the complainant and all others; that the claims of complainant are stale, and are and should be barred by lapse of time; that the uses and purposes for which said trust was created by the will were and are lawful; and that said devise to said trustees was and is a valid devise, and the court has no authority to divest said trustees of the title so vested by said devise; and deny any and all other matters not specifically admitted or denied. To this answer a general replication was filed, and the cause referred to a master to take proofs. Upon the coming in of his report, the same was approved, and a decree entered dismissing the bill for want of equity, and from that decree this writ of error is prosecuted.

Messrs. Lyman Lacey, Sr., and William A. Crawley for plaintiff in error.

Mr. John A. Bellatti, for defendants in error.

Wilkin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

As will be seen by the foregoing statement, the relief prayed in the bill is based upon the allegation that the condition named in the fourth and fifth clauses of the will of Eli C. Ransdell, upon which the complainant should become the absolute owner of the property mentioned, is contrary to good morals, against public policy, and therefore void. In support of the proposition, the rule announced in 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 291a, and authorities there cited, 2 Redf. Wills, 293, Conrad v. Long, 33 Mich. 78, and 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 933, note 1, is relied upon. The language of Judge Story is (having spoken of the law as to devises and bequests in restraint of marriage): "So, also, conditions annexed to a gift, the tendency of which is to induce husband and wife to live separate, or be divorced, are upon grounds of public policy and public morals, held void." But he says (§ 291e): "This whole subject, as to what conditions in restraint of marriage shall be regarded merely in terrorem, and so void, and what ones are valid, is certainly, both in England and this country, involved in great uncertainty and confusion." And in § 291d: "The question as to what conditions, affecting marriage, are valid, must depend upon the circumstances of each particular case, and will be very materially affected by the consideration how far the condition was one fairly applicable to the relation of the parties, and the peculiar views and situation of the donor and donee."

While it must be admitted that the language of the testator used in these clauses of his will impress one with the belief that he desired his son to obtain a divorce from his wife, and that he conditioned his gift to him with a view to encourage that result, there are certain facts and circumstances which go far to sustain the view that his purpose was simply to secure the gift to his son in the manner which, in his judgment, would render it of the greatest benefit to him, in view of the relations then existing between him and his wife. They had for several years prior to the execution of the will been separated. A divorce suit between them had then been pending for more than two years, in which they each alleged statutory grounds against the other for divorce, and they continued such divorce proceedings, and lived separate and apart from each other, for many years after the death of the testator. Certainly, it cannot be said that the condition tended to encourage either the separation or the bringing of a divorce suit, both having taken place long prior to the execution of the will. We do not regard as competent the extrinsic evidence of the declaration of the testator, made some two years prior to the execution of the will, to the effect that he thought, as the son and his wife had separated, they had better remain so, and, if they lived together, he would disinherit the son, and that he could not do much for the son while he lived with his wife. The general rule is that, in the construction of wills, parol testimony is competent to prove the circumstances of the testator at the time, the condition of his property, his relations to his family, etc., but never to prove his declarations prior to or after the execution of the instrument. The testimony, however, was of no controlling importance. He did not disinherit his son upon condition that he should live with his wife or should obtain a divorce from her. He simply made one provision for him in case they were not divorced, and another if they were. While it is of the first importance to society that contract and testamentary gifts which are calculated to prevent lawful marriages or to bring about the separation or divorcement of husbands and wives should not be upheld, it is no less important that persons of sound mind and memory, free from restraint and undue influence, should be allowed to dispose of their property by will, with such limitations and conditions as they believe for the best interests of their donees. On the whole case, we are inclined to the view that the condition in this will should not be held as contrary to public policy and void. This view is in harmony with the cases of Cooper v. Remsen, 5 Johns. Ch. 459; Born v. Horstmann, 80 Cal. 452, 5 L. R. A. 577; and Thayer v. Spear, 58 Vt. 327. It is true that the force of the reasoning in these cases is somewhat weakened, as applied to this case, by the fact that there the gift was to daughters, whereas here it is to a son; but the principle involved is the same.

We do not, however, consider the foregoing conclusion as essential to an affirmance of the decree below, for the reason that, even if the condition should be held void, complainant is not entitled to the relief prayed, on the facts alleged in his bill and the proof made upon the hearing. It is said by Pomeroy in his Equity Jurisprudence (vol. 2, § 933, B): "It is ordinarily said that all conditions annexed to gifts which prohibit marriage generally and absolutely are void and inoperative. This, however, is a very inaccurate mode of statement, since a condition precedent annexed to a devise of land, even if in complete restraint, will, if broken, be operative, and prevent the devise from taking effect." And in note 1 to the same section the rule is thus stated: "In devises and other gifts of real estate, courts of equity follow the rules of the common law concerning the operation of conditions generally, and their effects upon the vesting and divesting of estates. In gifts of real estate, therefore, when a condition in restraint of marriage is precedent and is broken, it prevents the estate from vesting at all, whether the restraint be absolute or partial, and whether there be a gift over or not. When the condition is subsequent and void, it is entirely inoperative, and the donee retains the property unaffected by its breach." We do not understand counsel for plaintiff in error to question the correctness of the rule thus stated. It is contended, however, that the condition here is subsequent, and not precedent. This position is clearly untenable. By the express language of the will, the absolute ownership of the property was only to vest in the donee upon performance of the condition. In other words, by its express terms, it is a condition precedent, and the bill designates it as a "condition precedent." An attempt is made to construe it into a condition subsequent, upon the theory that the trust created in the executors is a merenaked or passive trust, and therefore, the condition being void, the title passed immediately to plaintiff in error, under § 3 of chapter 30 of our statute entitled "Conveyances," and that the limitation over, in case he died childless, to "the other devisees under the will," is void for uncertainty. It is clear that the trust is not a naked one. Kirkland v. Cox, 94 Ill. 412; Perry, Tr. § 200; Hill, Trustees, 4th Am. ed. 376. We are unable to see upon what reasonable grounds it can be said the devise over is uncertain. It seems clear that, even if the condition named in the fourth clause should be held void, the title in fee to the lands therein described could not vest in plaintiff in error, the condition being precedent to the vesting of such title, and the devise being of realty.

The same is true as to any real estate devised by the fifth clause. But it is insisted that, as to any personalty disposed of by that clause (the condition being void), the ownership in plaintiff in error would become absolute, whether the condition was precedent or subsequent. It is true the distinction between bequests of realty and personalty insisted upon exists; but we are unable to agree with counsel that such distinction can be availed of by the complainant below upon the allegations of his bill and the proof made in support thereof. In the first place, in no event can he have any right or title to the property, personal or real, mentioned in the fifth clause, until the death of his mother, Ann Ransdell. She is still living, and, of course, his death may occur prior to hers, and therefore his present interest is, at most, a mere expectancy. But, aside from this consideration, the allegations of the bill are entirely too vague and indefinite to support a decree vesting any title, present or future, in personal property devised by the will, and certainly there is no proof in the record to authorize such a decree.

We think the circuit court properly dismissed the bill at complainant's costs, for want of equity, and its decree will accordingly be affirmed.

43 L. R. A.

Joseph R. MORTON, Appt.,

v.

Anna MURRAY et al.

(176 Ill. 54.)

1. Parol evidence is admissible to show that an instrument purporting to be signed by one person for another was written and signed by the latter's direction, in his presence.
2. An instrument written and signed by one person for another, in his presence and by his direction, is sufficient to bind him, under the statute of frauds, without any written authority to sign for him.

(Magruder, J., dissents.)

(October 24, 1898.)

A PPEAL by complainants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for McDonough County in favor of defendants in an action brought to compel specific performance of a contract to convey land. Reversed.

Statement by Carter, Ch. J.:

This bill for specific performance was brought by appellant, Joseph R. Morton, against the heirs at law of John F. Murray, deceased, to compel them to make him a deed to the E. ¼ of the S. E. ¼ of section 18, in township 5 N., and range 3 W., in McDonough county. The bill alleged that appellant, in August, 1873, being then fourteen years old, went to live and work for John F. Murray, whose wife was appellant's aunt, and that he so lived with and worked for Murray on his farm, as a farm hand, until August, 1880; that the work he did was reasonably worth $20 a month, and that all he ever received for such work was just enough to clothe him,—about $25 or $30 a year; that, when he quit working for Murray, he complained to him that he had not been paid enough for his work; and that then Murray, for the purpose of quieting and satisfying him, told him that whenever he got married and settled down, he would give him a piece of land that would more than recompense him for all he had ever done for him, and that he (appellant), believing and trusting in such promise, let the matter of his wages pass; that afterwards he went to Nebraska, and there farmed, and while living in Nebraska, and still being a single man, Murray wrote, or caused to be written, and sent to him by mail, his (Murray's) contract as follows:

Colchester Illi Febuary the 4 1886.

Dear nephew wee are all well ase i hope this will find you the same well Joe your uncle John wanted mee to rit to you for him this is what he sed well Jo ase I have always promest to give yo a farm I have bought the Billey O Stevens farme and the Dan Clark forty for yo I want you to get you a wife and come home and tind it and give me the toftis ase long as I live then to Lisey as long as she lives and at oure deth the land shall be yours I will make you a dead to it I think this will pay you for all the work you have don for mee I will tile it out and help you to fixt up the house and barn and ase mutch other improving as I see fit to do but dont marry some one that you dont like just to get the land for if you will take it thataway and be satisfied I will cheep it five years for you if you want mee to for the rent I get from others will be the same ase what you would pay me for the land but if not I will sell the land I want to give Wibthe same cind of a canche on a pece of land no more at present I will close hoping to her frome you soon

NOTE.—As to signature made by proxy, see Lewis v. Watson (Ala.) 22 L. R. A. 297, and note.

from X J. F. Murray
by Miss John Murray.

The bill further alleges that Murray seldom did any writing, except sometimes signing his name, and that his wife was in the habit of doing his writing for him, and signing his name to all papers, and that she wrote the foregoing letter, and signed his name to it at his instance; that the words "nephew" and "Jo," in the letter, referred to appellant, and "Lisey" to Mrs. Murray, and that the land referred to was the land abovedescribed; that appellant notified Murray that he would take the land and accept the proposition made in said contract in full satisfaction of all claims against him. The bill further alleged, that the complainant was married in March, 1889, and that, on account of the land being then rented, he did not move into the house then on the premises until March, 1890, and that he then took possession for the purpose of complying, and in compliance, with the terms and conditions of the contract; that he remained on the land, and farmed it, until March 1, 1895, and paid Murray two fifths of all that was raised and grown on the land, and also for the use of the pasture, all to Murray's entire satisfaction, and that he made lasting and valuable improvements on the farm; that, wishing to farm more land, he rented 80 acres about three miles distant, and farmed it for several years; that in the spring of 1895, after consultation with and on the advice of Murray, he rented a quarter section in another township, and moved on the same, in order to save the loss of time in going to and from his house; that it was then understood between them that he should move back on the Murray land in the fall of 1896, and farm it and hold it just the same as before, and that Murray would, before his death, convey the same to him; that he had made all arrangements and did intend to move back into the house in October, 1896, when tenant was to move out, but that the heirs of Murray (Murray and wife having died), in order to hinder and prevent him from taking possession, surreptitiously procured one Stoneking to move into the house before the tenant had vacated the same; and that Stoneking was now unlawfully in possession, under one Wilbur Sutton, who claimed the land. The bill further alleged that Murray died, testate, April 9, 1896, and 43 L. R. A.

by his will, devised certain lands to said Wilbur Sutton, but the parcel of land here in controversy was not mentioned in said will; that said Murray left no widow, child, or children surviving him. The bill prayed for specific performance of the contract, and for general relief. Defendants, in their answer, denied all the material allegations in the bill specifically, claiming that appellant's possession was only that of a tenant, and not in pursuance of any agreement that the land was to be his, and set up and pleaded the statute of frauds as to any such agreement. On the hearing, the bill was dismissed for want of equity, and appellant has appealed to this court.

Mr. C. F. Wheat, for appellant:

Parol evidence was properly heard to explain and identify what land was meant and intended by the words "the Billy O. Stevens farm" and "the Dan Clark forty," used in the contract.

McConnell v. Brillhart, 17 Ill. 354, 65 Am. Dec. 661; Swift v. Lee, 65 Ill. 337; Garden City Sand Co. v. Miller, 157 Ill. 225; Fry, Spec. Perf. Contr. 248, note—parol evidence to identify the property sold; Id. part 3, chap. 3; Fowler v. Radican, 52 Ill. 405.

There was a good and valuable consideration for the alleged contract moving from Mr. Morton to Mr. Murray for this land.

Warren v. Warren, 105 Ill. 568.

No acceptance in writing was necessary in this case.

Farwell v. Lowther, 18 Ill. 252; Browne, Stat. Fr. 5th ed. 468.

Messrs. Neece & Son, for appellees:

The contract or some memorandum or note thereof must be in writing signed by the party to be charged or by some person by him lawfully authorized in writing signed by such party.

2 Starr & C. Stat. chap. 59, § 2.

To take a case out of the statute of frauds by a writing signed by an agent, the authority of the agent must be in writing.

Bissell v. Terry, 69 Ill. 184; Albertson v. Ashton, 102 Ill. 50; Edwards v. Tyler, 141 Ill. 454; Kopp v. Reiter, 146 Ill. 437, 22 L. R. A. 273.

The terms of a written instrument giving agent authority to sell cannot be changed by parol.

Kozel v. Dearlove, 144 Ill. 23.

The authority of the husband to bind the wife, or of the wife to bind the husband, must be in writing and signed.

Edwards v. Tyler, 141 Ill. 454; Kopp v. Reiter, 146 Ill. 437, 22 L. R. A. 273.

When signature of a deceased person is by mark, it must be proved that decedent signed the writing himself or authorized someone to sign for him.

Chadwell v. Chadwell, 98 Ky. 643.

If witnesses to a will sign by their marks and be dead, it must be proved that such marks were made by them.

1 Jarman, Wills, 5th Am. ed. pp. 213, 214, and notes.

A written contract may be rescinded by a verbal agreement.

Morrill v. Colehour, 82 Ill. 618; Houston v. Sledge, 101 N. C. 640, 2 L. R. A. 487.

It must appear that his name was signed, not only at Murray's request, but also in his presence, and this not on the ground of agency, but that he used his wife's hand to write his name.

Rockford, R. I. & St. L. R. Co. v. Shunick, 65 Ill. 223.

The authority to execute an instrument under seal must be under seal, and the principal cannot ratify an instrument under seal executed by an agent without authority, except by a writing of equal dignity.

Ingraham v. Edwards, 64 Ill. 526.

Carter, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a bill for the specific performance of a contract to convey 80 acres of land. We are satisfied that the principal allegations of the bill were sustained by the evidence, and that the decree appealed from is erroneous. The complainant, Morton, who was a nephew of Murray's wife, from the age of fourteen lived in the family of Murray, and worked for him for upward of six years, performing for the greater part of the time the labor of a hired hand, but received for his services little more than his clothing. Murray regarded him with affection, and considered himself indebted to Morton, and promised to convey to him a tract of land, to become his property at his (Murray's) death. It was proved beyond dispute that Murray repeatedly said that he purchased the two forty-acre tracts, constituting the land in controversy, for Morton, and that he intended to convey them to him. It was also clearly proved that the letter set out in the preceding statement was written, at the request of Murray, by his wife. The contention that it was not shown to have been written in the presence of Murray, at his dictation, so as to avoid the application of the statute of frauds, will be noticed at another place. It was also sufficiently proved by statements of Murray that Morton had written a letter accepting the propositions contained in Murray's letter, and his acceptance was also otherwise shown. One witness testified that he heard a letter from Morton to Murray read in the presence of Murray and his wife, accepting the proposition. He returned from Nebraska, where he was living when the letter was written, got married, and moved upon, cultivated, and improved the land for five years, and paid to Murray two fifths of the crops, as stipulated in the letter. Much evidence was introduced on the hearing tending to prove that the letter dated February 4, 1886, was dictated by John Murray. Jane Hilgen, a witness for complainant, testifies and says: "Am a sister of complainant. John F. Murray's wife was a sister of our mother. Have known Mr. Murray ever since I can remember. I will be forty years old next birthday. I resided with the Murrays. Went there in 1873, and lived there until 1877, when I was married. They never had any children. Mrs. Murray died December 19, 1894. Mr. Murray died April 16, 1896. Mr. 43 L. R. A.

Murray did not do his own writing when I stayed there. He was very nervous. I do not remember of any letter or other paper he wrote while I was there. He made a mark,—kind of a cross. I saw him sign papers that way. It is on my deed that I have. While I lived there, I never saw him make his cross to any papers where his name was signed; only to letters. I have seen them to letters. Mrs. Murray wrote the letters. I am acquainted with Mrs. Murray's handwriting. Would know it anywhere I saw it. While I was there, she always did his writing." Witness was here shown a paper, a letter dated April 25, 1885, and said it was in the handwriting of her aunt, Mrs. Murray. Witness was now shown a paper, a letter dated February 4, 1886, and said it was in Mrs. Murray's handwriting, and that the cross is something like she has seen him (Mr. Murray) make. "I have written letters for him myself, and he signed his mark on the letter." Edgar Sutton testified: "I have seen Uncle John F. Murray write some, but not very much. I never saw him write a letter, but I think I would know his handwriting. I never saw him write anything but his name. I have heard Mr. Murray request his wife, Elizabeth, to write letters for him. During the time I resided there, he always got his wife, Elizabeth, to write such letters as he wished to have written. I have looked at the paper now shown me, dated February 4, 1886. I know the writing. It is in Elizabeth Murray's handwriting,—except I do not know whose handwriting the cross is in. I can recollect of Murray telling his wife to write to Jo; but I do not recollect of him telling her what to put in the letter. I heard him tell her to write to Jo something about the place. I don't know what they put in the letter about the place. The place he spoke of was the Clark forty and the Billy Stevens place. It was about 1886 I refer to. I can recollect him telling her to write to Joseph R. Morton, but I don't think she wrote right at the time. I was not in there at the time the letter was written or for a couple of days afterwards. The writing of the letter was spoken of along in the evening. I was in the house. I did not see her write any that night. Two or three days afterwards I knew of his going to mail a letter. If he had only one, that one was to Joseph R. Morton, for he had her write one to him. All I heard Murray say was that he had got the place for Jo. He told her to write to him that he had got the place for him; and if he wanted it, to come back. I did not know whether he meant for him to farm it, or what he meant." T. J. Ridden testified that he had a conversation with Murray, in which he said "he had got Aunt Liza—he called her—to write a letter to Jo to come back again; he had bought a piece of land, and he wanted him to come back and farm it long as Mr. Murray and his woman lived; then it was to fall back to Jo. His woman wrote it." P. H. McGan testified that he and his wife visited Murray about the time of Jo's marriage. "Murray and I were in the house, and he spoke about it. I told him I noticed Jo had got married. He laughed, and said: 'I expect he is aiming to hold me to my contract.' I had never heard of this contract, and I asked him what he meant. He said: 'I had Aunt Eliza write a letter to Jo, in Nebraska, telling him, if he would come home here and marry, I would buy him a place; and he just came back, and did exactly what I wanted him to, and,' he says, 'I am able to do my part of the contract.' He said: 'I bought that Billy Stevens forty and that Clark forty.' He says: 'Jo can't go on this year, because it is rented. He will go on it next year.' " The record contains other evidence of a similar import, but it will not be necessary to repeat it here. The facts that Morton moved off the land in 1895, and that Murray paid him for some improvements which he had made, we do not, in view of the explanatory proofs, regard as of controlling importance. Morton needed more land, and had for a year or two been cultivating another tract a few miles distant; and it seems to have been agreed between them that too much time was lost in passing back and forth, and that it would be better for Morton to rent another farm of 160 acres, and move onto it for two seasons, and for Murray in the meantime to rent the 80 acres in question to others, for the same part of the crops Morton had been paying. It was proved by different witnesses that, after Morton moved off the land, Murray repeatedly said that he was to move back in the fall of 1896, and that he intended to convey the land to him as he had agreed. Murray died in April, 1896, and Morton was prevented by those succeeding Murray in the control of the property from taking possession. There was a sufficient consideration for the agreement to convey, and Morton entered upon and performed his part of the contract.

The only question upon which any doubt can arise is whether or not the statute of frauds must operate to prevent the specific performance of the contract. The 2d section of the statute [Starr & C. Stat. chap. 59] provides that "no action shall be brought to charge any person upon any contract for the sale of lands . . . unless such contract, or some memorandum or note thereof, shall be in writing, and signed by the party to be charged therewith, or some other person thereunto by him lawfully authorized in writing, signed by such party." It is insisted by counsel for appellees that, in writing the letter and signing Murray's name, Mrs. Murray acted as the agent of Murray, and, it not appearing that she had any authority in writing signed by Murray, the statute applies, and the suit cannot be maintained,—citing Bissell v. Terry, 69 Ill. 184, Albertson v. Ashton, 102 Ill. 50, and Edwards v. Tyler, 141 Ill. 454. These cases do not reach the question as presented by this record. It is not pretended that Mrs. Murray had any written authority from Murray to write the letter or to sign his name to it, but it is contended that the letter was the letter of Murray himself,—that it was written in his presence, by his dictation, and in his name; and we are of the opinion that this view is fully sustained by the evidence.

43 L. R. A.

It is true, as contended by counsel for appellees, that there is no direct evidence that Murray stood by and dictated the letter, or directed his wife to sign his name to it when it was written; but such a fact may be proved by indirect as well as by direct evidence, and we think this fact was sufficiently shown by the circumstances, and Murray's statements and admissions proved on the hearing. It was shown that he rarely did any writing, but that his wife was in the habit of doing his writing for him. He spoke of writing to Morton about the matter before the letter was written, and afterwards repeatedly spoke of having written to Morton about conveying the land to him, and it is not pretended that he wrote or had written more than one letter on this subject. The evidence was clear that he knew of the letter and its contents, and regarded it as his own, and that he expressed his intention of complying with its terms. The testimony tended to prove that he mailed the letter himself. This proof had a further effect than to show a mere parol ratification,—it tended to prove that the act was his own. If it had been proved that, after the letter was written, he stated to others that his wife had written and signed his name to it in his presence and by his direction, it would not be denied that such proof would have been competent to prove that instrument was his own, individual act, and not that of an agent. So, too, then, was it proper to prove the same fact indirectly, and there was practically no evidence to the contrary.

Considering the letter, also, in connection with the circumstances and Murray's admissions proved, it contained some inherent evidence of the fact contended for by appellant. After the first few lines from Mrs. Murray, the language changes, as if coming directly from Murray in the first person, and in substance says: "As I have always promised to give you a farm, I have bought the Billy O. Stevens farm and the Dan Clark forty for you. I want you to get you a wife, and come home and tend it, and give me the two fifths as long as I live, then to Lisey (meaning his, Murray's, wife) as long as she lives, and at our death the land shall be yours. I will make you a deed to it. I think this will pay you for all the work you have done for me. I will tile it out, and help you fix up the house and barn, and as much other improving as I see fit to do," etc. It was then signed, "from X J. F. Murray, by Mrs. John Murray." From an inspection of the original letter it would seem that the cross preceding Murray's name was placed there after the name was written; and while there was no direct evidence that he made this cross, it was proved that he sometimes signed papers in that way.

Without considering whether or not, under the facts of this case, a parol ratification of the act of Mrs. Murray, as Murray's agent, in writing the letter, acted upon in part by both parties, would be sufficient to take the case out of this statute, we are satisfied that from the proof it should have been found that the instrument or letter was that of Murray himself, and that no authority in writing to Mrs. Murray, signed by him, was necessary. One may write and execute an instrument by the hand of another when done in his presence and by his direction, and the fact may be proved by parol evidence, and an action may be brought upon the instrument without violating the statute of frauds. See 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 956, and cases there cited; Meyer v. King, 29 La. Ann. 567; Rockford, R. I. & St. L. R. Co. v. Shunick, 65 Ill. 223; Ball v. Dunster-ville, 4 T. R. 313; Truman v. Lore, 14 Ohio St. 154; Gardner v. Gardner, 5 Cush. 483, 52 Am. Dec. 740; Videau v. Griffin, 21 Cal. 392; Bartlett v. Drake, 100 Mass. 175, 97 Am. Dec. 92, 1 Am. Rep. 101. We see no reason why the fact of execution cannot be proved by parol evidence on the statements of the party to be charged and of facts and circumstances tending to prove the principal fact as in other cases. Treating the letter as a contract in writing to convey the land, as it was, the statute of frauds was not a defense to the case established by the evidence.

Finding the decree to be against the evidence, it is accordingly reversed, and the cause is remanded to the Circuit Court, with directions to enter a decree for the specific performance of the contract, as prayed in the bill.

Magruder, J., dissents.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

J. E. BIXBY
v.

OMAHA & COUNCIL BLUFFS RAILWAY & BRIDGE COMPANY, Appt.

(105 Iowa, 293.)

1. Medical books, although admitted to be standard, cannot be read to the jury for the purpose of proving the symptoms of diseases, where they have not been referred to by witnesses whom they are offered to contradict.
2. Medical works are not admissible under Code, § 4618, making historical works and books of science or art presumptive evidence of facts of general notoriety or interest therein stated.

(May 10, 1898.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Pottawattamie County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Wright & Baldwin, for appellant:

The court erred in allowing plaintiff's counsel to read to the jury, over the defendant's objection, the extracts from medical works.

Gallagher v. Market Street R. Co. 67 Cal. 13, 50 Am. Rep. 713; Ashworth v. Kitt-ridge, 12 Cush. 193, 59 Am. Dec. 178; Com. v. Wilson, 1 Gray, 337; Washburn v. Cud-dihy, 8 Gray, 430; Melvin v. Easley, 46 N. C. (1 Jones, L.) 387, 62 Am. Dec. 171; Carter v. State, 2 Ind. 617; Fowler v. Lewis, 25 Tex. Supp. 380.

Facts of general notoriety and interest are facts of a public nature, either at home or abroad, not existing in the memory of man, as contradistinguished from facts of a private nature, existing within the knowledge of living men, and as to which they may be examined as witnesses. It is of such public facts, including historical facts, facts of the exact sciences, and of literature or art, when relevant to a cause, that, under the provisions of the Code, proof may be made by the production of books of standard authority.

Morris v. Harmer, 7 Pet. 558, 8 L. ed. 783.

Medicine is not considered as one of the exact sciences. It is of that character of inductive sciences which are based on data which each successive year may correct and expand, so that what is considered a sound induction last year may be considered as an unsound one this year, and the very book which evidences the induction, if it does not become obsolete, may be altered in material features from edition to edition, so that we cannot tell, in citing from even a living author, whether what we read is not something that this very author now regrets.

Wharton, Ev. § 665; Gallagher v. Market Street R. Co. 67 Cal. 13, 56 Am. Rep. 713; Ashworth v. Kittridge, 12 Cush. 193, 59 Am. Dec. 178; Whiton v. Albany City Ins. Co. 109 Mass. 24; Com. v. Sturdivant, 117 Mass. 132, 19 Am. Rep. 401; Com. v. Brown, 121 Mass. 69; People v. Hall, 48 Mich. 482, 42 Am. Rep. 477; Pinney v. Cahill, 48 Mich. 584; Fraser v. Jennison, 42 Mich. 206; Gale v. Rector, 5 Ill. App. 481; St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Jones (Tex.) 14 S. W. 309; Com. v. Wilson, 1 Gray, 337; Washburn v. Cud-dihy, 8 Gray, 430; Fowler v. Lewis, 25 Tex. Supp. 380; Ware v. Ware, 8 Me. 42; Harris v. Panama R. Co. 3 Bosw. 7; Melvin v. Easley, 46 N. C. (1 Jones, L.) 387, 62 Am. Dec. 171; State v. O'Brien, 7 R. I. 336; Davis v. State, 38 Md. 35; Carter v. State, 2 Ind. 617; Boyle v. State, 57 Wis. 472, 46 Am. Rep. 41; Stilling v. Thorp, 54 Wis. 534, 41 Am. Rep. 60; Fox v. Peninsular White Lead & O. Works, 84 Mich. 676; Epps v. State, 102 Ind. 539; People v. Sessions, 58 Mich. 594; Rogers, Expert Testimony, pp. 237-273; 2 Rice, Ev. pp. 1254-1255; Bradner, Ev. 315; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 207; Collier v. Simpson, 5 Car. & P. 73; Cocks v. Purday, 2 Car. & P. 270; Union P. R. Co. v. Yates, 49 U. S. App. 241, 79 Fed. Rep. 584, 40 L. R. A. 553, 25 C. C. A. 103.

NOTE.—The use of scientific books and treatises as evidence is the subject of an extensive note to Union P. R. Co. v. Yates (C. C. App. 8th C.) 40 L. R. A. 553.
43 L. R. A.

Messrs. Harl & McCabe, for appellee: This court is now asked to overturn a rule of evidence maintained by the courts of Iowa and observed by the bar for fifty years.

Bowman v. Woods, 1 G. Greene, 441; Donaldson v. Mississippi & M. R. Co. 18 Iowa, 291, 87 Am. Dec. 391; Clark v. State, 12 Ohio, 483, 40 Am. Dec. 481.

All admit that works treating of the exact sciences are competent, and a number of the courts hold that such works of inductive science as are not "each successive year corrected and expanded," are competent.

Sound reason must then be found for the distinction, else the rule making that distinction is unsound. A legal rule not based upon sound reason is not the law, whoever or how many assert it to be the law.

The object of judicial investigations is to discover and elicit truth, not to suppress it. McKivitt v. Cone, 30 Iowa, 455.

The best evidence and the best attainable evidence, mean, or should mean, one and the same thing.

Appleton, Ev. p. 190; 1 Phillipps, Ev. p. 176; 1 Starkie, Ev. p. 39; Morris v. Harmer, 7 Pet. 554, 8 L. ed. 781.

In Wisconsin the learned court insists upon at least one case to qualify the witness to testify.

Soquet v. State, 72 Wis. 659; Boyle v. State, 57 Wis. 472, 46 Am. Rep. 41.

A general practitioner is probably not incompetent to give expert testimony on the ground that he has not had, in his experience, a case like the one in question.

Rogers, Expert Testimony, 2d ed. p. 102, ¶ 5; Finnegan v. Fall River Gas Works Co. 159 Mass. 311.

Some courts hold that if the witness is a doctor, that is enough to qualify him as a witness.

Missouri P. R. Co. v. Finley, 38 Kan. 550; New Orleans, J. & G. N. R. Co. v. Allbritton, 38 Miss. 242, 75 Am. Dec. 98; Washington v. Cole, 6 Ala. 212.

Now, measure the folly of a tribunal, seeking truth, that refuses to listen to Gower or Spitzka on nervous diseases, to Carpenter on physiology, to Gray on anatomy, Pasteur on the themes on which, when he spoke, the world listened, until some man whose every idea, if he has any, has been secured from the authors in question, comes out of the brush and "adds an authority which . . . the printed page alone does not possess."

When the work is shown to be a standard to which medical men resort as the highest, clearest expression of the information and judgment of their profession upon that subject, how passing comprehension is the nonsense that demands a filter and then prescribes such an one as is universally accepted.

Citizens' Gaslight & H. Co. v. O'Brien, 19 Ill. App. 233; Fort Wayne v. Coombs, 107 Ind. 75, 57 Am. Rep. 82; Sarle v. Arnold, 7 R. I. 582.

Ladd, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action is brought for injuries sustained by the plaintiff in a collision between 43 L. R. A.

a street car of the defendant and a train on the Chicago, Burlington, & Quincy Railroad. The liability of the defendant appears to have been conceded at the trial, and the extent of the injury and the amount to be allowed as damages were the only questions in controversy. There was some contusion of the skin and bruises, but these soon disappeared, and at the time of the trial there was no objective or external evidence of any injury. The theory of the plaintiff was that he had received a serious shock to his nervous system, and had symptoms indicating locomotor ataxia or some neurotic trouble. Dr. Barstow testified to such symptoms, while Drs. Jennings, Lacey, and Thomas insisted that there existed no signs of any disease. The plaintiff was permitted, over the objection of the defendant, to read in evidence extracts from "Pepper's System of Medicine," Vol. 5, under the heads, "Tabes Dorsalis, Locomotor Ataxia," "Morbid Anatomy" and "Physiology"; from a work by Dr. Ranney under the heads "Nerve Cells and Nerve Fibers," "Spinal Neurasthenia"; from a work by Dr. Hirt entitled "Diseases of the General Nervous System," under the heads "Functional Neurosis," "Diseases of the Pneumogastric Nerve," and "Affections of the Air Passage Due to the Lesions of the Vagus"; also extracts from a lecture by S. Weir Mitchell on "Permanent Headache"; and from a lecture by Dr. H. B. Wood on "The Remote Effects of Traumatism, as Seen by the Neurologist." These works were admitted to be standard, but had not been quoted or cited as authorities by the physicians in giving their testimony. The portions read to the jury treated of the symptoms, and not the cure, of diseases, and might be fairly well understood by those somewhat acquainted with the nomenclature of the medical profession. These extracts cover twenty-four pages of the abstract, and it is impractical to set them out. While they might aid the educated physician to a better understanding of the matters discussed, we are satisfied their tendency was to mislead and confuse the jury. A person of ordinary comprehension could not understand much of the language used, and would be in great danger of being misled by the grouping of symptoms. The learning of these works, if extracted by a skilled physician and applied to the particular case, and thus brought within the comprehension of the jurors, would doubtless have been of great assistance in ascertaining the true condition of the plaintiff. But as they assume a technical knowledge on the part of the reader, and capacity to understand the relative importance to be attached to symptoms, we think they could not be safely left to their interpretation and inferences. As said by Chief Justice Shaw in Ashworth v. Kittridge, 12 Cush. 193, 59 Am. Dec. 178: "Medical science has its own nomenclature, its technical terms and words of art, and also common words used in a peculiar manner, distinct from their received meaning, in the general use of the language. From these and other causes, a person not versed in medical literature, though having a good knowledge of the general use of the English language, would be in danger, without an interpreter, of misapprehending the true meaning of the author. Whereas, a medical witness would not only give the fact of his opinion, and the grounds on which it is formed, with the sanction of his oath, but would also state and explain it in language intelligible to men of common experience." The question is not whether the courts will use the helps of science in the investigation of truth. There is no controversy on that score. The authorities are agreed that the truths of the exact sciences, the established facts of history, and computations from fixed data may be proved by the works of reputable authorities. Worden v. Humeston & P. R. Co. 76 Iowa, 310; Gorman v. Minneapolis & St. P. R. Co. 78 Iowa, 509; Scagel v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 83 Iowa, 380; Schell v. Plumb, 55 N. Y. 598; Mills v. Catlin, 22 Vt. 98. This is on the ground that all men assent to their correctness. But medicine belongs to the class known as inductive sciences. The data are constantly shifting with new discoveries, and the conclusion which may be considered sound to-day is repudiated to-morrow. A medical work may be standard this year and obsolete next. The opinion of the same author changes in the different editions, owing to new discoveries and a better understanding of symptoms. The very best works, aside from observations, are largely made up of the opinions either of the author or of others compiled. It is a well-known fact that physicians after research and investigation often differ radically. It was said in Clark v. State, 12 Ohio, 483, 40 Am. Dec. 481, where the sanity of the defendant was involved, that "whenever they have enlisted on the side of either party, or of some favorite theory, and one portion of the profession is placed in array against another, the difficulties mentioned in the passage above quoted are greatly multiplied, and, however honest or renowned for professional character the witnesses may be, such will be the conflict of their testimony, in nine cases out of ten, that it will be utterly unsafe for a jury or court to follow or adopt the conclusions of either side." If those learned in medicine are often unable to determine from the books the nature and extent of injuries and diseases how shall the laymen be better informed by an examination of the books. The situation emphasizes the necessity of cross-examination and the use of an oath, not only that the theory contained in the books may be known and understood, but that practical skill may apply the science of medicine to each case. As said, not the use of the inductive sciences in the investigation of truths, but the manner—the vehicle, as it were—by which the results of research shall be conveyed to the court and jury is involved. We think the safer practice is to rely upon the testimony of living witnesses of the medical profession, who may bring the learning and research of the books within the comprehension of the jurors, and the truths of science to the facts in each particular case. Indeed, the advocates of a contrary rule generally admit the necessity of additional safeguards, which may only be provided by legislation. (See article by John Henry Wigmore in 26 Am. L. Rev. 390.) The language of the supreme court of Michigan in People v. Hall, 48 Mich. 482, 42 Am. Rep. 477, is so pertinent that we quote it with approval: "Scientific or expert testimony must be given by living witnesses who can be cross-examined concerning their means of knowledge, and can explain in language open to general comprehension what is necessary for the jury to know. The only legal reason for allowing the evidence of opinions is found in the presumption that an ordinary jurymen or other person without special knowledge could not understand the bearing of facts that need interpretation. Medical books are not addressed to common readers, but require particular knowledge to understand them. Everyone knows the inability of ordinary persons to understand or discriminate between symptoms or groups of symptoms, which cannot always be described to those who have not seen them, and which, with slight changes and combinations, mean something very different from what they mean in other cases. The cases must be very rare in which any but an educated physician could understand detached passages at all, or know how much credit was due to either the author in general or to particular parts of his book. If jurors could be safely trusted with the interpretation of such books, it is hard to see on what principle living witnesses would be required. Scientific men are supposed to be able from their study and experience to give the general results accepted by the scientific world, and the extent of their knowledge is tested by their personal examination. But the continued changes of view brought about by new discoveries in most matters of science, and the necessary assumption by scientific writers of some technical knowledge in their readers, render the use of such works before juries—especially in detached portions and selected passages—not only misleading, but dangerous. The weight of authority, as well as of reason, is against their reception." The exclusion of such evidence is approved on substantially the same grounds by the following among many authorities: Johnston v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 95 Ga. 685; Fowler v. Lewis, 25 Tex. Supp. 380; Melvin v. Easley, 46 N. C. (1 Jones, L.) 386, 62 Am. Dec. 171; State v. O'Brien, 7 R. I. 336; Epps v. State, 102 Ind. 539; Boyle v. State, 57 Wis. 472, 46 Am. Rep. 41; Reg. v. Taylor, 13 Cox, Crim. Cas. 77; Ware v. Ware, 8 Me. 42; Tucker v. Donald, 60 Miss. 460, 45 Am. Rep. 416; Ordway v. Haynes, 50 N. H. 159; Huffman v. Click, 77 N. C. 55; Payson v. Everett, 12 Minn. 217 (Gil. 137); Collier v. Simpson, 5 Car. & P. 73; Harris v. Panama R. Co. 3 Bosw. 7.

Our conclusion is somewhat opposed to language contained in Bowman v. Woods, 1 G. Greene, 441. In that case a physician was sued for malpractice in an accouchement case, and in defense set up that he had followed the botanic system of practising medicine. It appears the plaintiff so knew in employing the defendant, and physicians were called to show that his treatment was in accordance with that system. They referred to certain standard works on botanic medicine, from which they claimed to have derived much of their professional knowledge. Such books were held admissible. If a physician is employed to treat a patient according to a certain system, and he does so, exercising ordinary skill therein, he has fulfilled his obligation. Now, in determining whether he has in fact followed that system, the books from which physicians of that school are shown to have derived their knowledge may be admissible, for these expound the very principles which he is alleged to have violated; and certainly, under such circumstances, the books themselves would be better evidence than quotations from them. In such a case a physician might refer to an author as justifying his conclusion that the treatment was or was not in accordance with his system, and as said in this case: "Being permitted to refer to and quote authors, we can see no good reason why they may not read the views and opinions of distinguished authors. The opinions of an author, as contained in his works, we regard as better evidence than the mere statement of those opinions by a witness, who testifies as to his recollection of them." The reasoning does not apply to a case where the school or system is not involved; for it is not the rule to permit the physician to quote from medical works. See Boyle v. State, 57 Wis. 472, 46 Am. Rep. 41; Com. v. Sturtivant, 117 Mass. 122, 19 Am. Rep. 401; Ashworth v. Kittridge, 12 Cush. 193, 59 Am. Dec. 178; Marshall v. Brown, 50 Mich. 148; People v. Wheeler, 60 Cal. 581, 44 Am. Rep. 70; Collier v. Simpson, 5 Car. & P. 73. It seems, however, that where the witness has referred to some medical authority to sustain the opinion he has expressed, that authority may be introduced in evidence for the purpose of contradicting him. Pinney v. Cahill, 48 Mich. 584; Ripon v. Bittel, 30 Wis. 619; Bloomington v. Shrock, 110 Ill. 219, 51 Am. Rep. 679. See, contra, Davis v. State, 38 Md. 15. In State v. Howard, 10 Iowa, 101, the only point decided is that a medical work cannot be taken to a jury room. In Donaldson v. Mississippi & M. R. Co. 18 Iowa, 280, 87 Am. Dec. 391, the Carlisle tables are admitted on the strength of the ruling in Bowman's Case. In Brodhead v. Wiltse, 35 Iowa, 429, it is held that § 4618 of the Code, adopted after the decision in the Bowman Case, was not restrictive in its effect, and rendered no evidence inadmissible which was admissible before, and that standard medical authorities are not the best evidence of what they teach, as was intimated in Bowman's Case. In Quackenbush v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 73 Iowa, 458, the objection to the extract offered was that it was too indefinite, and this was overruled. In Peck v. Hutchinson, 88 Iowa, 320, the objection was simply that the medical work offered was an old edition, and its introduction was held to be without prejudice. We do not think Bowman's Case decisive of the question now before us, and certainly no other can be so construed. In Alabama alone are medical works received in evidence. Stoudenmeier v. Williamson, 29 Ala. 558, followed in the subsequent cases of Merkle v. State, 37 Ala. 139, and Bales v. State, 63 Ala. 30. In the first of the above cases the issue involved the breach of warranty in the sale of a slave. That the objections to the admissibility of such evidence are not answered is evident from the following quotation, which is not inconsistent with the rule we adopt: "The brief period of human life will not allow one man, from actual observation and experience, to acquire a complete knowledge of the human system and its diseases. Professional knowledge is, in a great degree, derived from the books of the particular profession. In every step the practitioner takes, he is, perhaps, somewhat guided by the opinions of his predecessors. His own scientific knowledge is, from the necessities of the case, materially formed and molded by the experience and learning of others. Indeed, much of the knowledge we have upon all subjects, except objects of sense, is derived from books and our associations with men. It is the boast of this age of advancing civilization that, aided and facilitated by the printer's art, the collected learning of past ages has been transmitted to us. Shall we withhold the benefits of this heritage from the contests of the court-room? We think not."

The appellee insists these treatises were admissible under § 4618 of the Code, which is as follows: "Historical works, books of science or art, and published maps or charts, when made by persons indifferent between the parties, are presumptive evidence of facts of general notoriety or interest therein stated." As said in Brodhead v. Wiltse, 35 Iowa, 429, the purpose of the legislature was to extend the rule of evidence rather than to restrict it. This extension is limited, however, by the words, "facts of general notoriety or interest therein stated." The supreme court of California in construing a statute identical with ours, except the last two words are omitted, used this language: "What are facts of general notoriety and interest? We think the terms stand for facts of a public nature, either at home or abroad, not existing in the memory of men, as contradistinguished from facts of a private nature, existing within the knowledge of living men, and as to which they may be examined as witnesses. It is of such public facts, including historical facts, facts of the exact sciences, and of literature or art, when relevant to a cause, that, under the provisions of the Code, proof may be made by the production of books of standard authority. . . . Such facts include the meaning of words and allusions, which may be proved by ordinary dictionaries and authenticated books of general literary history, and facts in the exact sciences, founded upon conclusions reached from certain and constant data, by processes too intricate to be elucidated by witnesses when on examination." Gallagher v. Market Street R. Co. 67 Cal. 13, 56 Am. Rep. 713. We think this the correct interpretation of this section, and that it does not authorize the admission of medical treatises. This identical question was before the United States circuit court of appeals for this circuit in Union P. R. Co. v. Yates, 49 U. S. App. 241, 79 Fed. Rep. 584, 25 C. C. A. 103, 40 L. R. A. 553, and in a clear and exhaustive opinion a like conclusion reached. See also Van Skike v. Potter, 53 Neb. 28. The exceptions to the other rulings on the admissibility of evidence are without merit. The other errors assigned are not likely to arise upon another trial.

Reversed.

Rehearing denied.

Lillie SEILER et al.

v.

ECONOMIC LIFE ASSOCIATION, Appt.

(105 Iowa, 87.)

1. The attachment to an insurance policy of a copy of the application, followed by the word "signed," but without the signature of the applicant, does not entitle the company to rely on any part of such application under Acts 18th Gen. Assem. chap. 211, § 2, providing that neglect to attach to insurance policies "a true copy" of any application shall preclude the insurer from pleading, alleging, or proving such application or any part thereof.
2. An insurance policy containing no stipulation as to suicide, taken out in good faith by the assured, will not be avoided as against the beneficiary named therein by the fact that the assured thereafter, while sane, deliberately and purposely took his own life.
3. An instruction in a suit on a life insurance policy that fraud is not to be presumed, but, like any other fact, may be proved by circumstances from which the inference of fraud is natural and "irresistible," is not ground for reversal because of the use of the word "irresistible" where it is so qualified by the instruction given immediately thereafter that its use could not have prejudiced appellant.
4. Error, if any, in refusing defendant in an action on a life insurance policy the right to open and close is not ground for reversal, where defendant was not thereby prejudiced in any manner.

(April 8, 1898.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Clinton County in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to enforce the amount alleged to be due on certain life insurance policies. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Hayes & Schnyler, for appellant:

The copy of the application attached was a true copy, within the meaning of the law. MacKinnon v. Mutual F. Ins. Co. 89 Iowa, 173.

NOTE.—The Ritter Case, above referred to as determined by the United States circuit court of appeals, is reported in 42 L. R. A. 583. 43 L. R. A.

Statutes should be construed according to their object or purpose, the evil to be remedied, or the right to be accomplished, and the effect of particular constructions, and the legislative intent found and effectuated from these standpoints.

Spencer v. State, 5 Ind. 41; People, Wood, v. Lacombe, 99 N. Y. 43; United States v. Saunders, 22 Wall. 492, 22 L. ed. 736; Ryegate v. Wardsboro, 30 Vt. 746; Dilger v. Palmer, 60 Iowa, 117; Woods v. Mains, 1 G. Greene, 275; Haskel v. Burlington, 30 Iowa, 232; Stephens v. Davenport & St. P. R. Co. 36 Iowa, 327; Noble v. State, 1 G. Greene, 325; Tully v. Beaubien, 10 Iowa, 187; Williams v. Pdor, 65 Iowa, 410; State v. Smith, 46 Iowa, 670; Crabell v. Wappello Coal Co. 68 Iowa, 751; Small v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 50 Iowa, 338; State v. Botkin, 71 Iowa, 87, 60 Am. Rep. 780; Whelock v. Madison County, 75 Iowa, 147.

Only a substantially correct copy is required, and mere immaterial variances would not defeat the conditions in application.

Goodwin v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Asso. 97 Iowa, 226, 32 L. R. A. 473.

A variance between an original and a copy is not fatal unless calculated to mislead or prejudice.

Union Furnace Co. v. Shepherd, 2 Hill, 414; West v. Francis, 5 Barn. & Ald. 737.

The intentional taking of his life by the assured, while sane, is a fraud upon the company, not the kind of death insured against or contemplated, and there is no liability in such contingency.

Ritter v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 69 Fed. Rep. 505; Moore v. Woolsey, 4 El. & Bl. 243; Hartman v. Keystone Ins. Co. 21 Pa. 466; Supreme Commandery K. of G. R. v. Ainsworth, 71 Ala. 436, 46 Am. Rep. 332; New York Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Armstrong, 117 U. S. 600, 29 L. ed. 1000; Ritter v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 28 U. S. App. 612, 70 Fed. Rep. 957, 42 L. R. A. 583, 17 C. C. A. 537.

Circumstantial evidence need not be strong any more than direct evidence. It is only necessary that it carries or induces belief or conviction, and to the extent of preponderance; and when any more than this is stated in this regard, the province of the jury is invaded.

Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Kemp (Tex. Civ. App.) 30 S. W. 1117; 1 Greenl. Ev. 13th ed. § 13a; Gay v. Gillilan, 92 Mo. 250; Ferris v. McQueen, 94 Mich. 367; Gumberg v. Treusch, 103 Mich. 543; Bush v. Delano, 113 Mich. 321.

On rehearing.

A party claiming through another is estopped by that which is established as to that other respecting the same subject-matter.

Anderson, Dict. title, Privity; Stacy v. Thrasher, 6 How. 60, 12 L. ed. 343; Morris v. State Mut. L. Assur. Co. 183 Pa. 563; McDonald v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. (N. H.) 38 Atl. 500.

We were entitled to a charge that was correct in the statement of the law, and that left no doubt as to whether the jury could or might go astray.

Muldouney v. Illinois C. R. Co. 32 Iowa, 180; Ferry v. Dubuque S. W. R. Co. 36 Iowa, 106; Parkhill v. Brighton, 61 Iowa, 108; Hoben v. Burlington & M. River R. Co. 20 Iowa, 562; Eyser v. Weissgerber, 2 Iowa, 463; State v. Hartzell, 58 Iowa, 520; Moore v. Des Moines & Ft. D. R. Co. 69 Iowa, 491; Preston v. Dubuque & P. R. Co. 11 Iowa, 15; Williamson v. Reddish, 45 Iowa, 550; Van Tuyl v. Quinton, 45 Iowa, 459.

Mr. Calvin H. George, for appellees:

A copy is a true transcript of an original record.

4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 146; Dickinson v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 7 W. Va. 412.

A copy of a book must be a transcript of the language in which the conceptions of the author are clothed.

4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 146; Stowe v. Thomas, 2 Wall. Jr. 565.

Where a writ of habeas corpus described the defendant by the addition of "gentleman," which word was omitted in the copy served, held that this was not a copy of the writ.

Cooke v. Vaughan, 4 Mees. & W. 69.

A copy of an application for insurance which does not contain a copy of the applicant's name appended thereto is insufficient within the meaning of the statute which precludes an insurance company from proving the contents of such application unless a copy is attached to and made a part of the policy.

Dunbar v. Phenix Ins. Co. 72 Wis. 492; Goodwin v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Asso. 97 Iowa, 226, 32 L. R. A. 473.

An insurance policy shall be strictly construed against the insurer.

Miller v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 31 Iowa, 210, 7 Am. Rep. 122; Goodwin v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Asso. 97 Iowa, 226, 32 L. R. A. 473.

In the absence of a provision in the policy of the insured suicide will not affect the validity of the policy.

13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 642; Niblack, Ben. Soc. 2d ed. p. 305; Mills v. Rebstock, 29 Minn. 380; Fitch v. American Popular L. Ins. Co. 59 N. Y. 573, 17 Am. Rep. 372; Darrow v. Family Fund Soc. 116 N. Y. 537, 6 L. R. A. 495.

Fraud will not be presumed, but must be proved by the party charging it, and if the facts upon which the charge is predicated are, or may be, consistent with honesty and purity of intention then the charge of fraud will fail.

Kenosha Stove Co. v. Shedd, 82 Iowa, 540; Prichard v. Hopkins, 52 Iowa, 122; Hamilton v. Bishop, 22 Iowa, 211; Kansas Mill Owners' & Mfrs. Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Ram-melsberg, 58 Kan. 531; 2 Rice, Ev. (Civil) p. 97; Teakle v. Bailey, 2 Brock. 43; Bowen v. Evans, 2 H. L. Cas. 257; Pike v. Vigers, 2 Dru. & W. 267; Kerr, Fraud & Mistake, p. 283; Pool v. Ellison, 56 Hun, 108; United States v. Hancock, 133 U. S. 193, 33 L. ed. 601; Burnham v. Noyes, 125 Mass. 85.

Waterman, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. The undisputed facts in the case are that the defendant company issued to one Joseph Seiler the two policies in suit, numbered, respectively, 17,146 and 17,147. By these policies the life of said Seiler was insured for the benefit of the plaintiffs in the sum of $2,000; each policy being for the sum of $1,000. Both of these policies were issued upon a single application. This application was signed, "Joseph Seiler;" and a copy thereof, with the exception that the signature was omitted, and in its place appeared the word "Signed," was attached to policy No. 17,146. No copy or purported copy of the application was attached to policy No. 17,147, but there was an indorsement thereon in these words: "For copy of application, see policy No. 17,146, issued to same party." The policies were taken out on the 31st day of August, 1895; and, on the 7th day of October following, Seiler committed suicide. The policies contained no provision in relation to suicide, but there was this clause in the application, "I also warrant and agree that I will not die by my own act, whether sane or insane, during the period of three years following the date of issue of the policy for which application is hereby made."

2. Defendant, in its answer, sets up, in one paragraph, that Seiler, while in a sound mental condition, took his own life. This was demurred to by plaintiffs, and the demurrer sustained, to which defendant excepted. No question is made as to the propriety of thus attacking by demurrer a paragraph in pleading. It was alleged by defendant in another paragraph of its answer that Seiler, with the intent to defraud defendant company, procured it to issue said policies; he at the time intending to take his own life, as in fact he shortly thereafter did. This matter was also assailed by a demurrer, which was overruled. Evidence was introduced upon this branch of the case, and this single issue of fact was submitted to the jury.

3. The appellant assigns fifty-nine errors. We think the matters can be condensed under five heads: (1) Was the application a part of policy No. 17,147, to which neither a copy nor a purported copy was attached? (2) Was it a part of policy No. 17,146, to which was attached a copy that omitted the signature of the applicant? (3) Will the suicide of the assured operate to avoid, as against a beneficiary named therein, a policy which does not in terms except death in that manner from the risk assumed? (4) Did the trial court err in its instructions? (5) Had the appellant the right to open and close before the jury?

4. Taking up the questions in the order of stating them, we shall devote no time to the first, for it will be disposed of by what we have to say under the next head.

5. Attached to policy No. 17,146 was a copy of the application made by the assured, except, as already said, that the signature of the applicant was omitted, and in the space his name appeared in the original was the word "Signed." The trial court refused to permit the introduction in evidence of this application, when offered by defendant as part of the contract. This ruling, we take it, was based on the provisions of § 2, chap. 211, Acts 18th Gen. Assem., the material portions of which we set out: "All insurance companies or associations shall, upon the issue or renewal of any policy, attach to such policy, or indorse thereon, a true copy of any application or representations of the assured, which, by the terms of such policy, are made a part thereof, or of the contract of insurance, or referred to therein, or which may in any manner affect the validity of such policy. The omission so to do shall not render the policy invalid, but if any company or association neglects to comply with the requirements of this section, it shall forever be precluded from pleading, alleging, or proving such application or representations, or any part thereof, or falsity thereof, or any parts thereof, in any action upon such policy. . . . This section has often been construed. For a quite recent exposition of its meaning we refer to Goodwin v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Asso. 97 Iowa, 226, 32 L. R. A. 473. It is argued on behalf of the appellant that all of the statements and representations made by the assured were in the copy that was attached to the policy, and that he could not have been prejudiced by the omission of his signature, for he must have known that he signed this original. But it seems to us that the very purpose of the statute was to avoid, so far as possible, any dispute as to the assured's knowledge of the contract. The requirement is that a copy of the application shall be attached. We do not understand this to call for a fac-simile, but it certainly demands at least a substantial reproduction of the instrument. The signature is an essential part of the application, and all that is essential in the original should appear in the copy. It will be noted that in the alleged copy it is not stated by whom the original is signed. In Wisconsin they have a statute which is the counterpart of the one under consideration; and in Dunbar v. Phenix Ins. Co. 72 Wis. 492, it was held that a copy of the signature of the applicant was essential, in order to make a copy of the application, within the meaning of the law. The case was, in its facts, like the case at bar, except that the blank for the signature in the copy contained nothing to indicate that any signature was appended. The court, in speaking on the subject, says: "We are of the opinion that the copy of the application attached to the policy, not having the copy of the name of the applicant appended thereto, cannot be said to be a copy of such application, within the meaning of the statute. . . . The signature is the thing which gives force to the application, and, when signed with knowledge of its contents, is conclusive upon the insured. . . . We think that the signature of the party to an instrument which receives its vitality solely from such signature is such a substantial part of it that a copy of it must contain such signature." As having some bearing, we also cite Kyser v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 56 Iowa, 207. The trial court was right in holding that the application in this case was no part of the contract, and that the statements therein could not be given in evidence.

6. The defense of suicide was set up in two forms. In one, as we have said, it went to the jury. The paragraph of the answer 43 L. R. A.

to which the demurrer was sustained was as follows: "That the said Joseph Seiler on or about the 7th day of October, 1895, and while in sane mental condition, and able to understand the moral character and consequences of his act, committed suicide, and intentionally and purposely killed himself, by shooting. The question thus presented by the ruling on the demurrer is: If a policy of insurance on life, containing no stipulation as to suicide, is taken out in good faith by the assured, will it be avoided, as against a beneficiary named therein, by the fact that the assured thereafter, while sane, deliberately and purposely took his own life. The authorities are not many on the subject, and they are not seriously in conflict. While there are a number of cases in which something has been said upon this matter in the way of dicta, there is but one in which it has been expressly decided that the suicide of the assured, if sane, will avoid a policy that contains no provision of forfeiture in such case; and that is Ritter v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 169 U. S. 139, 42 L. ed. 693, decided at the October term, last, of the Federal Supreme Court. The opinion in this case in the circuit court of appeals appears in 28 U. S. App. 612, 70 Fed. Rep. 954, 17 C. C. A. 537, 42 L. R. A. 583. This last citation is given because we shall have occasion to refer to this opinion in the course of what we shall say. It was held in the Ritter Case that there could be no recovery on a policy of insurance by the executor of one who, while sane, intentionally took his own life, even though the policy contained no clause of forfeiture because of such act. We think that case is readily distinguishable from the case at bar. In the Ritter Case the action was brought by the personal representative of the assured, whose claim had to be made through the wrongdoer, while here the suit is instituted by beneficiaries named in the policy, and who claim in their own right. An investigation will disclose that the distinction we make is material, and supported by authority. In Moore v. Wooleey, 4 El. & Bl. 243, the policy contained a stipulation avoiding it, as far as regarded the executors and administrators of the assured, if he died by his own hand, but leaving it in force to the extent of any interest acquired by a third person. The plea was that the assured had committed suicide. Replication that one Kettle, before the death of the assured, had acquired by assignment an interest in the policy. Upon these issues, Lord Campbell, delivering the opinion, said: "If a man insures his life for a year, and commits suicide within the year, his executors cannot recover upon the policy, as the owner of a ship, who insures her for a year, cannot recover upon the policy if within the year he causes her to be sunk. A stipulation that in either case upon such an event the policy should give a right of action would be void." This is the language quoted in the Ritter Case, and it was obiter only. But Lord Campbell said something more, and something not only pertinent to the issues before him, but that has direct application to the matter we are considering. He continues:

"But, where a man insures his own life, we can discover no illegality in a stipulation that if the policy should afterwards be assigned, bona fide, for a valuable consideration, or a lien upon it should afterwards be acquired, bona fide, for valuable consideration, it might be enforced for the benefit of others, whatever may be the means by which death is occasioned. . . . The supposed inducement to commit suicide under such circumstances cannot vitiate the condition, more than the inducement which the lessor may be supposed to have to commit murder should render invalid a beneficial lease granted for lives. When we are called upon to nullify a contract on the ground of public policy, we must take care that we do not lay down a rule which may interfere with the innocent and useful transactions of mankind." If public policy does not stand in the way of a recovery by an assignee, we can discern no reason why it should in the case of a beneficiary named in the contract. It may be said that the assignee spoken of is one whose claim rests upon a consideration paid. To this we would say that the claim of the beneficiary is also based upon a consideration paid by the assured. If it should further be said that public policy does not bar a recovery by the assignee because the interests of creditors furnish little or no motive for the self-destruction of the assured, our answer would be this: The motives for suicide are manifold and varied. An inquiry as to what inducement is most likely to impel one to the act is profitless, for any rule of law that would prevent a recovery by these plaintiffs would operate in like manner against a mere creditor, if he were the beneficiary named. And, further, we might call attention to the Ritter Case, in which the assured admittedly sacrificed his life for the benefit of his creditors. In the opinion in the Ritter Case in the circuit court of appeals it is said: "In the cases brought to our attention where suicide during sanity, by the person whose life was insured, was held not to be a valid defense, the policy was issued for the benefit of some other person, or an independent interest, by assignment or otherwise, had been acquired by a third person." Here is the distinction plainly made. So, also, in the opinion of Mr. Justice Harlan on appeal, we think the same idea is expressed. In commenting on an expression used in another case, he says: "This observation . . . was irrelevant to the case before the court, and cannot be regarded as determining the point in judgment. If it was meant there could be a recovery by the personal representative . . . we cannot concur in that view." Another and a convincing reason for thinking that the doctrine announced in the Ritter Case was not intended to go further than to deny a right of recovery to the personal representatives of the assured is that no one of the several cases in which beneficiaries named in the contract have been held entitled to recover was mentioned in that opinion. We shall now refer to these cases: Fitch v. American Popular L. Ins. Co. 50 N. Y. 559, is the first. Suit was 43 L. R. A.

brought by the widow, to whom the policy was payable. The contract contained no clause avoiding it in case of suicide by the assured. One defense tendered was that the assured took his own life. Evidence to sustain it was excluded by the trial court. In affirming this ruling the court of appeals says: "The policy contained no stipulation that it should be void in case of the death of the insured by suicide. It was not taken out for the benefit of Fitch, but of his wife and children. Although they were bound by his representations, and any fraud he may have committed in taking out the policy, the policy having been obtained through his agency, yet they were not bound by any acts or declarations done or made by him after the issue of the policy, unless such acts were in violation of some condition of the policy." In Darrow v. Family Fund Soc. 116 N. Y. 537, 6 L. R. A. 495, the plaintiff was the beneficiary under the contract. The assured committed suicide. There was a provision in the policy that it should "be void if the member herein shall die in consequence of a duel, or by the hands of justice, or in violation of, or attempt to violate, any criminal law of the United States, or of any state or country in which the member herein named may be." Held that, suicide not being a crime in New York, the condition of the policy was not violated, and the plaintiff could recover. Kerr v. Minnesota Mut. Ben. Assn. 39 Minn. 174, is a case similar in principle to the last. The same holding in favor of a beneficiary has been made by this court in Goodwin v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Assn. 97 Iowa, 226, 32 L. R. A. 473. The policy sued upon provided for its forfeiture in the event of suicide within two years, and by its express terms it was incontestable after that time. After the lapse of that period the assured took his own life. The policy was issued to the wife. In an action by her, we held she could recover. Now, if suicide is a risk that the company is forbidden, by considerations of public policy, to take, it could not have been held as within the agreement not to contest; for, if a contract to insure as against the risk of suicide is void, the waiver here must have been invalid, and the defense should have been sustained. The question was brought directly to the attention of the court in argument, as appears from the language of the opinion. These are the cases which we have been able to find. We wish now to add a few words on principle, by way of emphasis of a thought already expressed. It is not the wrongdoer who makes claim here, nor any representative whose rights are to be measured by those of the wrongdoer, but persons who acquired an interest at the time the policy was taken out, and who are not in any way responsible for the loss under it. The defendant might well have guarded against this contingency in its contract. Not having done so, we think it is now in no position to complain.

7. Error is assigned on the refusal of the trial court to give instructions asked by defendant. Fifteen instructions were asked. We need not set them out. We find that the charge, as given, fully covered the case.

8. Instruction No. 7 of the court's charge is complained of. In this paragraph the jury was told that fraud was not to be presumed, but, like any other fact, might be proved by circumstances "from which the inference of fraud is natural and irresistible." It is the use of the word "irresistible" to which objection is made. The word is certainly not well chosen, but it is qualified to such an extent by the instruction next following that its employment could not have prejudiced defendant. We might very well put our rulings on the instructions on another ground. We have carefully read the testimony offered by defendant to establish the fact that, at the time he took out these policies, Seiler intended to commit suicide, and thus defraud defendant; and we find nothing in it to support any such claim. The trial court might with propriety have taken the case from the jury.

9. What has just been said disposes of defendant's contention that it was entitled to open and close. If error was committed by the trial judge in this matter,—which we by no means hold,—it was wholly without prejudice.

The judgment below will be affirmed.

Rehearing denied.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD COMPANY, Appl.,

v.

COMMONWEALTH of Kentucky.

(.....Ky.....)

1. The omission from Stat. § 820, of the proviso found in Const. § 218, that the railroad commission may authorize a less charge for longer than for shorter distances, on application by the carrier, does not make the statute inconsistent with the Constitution, as the proviso is self-executing and the statute expressly provides that the commission may exonerate a carrier from its provisions even without previous application.
2. An allegation that a railroad commission has not authorized a carrier to charge less for a longer than for a shorter distance is a sufficient statement that the commission has refused to exonerate the carrier from Stat. § 820, after investigation of the complaint, if such allegation is necessary.
3. An indictment for charging a greater rate for transportation than for a longer distance over the same line of road, including the shorter transportation, "namely, from Pittsburg to Louisville and to Elizabethtown," is not demurrable as charging two distinct offenses.
4. Competition in transportation does not prevent "substantially similar circumstances and conditions," within the meaning of Const. § 218, and Stat. § 820, but those words relate to the actual cost of transportation.

On rehearing.

5. An argument drawn from hardship or inconvenience should have due weight with the court in determining the true construction of a statute which is doubtful or obscure, but never so much as to induce a construction that is absurd, defeats the evident object in view, or involves a stultification of those who made it.
6. That a construction of a statute regulating railroad rates in such a manner as to deny power to make special rates to competitive points will injure an industry of the state will not require an opposite construction if the effect of the latter might be injurious to other industries and interests connected or identified with non-competitive points.

7. The court cannot interfere with the refusal of the railroad commission, under Const. § 218, to allow a less charge for a longer than for a shorter haul, as it is permitted to do in special cases by that section.

On motion to modify.

8. An indictment for unjust discrimination by a carrier is fatally defective under Const. § 217, providing for the punishment of such discrimination unless it charges that it was knowingly and wilfully committed.
9. That freight for which different charges were made for transportation between the same points was of the same kind or class must be stated in an indictment for unjust discrimination in rates under Const. § 215.

(DuRelle and Burnam, JJ., dissent from propositions 1 to 7.)

(June 23, 1898.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Marion County convicting it of violating the statutory and constitutional provisions against charging greater compensation for transporting property for shorter than for longer distance over the same line. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Messrs. William Lindsay, J. W. Alcorn, Walker D. Hines, Lisle & MeChord, H. W. Bruce, and Edward W. Hines for appellant.

Mr. H. W. Rives for appellee.

Lewis, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant was, in the Marion circuit court,

NOTE.—The above case appears to be the first to discuss the effect of a state statute including a long and short haul provision similar to that in the Act of Congress to Regulate Commerce. As clearly appears by the opinion of the court, the present decision adopts a construction different from that which the Federal courts put on the act of Congress.

ferent from that which the Federal courts put on the act of Congress.

For legislative power to fix tolls, rates, or prices, see note to Winchester & L. Turnp. Road Co. v. Croxton (Ky.) 33 L. R. A. 177.

upon recommendation of the state railroad commission, indicted for the offense of charging greater compensation for transporting property for a shorter than for a longer distance, the particular circumstances being thus stated: "The defendant, . . . operating a line of railroad in this state extending from Pittsburg through said county of Marion and city of Lebanon, on September 8, 1894, . . . did transport a car load of coal from Pittsburg to Lebanon on said line for J. M. Shreve, and unlawfully charged and received from him as compensation therefor $40.30, being at the rate of $1.55 per ton, when for transportation of a similar car load of coal under similar circumstances and conditions for a longer distance over the same line of road, namely, from Pittsburg to Louisville and to Elizabethtown, in the same direction, the distance from Pittsburg to Lebanon being shorter, and included within the longer from Pittsburg to Louisville and to Elizabethtown, said defendant at said time did charge and receive less compensation than $1.55 per ton from various persons at Louisville and Elizabethtown; defendant at said time not having been authorized by the railroad commission of this commonwealth to charge less for a longer than for a shorter distance for transportation of coal," etc. As the determination of the question of sufficiency of the indictment, also of other legal questions that arose during trial of this case in the lower court, depend upon the construction to be given § 218 of the Constitution and § 820, Ky. Stat., they are here copied entire:

"Sec. 218. It shall be unlawful for any person or corporation, owning or operating a railroad in this state, or any common carrier, to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers, or of property of like kind, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line, in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance; but this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier or person or corporation owning or operating a railroad in this state to receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance: Provided, That upon application to the railroad commission, such common carrier or person or corporation owning or operating a railroad in this state, may, in special cases, after investigation by the commission, be authorized to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property; and the commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which such common carrier or person or corporation owning or operating a railroad in this state may be relieved from the operations of this section."

"Sec. 820. If any person owning or operating a railroad in this state, or any common carrier, shall charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or property of like kind, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, for a shorter than for a longer distance, over the same line in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance, such person shall, for each offense, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and fined not less than $100 nor more than $500, to be recovered by indictment in the Franklin circuit court, or the circuit court of any county into or through which the railroad or common carrier so violating runs or carries on its business. Upon complaint made to the railroad commission that any railroad or common carrier has violated the provisions of this section, it shall be the duty of the commission to investigate the grounds of complaint, and if, after such investigation, the commission deems it proper to exonerate the railroad or common carrier from the operation of the provisions of this section, an order in writing to that effect shall be made by the commission, and a copy thereof delivered to the complainant and the railroad or common carrier, and the same shall be published as a part of the report of the commission, and after such order the railroad or carrier shall not be prosecuted or fined on account of the complaint made. If the commission, after investigation, fails to exonerate the railroad or carrier from the operation of the provisions of this section, an order in writing to that effect shall be made by the commission, and a copy thereof delivered to the complainant, and the railroad or common carrier, and the same shall be published as a part of the report of the commission; and, after such order, it shall be the duty of the commission to furnish a statement of the facts, together with a copy of its order, to the grand jury of any county, the circuit court of which has jurisdiction, in order that the railroad company or carrier may be indicted for the offense; and the commission shall use proper efforts to see that such company or carrier is indicted and prosecuted."

It is made ground of demurrer that § 820, under which the indictment was found, is inconsistent with § 218, and therefore invalid, because there is omitted the proviso contained in the latter. But, as that proviso is self-executing, and gives to the carrier immediate right to make the application therein mentioned, and to the commission full power to act upon it when made, iteration of it in the statute was needless. Certainly, § 820 does not at all interfere with the exercise of either the constitutional right of the carrier or constitutional power of the commission. On the contrary, it contains the additional provision that, even without previous application by the carrier, the commission may, after investigation, made upon complaint by another of violation of that section, exonerate such carrier from operation of its provisions.

Another ground of demurrer is that the indictment embraces two distinct offenses, "one the charging of a less rate to Louisville than to Lebanon, and the other of charging a less rate to Elizabethtown than to Lebanon." A statement in the indictment that greater compensation in the aggregate was charged and received from J. M. Shreve for transportation of coal from Pittsburg to Lebanon than was charged and received from various persons for transporting coal from Pittsburg to Louisville and Elizabethtown would have been more apt; but the statement as made does not vitiate the indictment, or involve accusation of more than one offense. Neither § 218 nor § 820 was intended to fix or limit the general rate of compensation for transporting persons and property, but specially to inhibit greater or as great compensation in the aggregate for shorter as for longer distances. So, whatever may have been the amount actually charged and received for transportation of coal from Pittsburg to Louisville and Elizabethtown, the alleged offense was not, and could not be, completed until there was charged and received from J. M. Shreve greater compensation for transporting coal from Pittsburg to Lebanon, which consisted of a single act, and involved a single offense. The Criminal Code requires an indictment to describe and identify an offense in terms so direct and certain as to apprise the defendant of the accusation on which he is to be tried, and to make the verdict and judgment rendered available as pleaded in bar of a subsequent prosecution for the same offense. It was therefore necessary in the present indictment—as was done—to designate the person to the wrong and injury of whom the alleged offense was committed, and to state that the recited amount of compensation charged and received from him, on or about a specified date, for transportation of coal the described shorter distance, was greater in the aggregate than the amount then being charged and received from various or divers persons for transportation of same kind and quantity of coal the described longer distance. But it was not necessary to state the precise amount charged and received for such longer distance, because the fact it was exceeded by or was less than the specified amount charged and received in the particular instance for the shorter distance had been already sufficiently alleged. Nor was it necessary to designate any particular person or persons, probably numerous, than whom Shreve had been charged and required to pay greater compensation; for § 218 was intended to prevent discrimination rather between localities than between persons. So, in order to convict of an offense like the present it suffices to state in the indictment that the specified amount charged or received for the shorter distance was greater than that charged or received from persons generally or usually for the longer distance, and to support the allegation by the carrier's published schedule of rates, or other competent evidence of the fact.

There was also a motion made in the lower court to set aside the indictment because it does not contain a statement that the railroad commission, after investigation of the complaint that § 820 had been violated by appellant, made the required order refusing to exonerate it from operation of its provisions. Assuming, for the present, that such investigation and order following it must, in every case, precede an indictment under that 43 L. R. A. section, we think the allegation made on the subject sufficient, and consequently the motion was properly overruled.

The facts stated in the indictment as constituting the offense charged were on the trial proved or admitted. But all testimony offered for the purpose of showing existence of competition at Louisville and Elizabethtown between carriers of coal, or other facts affording reason or excuse, irrespective of cost of service, for charging or receiving greater compensation in the aggregate for the shorter than longer distance over appellant's road, was excluded; and all instructions to the jury based upon such facts were refused. The following instruction, showing the construction put upon § 218 by the lower court, was given: "That in determining whether two or more car loads of coal are transported under substantially similar circumstances and conditions when one is transported for a longer distance over the same line of road than for a shorter distance in the same direction, the shorter distance being included within the longer distance, they [the jury] should consider such circumstances and conditions as relate to the nature and character of the service by the defendant in the actual handling and movement of the coal transported." Section 218, as will be observed, does not prohibit less proportional compensation being charged or received for the longer than shorter distance, but makes it an offense to charge or receive, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, greater compensation in the aggregate for the shorter than for the longer distance. It is proper here to consider the following part of that section: "But this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier or person or corporation owning or operating a railroad in this state to receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance." That particular provision, we think, was not intended to neutralize, nor could it very materially affect, what precedes it; for the difference between greater or as great compensation charged or received for transportation would ordinarily be too minute for calculation. The main inquiry in this case is whether the words "substantially similar circumstances and conditions" were intended to relate to the actual cost of transportation, estimated with reference to necessary outlays and expenditures in carrying passengers and loading, moving, and unloading freight trains, or to competition at particular places in the business of transportation, or other conditions affecting policy or convenience of the carrier only. If attention be given alone to the grammatical construction of § 218, the words in question might possibly be made to apply in either or all the conditions mentioned. But attending to the sense of that section, which in character is both remedial and prohibitory, or restraining, and manifestly intended to conserve mutuality of rights and duties between parties to the contract of carrying, and prevent wrong by one to the other, the natural conclusion would be the words were designed to relate exclusively to the cost of service, for with that is the general public as well as the carrier concerned. And that legislative power exists to regulate conduct of the business of a railroad corporation, including charges for transportation, so that those dealing with it be not wronged or oppressed, is unquestionable; for the chartered franchise and privileges of such corporation are always, and can be granted only, in consideration of public service to be rendered; and, of course, upon implied reservation of legislative power, to inhibit at any time unjust discrimination between persons and localities. But as the section seems to be not so plain to counsel as to preclude discussion, we will look to the reason for its adoption, —always a sure guide to the meaning of lawmakers. As there existed in neither the former Constitution nor statutes enacted under it any provision of the character, scope, or purpose of § 218, it was obviously adopted to prevent continuance of what was deemed a wrong hitherto committed with impunity by reason of a defect of the law. Therefore, the nature of that wrong being ascertained, as may be readily done by recurring to facts of common occurrence, and too widely known to escape judicial notice, that interpretation should be given which will “most surely advance the remedy and suppress the mischief.” For many years prior to the adoption of the present Constitution there had been general and unavailing complaint of discrimination by railroad companies of this state, respecting compensation charged and received, in favor of localities where existed competition in the business of transportation, and of comparatively excessive compensation being exacted at localities where, because there was not such competition, shippers were at the mercy of the carriers. But it was argued substantially there, as here and now, that competition made such difference of circumstances and conditions as justified the discrimination complained of. The legislature did not attempt to give relief. The court, in absence of an express statute on the subject, and as long as the amount of compensation charged or received was within the charter limit, could not intervene to prevent a railroad company adopting, as matter of assumed business policy, rates to meet competition. There was no complaint of discrimination between places on the same line of railroad where there was not competition. And, if there had been, the court was, upon common-law principles applicable to common carriers, empowered to prevent it, because such discrimination would have been wanton, and without excuse of business policy or necessity. It is thus made manifest the object of § 218 was to remedy a defect of the law by thereafter disallowing competition, or other considerations affecting the carrier only, not the general public, as excuse for charging or receiving greater compensation in the aggregate for transporting persons or property in this state the shorter than longer distance. And it is based upon two propositions: First. That the actual cost of transportation is not generally greater for the shorter than longer distance; therefore to charge and receive greater compensation in the aggregate for the former than the latter is unfair and oppressive. Second. That it is contrary to usual business methods, and not to be assumed, that a railroad company would, even under stress of competition, reduce rates of compensation for transportation to and from competitive points so low as not to leave a reasonable margin of profit; therefore an excess of aggregate compensation for transportation to and from noncompetitive points is generally an unjust and inexcusable extortion. So, if competition be held to constitute, in the meaning of § 218, the real difference of “circumstances and conditions,” the section, though deemed of such urgent importance as to be made part of the organic law, would be scarcely effectual for any purpose whatever; for there could not be an approach to similarity, but necessarily a complete dissimilarity, of circumstances and conditions of the transportation of persons and property the longer distance, nearly always to and from a place where there is competition, and the shorter distance nearly always to and from a place where there is not competition. Consequently, discrimination in aggregate compensation between such localities could still be made at will of the carrier, and without legal restraint.

It is further contended that a railroad company should be permitted to vary rates of compensation regardless of cost of service, and even to the extent of arbitrary discrimination between localities, in order to develop resources of the state, and at the same time increase its own business. Due estimate should be put upon advantages to society that have resulted from the construction and will continue to result from the extension of railroads; and due regard should be had to the rights and interests of carriers as well as of those who patronize them. But such considerations do not justify a wrong interpretation, and consequent defeat, of the main purpose of § 218. After all, the best guaranty of success by the company and benefit to the general public from the operation of railroads is to abide by the law as it is, and deal fairly, justly, and impartially with persons and localities. It is true that for well-known reasons there cannot be exact similarity of circumstances and conditions as respects proportional cost of transportation the longer and shorter distance. But there is ordinarily a substantial similarity as respects the actual cost. Hence § 218 prohibits, not greater proportional, but greater compensation in the aggregate, being charged or received for the shorter than longer distance. However, the framers of the Constitution, aware of the impracticability of fixing unchangeably relative amounts of compensation to be charged and received, or rules applicable in every case to the complicated and varying business of railroads, and of the injustice that might sometimes result from doing so, invested the railroad commission with power to authorize, in special cases, a railroad company to charge less for the longer than shorter distance, and to prescribe from time to time the extent to which such company may be relieved from operation of § 218. And § 820, enacted in harmony with § 218, provides that, after an order of the commission exonerating a railroad company from operation of its provisions as to any special violation complained of, the company shall not be prosecuted on account of it. With such order the court cannot interfere. But an order of the commission refusing to exonerate makes the company liable to prosecution; and the court thus acquiring jurisdiction must, of course, determine the proper construction of the two sections, for upon that, the facts being found, depends guilt or innocence in each case. As already indicated, we think the lower court did not err in giving the instruction referred to, nor in excluding all evidence having no bearing upon the cost of transportation.

Counsel have cited Texas & P. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 162 U. S. 197, 40 L. ed. 940, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 405; and Interstate Commerce Commission v. Alabama Midland R. Co. (recently decided by the Supreme Court of the United States) 168 U. S. 144, 42 L. ed. 414, in which, construing § 4 of the Interstate Commerce Act substantially like § 218, it was held that, when difference of rates between two points of shipment is the ground of complaint, competition is a leading element to be considered; though in each case the court was divided. The Interstate Commerce Act was intended to operate, not within limits of a state merely, but between and through states. And, whatever construction that high tribunal may put upon § 4 of that act, we, in exercise of the province belonging to the supreme court of each state to construe its own laws, have endeavored to so construe § 218 as not to kill it; and, to strengthen the belief we have not misconstrued it, part of the dissenting opinion of Justice Harlan in the last-named case is here quoted: "Besides, the acts of Congress are now so construed as to place communities on the lines of interstate commerce at the mercy of competing railroad companies engaged in such commerce. The judgment in this case, if I do not misapprehend its scope and effect, proceeds upon the ground that railroad companies, when competitors for interstate business at certain points, may, in order to secure traffic for and at those points, establish rates that will enable them to accomplish that result, although such rates may discriminate against intermediate points. Under such an interpretation of the statutes in question, they may well be regarded as recognizing the authority of competing railroad companies engaged in interstate commerce—when their interests will be subserved thereby—to build up favored centers of population at the expense of the business of the country at large. I cannot believe that Congress intended any such result, nor do I think that its enactments, properly interpreted, would lead to such a result."

The judgment is affirmed.

Du Relle, J., dissenting:

The provisions of law involved in this case are § 218 of the Constitution and § 820 of the Kentucky Statutes, as follows:

Const. § 218: "It shall be unlawful for any person or corporation owning or operating a railroad in this state, or any common carrier, to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or of property of like kind, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance; but this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier or person or corporation owning or operating a railroad in this state to receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance; provided that upon application to the railroad commission such common carrier or person or corporation owning or operating a railroad in this state may, in special cases, after investigation by the commission, be authorized to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property; and the commission may, from time to time, prescribe the extent to which such common carrier or person or corporation owning or operating a railroad in this state may be relieved from the operations of this section."

Ky. Stat. § 820: "If any person owning or operating a railroad in this state, or any common carrier, shall charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or property of like kind, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, for a shorter than for a longer distance, over the same line in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance, such person shall, for each offense, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and fined not less than one hundred nor more than five hundred dollars, to be recovered by indictment in the Franklin circuit court, or the circuit court of any county into or through which the railroad or common carrier so violating runs or carries on its business. Upon complaint made to the railroad commission that any railroad or common carrier has violated the provisions of this section, it shall be the duty of the commission to investigate the grounds of complaint, and if, after such investigation, the commission deems it proper to exonerate the railroad or common carrier from the operation of the provisions of this section, an order in writing to that effect shall be made by the commission, and a copy thereof delivered to the complainant and the railroad or common carrier, and the same shall be published as a part of the report of the commission; and, after such order, the railroad or carrier shall not be prosecuted or fined on account of the complaint made. If the commission, after investigation, fails to exonerate the railroad or carrier from the operation of the provisions of this section, an order in writing to that effect shall be made by the commission, and a copy thereof delivered to the complainant, and to the railroad or common carrier, and the same shall be published as a part of the report of the commission; and, after such order, it shall be the duty of the commission to furnish a statement of the facts, together with a copy of its order, to the grand jury of any county, the circuit court of which has jurisdiction, in order that the railroad company or carrier may be indicted for the offense; and the commission shall use proper efforts to see that such company or carrier is indicted and prosecuted."

Without taking time in considering the question whether the statute is in conflict with the constitutional provision, in that it makes no provision for application to the railroad commission by the carrier for authority to charge less for the longer than the shorter haul in special cases, which was the evident intention of the Constitution, but provides only for a complaint against the carrier for a violation of the provisions of the statute, or the question whether the indictment is defective, I wish to call attention to the fact that § 218 of the Constitution is taken almost verbatim from § 4 of the Interstate Commerce Act. Our constitutional convention adopted the long and short haul section at its session closing April 11, 1891. At the time of its adoption into our Constitution, that section had been construed by two United States circuit courts and by the Interstate Commerce Commission, it being held that "substantially similar circumstances and conditions" did not mean solely the cost of carriage, but included also real competition, which the carrier might meet by reduction of rates to the competitive point, without making application to the commission for authority. I attach little importance to the extracts given in the arguments from the constitutional convention debates as a means of ascertaining the intent of the provisions adopted; but in this case those extracts show that the attention of the convention was called to the fact that under the Interstate Commerce Act a less charge for the longer haul was permitted when there was river competition at the more distant point. Under the well-settled rule of construction, the convention must be assumed to have had those constructions in mind when they adopted the section. Those constructions have been followed with strict uniformity in this country, to say nothing of the English authorities, the cases adversely decided having been reversed, with an apparent exception in the Social Circle Case. That case was decided by the commission upon the ground, in substance, that there was no competition. The circuit court dismissed the bill on the ground that the transportation for the two hauls was not over the same line. The circuit court of appeals reversed the circuit court without delivering an opinion, and the Supreme Court (162 U. S. 184, 40 L. ed. 935, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 391) held the decision of the question unnecessary, and declined to decide it.

In the case at bar it was shown that there was a substantial difference in the mileage cost of transportation of coal from Pittsburg, Kentucky, to Louisville, as compared with its transportation to Lebanon, for the reason that the greater volume of traffic in coal and other freight to Louisville made it possible to haul the Louisville freight in through trains, loaded to their full capacity, and without delay, while the traffic to Lebanon, by reason of its smaller volume, was necessarily transported in local trains, which is more expensive. It was also shown that the coal destined to Elizabethtown could be handled in the through trains as far as Lebanon Junction, which was the end of the division, and only 12 miles from Elizabethtown. The appellant company was not permitted to prove that the transportation of coal from Pittsburg and all the mining section of Southeastern Kentucky to Louisville was not only affected, but controlled, by competition at the latter point, which did not exist at all at Lebanon. This competition was from West Virginia and Pennsylvania coal brought in barges down the Ohio to Louisville,—by the cheapest known method of transportation. The cheapness of its transportation gave Pennsylvania and West Virginia coal control of the Louisville market, and no other coal could be sold there unless the transportation rates were made so low as to enable it to compete with the coal from those states. Neither the Southeastern nor Southwestern Kentucky coal fields could reach the Louisville market at all but for the very low rates of transportation given to Louisville over the Kentucky railroads; and if those rates cannot be given, Louisville must depend entirely for coal upon West Virginia and Pennsylvania, or upon the mines of other states, which, under the Interstate Commerce Act, can obtain low through rates to competitive points across this state. No injustice from the low through rates to Louisville resulted to Lebanon or other intermediate points, for the rates to those points would have been the same, and the cost of coal probably higher. If the Southeastern Kentucky coal could not have been carried to Louisville. The majority opinion is, in effect, that cost of transportation is the only circumstance or condition that can be considered. If that be so, it is strange that more apt words were not used in the Constitution. The words used are certainly susceptible of a far wider significance. In my view, the section quoted left the railroads in the same condition, and with the same rights, as before its adoption, except in so far as something is expressly forbidden to be done. As said by Judge Jackson (then circuit judge) in a case afterwards affirmed by the supreme court, and twice subsequently quoted with approval (162 U. S. 184, 197, 40 L. ed. 935, 939, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 391): "Subject to the two leading prohibitions that their charges shall not be unjust and unreasonable, and that they shall not unjustly discriminate so as to give undue preference or advantage, or subject to undue prejudice or disadvantage, persons or traffic similarly circumstanced, the Act to Regulate Commerce leaves common carriers as they were at common law, free to make special contracts looking to the increase of their business, to classify their traffic, to adjust and apportion their rates so as to meet the necessities of commerce, and generally to manage their important interests upon the same principles which are recognized as sound and adopted in other trades and pursuits." Interstate Commerce Commission v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 43 Fed. Rep. 37, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 192. In the case of Missouri P. R. Co. v. Texas & P. R. Co. 31 Fed. Rep. 862, it was said: "Nor can it well be denied that, as between the short and long haul, competition may exist to that extent that what would otherwise be similar circumstances and conditions will be dissimilar circumstances and conditions." In Ex parte Koehler, 31 Fed. Rep. 315, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 317, the court said: "Freight carried to or from a competitive point is always carried under 'substantially dissimilar circumstances and conditions' from that carried to or from noncompetitive points. In the latter case the railway makes its own rates, and there is no good reason why it should be allowed to charge less for a long haul than a short one. When each haul is made from or to a noncompetitive point, the effect of such discrimination is to build up one place at the expense of the other. Such action is wilfully unjust, and has no justification or excuse in the exigencies or conditions of the business of the corporation. In the former case the circumstances are altogether different. The power of the corporation to make a rate is limited by the necessities of the situation. Competition controls the charge. It must take what it can get, or, as was said in Ex parte Koehler, 23 Fed. Rep. 533, 'abandon the field, and let its road go to rust.'" In Interstate Commerce Commission v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 50 Fed. Rep. 295, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 323, the court said: "If the circumstances and conditions are not substantially similar, the prohibition imposed by the statute does not apply at all. . . . The common carrier cannot be required to ignore or overcome existing differences in the transportation facilities of different localities, created, not by its own arbitrary action, but by nature, or by enterprises beyond its control." In the case of Behlmer v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 71 Fed. Rep. 835, decided by the United States circuit court for the district of South Carolina, January 22, 1896, the court quoted from Judge Cooley (Re Louisville & N. R. Co. 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 57, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 280), as follows: "The charging or receiving a greater compensation for the shorter than for the longer haul is seen to be forbidden only when both are under substantially similar circumstances and conditions; and therefore, if in any case the carrier, without first obtaining an order of relief, shall depart from the general rule, its doing so will not alone convict it of illegality, since, if the circumstances and conditions of the two hauls are dissimilar, the statute is not violated." This is quoted with approbation by the United States circuit court, southern district of California. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 50 Fed. Rep. 295, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 323.

When, then, may the circumstances and conditions of the two hauls be said to be dissimilar? Judge Cooley, in the same case, answers this question: 'Among other things, in cases where the circumstances and conditions of the traffic were affected by the element of competition, and where exceptions might be a necessity if the competition were to continue. And water competition was, beyond doubt, especially in view.' . . . The interstate commerce law was intended to promote trade. Such a construction as is now sought would destroy competition, the life of trade." And see Interstate Commerce Commission v. Alabama Midland R. Co. 69 Fed. Rep. 227, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 308, 41 U. S. App. 453, 74 Fed. Rep. 715, 21 C. C. A. 51, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 685. The doctrine of these cases has been followed by the Supreme Court of the United States in the recent case of Interstate Commerce Commission v. Alabama Midland R. Co. (decided Nov. 8, 1897) 168 U. S. 144, 42 L. ed. 414. Said the court in that case: "The competition may in some cases be such as, having due regard to the interests of the public and of the carrier, ought justly to have effect upon the rates, and in such cases there is no absolute rule which prevents the commission or the courts from taking that matter into consideration." The supreme court expressly states the conclusion that in complying with the provisions of the 3d and 4th sections of the act, competition which affects rates is one of the matters to be considered. The court further holds that, where the circumstances and conditions of the long haul and short haul are substantially dissimilar, there is no necessity for the railroad company to apply to the commission for authority to charge less for the long haul than for the short haul. Of course, whether actual competition exists is a question of fact depending on the matter proved in each case.

It is legitimate to consider a question of state policy as tending to show what was intended by a law, whether a provision of the organic law or a statute. Not that we should decide a case upon what we think the proper policy to pursue, but we may consider the policy which the lawgivers had in view as indicating what is the meaning of their enactment. Surely, the framers of our Constitution did not intend to cripple or destroy a growing industry of the state. But the construction by the supreme court of the Interstate Commerce Act, which is the same which was given it at the time it was copied into our Constitution, and the construction now given to our Constitution by the majority opinion,—directly the reverse of that which prevailed when the instrument was adopted,—work together to accomplish that end. Under the law as laid down by the supreme court, it is perfectly lawful for the appellant company, transporting interstate commerce, in order to meet the Ohio river competition at Louisville, to carry coal from Jellico, Tennessee, to Louisville at a lower rate than it charges from Jellico, Tennessee, to Lebanon, Kentucky. Under the majority opinion, it cannot carry coal from Jellico, Tennessee, to Louisville at a less rate than it charges to Lebanon. If, therefore, it be true, as claimed, that the low through rate given to the competitive point is not sufficient to pay the cost of transportation, taking into consideration the fixed charges of the railroad,—interest on debt, official salaries, etc.,—it follows, not that the rate to Lebanon and other noncompetitive points will be lowered, but that the through rate to the competitive point (Louisville) must be abandoned. The appellant will therefore be precluded from transporting Kentucky coal to the greatest market for it, and the mines shipping from Tennessee will have the benefit of Louisville as a market for their surplus, without any competition from Kentucky points. It appears that the Louisville market is almost indispensable to the successful working of the Kentucky mines. Giving access to that market by a through competitive rate works no injury to Lebanon, or to any other noncompetitive point, but is a benefit in which Lebanon and other points indirectly share. To deprive the Kentucky mines of that benefit will profit no one except the miners of other states, which will thereby secure a monopoly of the Louisville market. But, without considering the authorities, and without considering what the constitutional convention ought to have intended, and doubtless did intend, as matter of policy, for the interests and industries of the state, the language of the enactment shows beyond question what was the object intended to be effected by this provision of the Constitution, and in what way was that object to be effected. It was made unlawful for the carrier to charge a greater compensation in the aggregate for transportation of passengers or property for a shorter than for a longer haul, over the same line in the same direction, the shorter being included in the longer distance, if such transportation be made under substantially similar circumstances and conditions; but in the prohibition of a greater charge for a shorter distance it was provided that unconditional authority should not be given by implication to make as great a charge for a shorter as for a longer haul. It is therefore unlawful to charge as great a compensation for the shorter as for the longer haul, when the shipments are made under substantially similar circumstances and conditions. But even where the shipments are made under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, and where the carrier would, therefore, be confessedly guilty of violating the section if more were charged for the shorter than for the longer haul, on application to the commission he may be authorized to make less charge for the longer haul, and the commission may prescribe the extent to which he may be relieved from the operation of the section. When charged with a violation of the law, the carrier may answer—First, that the shipments were not made under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, but under circumstances and conditions materially different; or, second, confessing the circumstances and conditions to be substantially similar, the carrier may answer that application has been made to the commission, and authority given by it to make the less charge for the longer distance. If the circumstances and conditions of shipment are materially dissimilar, the law does not apply at all, and there is no need to be relieved from its operation by the commission. In this case the appellant admits that it has charged a greater sum for the shorter than the longer haul, but claims that the shipments have not been made under substantially similar circumstances and conditions; and has undertaken to make good its defense by showing—First, that the greater relative cost of the short haul makes a substantial dissimilarity; and, second, by offering to show that, by reason of competition from the Ohio river and from other railroads at Louisville, the shipments to that place have not been made under circumstances and conditions substantially similar to those which apply to a shipment to Lebanon. The testimony as to the cost of carriage is admittedly competent. The question presented here is whether proof that Louisville is a competitive point and Lebanon is not is competent to show that the circumstances and conditions are dissimilar.

I have said that, where the circumstances and conditions are dissimilar, the law, under its own terms, does not apply; but this is to be taken with some modification. Because a less charge is allowable under the act for a longer distance than for a shorter, on account of a less cost, it does not follow that the act loses its application entirely. The proper construction is that the less rate is allowable only as it is in proportion to the less cost. The cost might be very little less for the longer haul, and yet the charge made be materially less, in which case the act would apply, because the less charge would not be justified by the less cost, and would clearly be the result of an unjust and arbitrary discrimination. And so, if it appear that a point is a competitive one, it does not follow from that fact alone that the law is not applicable. It must also appear that the less charge is induced solely by the competition, or by it and the fact that the cost is less; otherwise, under pretense of less cost of shipment and alleged competition, the carrier might charge the less price arbitrarily, and solely because of a desire to favor one locality over another. When the real purpose of the provision is considered, it seems plain that its enactment was not at all for the purpose of enforcing reasonable rates of transportation,—a matter which is provided for by other statutes and by the common law. That is clearly not the purpose of this enactment, because, if the charge in this case had been $1.56 from Pittsburg to Louisville, the rate from Pittsburg to Lebanon being $1.55, no one would have dreamed of invoking the aid of the provision under consideration to effect a reduction of the rate to Lebanon: nor could it be invoked if the charges had been $2 to Lebanon and $2.10 to Louisville. The enactment, therefore, does not prohibit the carrier imposing any rate it desires, so long as a less rate in the aggregate is not charged for the longer than for the shorter haul. Clearly, the only purpose was to prevent the carrier from arbitrarily favoring one locality over another. Complaint had been made that, by discrimination in rates, railroad companies would build up towns and cities where they, or their management, owned property, and to prevent such injustice and arbitrary discrimination this provision was enacted. The act was intended to prevent the building up of favored centers of population at the expense of the country at large. But, if the less rate is fairly attributable to the fact that the cost of shipment for the longer distance is less than the cost of shipment to the nearer point, it follows that the difference in charge is not attributable to an arbitrary design to favor one locality at the expense of another; and so if the less rate for the longer haul is fairly attributable to competition in business, by water or otherwise. The act of arbitrarily favoring one locality over another is that act which it was the purpose of the constitutional convention and the legislature to condemn. But, if the difference in charge is attributable to legitimate motives,—that is, any motive other than that condemned by the law,—then there is no room for the operation of the law, as that which it prohibits is not in fact done. To charge a carrier with a violation of this law is, in substance, to charge it with unjustly favoring one locality over another, by charging the favored place with a less rate, though the shipment is for a longer distance; and it is a legitimate answer to say that the less charge was made for another cause than the one the law prohibits, and therefore, unless the law is one to regulate the cost of shipment or competition in business, the causes named may be shown to have induced the less charge. It can hardly be claimed that the purpose of the law was to deprive Louisville of its low or competitive rate, or to attempt to place Lebanon in as favorable a geographical position as if it were situated on a large water-course. I think, therefore, that, so long as Louisville is given only the benefit of its natural advantages, and only such low rates as flow from geographical position, it cannot be said that there has been any arbitrary discrimination, to prevent which alone this law was adopted. Conceding the force and vigor of the argument of the Chief Justice, I have been compelled to reach a different conclusion.

Burnam, J., concurs in this dissent.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, Lewis, Ch. J., on October 28, 1898, handed down the following response:

Willing to consider all that can be said by those who believe themselves injuriously affected by the opinion in this case, we have, in addition to the petition for rehearing filed by appellant as matter of right, permitted petitions filed in behalf of twenty or more coal companies. It is urged as reason for withdrawal of the opinion that if railroad companies be not permitted to make special rates to competitive points, shipment of coal mined in this state must cease. Though an argument drawn from hardship or inconvenience is usually more appropriately addressed to lawmakers, it should, of course, have due weight with the court in determining the proper construction of a law the meaning of which is doubtful or obscure, but never so much as to induce a construction that is absurd, defeats the evident object in view, or involves stultification of those who made it. However, the argument in behalf of the coal companies, even if based upon entirely correct premise, is counterbalanced by the fact that, while special rates to competitive points may benefit a particular industry, removal of all restraint upon discrimination by railroad companies might be injurious to other industries and interests connected or identified with noncompetitive points. Conceding that the construction we have been, by a sense of duty, constrained to give § 218, will work injury to the coal industry of this state, the court is not authorized or permitted to afford relief by perverting the true meaning, and thereby defeating the manifest object of the section. The needed relief must be afforded, if at all, according to, and in the manner provided by, the law itself, which will be hereafter considered.

Counsel for appellant, after stating that it had for seven years relied upon a construction of the long and short haul law settled, as they say, by the Interstate Commerce Commission and certain circuit courts of the United States, permit themselves to use this language: "The court of appeals now, at this late day, propose to repudiate that construction, and announce a construction which has never been announced by any tribunal with reference to the law from which our law was copied verbatim." Counsel might without much effort have recollected that the court of appeals does never propose, but finally decides, the construction to be given such parts of the Constitution and statutes of this state as need construction, and cannot be foreclosed or bound by the views in regard thereto by any other tribunal. It is not true that framers of the Constitution adopted § 218 with a view to a construction that had been put upon § 4 of the Interstate Commerce Act adverse to the one we have given § 218. At that time there had been no decision of the question by the Supreme Court of the United States,—the only tribunal empowered to construe § 4 authoritatively and finally. It could, however, be said, if necessary, that, prior to the adoption of our Constitution, it had been held by respectable English courts that cost of service constitutes the difference of circumstances and conditions, in the meaning of their statute on the same subject, and similar in terms to § 218. The language of § 218 plainly shows it was made part of the Constitution for the definite purpose of surely inhibiting railroad companies doing something they had previously done at will and discretion; that is, charging and receiving greater compensation in the aggregate for transportation of passengers and property for the shorter than the longer distance. But if competition at particular localities in the business of transportation, or other circumstances or conditions influencing the common carrier, not affecting the general public, be held by this court a sufficient reason or excuse for discrimination, railroad companies may, without legal restraint or interference, continue to do precisely what they did before § 218 was adopted, and it becomes a dead letter. In order to give meaning and effect to that section, cost of service must be held to alone constitute the difference of circumstances and conditions which will authorize greater aggregate compensation to be charged or received for the shorter than longer distance of the same line of road; and as, only to the extent of difference in the actual cost of transportation a difference of aggregate compensation may be rightfully charged or received, the general public, as well as the carrier, is affected thereby. As counsel for appellant do not show or attempt to show in what manner railroad companies would or could be restrained or prevented from charging at will greater aggregate compensation for the shorter than longer distance, nor what possible purpose § 218 would or could serve, if the construction they contend for be accepted, we need not consider their petition for rehearing further.

It is argued by counsel for coal companies that the court has and should exercise jurisdiction to revise an order of the railroad commission refusing an application to authorize a common carrier, in special cases, to charge less aggregate compensation for the longer than shorter distance of the same line of road. Unquestionably, framers of the Constitution contemplated probable existence of exceptional circumstances and conditions working hardship or injustice to the railroad company, as well as particular industries or interests, and therefore recognized the justice and necessity of authorizing special rates to be given to competitive points in special cases. But the Constitution does not contain, nor would it have been practicable to put in it, provisions applicable to every state of case that might arise. The railroad commission was therefore created to meet the emergency, and was intended to be invested with full power to authorize or not, in special cases, less compensation to be charged for the longer than shorter distance, and to prescribe from time to time the extent to which the common carrier may be relieved from operation of the section. In our opinion, the court has not jurisdiction to either compel the railroad commission, upon application of the common carrier or those interested in particular industries or callings, to suspend or relax operation of § 218, or, upon application of individuals or corporations feeling aggrieved, to prohibit such suspension or relaxation, in special cases. While the commission is thus and to that extent free from judicial interposition, it cannot, of course, nullify, or, except in special cases, at all suspend, operation of § 218; and, though the railroad commission be invested with this unusual power, it must be treated as a constitutional power, with which the court cannot interfere.

The petition for rehearing is overruled.

43 L. R. A.

A petition for modification having been filed, Lewis, Ch. J., on December 15, 1898, handed down the following response:

Appellant was indicted for the offense of unjust discrimination, alleged to have been committed as follows: "The said Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company . . . did unlawfully, after having received from the Lebanon Roller-Mills Company the same rate of compensation for the transportation of coal to Lebanon, Ky., that the said defendant had charged, demanded, and collected from J. M. Shreve for the contemporaneous transportation of coal of a like amount, for the same distance, over the same line, in the same direction, refund and pay to the said Lebanon Roller-Mills Company a portion of the amount so received from it for said transportation, to wit, the sum of $11.88, as a rebate, and failed and refused to refund or pay back to the said J. M. Shreve any portion of the amounts so demanded and collected from him for the transportation of coal as aforesaid, thereby charging, demanding, collecting, and receiving from the said Lebanon Roller-Mills Company a less compensation for services rendered in the transportation of coal to Lebanon, Ky., than was demanded, collected, and received for a like and contemporaneous service in the transportation of a like traffic, contrary to the form of the statute in such cases made and provided," etc.

The indictment was found under section 817, Ky. Stat., as follows: "If any corporation engaged in operating a railroad in this state shall directly or indirectly by any special rate, rebate, drawback, or other device, charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person a greater or less compensation for any service rendered in the transportation of passengers or property than it charges, demands, collects, or receives from any other person for doing for him a like and contemporaneous service in the transportation of a like kind of traffic, it shall be deemed guilty of unjust discrimination." The penalty for the offense, as prescribed in section 819, is a fine, for the first offense, of not less than $500 nor more than $1,000; for the second offense, not less than $500 nor more than $2,000; and for the third offense, not less than $2,000 nor more than $5,000.

A demurrer to the indictment was filed, consideration of which requires reference to section 215 of the Constitution, to effectuate which seems to be the object of section 817, Ky. Stat. Section 215 provides: "All railway, transfer, belt lines, or railway bridge companies shall receive, load, unload, transport, haul, deliver, and handle freight of the same class for all persons, associations, or corporations from and to the same points and upon the same conditions in the same manner and for the same charges and for the same method of payment." By section 217 of the Constitution it is provided that, for wilfully or knowingly violating any provision of section 215, the penalty, upon conviction by a court of competent jurisdiction, shall be for the first offense, a fine of $2,000; for the second offense, a fine of $5,000; and, for the third offense, a forfeiture, ipso facto, of franchise privileges and charter rights. It is further provided that the attorney general shall forthwith, upon notice of violation of section 215, institute proceedings to enforce the provision of it. It will be observed that every duty or requirement, violation of which section 817, Ky. Stat., denominates unjust discrimination, and made punishable by section 818, Id., is, if not specifically, substantially and fully, enjoined upon railroad companies by section 215 of the Constitution; for every device specified in section 817 by which a railroad company may charge or receive a greater or less compensation for transportation of property from one person than from another is a violation of section 215, and, operating in connection with section 217 of the Constitution, it is final and self-executing. It is therefore manifest that, so far as sections 817 and 818 conflict with sections 215 and 218, they are void, and, so far as the indictment in this case lacks any statement of fact necessary to constitute a complete offense under the two sections of the Constitution, it is defective.

1. The offense of unjust discrimination cannot, according to section 217, be punished, unless it is knowingly or wilfully committed. Consequently, omission of the indictment to charge that it was so committed is a fatal defect.

2. A railroad company is required by section 215 to charge the same amount of compensation for transporting, from and to the same points, freight of the same class or kind, not freight of different classes or kinds. And to make a good indictment for violating that section, it should be stated, either affirmatively, that the freight in question, for which the defendant company is alleged to have charged different owners or shippers different amounts of compensation, was of the same class or kind, or, negatively, was not of different classes or kinds. But that averment was omitted, though manifestly material; for that it is allowable and proper for a railroad company to classify freight according to its quality or character and marketable value, and discriminate in charges for carrying different classes or kinds, is not only universally recognized, but plainly authorized by section 215.

3. There cannot be a violation of that section unless different charges be made for transporting freight of the same class from and to the same points and upon the same conditions.

For the reasons mentioned, the judgment is reversed, and case remanded, that demurrer to the indictment may be sustained.

George W. DOTY et al., Appts.,

v.

DEPOSIT BUILDING & LOAN ASSOCIATION et al.

(.....Ky.....)

NOTE.—The above case is somewhat unusual as far as it applies to the enforcement of a vendor's lien upon personal property which was sold with land.

For other cases of vendors' liens, see also note 45 L. R. A.

1. A vendor's lien may be enforced against real property for the entire amount remaining unpaid upon a sale for a gross consideration of such property and certain personal property, there being no apportionment of the price between the two classes of property.

2. A circuit court of one county, having jurisdiction of the parties and the original controversy has jurisdiction to decree a sale of land in another county as incidental to the relief originally sought.

3. An officer's return of summons cannot be attacked in the action in which the same was made under Stat. § 3760, requiring a direct proceeding against himself or his sureties for such attack unless there is fraud by the party benefited thereby or mistake on the part of the officer.

(May 26, 1898.)

APPEAL by Doty and wife from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Fayette County establishing certain liens against property claimed by appellants. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Z. Gibbons and O. B. Ambrose for appellants.

Mr. A. M. Baker for appellee Taylor.

Mr. J. S. Botts for appellee Deposit Building & Loan Association.

Du Rello, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant Doty and appellee Taylor entered into a written contract in March, 1893, reciting that Doty had, on that day, traded to Taylor three lots of land in Lexington, together with certain stock in the building and loan association, for 100 acres of land in Owen county, it being stipulated that Taylor was to assume the loans on the building and loan association stock. By an additional clause of the contract it was recited "that the party of the second part [Taylor] also trades to the party of the first part [Doty] the following personalty," naming certain live stock, farming implements, and farm products, concluding: "We each agree to give the other a general warranty deed to the above-described property. Possession given of the property this day and date," etc. Taylor conveyed to Doty the Owen county farm, and delivered possession of the personalty. Doty conveyed two of the lots in Lexington, but did not convey the Fifth street lot, which was under mortgage to the building and loan association. The association instituted this action against Doty and wife to enforce its mortgage, and made Hardin and wife defendants, they being grantors in the deed to Doty of the Fifth street lot, calling upon them to set up whatever claim they had to the lot, and also asserting a lien on one share of stock held by Doty in the association. Hardin, by his answer and cross petition, asserted that, by the terms of the deed from him to Doty of the Fifth street lot,—which it was admitted authorized Doty to execute the mortgage to the building and loan association,—it was provided that if he should repay to Doty the sum of $486.70, with interest, Doty should reconvey the land; but that the consideration set out in the conveyance was so set out by mistake, there being no consideration for the transfer except the agreement of Doty to aid in borrowing money from the building and loan association. Hardin prayed for a correction of the deed, and that it be adjudged a mortgage; made tender of the amount which he claimed to be due to the association; and prayed that Doty and wife be required to convey the legal title to him. He made Taylor a party defendant, and called upon him to set up his claim, if any, to the property. Taylor, after reciting the contract before referred to, and averring the performance of his agreement contained therein, prayed that Doty and wife be required to make him a deed to the lot, and, if it should be adjudged that Hardin was entitled to the property, that there should be adjudged due to him (Taylor) $512, as balance of the purchase money of the Owen county land conveyed by him to Doty, and that he be adjudged a lien upon said land for the payment thereof. Doty and wife failed to answer, and judgment was rendered against them by default. The association was adjudged a lien upon the stock, as well as a lien upon the Fifth street lot. It was adjudged to be indivisible, and a sale ordered, first, of the stock; and, if necessary, of the lot. A sale was had of the stock and the Fifth street lot, and the association became the purchaser of the lot. On motion of Hardin and Taylor, the sale of the lot was set aside, upon condition of their paying off the entire judgment in favor of the building association against Doty. A second judgment was rendered, holding that the deed from Hardin and wife to Doty was a mortgage, and adjudging that, upon the payment by Hardin of the entire judgment in favor of the association against Doty, said deed should be null and void, and the commissioner should reconvey the title to the lot to Hardin, on behalf of Doty and wife, which was accordingly done. It was subsequently adjudged that Taylor should recover of Doty and wife the sum of $391; that that amount was a part of the purchase price agreed to be paid for the Owen county land; and, to secure it, Taylor was adjudged a lien upon such land, and sale ordered of so much thereof as might be necessary to discharge the debt. Sale thereof was duly made by the commissioner, the entire property not bringing the amount of the debt. Doty excepted to the report of sale, but no bill of exceptions was filed of the testimony heard upon the questions of fact presented by the exceptions. Mrs. Doty entered her appearance for the purpose only of moving to set aside the judgments entered, so far as her interests were affected, upon the ground that process on the petition or either of the cross petitions was never served upon her. Doty's exceptions and his wife's motion were overruled, and they have appealed to this court.

to O'Conner v. O'Conner (Tenn.) 7 L. R. A. 38; also Gessner v. Palmater (Cal.) 13 L. R. A. 187; Frame v. Sliiter (Or.) 34 L. R. A. 690; and Smith v. Allen (Wash.) 39 L. R. A. 82.

On behalf of appellant, it is contended that the lot on Fifth street, in Lexington, being a part of the consideration for the purchase, not only of the Owen county farm, but of the personalty as well, the contract being for the realty and personalty in gross, without any price fixed for either of them separately, either by the contract or the pleadings, a vendor's lien cannot exist upon the realty for any sum which is a part of the purchase price of both the realty and the personalty in gross. It is also objected that, by the judgment, he was given a lien, not only for the difference between the value of the Fifth street lot and the encumbrance upon it, but for the rents thereof, between the date of the contract by which the trade was made and the time of filing the cross petition. But it is evident that the judgment was only for the difference between the value of the property and the encumbrance thereon to the building association, with interest.
 . 43 L. R. A.

The basis of counsel's former contention is correctly stated. By the contract in question, fairly construed, undoubtedly it was agreed to trade the three Lexington lots in gross for the Owen county farm, farming implements, farm products, and live stock in gross, without fixing the price at which any one of the lots, or the farm, or the personal property was taken in the trade. It is earnestly insisted that, the purchase price being the purchase price for both the farm and the personalty, no lien can arise upon the land for any part of the purchase price, because it is the purchase price in gross of both the land and the personalty. A number of authorities are cited as sustaining this proposition, as well as in support of the contention that no vendor's lien can exist to secure an uncertain or unliquidated demand. Without going through the authorities in detail cited in support of these contentions, we may say that the questions seem to have been decided otherwise by this court, and, as we think, manifestly upon equitable principles. There is no intervening equity of third persons to be considered. It is a question simply between vendor and vendee.

This record discloses the transfer of a farm and the personalty upon it for a consideration agreed to be paid in other lands. A part of this consideration has been paid. The value of the balance due can be and has been, judicially ascertained. And the question presented is whether that part of the property sold, which the court can reach, shall be subjected to the payment of the purchase price remaining unpaid, in a proceeding in which the vendor's right to payment has been adjudged, or whether he shall be compelled to await the result of process of execution, or to bring an attachment suit in a court of another county.

The statute (Ky. Stat. § 2358) provides that the grantor shall not have a lien for unpaid purchase money "against bona fide creditors and purchasers, unless it is stated in the deed what part of the consideration remains unpaid." This statute being the same as in the General Statutes, discloses a marked change from the language used in the Revised Statutes, which provided that, if any part of the consideration remained unpaid at the time of the conveyance, the grantor should not thereby have a lien for the same, unless it were expressly stated in the deed what part of the consideration remained unpaid. By clear implication of the statute, as between vendor and vendee, a lien exists upon the land sold for the purchase price of the land; and it does not seem to be seriously contended that if it appeared, either from the contract or extrinsic evidence, what price in the trade was put upon the realty and what upon the personalty sold by Taylor to Doty, a lien would not exist upon the land for that proportion of the unpaid purchase money which was applicable to the sale of the land. We might suggest that, in such a case, no application having been made of the partial payment of the consideration of the two varieties of property sold, equity would make an application of the payment for the parties, and the consideration actually paid would be applied to extinguishing the obligation for the personalty. But we think it unnecessary to resort to equitable application of payments in this case.

Doty obtained title and possession of certain realty and personalty by one transaction, one contract, and for one consideration. A part of the consideration remains unpaid. What has become of the personalty thus sold does not appear in this record. Manifestly, personal property of the character indicated—easy of transportation and finding ready sale—might be disposed of in such time and manner as to prevent the levy of execution thereon. But, as between vendor and vendee, with no intervening equities, it would be manifestly unconscientious to permit a party to retain possession of property without the payment of the consideration. The process of the court may be unable to reach and subject the personalty to the payment of that part of the consideration which may be supposed to have been agreed to be paid for the personalty, but it can reach the realty, the sale of which was effected at the same time and by the same agreement. The case seems to us strictly analogous to the case of a sale in gross of two lots of land for an agreed lumping consideration, a part of which is unpaid at the date of the conveyance. Undoubtedly, in such case, either lot (no equities intervening) might be subjected to the payment of the unpaid purchase money. Said the New York court in Warren v. Fenn, 28 Barb. 334: "It has become one of the best-established principles of natural equity . . . that estates are to be regarded as unconscientiously obtained when the consideration is not paid." Again, in Fisk v. Potter, 2 Abb. App. Dec. 138, the court said of a vendor's lien: "Its existence depends upon and is controlled by no well-settled rules, but, on the contrary, the existence of the lien is generally made to depend upon the peculiar state of facts and circumstances surrounding the particular case; that is, whether or not a case of natural equity is established." In Thacker v. Booth, 9 Ky. L. Rep. 747, Judge Holt, delivering the opinion of the court, said: "A lien existed in the nature of a trust, because equity will not allow one to hold the land of another and not pay for it. To do so would be in violation of good conscience and every rule of right." So, in Blevins v. Blankenship, 9 Ky. L. Rep. 852, Judge Holt, discussing the change made by the General Statutes in the statute before quoted, said that, unless it be stated in the deed what part of the consideration remained unpaid, the vendor waived his lien as to creditors and purchasers, who were protected because the conveyance gave them no notice that any consideration remained unpaid; and then added: "The immediate vendee knows, however, whether it has been paid or not; and, if not, the lien, upon equitable principles, exists in favor of the vendor, although the deed fails to state that any, or how much, of it is unpaid."

We think it is proper to treat this transaction as one sale; and assuming, for the purpose of argument, that no lien exists upon the personalty, even as between vendor and vendee, after possession has been parted with, we see nothing inequitable in subjecting that part of the property sold which the court can reach to a vendor's lien for the unpaid purchase money due upon all the property sold in the same transaction. In the case of Davis v. Page, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 622, this court, in an opinion by Judge Guffy, enforced, as between the parties thereto, a lien retained in an unrecorded title bond executed upon a sale of both realty and personalty. And see Clarke v. Curtis, 11 Leigh, 559, 37 Am. Dec. 625. And as to the question whether a vendor's lien can exist for an unliquidated claim, as for breach of contract for personal services to be rendered as consideration for the sale of land, the case of Miller v. Denny, 99 Ky. 53, is directly in point. Counsel himself states that, in his view, a "vendor's lien is a creature of equity, and that the equity is to be decided as to each case upon its peculiar facts." The peculiar facts of this case are that Doty was in possession of real and personal property, for which he had not paid all the consideration. Having, as we think, incidental jurisdiction of the land, it is manifest equity that the court should subject it to the payment of the entire unpaid purchase money.

And this brings us to the consideration of appellant's contention that the court had no jurisdiction to sell the Owen county land, it being situate in another county. Upon this contention counsel cites the case of Webb v. Wright, 1 Bush, 107. That case was again before the court in 2 Bush, 126, on which appeal Judge Williams, delivering the opinion of the court, held that, the court having jurisdiction of the persons and cause of action in a suit which was, in effect, for the settlement of a partnership, the proceeding in rem for the sale of land in another county attached as an incidental remedy. In Fishback v. Green, 87 Ky. 107, in an opinion by Judge Holt, this court held that, in an action to settle an insolvent estate, the court had jurisdiction to decree the sale of land situated in another county than that in which the action was pending. In the case at bar, having jurisdiction of the parties and the original controversy, we think the court part of his lot; and, second, damages which result from building the street railway on the land of the turnpike company so close to his building as to materially injure his use of the turnpike. Pleadings being made up, the trial of the case resulted, under instructions given to the jury, in a verdict for appellee for $665, the basis of the recovery, being both elements of damage enumerated above, and we are asked to reverse that judgment.

The court, on motion of plaintiff, instructed the jury, first, that "if they believed from the evidence that the plaintiff, John Faulkner, was the owner and in possession of the property in controversy, and that the defendant, the Ashland & Catlettsburg Street-Railway Company, while plaintiff was the owner and in the possession of said property, by its officers, agents, or employees, entered upon said property, and constructed its line of street railway in front thereof on said property, the law is for the plaintiff, and the jury will so find." And, in fixing the measure of compensation under the state of case contemplated in the first instruction, the jury were told by instruction No. 3 that, "if they believed as in instruction No. 1, they will find from the evidence the market value of the entire tract of land just before it became generally known that the street railway was to be constructed in front of it, and find the value of the ground taken and occupied by it for all the purposes for which it was adapted, and to this sum they will add the amount, if any, they believe from the evidence the remainder of the tract is diminished by reason of the construction and operation of defendant's road." On the issues raised by the second paragraph, the court instructed the jury that "if they did not believe from the evidence, and find as in instruction No. 1., but believed from the evidence that the defendant constructed its track upon the Ash-struction and operation of a street railway be a new burden upon the street or not, if by reason of the construction and operation thereof in close proximity to the property of an abutting owner, whereby it is damaged, such owner is entitled to recover therefor. Campbell v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 82 Ga. 320.

And the owner of property abutting on a street is entitled to injunctive relief against a street-car company about to construct a street-railway line thereon, though the fee of the street in front of his lot was in the city, where there was already in operation on that street a double-track street railroad, telegraph and telephone lines, wires and poles for electric lighting, and the street had already become greatly obstructed, and between the third track proposed to be constructed and the sidewalk there would not remain sufficient space for the ordinary traffic of the street free from unreasonable obstruction, and the means of access to the lotowners' premises would be unreasonably and materially abridged and injured. Dooly Block v. Salt Lake Rapid Transit Co. 9 Utah, 31, 24 L. R. A. 610.

III. Extent of right to compensation.

No general rule seems to have been laid down by which the extent of the right of an abutting owner to compensation is to be measured, and many of the cases seem to be in conflict. But perhaps the conclusion nearest in accord with all the cases would be that the abutting owner is entitled to compensation whenever the railway tracks on the side of the street interfere with or are detrimental to access to the property in the usual and ordinary ways, and with the use of the property and street in a way which does not interfere with the rights of others. But that an interference with an excessive use, or a use which was or might be an interference with the rights of others, would not entitle the owner to compensation.

Thus, laying a railroad track in a street 70 feet wide, from 10 to 16 feet east from the center thereof, is not such a taking of the property of an owner of the lot on the west side of the street as will entitle him to damages. First Congregational Church v. Milwaukee & L. W. R. Co. 77 Wis. 158.

And the fact that the use of the full width of the street in front of the premises of an abutting owner has been restricted by the laying of street-railway tracks does not give him a right of recovery where he had 27 feet of the 43 L. R. A.

street in front of his lots unobstructed. Wichita & C. R. Co. v. Smith, 45 Kan. 264.

Nor will an action lie by the owner of property abutting upon a street against a street-railway company for damages arising out of the location and operation of the road so that it obstructed ingress and egress, where the rails of the track were on the level of the street and not nearer to the property than 30 to 40 feet, there being about 20 to 30 feet for pavement and street, within which there would be plenty of room for vehicles to pass without inconvenience and without crossing the track or touching the rails. Louisville S. R. Co. v. Hooe, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 521.

So, the proprietor of a store has no such right to the use of the street in front of it for drays and wagons with teams attached to stand upon the street at right angles thereto at the pavement in front of his store while discharging or loading goods as will entitle him to damages against a horse-railway company which has so constructed its track under authority from the city as to interfere with such use, but may be compelled, if the public convenience requires the car line in the position in which it is placed, to load and discharge goods from wagons and drays standing lengthwise of the street. Hobart v. Milwaukee City R. Co. 27 Wis. 794, 9 Am. Rep. 481.

And the loading and unloading of vehicles used in the transporting of goods and raw material on the street in front of a manufacturing establishment by backing the wagon or dray up at right angles from the sidewalk necessarily obstructs not only street-car traffic but the proper use of a street for all other vehicles, and the construction of a street railway so near to such an establishment as to prevent such loading and unloading will not be enjoined at the action of the owner or occupant of such establishment. Louisville Bagging Mfg. Co. v. Central Pass. R. Co. 95 Ky. 50.

Nor will the construction of a double-track street railway in the middle of a street so located that the space between exterior rails and the sidewalk in front of a public market frequented by sellers, gardeners and farmers with their wagons and teams on market mornings would be too narrow to permit them to occupy it with their vehicles standing at right angles with the street, entitle the lotowner to enjoin the construction and operation of the street railroad, though he owns the fee in the street. Sells v. Columbus Street R. Co. 28 Ohio L. J. 172.

land & Catlettsburg Turnpike Road, so close to plaintiff's property as to unreasonably interfere with the ingress and egress to and from said property, the law is for the plaintiff, and the jury will so find." And in defining the measure of compensation, if they found the facts to be as set out in instruction No. 2, they were told to find from the evidence the value of plaintiff's property just before it became generally known that the defendant's railway was to be located in front of plaintiff's property, and then determine what proportion of the value is taken from the property by reason of the construction and operation of defendant's road, and such proportion would be the amount of damage. The proof in the record shows that the east rail of the street-railway track is about seven feet from appellee's building; that the track at that point was laid down at grade on the road, and that the only elevation was the height of the rails, two or three inches; that the road between the rails was ballasted with gravel; that a crossing of three-inch plank was put on each side of the track, 12 or 15 feet long, making a good crossing where wagons and other vehicles could pass over or be backed in across the track at that point to appellee's house from the turnpike road on the west side of the railway track; and that appellant's road was built on the east side of the turnpike road. There is no proof which conduces to show that the approach to appellee's property has been interfered with by the building of the road, except by its proximity to the building, and that it is a new use of the street at that point, which, in some degree, interferes with appellee's use.

The question before us, therefore, is, Was there such obstruction as to authorize recovery in this branch of the case. If the diminution in the value of appellee's property arose solely by reason of the location of the road in front of his property, this of itself

And the fact that a side track about to be constructed in a street, in which a street-car company had for a long time maintained a single track, would interfere with express wagons and teams in backing up to the curb standing at right angles with the street thereon in front of abutting premises used as an express office and ware-room to receive and deliver the express and freight thereof, rendering the premises less valuable for that purpose, does not constitute such an injury as entitles the lotowner to maintain an injunction against the railroad company to restrain it from constructing the side track, as such lotowner had no easement in the street for backing up teams to the sidewalk for the purpose of loading and unloading freight. Oviatt v. Akron Street R. Co. 3 Ohio Dec. 252.

And where a franchise is granted to a street-railway company for twenty-five years authorizing it to construct, maintain, and operate a street railroad with single or double tracks, and it constructs a single track in a street without objection from abutting owners, and later but within the twenty-five years it constructs another track therein to enlarge its facilities, a lotowner cannot interfere by injunction on the ground that the second track would interfere with an express office and ware-room located on his lot by preventing wagons and teams from backing up to the curb and standing crosswise on the street in front of his premises. Ibid.

In the above case that of Cincinnati & S. G. Ave. Street R. Co. v. Cumminsville, 14 Ohio St. 523, infra, was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the railroad track laid upon the side of the highway as proposed would be an obstruction to the convenient access to the houses and other improvements on the side of the highway, the effect of which would be that the abutting owner would sustain special and peculiar injury by reason of depriving him of convenient ingress and egress to his premises from and to the street, which fact being established there could be no escape from the conclusion that the abutting owner was entitled to compensation to the extent he was deprived of his property under the constitutional rule.

So, while the abutting owners have an easement in a street in common with the whole people, to pass and repass, and also to have free access to their premises, the mere inconvenience of such access occasioned by placing a street-car track so near the sidewalk as not to leave sufficient space for a vehicle to stand is not the subject of an action. Kellinger v. Forty-Second Street & G. Street Ferry R. Co. 50 N. Y. 206. And see ASHLAND & C. STREET R. CO. v. FAULKNER.

And the fact that a street-railway track constructed in a street in which two others have been previously constructed is thereby brought in such close proximity to the edge of the sidewalk in front of an abutting lot occupied by a storehouse as to materially inconvenience the receiving and delivering goods, and that the car lines practically occupied the entire space covered by the street, is not such an infringement upon the right of access to the storehouse as will entitle the owner to damages against the company last locating its line. San Antonio Rapid Transit Street R. Co. v. Limburger, 88 Tex. 79.

The question in an action by the owner of the lot against a street-railway company laying a track in such a position is not whether the construction and maintenance of the railroad interfere with the ingress and egress to and from the storehouse, but whether such construction and maintenance encroach upon the right of access. Ibid.

And the right of free access to property abutting on a street is not interfered with by a street-railway track built so close to the curbing that vehicles cannot stand between the tracks and the curbing without interfering with the cars, so as to warrant relief by injunction against the car company, as the rights of both must be exercised in reason, and if at any time the owner has occasion for the presence of vehicles in front of his property to take away or deliver persons or goods, he may exercise that right for such reasonable time as is necessary, and if in such exercise of the right the passage of street cars is impeded, they must wait. Raferty v. Central Traction Co. 147 Pa. 579; Sells v. Columbus Street R. Co. 28 Ohio L. J. 172; San Antonio Rapid Transit Street R. Co. v. Limburger, 88 Tex. 79.

So, a street railway, one of the tracks of which was in such close proximity to the sidewalk in front of the premises of an abutting owner as to interfere with, impede, and prevent his complete enjoyment of the use and occupation thereof, leaving insufficient space between the sidewalk and the track to admit of any kind of vehicle to be driven or to remain in front of his premises, is not for that reason a public nuisance where the title to the street vested in the city, but the injuries to the owner are furnishes no ground of complaint, as the whole trend of modern authorities is to the effect that the operation of a street railway is a legitimate use of the highway, and an exercise of the public right of travel. They are but a means of using the public streets to a greater advantage for the very purpose for which they were laid out, and are recognized as the best and cheapest mode yet devised of getting about in a city, and do not impose any new or additional burdens for which abutters are entitled to compensation, unless they be so constructed as to deprive the abutter of some easement, or in some way cause him special damage for which he is entitled to recover, as they do not hinder the use of the rest of the street for public travel, and in but a very small degree obstruct travel on the part occupied by their tracks. See Wood, Railway Law, § 748, and authorities there cited, and 3 Elliott, Railroads, p. 1635. On this point Judge Dillon says: "The appropriation . . . of a street for a horse railway, . . . and used . . . in the ordinary mode, is such a use as falls within the purposes for which the streets are dedicated or acquired under the power of eminent domain." Dill. Mun. Corp. 3d ed. § 722. Judge Cooley says: "When land is taken or dedicated for a town street, it is unquestionably appropriated for all the ordinary purposes of a town street; not merely the purposes to which such streets were formerly applied, but those demanded by new improvements and new wants. Among these purposes is the use for carriages which run upon a grooved track; and the preparation of important streets in large cities for their use is not only a frequent necessity, which must be supposed to have been contemplated, but is almost as much a matter of course as the grading and paving." Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 556.

As early as 1872 this question was thorreferable to that class of disadvantages to which one is subjected resulting from the lawful exercise of the absolute power of control vested in the state in connection with the title to the fee of the land. Kellinger v. Forty-Second Street & G. Street Ferry R. Co. 50 N. Y. 206.

And the court in an action for damages and an injunction restraining the defendant from the use and occupation of a street-car track against a street-car company for thus laying the track of its road, thereby incommoding the owner and his family in leaving and returning to their residence, and depreciating the rental value, cannot take judicial notice of the width of the street at that point, or that there was any other available space vacant in which the track could have been laid. Ibid.

So, the laying in a public street of a switch turn-out and side-track, and the use thereof, when authorized by an act of the legislature, is the exercise of a lawful right for which no liability for damages for consequential injury arises, unless there is some misconduct or negligence, though it was constructed adjacent to and in front of the property of an abutting owner, so near the sidewalk as to prevent a carriage from standing there while the track was occupied by passing cars. Carson v. Central R. Co. 35 Cal. 329.

And one who sues to abate a turn-out or side-track in a public street constructed under legislative authority as a nuisance cannot give evidence of damages sustained until he has first introduced evidence tending to show that the switch and turn-out were not necessary, though they are so close to his premises as to prevent a carriage from standing there while the track thereof was so occupied. Ibid.

And a turn-out and short side-track made from the main track in a public street toward and along the sidewalk upon which cars are run for the purpose of standing until other cars pass, and stop to allow passengers to make an exchange of cars, is a switch and turn-out and presumed to be necessary within the meaning of an act authorizing the laying of the railroad and necessary switches, turn-outs, and side-tracks though it is laid so close to the sidewalk as to prevent carriages from standing there while the track is so occupied. Ibid.

And a judgment for damages and an injunction against a street-railway company in an action by an abutting owner in which it was alleged that the defendant constructed a siding or turn-out opposite lots occupied by him, the outer track being 16 inches from the curb of the sidewalk, and that the siding was used as a stand for defendant's cars, from two to four cars usually standing thereon directly in front of plaintiff's premises and cutting off access thereto, will be reversed where the damages were assessed by a jury on the theory that the whole structure was unlawful, although the judge found that the structure was lawful and placed his direction for an injunction on the ground that the lessor of the railway company could not confer any right to occupy the siding as a stand for the accommodation of cars. Mahady v. Bushwick R. Co. 91 N. Y. 148, 43 Am. Rep. 661.

Switches and turn-outs built in a public street under legislative authority to construct a railroad and necessary switches and turn-outs therein are presumed to be necessary, "and an abutting owner alleging them to be a nuisance has the burden of proving them to be so, though they are so near the sidewalk in front of his premises as to prevent a carriage from standing there while the switch or turn-out was occupied by passing cars. Carson v. Central R. Co. 34 Cal. 329.

In Kellinger v. Forty-Second Street & G. Street Ferry R. Co. 50 N. Y. 206, however, holding that the laying of a street-car track so near the sidewalk as not to leave sufficient space for a vehicle to stand will not be enjoined and is not the subject of an action for damages, it was said that the court did not intend to determine that there were no circumstances which would justify an action. All the authorities concur that an injury to private rights of property committed through negligence or wilful misconduct, even though in the pursuit of a lawful purpose, may be redressed by an action.

And it has been held that a municipality cannot grant permission to a street-railway company to lay a railroad track upon the side of a street where it would be more of an obstruction to the convenient access to the houses and other improvements on that side than it would be if laid in the center of the street. Cincinnati & S. G. Ave. Street R. Co. v. Cumminsville, 14 Ohio St. 523.

And in Scioto Valley R. Co. v. Lawrence, 38 Ohio St. 41, Cincinnati & S. G. Ave. Street R. Co. v. Cumminsville, 14 Ohio St. 524, supra, was sanctioned and affirmed, though in the former case there is nothing to show that the railroad in question was placed elsewhere than in the center of the street.

A street-railway company authorized to conoughly considered by the court of appeals of New York in the case of Killinger v. Forty-Second Street & G. Street Ferry R. Co. 50 N. Y. 206. In that case the plaintiff alleged that the track of defendant's road was unnecessarily or negligently or wilfully laid so near the sidewalk as to impair the use of his premises, and depreciate its rental value. The court held that "abutting owners have an easement in the street, in common with the whole people, to pass and repass, and also to have free access to their premises; but the mere inconvenience of such access occasioned by the lawful use of the street is not the subject of action." The supreme court of Pennsylvania has also thoroughly considered this question in the case of Rafferty v. Central Traction Co. 147 Pa. 579. This was an injunction suit to prevent the laying of rails on a street in such proximity to the curb as to interfere with the ingress and egress of the abutting property holders, and struct a track along and upon a highway, and to use and occupy any such parts of it as might be required for the purposes of their railroad track and the running of their cars, should exercise the right given them in accordance with the use and purposes of the highway so as to cause as little inconvenience as possible to the public and adjoining proprietors, and should construct their tracks upon the part of the highway used by carriages, and not on the side thereof used by foot passengers and within a few feet of the adjoining property line, where the running of the cars would interfere with access to the adjoining property, and greatly diminish its value. Ross v. Montreal Street R. Co. 24 L. C. Jur. 60.

So, municipal power to control streets does not include the right to permit a private corporation to operate a street-railway line upon a street, where there was already in operation upon that street a double-track street railroad, with telegraph and telephone lines, and wires and poles for electric lighting, and the street had already become greatly obstructed, and between the third track proposed to be constructed and the sidewalk in front of an abutting owner's premises there would not remain sufficient space for the ordinary traffic of the street free from unreasonable obstruction, and the means of access to his premises would be unreasonably and materially abridged and injured. Dooly Block v. Salt Lake Rapid Transit Co. 9 Utah, 31, 24 L. R. A. 610.

And where the tracks already upon the street afford ample facilities to run all cars necessary for public convenience, it cannot permit the laying of an additional line where it would not leave sufficient space between the outside of the additional line and the gutter in front of the premises of an abutting owner for vehicles to pass each other with safety, and would materially and unreasonably abridge and injure such owner's right of access. Ibid.

So, an allegation in an action by an abutting owner against a street-railway company that the west rail of the track of the railroad was laid within 18 inches of the curbstone on the abutting owner's side of the street in front of his lot, and that the cars are running daily from 6 o'clock A. M. to 10 o'clock P. M., passing the premises every five minutes and often as many as four, five, and six cars following in trains one immediately after the other, effectually cutting off all safe entrance to and exit from said property by any kind of vehicle, substantially the rights of such property holders were exhaustively discussed by the court. It was claimed by the plaintiffs that their right of free access to their property along the street was interfered with because vehicles could not stand between the tracks and the curbing without interfering with the cars. It was held that "the right of the property owner in this respect is not at all changed. He has the same right after the tracks are laid . . . that he had before. It is a right which must be exercised in reason, whether there are car tracks on the street or not. In no circumstances does it confer the privilege of obstruction by unreasonable exercise, but the reasonable exercise of the right gives no right to the street car companies to arrest it"; the court finally holding that "the operation of a street railway by electricity is not an additional servitude or burden on the land which will entitle the owner of property abutting on the street to compensation, asserts that by reason of the construction and operation of the road the plaintiff was deprived of ingress and egress to and from his property which would be sufficient to entitle him to recover damages therefor. Campbell v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 82 Ga. 320.

And the question whether the premises of an abutting owner are interfered with by a street-car line to such an extent as to materially depreciate their value, thus rendering the street-railway company liable, is one of fact for the jury under an allegation that the company willfully made a large curve in its road, and built it so near the curb in front of such lot that a wagon could not pass between the curb and the track. McQuaid v. Portland & V. R. Co. 18 Or. 237.

An allegation in an action by an abutting owner against a street-railway company for laying its track in close proximity to his premises that the street being an up-grade, the horses and mules drawing the cars were often driven under the lash, causing them to rear, plunge, pitch, and jump upon the sidewalk in front of the plaintiff's property greatly to the annoyance and disturbance of himself and family, however, is demurrable as alleging a nuisance to the occupancy only, since to recover the damage must be to the property, and not consist merely of an inconvenience or nuisance. Campbell v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 82 Ga. 320.

But where the question in an action by an abutting owner against a railroad company occupying the street is the absolute obstruction of access to his property by the building of the road, it is impossible to separate the construction from the operation thereof within the intent of the principle of law that where injuries result from the exercise of a lawful business in a lawful manner without negligence and without malice they are damnum absque injuria. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Walsh, 1 Pa. Dist. R. 121.

In England there is a rule that 9 feet and 6 inches shall intervene between the tramway rail and the nearest foot path.

But this rule was departed from in Edinburgh Street Tramways Co. v. Black, L. R. 2 H. L. S. C. App. Cas. 336, where, in reliance upon preliminary agreements the abutting owners on a narrow thoroughfare abstained from opposing the Edinburgh tramway bill authorizing the construction of a tramway therein and its location not in accordance with the rule, and afterwards upon an attempt by them to prevent the tramway from being placed nearer the footpath, either by injunction for damages by the construction and maintenance of such a track. . . . If at any time, the owner [of property abutting on the street] has occasion for the presence of vehicles in front of his property on the street to take away or deliver persons or goods, he may exercise that right for such reasonable time as is necessary for his purposes; and if, in the exercise of such right, the passage of street cars is impeded, the street cars must wait." In the case of Williams v. City Electric Street R. Co. 41 Fed. Rep. 556, the court said: "The operation of a street railway by . . . [mechanical power] is not an additional servitude or burden on the land already dedicated or condemned to the use of a public street, and is therefore not a taking of private property, but is a modern and improved use only of the street as a public highway, and affords to the abutting property holder, though he may own the fee of the street, no legal ground of complaint." In the case of Briggs v. Lewiston & A. Horse R. Co. 79 Me. 363, the court said: "We do not think the construction and operation of a street railroad in a street is a new and different use of the land from its use as a highway. . . . The laying down rails in the street and the running street cars over them for the accommodation of persons desiring to travel on the street is only a later mode of using the land as a way, using it for the very purpose for which it was originally taken." In the case of Paterson R. Co. v. Grundy, 51 N. J. Eq. 213, the supreme court of New Jersey held that abutting owners' rights in a street in front of their property are subservient, unless such use imposes an additional servitude upon the land taken by the street or the abutting land; but when a public use, authorized by law, takes no property of the individual but merely affects him by proximity, the necessary interference in his business or in the enjoyment of his property occasioned by such use, furnishes no basis for damages." In the case of Detroit City R. Co. v. Mills, 85 Mich. 634, the court held that "street railways, when constructed so as not to interfere with the rights of others upon the streets, form no obstruction to such use and enjoyment. They make no more noise than the omnibus and other heavy vehicles, are not more dangerous, and no more interfere with access to the abutting lots. They constitute a modern and improved use only of the street as a public way"; holding that the abutting property owner would not be entitled to compensation for such use, in the absence of a statute giving it or plain proof of such injury. In the case of Louisville Bagging Mfg. Co. v. Central Pass. R. Co. 95 Ky. 50, this court said: "It is well settled that the use of a public street for travel and transportation by means of railway cars falls within the purposes for which streets are established and dedicated; and it is only when other ways of travel and transportation are prevented or unreasonably obstructed that courts can interfere to either enjoin or limit operation of railroad upon a public street. . . . The trolley system of operating street-railway cars, when properly adjusted and supervised, is not much, if any, more dangerous than horse power. . . . Moreover, while street-railway cars thus operated go at greater speed, are more comfortable, and must in time become a cheaper mode of travel, they can be easier controlled than horse cars, and do not really more obstruct the streets or interfere unreasonably with business transacted thereon."

This question has been so exhaustively discussed, both in cases and text-books, as to leave but little to be said; and the rule is that a street railway may be placed and operated upon any part of a public street of a municipal corporation which is used by

it was held that the statute not only furnished authority for the location of the road, but that the company was bound to obey it.

IV. Damages.

The amount of any depreciation in the value of premises abutting on a street, caused by the location, conducting, and operation of a street railway so near them as to prevent or materially affect access thereto, is the measure of damages in an action therefor. McQuaid v. Portland & V. R. Co. 18 Or. 237.

It is the difference between the value of the property before and after the building of the road. Elizabethtown, L. & B. S. R. Co. v. Combs, 10 Bush, 392, 19 Am. Rep. 67.

An injury to the property of an owner abutting upon a street caused by the location of a railroad track within a few feet of the sidewalk opposite his premises so that carriages drawn by horses cannot pass or stand in front of his lot while trains are passing, and his means of ingress and egress are interfered with, is permanent and enduring in its nature, so that a single recovery may be had for the whole injury to result from the acts complained of. Ibid.

V. The California statute.

The provision of the California statute is that street-railway companies shall construct their tracks on those portions of the street designated in the ordinance granting the route which must be as nearly as possible in the middle of the street, and a general ordinance applicable to all street-car companies providing that the track shall be laid as near the center of the street or streets along the route of the railway as practicable, are to be strictly construed and a strict compliance therewith must be had. Finch v. Riverside & A. R. Co. 87 Cal. 597.

But these provisions mean as nearly as practicable, since the location in the middle of the street could not always be made, and the location must be controlled in some degree by the circumstances of the particular case. Ibid.

A street-railway company violating these provisions without reason is liable to an action of ejectment by an abutting owner owning the fee in the street. Ibid.

And evidence that a street was only 40 feet wide, and that consequently it would interfere with traffic to place a street-car track in the middle of the street, in the absence of anything to show how much travel there was because teams could not pass each other on either side of the track without crossing it, is not sufficient to show why the track could not be located in the middle of the street under a statutory and municipal provision requiring tracks to be laid as near the center of the street as practicable. Ibid.

F. H. B.

vehicles without increasing the burden of the servitude, and the owner of the fee is not entitled to compensation because of such use of the street upon which his property abuts merely because he is affected by the proximity of the tracks to his property, without proof of special damage resulting therefrom. It does not appear that there was such obstruction of appellee's use of the public highway in front of his house by the railway as would justify recovery, if, as a matter of fact, the railway was built entirely upon the turnpike road. While it is true that there is not sufficient room between the tracks and the house of appellee for wagons and other vehicles to stand as they formerly did, there is nothing to hinder vehicles from being driven across the tracks at that point, or standing on the space between the rails, as cars pass there only at intervals of ten or fifteen minutes. Most of the witnesses who testify on this point state that there was no diminution whatever in the salable value of appellee's property resulting from the operation of the road, and no witness except appellee himself fixes the damages as high as the verdict of the jury. The verdict is excessive, and palpably against the weight of the evidence, and the proof did not authorize the submission to the jury of the questions of fact embraced in instructions Nos. 2 and 4. But upon the question as to whether appellant had appropriated, for the use of its track, land to which appellee actually held the legal title, the proof is conflicting, and, in our opinion, this issue was properly submitted to the determination of the jury; but, as it is impossible to say how much the verdict of the jury may have been affected by the other question, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Guffy, J., dissenting:

The object of the suit instituted by appellee (plaintiff below) was to recover damages against defendant upon two grounds: First, that it had forcibly entered and taken possession of his property, and entered thereon a street-railway track; and, second, had built the same so near to his property as to obstruct his ingress and egress to and from the turnpike road upon which his property fronted. A trial resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of plaintiff for $665, and appellant appealed to this court, and this court, in an opinion by a majority, reversed the judgment appealed from. It seems to me that the majority opinion is not sustained by the law, and is so far-reaching in its effects upon the rights of property holders that I feel constrained to enter and file this dissenting opinion.

It seems to me that the reversal of the judgment was unauthorized for several reasons. The opinion in effect decides that the railway as built does not interfere with the ingress or egress of appellee to and from the turnpike road when in fact several witnesses testified that it did seriously obstruct the ingress and egress. One witness stated that vehicles could not be driven across the track of the railway without breaking them, and, while it may be true that appellant's proof was quite different, yet it was the province of the jury to weigh and determine as to the truth of the matter, and especially so in this case, for this record discloses that, upon motion of appellant, the jury were permitted to view the track and surroundings. It seems to me that the majority opinion is an invasion of the province of the jury as to the finding of facts, and will upon the next trial bar appellee's right to show and recover for the obstruction complained of. The majority opinion seems to proceed upon the idea that the building of a street railway is no new servitude imposed upon a street, and therefore abutting property owners cannot recover anything resulting from injury to their property on account of the building of such railways, and certainly so unless such building practically destroys ingress and egress to and from the street.

Quite a number of authorities are cited in support of the opinion. I have examined most of them, and am unable to see that they support the opinion of the majority. Almost if not every one recognizes the law to be that, if the railway materially obstructs the ingress and egress, the property owner can recover. I think that all the authorities relied on in the opinion apply to cases in states having a different constitutional provision from that in our Constitution in regard to the taking of private property for public uses. It is a well-settled rule of law in this state that a party may have a perfect and legal right and title to an easement, and, although it may not be exclusive of the public generally, yet he can no more be deprived of such right to such easement than he can be deprived of any other right.

The case referred to in the opinion of Louisville Bagging Mfg. Co. v. Central Pass. R. Co. 95 Ky. 50, is not applicable in the case at bar. The main question in the case supra was whether the railway company should be enjoined from erecting an electric street-car line which it was alleged, among other things, would prevent the bagging company from unloading vehicles by backing them up to and at right angles to the sidewalk. The court held that such loading and unloading would necessarily obstruct the proper use of the street for other vehicles, and, besides, is forbidden by city ordinance. It is further said in the case supra that the plaintiff had signally failed to show that he had been unreasonably obstructed or hindered in his business, or that his rights had been illegally interfered with. No reference is made in the opinion supra to §§ 104 nor 242 of the present Constitution, if, indeed, the present Constitution was in force at the commencement of the suit referred to above. It is perfectly manifest to my mind that the majority opinion is in direct conflict with the opinion in the case of Henderson v. McClain (decided by this court December 9, 1897) (Ky.) 39 L. R. A. 349. McClain recovered a judgment against the city of Henderson for injuries to his property resulting from street improvements. There was no physical taking of the property, nor was the work of improvement done in an unskilful manner, but the result of the improvement was to materially decrease the value of McClain's abutting lot. It has often been decided by this court, under the former Constitution, that no recovery could be had in such cases. Section 14 of the Constitution of 1850 says: "No person shall, for the same offense, be twice put in jeopardy of his life or limb; nor shall any man's property be taken or applied to public use without the consent of his representatives, and without just compensation being previously made to him." The same provision is in § 13 of the bill of rights of the present Constitution. The first part of § 242 of the present Constitution reads as follows: "Municipal or other corporations and individuals invested with the privilege of taking private property for public use shall make just compensation for property taken, injured, or destroyed by them; which compensation shall be paid, before such taking, or paid or secured at the election of such corporation or individual before such injury or destruction."

This court, in case of Henderson v. McClain (Ky.) 39 L. R. A. 349, after reviewing the law as it existed prior to the adoption of the present Constitution, and as expounded by this court, and after referring to §§ 242 and 13, quoted above, said: "The adoption of this section, in addition to the provisions of § 13, in our view undoubtedly indicated an intention to change the organic law of the state, and to abolish the requirement of direct physical injury to the property in order to establish a claim for damages. The language used is that municipal corporations shall make just compensation for property taken, injured, or destroyed by them. The city undoubtedly has the right to take private property, having the right of eminent domain. It also has the undoubted right to improve the streets for the public use, in a proper manner, when thereto authorized by legislative authority. If, however, in making the improvements, it takes, injures, or destroys private property, compensation must be made, unless consent has been given. This exact question appears to have been decided in several of the states in which new constitutions, containing similar provisions, have been adopted in recent years. In Illinois the old Constitution contained a provision similar to that contained in § 13 of our Constitution. By the Constitution of 1870 [art. 2, § 13], the provision was made to read: 'Private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation.' And, while the rule under the former Constitution had been held as in the section quoted above from Dillon (§ 722), it has been held in numerous cases that the new rule introduced by the present Constitution required compensation in all cases where it appears 'there has been some physical disturbance of a right, either public or private, which the plaintiff enjoys in connection with his property, and which gives to it an additional value, and that by reason of such disturbance he has sustained a special damage with respect to his property in excess of that sustained by the public generally.' Rigney v. Chicago, 102 Ill. 64. It was there held 'that the introduction of that word (damage), so far from being superfluous or accidental, indicated a deliberate purpose to make a change in the organic law of the state, and abolished the old test of direct physical injury to the corpus or subject of the property affected.' This doctrine was approved by the Supreme Court of the United States, in an opinion delivered by Mr. Justice Harlan, in the case of Chicago v. Taylor, 125 U. S. 182, 31 L. ed. 639. Referring to the Rigney Case, he said: 'The conclusion there reached was that, under this constitutional provision, a recovery may be had in all cases where private property has sustained a substantial damage by the making and using an improvement that is public in its character—that it does not require that the damage shall be caused by a trespass, or an actual physical invasion of the owner's real estate, but, if the construction and operation of the railroad or other improvement is the cause of the damage, though consequential, the party may recover. We regard that case as conclusive of this question. The case of Pittsburg, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Reich, 101 Ill. 157, is in point on this question of damages; and the case of Chicago v. Union Bldg. Asso. 102 Ill. 379, 40 Am. Rep. 598, also reviews the authorities, and approves the doctrine in Rigney v. Chicago, 102 Ill. 64.' In Missouri a similar constitutional provision has been adopted, and a similar construction given. Sheehy v. Kansas City Cable R. Co. 94 Mo. 574. In Pennsylvania a constitutional provision was adopted in 1874, exactly similar to § 242 of our Constitution, which has been construed in New Brighton v. Peirsol, 107 Pa. 280, as the provision of the Illinois Constitution. In a number of other states which have adopted the same or similar constitutional provisions the courts have gone as far or farther than the Illinois courts in permitting recovery for consequential damages in such cases. See 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. §§ 990-995a, inclusive, and notes. We conclude that, under the averments of the petition in this case, admitted by the demurrer to be true, there was a right of recovery."

Several states have, of late years, inserted in their Constitutions, provisions similar to § 242 of our Constitution. Section 8 of article 15 of the Constitution of Pennsylvania, adopted in 1874, provides that municipal and other corporations and individuals invested with the privilege of taking private property for public use shall make just compensation for property taken, injured, or destroyed by their construction or enlargement of their works, etc. The supreme court of Pennsylvania, in New Brighton v. Peirsol, 107 Pa. 283, discussed and construed the section of the Constitution aforesaid. Peirsol brought suit against New Brighton to recover damages for the injury caused to plaintiff's property abutting on Lock street by reason of a change of grade of said street, made after the plaintiff purchased his lot, and obtained a verdict for $103. The court clearly recognized the importance of the change made by the Constitution of 1874. The concluding portion of the opinion is as follows: "The claim now is for change of grade made since the defendant in error purchased, and for damages sustained by work done since the adoption of the Constitution of 1874. Judgment affirmed." The decision supra was rendered some time before the adoption of our present Constitution, and § 242 thereof is the same in substance as the section of the Constitution of Pennsylvania, before quoted; and it is a well-settled rule of construction that the framers of the present Constitution intended § 242 to mean and have the same effect given by the supreme court of Pennsylvania, in the case, supra, to § 8 of the Pennsylvania Constitution. The provision of the Constitution of Illinois adopted in 1848, in regard to the taking of private property for public use, was the same as § 13 of the present Constitution of this state; but in 1870 Illinois adopted a new Constitution, which provided that private property should not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation.

In Rigney v. Chicago, 102 Ill. 75, the supreme court of Illinois, in a very elaborate opinion, discussed the rights and remedies of abutting property owners, and also discussed and construed the new Constitution of Illinois. Rigney sought to recover against the city of Chicago for injury to his property resulting from street improvements. The trial court dismissed his petition, and an intermediate court, called the "court of appeals," affirmed the judgment, and he appealed to the supreme court of the state. The court, among other things, said: "The position of appellee that the new Constitution was simply intended to conserve existing rights, and that, therefore, there can be no recovery in any case except where there has been an actual appropriation of or physical injury to the plaintiff's property, is founded in part upon certain expressions to be found in some of the cases which have arisen since the adoption of the new Constitution, which seem to recognize as still existing the old test that the injury must be direct and physical, where there has been no actual appropriation or taking of the property. It is hardly necessary to observe that what is said in any case upon a matter not necessarily involved in the decision is not to be regarded as authoritative or binding. Such expressions can only be regarded as indicating the views of the members of the court, and particularly that of the writer of the opinion, upon a matter which the court is not required to, and consequently cannot, judicially determine; and hence, while they are entitled to respectful consideration, they are never accepted as authoritative. An examination of the cases, it is believed, will clearly show that no express decision to that effect has ever been made; and, even if such a case could be found, it must have been made without due consideration, and should not be followed, for to recognize such a rule would, in effect, as we have already shown, be to render inoperative a plain provision of the Constitution. . . . The question, then, recurs: What additional class of cases did the framers of the new Constitution intend to provide for which are not embraced in the old? While it is clear that the present Constitution was intended to afford redress in a certain class of cases for which there was no remedy under the old Constitution, yet we think it equally clear that it was not intended to reach every possible injury that might be occasioned by a public improvement. There are certain injuries which are necessarily incident to the ownership of property in towns or cities which directly impair the value of private property, for which the law does not, and never has, afforded any relief. For instance, the building of a jail, police station, or the like, will generally cause a direct depreciation in the value of neighboring property; yet that is clearly a case of damnum absque injuria. So, as to an obstruction in a public street, if it does not practically affect the use or enjoyment of neighboring property, and thereby impair its value, no action will lie. In all cases, to warrant a recovery, it must appear there has been some direct physical disturbance of a right, either public or private, which the plaintiff enjoys in connection with his property, and which gives to it an additional value, and that, by reason of such disturbance, he has sustained a special damage with respect to his property in excess of that sustained by the public generally. In the absence of any statutory or constitutional provisions on the subject, the common law afforded redress in all such cases; and we have no doubt it was the intention of the framers of the present Constitution to require compensation to be made in all cases where, but for some legislative enactment, an action would lie by the common law. The English courts, in construing certain statutes providing compensation for injuries occasioned by public improvements, in which the language is substantially the same as that in our present Constitution, after a most thorough consideration of the question, lay down substantially the same rule here announced. Chamberlain v. West End of London & C. P. R. Co. 2 Best & S. 605; Beckett v. Midland R. Co. L. R. 1 C. P. 241, on appeal, L. R. 3 C. P. 82; M'Carthy v. Metropolitan Bd. of Works, L. R. 7 C. P. 508. These statutes require compensation to be where property was 'injuriously affected,' which the English courts construe as synonymous with the word 'damage.' Hall v. Bristol, L. R. 2 C. P. 322; East & West India Docks & B. Junction R. Co. v. Gattke, 3 MacN. & G. 155. The rule we have adopted was unanimously sustained by the house of lords in the M'Carthy Case, L. R. 7 C. P. 508, and is believed to be in consonance with reason, justice, and sound legal principles; and while it has not heretofore been formulated in express terms, as now stated, yet the principles upon which the rule rests are fully recognized in the previous decisions of this court, particularly in Shawneetown v. Mason, 82 Ill. 337, 25 Am. Rep. 321; Pekin v. Brereton, 67 Ill. 477, 16 Am. Rep. 629; Chicago & P. R. Co. v. Francis, 70 Ill. 238; Pekin v. Winkel, 77 Ill. 56; and Elgin v. Eaton, 83 Ill. 535, 25 Am. Rep. 412. In this last case the Shawneetown and Brereton Cases are approvingly referred to. In the Shawneetown Case it was said: 'The true question is whether the property was injured by the improvements. If not, then there is no damage, and can be no recovery. If there is, then the recovery must be measured by the extent of the loss, etc. One of the elements of damage distinctly recognized in this case was the physical obstruction of the right and means of access to the plaintiff's premises. And so of the Brereton Case, 67 Ill. 477, 16 Am. Rep. 629; Winkel Case, 77 Ill. 56, and Eaton Case, 83 Ill. 535, and Stack Case, 85 Ill. 377. In the light of these authorities, we are clearly of the opinion that the circuit court erred in refusing appellant's instruction, and also in giving appellee's; and for these errors the judgment of that court should have been reversed by the appellate court, and for not doing so the judgment of the appellate court must be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to that court to reverse the judgment of the circuit court, and remand the cause for further proceedings in conformity with the views here expressed. Judgment reversed."

In Chicago v. Taylor, 125 U. S. 164, 31 L. ed. 640, the same question was under consideration. Taylor had brought a suit, and obtained judgment against the city of Chicago for injury to his property by reason of certain street improvements erected by special ordinances of the city council, and the city appealed. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court, and, upon a thorough review of the authorities, he sustained the contention of Taylor that, under the Constitution of 1870, he was entitled to recover for the injury resulting to his property by reason of the street improvements. The opinion concludes as follows: "It would serve no useful purpose to examine in detail all the requests for instructions, and compare them with the charge, or discuss the questions arising upon exceptions to the admission of evidence. After a careful consideration of all the propositions advanced for the city, we are unable to discover any substantial error committed to its prejudice. It may be as suggested by its counsel, that the present Constitution of Illinois in regard to compensation to owners of private property 'damaged' for the public use has proved a serious obstacle to municipal improvements; that the sound policy of the old rule, that private property is held subject to any consequential damages that may arise from the erection on a public highway of a lawful structure, is being constantly vindicated; and that the constitutional provision in question is 'a handicap' upon municipal improvement upon public highways. And it may also be, as is suggested, doubtful whether a constitutional convention could now be convened that would again incorporate in the organic law the existing provision in regard to indirect or consequential damage to private property so far as the same is caused by public improvements. We dismiss these several suggestions with the single observation that they can be addressed more properly to the people of the state in support of a proposition to change their Constitution. We perceive no error in the record, and the judgment is affirmed."

The supreme court of Missouri has passed upon a constitutional provision similar to section 242. Sheehy sued the Kansas City

Cable Railroad Company for injury to his property on account of a change of grade of the street. It was admitted that the city had a right to authorize defendant to change the grade, but Sheehy recovered judgment for $5,000, and the defendant cable railroad company appealed. The case is reported in 94 Mo. 574. I quote as follows from the opinion: "The court, as shown by the instructions given as well as by those refused, tried the case on the theory that while the city had the right by ordinance to change the grade of said street in front of plaintiff's property, and to authorize defendant to make such change, still the defendant was liable for any damage resulting to plaintiff by reason of such change. It is insisted by counsel that this theory was erroneous and that the city being fully empowered by its charter to grade, alter, and change the grade of its streets, and having changed the grade of Ninth street at this locality by ordinance, and authorized and permitted defendant to grade the same for the purpose of constructing its road thereon, it is not liable for damages resulting therefrom. This point is not well taken. Anterior to the adoption of the Constitution of 1875 and as far back as the case of St. Louis v. Gurno, 12 Mo. 414, it was the established rule in this state that where a municipality was invested with the control of its streets, and the power to fix, alter, and change the grade of the same, that any damage resulting to an abutting property owner from the change of grade was damnum absque injuria, unless the injury could be shown to have resulted from the negligent or improper manner in which the work was done. Section 21, art. 2, of the Constitution of 1875 which provides that 'private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation,' has changed this rule. Werth v. Springfield, 78 Mo. 107. In this case it is held that 'when property is damaged by establishing the grade of a street, or by raising or lowering the grade of a street previously established, it is damaged for public use within the meaning of the Constitution.' It is clear that the city of Kansas, under its charter, had the power to change the grade of Ninth street, and it is equally clear, under the provision of the Constitution above quoted, that if, in the exercise of that power, the property of an abutting owner was damaged, such owner would be entitled to recover such damages from the city. And, if such liability would attach to the city, it necessarily and logically follows that a railroad company which had the right conferred on it to alter the grade of the street for the purpose of constructing its road would also be liable to an abutting property owner for damages to his property by reason of such alteration. In such case the privilege granted the railroad 'would be yoked with a liability.' That the owner of property abutting on a street has such an easement therein as would support an action for damages peculiar to him is sustained by the following cases: Lackland v. North Missouri R. Co. 31 Mo. 181; Werth v. Springfield, 78 Mo. 107; Householder v. Kansas City, 83 Mo. 488; McElroy v. Kansas City.

21 Fed. Rep. 257; Story v. New York Elev. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 122, 43 Am. Rep. 146; Lahr v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 104 N. Y. 268; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Eddins, 60 Tex. 663; Cross v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 77 Mo. 318. The theory upon which the court tried the case, as embraced in the instructions, was a correct one. . . . The judgment is affirmed with the concurrence of the other judges, except Ray, J., absent."

I respectfully submit that the foregoing authorities show conclusively that the majority opinion is not sustained by the authorities relied on therein, and is contrary to the weight of all the authorities bearing upon the question at issue. I further submit that the doctrine of the majority opinion is contrary to equity and natural justice. The majority opinion in this case as I understand it, holds that a street railway may be located and run by the very door of the house of the abutting lotowner if his house happens to be upon the line of the street, and, if the track is leveled up as described in the opinion, that the property owner can have no redress, although we know that such a use of a street would necessarily greatly lessen the value of his property, and cause the lives of himself and children to be in imminent peril whenever they went out of the house for any purpose whatever, for they would then be upon the railway track, liable to be struck by the electric car. If the above is not the true construction of the majority opinion yet it is unquestionably true that the opinion sustains the right of a street railway to be run right along the curbing of a sidewalk, which would practically destroy all the business houses which might be on that side of the street. If a street railway was erected along the curbing of the sidewalk on the west side of Fourth street in Louisville, who would dispute the statement that the property on that side would at once be injured 50 per cent or more of its value if it was believed that the street-car line was permanently so established?

I have discussed this question so far upon the ground upon which the majority opinion seems to be based, namely, that the doctrine of street railways and the uses for which streets were established and dedicated applies. In my opinion, the power to establish street railways in towns and cities has no application to the case at bar. The answer of defendant (now appellant) shows that the line of railway and property in contest is not within the boundary of any town or incorporated city. That plea is made in the answer, and by it the appellant was by the court below held to be exempted from the provisions of § 164 of the Constitution; but, if the appellant is held to be entitled to all the privileges and protection of the law applicable to cities and towns, then it should be held to be subject to the provisions of § 164 of the 43 L. R. A.

Constitution, and, if so held, the entire power exercised by it was and is unconstitutional. My judgment is that no turnpike company or commissioners or the county court have any legal power or right to authorize the construction of a street railway upon any turnpike or county road. It would be a new service, and one not contemplated by the law authorizing the establishment of county roads or turnpike roads, and would seriously interfere with the safe and convenient and proper use of such highways. It is evident to my mind that the turnpike company in this case had no authority to authorize the construction of the railway in question. It will be seen from the record, as I understand it, that appellant and appellee both hold under Kinner. Kinner only granted the right of way to the turnpike company for a turnpike road; hence it could be used for nothing else. The fee remained in him, and passed to his vendees, subject only to the use granted by Kinner. If I am right in this, it follows that appellant violated both the property right and right of easement of appellee, and the instructions were more favorable to appellant than it was entitled to. There may be some reason and equity in ruling the law as strictly as it can be legally done as to improving streets in towns, and allowing railways to be established therein, because the public are to be greatly benefited; but in the case at bar it is manifest to me that the railway in question was erected for the sole benefit of the corporation, and that neither the turnpike company nor the commissioners had any lawful authority to grant to the railway the right of way over any part of the county road, and certainly none to the injury of the plaintiff's property, nor to the detriment of his easement. It appears in this case that appellant, by force, sawed off part of appellee's porch or platform, and removed it, and by force held or tied him while they laid the track at that point. From the proof in this case, I incline to the opinion that the appellee was the rightful owner of the land in contest. Appellant's contention is that the rail of the track is seven feet from appellee's house. Conceding that to be true, I still think that a court must judicially know that his ingress and egress to and from the road is materially and unreasonably obstructed thereby. Corporations should be protected in the full enjoyment of their legal rights, but the individual property holder should also have the full protection of the law. Section 242 of the Constitution was evidently made to give greater protection to the citizen than he had theretofore enjoyed, but, if the majority opinion in this case is to be the law of the land, the section supra amounts to nothing. The importance of the questions involved is my only apology for this dissenting opinion. I think the judgment appealed from should be affirmed.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

JOHN HANCOCK MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

v.

Elizabeth DICK, Appt.

(114 Mich. 337.)

Equity has jurisdiction of a suit to obtain the cancelation and surrender of a receipt renewing a lapsed life insurance policy, which was obtained by fraud, although the fraud would be a good defense to the pending action at law on the policy.

(September 14, 1897.)

APPEAL by defendant from a decree of the Circuit Court for Wayne County, in Chancery, overruling a demurrer to a bill filed to cancel a renewal receipt on a life insurance policy. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Philip T. Van Zile, for appellant:

The jurisdiction in equity is divided into three general subdivisions or classes: (1) Cases exclusively within its jurisdiction; (2) cases where the jurisdiction is concurrent with the legal jurisdiction; (3) auxiliary jurisdiction.

1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 136.

The concurrent jurisdiction embraces all those civil cases in which the primary right, estate, or interest of the complaining party sought to be maintained, enforced, or redressed is one that is cognizable by law, and in which the remedy conferred is of the same kind as that administered under the like circumstances by the courts of law—being ordinarily a recovery of money in some form.

The fact that the legal remedy is not full, adequate, and complete is, therefore, the real foundation of this concurrent branch of the equity jurisdiction.

1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 139.

The action at law in this case was upon the policy of insurance for the full amount. The defense was that, because of the fraudulent acts of the insured, the defendant and her son, the policy was void, and the receipt given for the last payment was fraudulently obtained. If the company can prove this upon the trial the defense is complete.

1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 178.

Whenever an action at law will furnish an adequate remedy, equity does not assume jurisdiction because an accounting is demanded or because the case arises from fraud.

Bay City Bridge Co. v. Van Etten, 36 Mich. 210; Shaw v. Chambers, 48 Mich. 355.

NOTE.—As to reinstatement of insurance policy, see also Heinlein v. Imperial L. Ins. Co. (Mich.) 25 L. R. A. 627; Goodwin v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. (Iowa) 32 L. R. A. 473; and Carlson v. Supreme Council A. L. of H. (Cal.) 35 L. R. A. 643.

As to payment of premium after the death of the insured to reinstate a life insurance policy, see note to Wright v. Supreme Commandery K. of G. R. (Ga.) 14 L. R. A. 283. 43 L. R. A.

358; Wyckoff v. Victor Sewing Mach. Co. 43 Mich. 309; Tompkins v. Hollister, 60 Mich. 479; Teft v. Stewart, 31 Mich. 367; Hagenbuch v. Howard, 34 Mich. 1; Torrent v. Rodgers, 39 Mich. 85; Petrie v. Torrent, 88 Mich. 43; Druon v. Sullivan, 66 Vt. 609; Stannard v. Whittlesey, 9 Conn. 556.

The court of law having taken jurisdiction of the case, and the case being at issue and ready for trial, a court of equity having co-ordinate authority will not be permitted to interfere with its action.

Maclean v. Speed, 52 Mich. 257; Barnum Wire & Iron Works v. Speed, 59 Mich. 272; Stearns v. Stearns, 16 Mass. 170; Home L. Ins. Co. v. Selig, 81 Md. 200; Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Bailey, 13 Wall. 616, 20 L. ed. 501; Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Smith, 73 Fed. Rep. 318; Walker v. Micklethwait, 1 Drew. & S. 54; Stewart v. Great Western R. Co. 2 Drew. & S. 443.

Mr. Alfred Russell, for appellee:

According to the ancient and original jurisdiction in England, which is not restricted by any statute in this state, equity has concurrent jurisdiction with a court of law, and it makes no difference that a suit at law has been begun and that there may be a remedy at law, whether adequate or inadequate.

1 Dan. Ch. Pl. & Pr. p. 576; Heard, Eq. Pl. p. 159; Stewart v. Great Western R. Co. 2 DeG. J. & S. 321.

Whenever a person conceals a material fact, substantially the consideration for the contract, and peculiarly within his own knowledge, the transaction will be void on the ground of fraud.

Chitty, Contr. p. 153; Dolman v. Nokes, 22 Beav. 402; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 216.

The cases in this state fully sustain this suit.

Wheeler v. Clinton Canal Bank, Harr. Ch. (Mich.) 449; Wales v. Newbould, 9 Mich. 45; Wright v. Hake, 38 Mich. 525; Wyckoff v. Victor Sewing Mach. Co. 43 Mich. 309; Tompkins v. Hollister, 60 Mich. 470; Brown v. Buck, 75 Mich. 274, 5 L. R. A. 226; Sherman v. American Stove Co. 85 Mich. 169; Cogswell v. Mitts, 90 Mich. 353; Chicago & G. T. R. Co. v. Miller, 91 Mich. 166; Warren v. Holbrook, 95 Mich. 185.

This is a case of delivery up and cancelation of instruments, and this remedy is exclusively within the jurisdiction of equity.

There is no jurisdiction at law at all with respect to surrender and cancelation.

Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 170, 171; Wales v. Newbould, 9 Mich. 45; Sherman v. American Stove Co. 85 Mich. 169; Cogswell v. Mitts, 90 Mich. 353.

Hooker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The complainant's bill alleges:

(1) That the complainant issued a life policy of $2,000 on the life of John J. Dick, payable to the defendant, wherein it was stipulated that, if any instalment should not be paid when due, the policy should be void, except as to its paid-up value. That the company was accustomed to accept past-due instalments, and to reinstate the policy, provided the insured would furnish a proper certificate of good health; said certificate stating further that the insured agrees that the payment is received and policy reinstated on condition of the truth of such certificate.

(2) This practice was followed by Dick, who defaulted habitually.

(3) January 8, 1896, an instalment became due, notwithstanding two notices to pay, and the policy lapsed, except for its paid-up value.

(4) Thirty-eight days after default, Dick became ill, and died within forty-eight hours.

(5) He called his family doctor that day, Dr. Judson, to attend him; and the same day Dick's son, learning of his father's illness and of the physician's visit, went to the company's agent, and, concealing the facts of illness, and doctor's attendance, offered to pay up. The agent suspecting nothing, said a health certificate must be furnished, and handed the son a printed form, which insured signed; and on the same 18th of February the son's wife took the form, which was signed by the patient, to the physician, to get his name as a witness, although he had not seen the insured sign. The physician signed the attestation, and added the words, "Physician of family," and the next morning February 19, the son took the certificate and money to the agent, who received the same, and gave receipt reinstating the policy.

Copy of certificate:

Detroit, Mich., Feb. 18, 1896.

I, John J. Dick, of Detroit, Mich., being the person whose life is insured under policy number 28,251, in the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Company, do hereby certify that I am in as good health as when first examined on my application for said policy, and that my family record is unchanged. I also understand and agree that the payment of premium due January 8, 1896, is received, and said policy is now reinstated, by said company, on condition of the truth of the above statement.

[Signed]

John J. Dick.

Witness: _____

Note any change in family record below.

I witness the above.

[Signed] H. C. Judson, M. D.,

Physician of Family.

The next day, February 20, the insured died of the said illness.

(6) The bill charges that the representations in the certificate were false, and were known to be so by the insured, his son, his son's wife, and his physician; and that they confederated to defraud the company by preparing and delivering the certificate to the agent, with intent, by means thereof, to procure the acceptance of the past-due quarterly premium; and that the agent relied on the false certificate, and accepted and receipted for the money in ignorance of the facts.

43 L. R. A.

(7) "April 11, 1896, the agent, having ascertained the fraud, tendered the quarterly premium back, and also the paid-up value, and offered to pay the same (and same is paid into court). Defendant refused the tender, and has sued the company at law in Wayne circuit court, although she is bound, in equity, to surrender the policy and receipt.

"Prayer: To declare the policy void (except for paid-up value), and that it may be delivered up to be canceled; and that the receipt reinstating policy so obtained by fraud be delivered up, and for a preliminary and final injunction against the prosecution of the suit at law."

(8) Action was commenced on the policy, and was enjoined in these proceedings pending the suit.

This bill was demurred to (1) for want of equity; (2) because a legal remedy exists. The demurrer was overruled, and the defendant has appealed from the order.

There is no doubt that the alleged fraud, if proved, should defeat the claim of the plaintiff to any sum beyond the paid-up value of the policy in a court of law. Such court could not, however, have canceled or compelled the surrender of the renewal receipt, though there is force in the suggestion that such cancellation would be of little importance after an adjudication that it was void. It is urged that the case falls within the general rule that equity has no jurisdiction where there is an adequate remedy at law, especially when the latter has been resorted to by the opposite party. Counsel for defendant cites two cases decided by the Federal courts, which sustain his contention, under circumstances closely resembling the situation in this case. These decisions are based upon the 16th section of the Federal judiciary act, which provides that "suits in equity shall not be sustained in either of the courts of the United States, in any case, where plain, adequate, and complete remedy may be had at law." 1 U. S. Stat. at L. 82, chap. 20, § 16. We have no similar statute, and we are cited to several similar cases which sustain the jurisdiction of chancery, even after action at law is commenced. These cases will be found collected in the complainant's brief, and they seem to rest upon two grounds: (1) That the jurisdiction is concurrent in cases of fraud; (2) that the equity courts may grant more complete relief, where an instrument is fraudulently obtained, by compelling cancellation or surrender, and by rendering equitable relief. As counsel suggest, there are cases which, to some extent at least, may seem to militate against this theory, but they do not appear to have been so considered by the court. See Bay City Bridge Co. v. Van Etten, 36 Mich. 210; Teft v. Stearns, 31 Mich. 367; Shaw v. Chambers, 48 Mich. 358. Shaw v. Chambers was an ejectment case, and the only ground of equitable jurisdiction was an alleged estoppel in pais. This was disposed of on the well-settled rule (in Michigan) that titles to land cannot rest on estoppel in pais, and nothing remained but a legal defense. In Teft v. Stecart a jurisdiction was invoked for chancery so broad that Mr. Justice Graves said, in disposing of the case: "It appears to me quite impossible, in the face of the objection taken and insisted on, to sustain this decree without sanctioning the right to come into equity in all cases to recover damages where the grievance asserted is a fraud committed by one upon another in a dealing in personal property. If the right contended for and carried out by the decree can be maintained, no reason is perceived why, upon the same principle, a party claiming to have been cheated in a horse trade, or in a purchase of any chattels where the amount is sufficient, may not, at his election, proceed to sue in chancery for damages and preclude an investigation before a jury." We must therefore consider the question settled in this state in accord with complainant's claim. We see no occasion to disturb the order of the circuit court in chancery, which is therefore affirmed.

The other Justices concur.

John B. SWEETLAND, Admr., etc., of Evaline A. Aldrich, Deceased,
v.

CHICAGO & GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.

(.....Mich.....)

1. Damages for pain and suffering cannot be allowed in an action for the negligent killing of a passenger in a railroad accident where the force of the collision was such that many passengers were instantly killed and there is nothing to show that the death for which the action was brought was not instantaneous or that deceased was conscious after the shock.
2. To recover for suffering of a person killed by negligence, plaintiff has the burden of showing that conscious suffering on the part of deceased existed.

(Montgomery and Hooker, JJ., dissent.)

(June 28, 1898.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Cass County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Mr. E. W. Meddaugh, with Messrs. Geer & Williams, for plaintiff in error:

It was not intended to give a right of action for the benefit of the estate, in case of death from an injury, under 3 How. Anno. Stat. § 7397, and also allow the heirs to recover under §§ 8313 and 8314, for their pecuniary loss.

Section 7397, which provides for the survival of common-law actions for negligent injuries to the person, should be construed to apply to cases where death results from some other cause than the injury.

Holton v. Daly, 106 Ill. 131; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. O'Connor, 119 Ill. 586; McCarthy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 18 Kan. 46, 26 Am. Rep. 742; Hulbert v. Topeka, 34 Fed. Rep. 510; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. McElwain, 98 Ky. 700, 34 L. R. A. 788; Lubrano v. Atlantic Mills, 19 R. I. 129, 34 L. R. A. 797.

Where the deceased in his lifetime brings an action and recovers damages for the injury sustained, his representatives cannot maintain an action for damages where death results from the same injury for which the former recovery was had.

3 Elliott. Railroads, § 1375; Read v. Great Eastern R. Co. L. R. 3 Q. B. 555; Pulling v. Great Eastern R. Co. L. R. 9 Q. B. Div. 110; Griffiths v. Dudley, L. R. 9 Q. B. Div. 357; Haigh v. Royal Mail Steam Packet Co. 52 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 640; Littlewood v. New York, 89 N. Y. 24, 42 Am. Rep. 271; Hegerich v. Keddie, 99 N. Y. 258, 52 Am. Rep. 25; Legg v. Britton, 64 Vt. 652; Hecht v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 132 Ind. 507; Fowlkes v. Nashville & D. R. Co. 9 Heisk. 829; Holton v. Daly, 106 Ill. 131; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. O'Connor, 119 Ill. 586; McCarthy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 18 Kan. 46, 26 Am. Rep. 742; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. McElwain, 98 Ky. 700, 34 L. R. A. 788; Lubrano v. Atlantic Mills, 19 R. I. 129, 34 L. R. A. 797.

The word "actions" is used in every instance in § 7397, and not the words, "cause of action," or "right of action."

An "action" is the "lawful demand of one's right in a court of justice."

1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 577; 3 Bl. Com. p. 3.

A "right of action" is "the right to bring an action."

21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 404.

The action itself is the proceeding instituted by the personal representative to recover damages resulting from the "cause of action."

In order to maintain an action, there must exist a "right of action" as well as a "cause of action."

Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Stout, 53 Ind. 143.

If the legislature had intended, in the face of the universally accepted meaning of the word "action," in a legal sense, to have included the right to bring the action in the first place, as well as the right to revive an action once brought, after the death of the party beginning it, why did they not make their intention clear by including the words "cause of action?"

Where one receives an injury from which he dies immediately, the legislature did not intend to give a right of action for the physical pain and mental suffering which were substantially contemporaneous with the death.

NOTE.—Respecting the right to maintain more than one cause of action for injuries resulting in death, see note to Louisville & N. R. Co. v. McElwain (Ky.) 34 L. R. A. 788; also Hill v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (Pa.) 35 L. R. A. 196.

As to recovery for pain and suffering in an action for injuries resulting in death, see also cases in note to Morgan v. Southern P. Co. (Cal.) 17 L. R. A. 71.
43 L. R. A.

The Corsair, 145 U. S. 335, 36 L. ed. 727; Cheatham v. Red River Line, 56 Fed. Rep. 248; Sherman v. Western Stage Co. 24 Iowa, 515; Kennedy v. Standard Sugar Refinery, 125 Mass. 90, 28 Am. Rep. 214; Tully v. Fitchburg R. Co. 134 Mass. 499; Mulchahey v. Washburn Car Wheel Co. 145 Mass. 281.

An action cannot be maintained for personal injuries, under § 7397, resulting in death, if the evidence wholly fails to show whether or not death was instantaneous.

Corcoran v. Boston & A. R. Co. 133 Mass. 507; Riley v. Connecticut River R. Co. 135 Mass. 292.

The object of the statute was to continue the cause of action which the person injured had, and which he had not enforced, but might have enforced, if death had not ensued, for the benefit of the widow and next of kin, to enable them to obtain their damages, resulting from the same primary cause, and not to create an entirely new and different right of action.

Dibble v. New York & E. R. Co. 25 Barb. 188; Proctor v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 64 Mo. 119; Fowlkes v. N. & D. R. Co. 5 Baxt. 663; Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. p. 309.

Messrs. Marshall L. Howell and Edward Bacon for appellee.

Grant, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

We do not think that there was any tangible evidence from which the jury had the right to infer that the deceased endured pain and suffering. The two trains collided with terrific force, and many were instantly killed. The witness Allan testified that he reached the telescoped car within three or four minutes after the collision; that he heard wails and groans within; that the car took fire within a minute or two afterwards; that within ten or fifteen minutes they were driven away by the heat of the flames. Plaintiff was a physician, and brother of the deceased. He testified that both the upper and lower extremities of the body were burned completely off, that the upper part of the scalp was entirely denuded, and that her left thigh bone was either burned off diagonally or had been fractured. From his examination of the body, he gave his opinion that death was not instantaneous. It is mere conjecture how long she lived, and there is nothing to indicate that she was conscious at any time after the accident, and before death, if death was not instantaneous. If she was not conscious, how can it be said that she suffered pain? Whether death was instantaneous, or whether, if not instantaneous, she was conscious after the injury, is purely conjectural. Where one was found about ten minutes after the accident with his body crushed, and his bowels disrupted, and he was still breathing, but unconscious, and died almost immediately, without recovering consciousness, held that no damages could be recovered for pain and suffering. Mulchahey v. Washburn Car Wheel Co. 145 Mass. 281. The court said: "But as the plaintiff can only recover such damages as she can show were sustained by her intestate, if he became instantly insensible, and so remained 43 L. R. A.

until his death, nothing can be recovered for any physical or mental suffering sustained by him." Where a boat struck in the bank of a river, and sank in about ten minutes, and a passenger was drowned, held that there could be no recovery for mental and physical pains and shock before death; that they were substantially contemporaneous with her death, and inseparable, as a matter of law, from it. The Corsair, 145 U. S. 335, 36 L. ed. 727. In Cheatham v. Red River Line, 56 Fed. Rep. 248, damages were claimed for suffering while the deceased was struggling in the water before drowning. Held, there could be no recovery. Where one was struggling in the water ten minutes after being thrown in by the wrongful act of the defendant, held that death was instantaneous. Sherman v. Western Stage Co. 24 Iowa, 515. See also Kennedy v. Standard Sugar Refinery, 125 Mass. 90, 28 Am. Rep. 214; Tully v. Fitchburg R. Co. 134 Mass. 499. The rule deducible from the above authorities, and we think also from sound reason, is that plaintiff must show that there was conscious suffering in order to sustain his suit for damages. It is not sufficient to show that the deceased might have lived a few moments after the accident. We are therefore of the opinion that the verdict based upon this count in the declaration cannot be sustained.

Judgment reversed as to this count, and no new trial ordered.

Long, Ch. J., and Moore, J., concurred with Grant, J.

Long, Ch. J., concurring:

This suit is brought to recover damages for personal injuries caused to the plaintiff's intestate by the collision of defendant's trains through the negligence of defendant; also to recover damages for her death resulting from such collision, and also for loss of personal property. The first count of the declaration is upon the common-law liability for pain and suffering, etc., endured by the deceased prior to death, which, it is claimed, was not instantaneous, and the right of action for which, it is insisted, survives by § 7397, 3 How. Anno. Stat., and is for the benefit of her estate. Under this count plaintiff had verdict and judgment for $1,000. The second count is for loss of personal property, and for which plaintiff had verdict and judgment for $110. The third count is for the benefit of William W. Sweetland, a brother of deceased, who, it is claimed, was dependent upon her for support, and in whose interest the administrator claims the right to recover under §§ 8313, 8314, 2 How. Anno. Stat. Under this count the jury found in favor of defendant. Defendant brings error.

The provisions of § 7397, 3 How. Anno. Stat. have been in force since 1838. In 1846 it read: "In addition to the actions which survive by the common law, the following shall also survive, that is to say: Actions of replevin and trover; actions for assault and battery, or false imprisonment, or for goods taken and carried away; and actions for damages done to real or personal estate." This statute was amended by act No. 113, Pub. Acts 1885, by inserting into the original act the clause, "for negligent injuries to the person." Sections 8313 and 8314 are substantially a re-enactment of Lord Campbell's act, omitting the preamble and 3d section, which was first incorporated into our statutes in 1848, and was amended in 1873. As amended, it reads as follows:

"Sec. 1. Whenever the death of a person shall be caused by wrongful act, neglect, or default, and the act, neglect, or default is such as would (if death had not ensued) have entitled the party injured to maintain an action and recover damages in respect thereof, then and in every such case the person who, or the corporation which, would have been liable if death had not ensued, should be liable to an action for damages, notwithstanding the death of the person injured, and although the death shall have been caused under such circumstances as amount in law to felony.

Sec. 2. Every such action shall be brought by, and in the names of, the personal representatives of such deceased person, and the amount recovered in every such action shall be distributed to the persons and in the proportions provided by law in relation to the distribution of personal property left by persons dying intestate; and in every such action the jury may give such damages as they shall deem fair and just, with reference to the pecuniary injury resulting from such death, to those persons who may be entitled to such damages when recovered."

It will be noticed that until 1885 there was no statute in this state providing for the survival of actions for negligent injuries to the person, and no suit could be maintained for the injury after the death of the injured person for the pain and suffering arising from such injuries. Was it the intention of the legislature under § 7397 to give a right of action for the benefit of the estate in case of death from an injury, and also to allow the heirs to recover under §§ 8313 and 8314 for their pecuniary loss? I think not. The fact that the common-law right of action which survives under § 7397, is for the benefit of the decedent's estate and that the right of action under §§ 8313 and 8314 is given for the benefit of the decedent's heirs, can make no difference in the construction which I think must be placed upon these statutes. It was not the intention of the legislature to give two rights of recovery for the same injury which results in death. The act giving a right of action for damages for wrongful death was passed by our legislature several years after the act providing for survival of actions, and was intended to provide the only remedy where death resulted from any wrongful act. If Mrs. Aldrich, the decedent, had lived long enough to bring suit against defendant for injuries, etc., and pain and suffering, both past and future, and the jury had awarded her damages, which had been paid, and then she had died from the same injuries so wrongfully inflicted, would it be held that the administrator might maintain another action under §§ 8313 and 8314? Or, had she survived her injuries long enough to have settled with the defendant, and had so settled, would it be held that the administrator could maintain an action under these sections? It is generally held that if the deceased had settled for injuries received in his lifetime, or recovered damages in an action, an action cannot be maintained, under Lord Campbell's act, after his death. Cooley, Torts, p. 309. It must follow, therefore, that if such judgment obtained by her in her lifetime or settlement so made by her is a bar to a recovery by the heirs under §§ 8313 and 8314, then a judgment obtained by the heirs for a cause of action accruing to them by survival under § 7397 would be a bar to the right to recover for her death under §§ 8313 and 8314. In other words, it is apparent that it has not been the understanding of the courts and law writers that such statutes intended to create two rights of action for the same wrongful act. It is true that repeals by implication are not favored in the law. There is, however, no such repugnance in these statutes that both cannot stand. Section 7397, which provides for the survival of common-law actions for negligent injuries to the person, applies to cases where death results from other causes than the wrongful injury. It seems to me that this is made plain from the terms of the statutes. In Rogers v. Windoes, 48 Mich. 628, the action was brought for the wrongful conversion of testator's property during his lifetime. The court below held that the action died with the person, and no action survived. It was held that the action did survive, and the judgment below was reversed. That case in no way conflicts with the interpretation which we give to these statutes. It is true that some language was used in Hurst v. Detroit City R. Co. 84 Mich. 544, which might be taken as holding that satisfaction under one of these statutes would be no bar to a suit under the other; but that question was not involved in that case, and the language was but mere dictum.

The Illinois act passed in 1853 is almost identical with our §§ 8313, 8314. The revival act of that state includes within the actions which survive, actions to recover damages for injury to the person. This last act was passed in 1874. In Holton v. Daly, 106 Ill. 131, one Michael Daly was injured, and brought suit, and recovered judgment, which was afterwards set aside. Subsequent to this he died intestate, and Mary Daly was appointed administratrix. She was substituted party plaintiff in the cause, which was again tried, and resulted in favor of plaintiff. The supreme court, in construing the two acts, held that the death act applied, and that no recovery could be had under the survival act. The court said: "The act of February 12, 1853, applies, as we have seen, by its own terms, to all cases where the death of a person shall be caused by wrongful act, neglect, or default, and the act, neglect, or default is such as would, if death had not ensued, have entitled the party injured to maintain an action, and recover damages in respect thereof. As was said in Chicago v. Major, 18 Ill. 356, 68 Am. Dec. 553: "This language is very broad and comprehensive, embracing in direct and positive terms, all cases where, if death had not ensued, the injured party could have maintained an action for the injury;" and, as we have already observed, it is the wrongful act, neglect, or default that constitutes the cause of action. A right of action which at common law would have terminated at the death is continued for the benefit of the wife, husband, etc., and its scope enlarged to embrace the injury resulting from the death.

There were left, however, injuries to the person not resulting in death, for which, in the event of the death of the injured party before obtaining judgment, no remedy was provided affording a proper subject-matter for the act of 1872. If a party receiving injuries died from other causes, no action could be maintained under the act of February 12, 1853; but now, under the statute of 1872, the cause of action survives to his personal representatives. It is not to be presumed it was intended there should be two causes of action in distinct and different rights, by the same party plaintiff for the same wrongful act, neglect, or default.

It is true, the measure of recovery in the different cases is not the same, but the cause of action is, viz., the wrongful act, neglect, or default. We feel, therefore, constrained to hold that the act of 1872 was not intended to apply to cases embraced by the act of February 12, 1853." In Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. O'Connor, 119 Ill. 586, it appeared that Jeremiah O'Connor, in his lifetime, brought suit against the railroad company for damages for personal injuries, and obtained judgment. An appeal was taken, and pending the appeal O'Connor died from causes other than the injuries complained of in the declaration. His son was substituted as plaintiff in the suit. It was said by the court: "The action being for personal injuries caused by the negligence of the defendant, it is within the statute, and survives."

There is nothing in Holton v. Daly, 106 Ill. 131, which holds to the contrary. Indeed, it is expressly therein recognized that such actions do survive upon the death of the plaintiff; and it was held, when death is the result of the injuries for which the suit is brought, the action must be prosecuted, after the death, for the benefit of the widow and the next of kin, and that in such case there can be no recovery for the bodily pain and suffering, but that, where the death results from a cause other than the injuries for which the suit is brought, there may be a recovery, notwithstanding the death, for precisely the same injuries that the party himself could have recovered for had he lived until after the final trial."

The statutes of Kansas are similar to our own. Section 420 of the compilation of 1879 is the revival act, and provides for the survival of actions to recover damages for an injury to the person. Section 422 of the same is the death act. In McCarthy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 18 Kan. 46, 26 Am. Rep. 742, these two sections were construed, and it was held that they must be construed in pari materia. The court said: "The purpose of § 422 is evidently, not only to fix the amount of damages, and limit them to the use of the widow and children, or next of kin, but to take away the right of the administrator to sue for the benefit of the estate generally, where death resulted from the injuries. Section 420, as construed with § 422, only causes the actions to survive for injury to the person when the death does not result from such injury, but does occur from other circumstances. The right of action under § 422 is exclusive; and an administrator could not maintain an action under §§ 420 and 422 for the same injury. When death results from wrongful acts § 422 is intended solely to apply,"—citing Read v. Great Eastern R. Co. L. R. 3 Q. B. 555; Andrews v. Hartford & N. H. R. Co. 34 Conn. 57. In Hulbert v. Topeka, 34 Fed. Rep. 510, where the action was brought by the administrator for injuries to the decedent in her lifetime, and from which she died, Mr. Justice Brewer, before whom the cause was tried, held that no recovery could be had under Comp. Laws, § 420, and that in cases of death from negligent injuries § 422 applied. Justice Brewer was on the bench of the state court when the McCarthy Case was decided, and joined in that opinion; but in the case in the Federal court he expressed some doubt about the correctness of the ruling in that case, though he followed it in the Hulbert Case. This doubt seems to have been based upon the rule laid down in Needham v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 38 Vt. 294, where it was held that, where death occurs in consequence of a bodily injury, two causes of suit or action may arise,—one in favor of the decedent for his loss and suffering resulting from the injury in his lifetime, and revived by the act of 1847; the other founded on his death, or on the damages resulting from his death to his widow and next of kin, under the act of 1849. But, however much Mr. Justice Brewer may have been shaken as to the correctness of his conclusions in the McCarthy Case by the Needham Case, it seems that the supreme court of Vermont in a later case (one decided in 1890) was not satisfied with the conclusions reached in the Needham Case in 1865. As early as 1881 Judge Veazey of the Vermont court wrote an opinion which met the approval of a majority of the court in effect overruling some of the conclusions reached in the Needham Case. This opinion was not filed, as the case went off on other questions. In Legg v. Britton, 64 Vt. 656, it was held that the act providing for the recovery of damages for the benefit of the widow and next of kin where death results from the neglect or default of another does not create a new and additional cause of action; thus fully overruling the Needham Case.

In Louisville & N. R. Co. v. McElwain, 98 Ky. 700, 34 L. R. A. 788, the court, speaking of the two statutes, says: "We cannot believe that the general assembly intended that the personal representative should maintain an action for the death of the wife, practically for the husband's benefit, and allow at the same time the husband to maintain one on his own account, for the same acts or negligence."

In Lubrano v. Atlantic Mills, 19 R. I. 129, 34 L. R. A. 707 (decided in 1895), the question was whether, under the statutes of that state, an administrator had the right to maintain two actions for negligence resulting in death,—one for the benefit of the widow and next of kin, according to Lord Campbell's act; and another for the damage to the person, under the statute for the survival of actions. The action was brought for the pain and expense arising from injuries to the plaintiff's intestate before his death, which resulted therefrom. The defendant pleaded a judgment in its favor in a suit by the plaintiff in the same cause of action. The plaintiff replied that the former action was brought by him as trustee for the next of kin of the deceased, and in a different right from that involved in the present action, which was for the benefit of the estate. To this replication defendant demurred, and the demurrer was sustained. In substance these statutes are like our own. The opinion of the court in that case is so well reasoned, and the cases which seem to differ from the correct principle so well explained, that I quote from it at some length. In speaking of the survival statute, the court said: "It is under this section that the plaintiff claims. In support of his claim he relies on Bradshaw v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co., L. R. 10 C. P. 189; Leggott v. Great Northern R. Co., L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 599; Barnett v. Lucas, Ir. Rep. 6 C. L. 247; Bowes v. Boston, 155 Mass. 344, 15 L. R. A. 365; and Needham v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 38 Vt. 300. The opinion in Bowes v. Boston is based upon the statutes of Massachusetts, and holds that two actions, one for the benefit of the family and one for the benefit of the estate, may proceed at the same time, on independent grounds, and for different purposes. It cites no authority. In Needham v. Grand Trunk R. Co. the point decided was that, the injury to the deceased having occurred in New Hampshire, where no right of action in either form survived, the plaintiff could not maintain action therefor in Vermont. The dictum relating to two causes of action has recently been overruled in Legg v. Britton, 64 Vt. 652. Barnett v. Lucas was an action for injury to personal estate, and is therefore not in point. Bradshaw v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co. was on demurrer to the declaration, which alleged a breach of contract to carry a passenger safely, and it was held that the action could be maintained, notwithstanding the fact that provision for compensation for the death was made by Lord Campbell's act. The case was decided in 1875; and Leggott v. Great Northern R. Co., decided in 1876, was a case upon a similar contract, to which the defendant pleaded a denial of the averments of fact and a recovery by the plaintiff under Lord Campbell's act. The plaintiff replied that the defendant was estopped by the judgment in the former case to deny the facts, and to this replication the defendant demurred. The court held that there was no estoppel, because the plaintiff sued in a different right; and, in so deciding, followed Bradshaw v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co., but not without protestation. Mellor, J., said: 'With the single exception, so far as I am aware, of the case in the common pleas (Bradshaw v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co.), there appears to be no authority that an action will lie by the executor in respect of what is claimed in this action. But, as that case has been decided on the very point, I entirely yield to the authority of the decision so far as to say that in this court it cannot be questioned, and we must, therefore, abide by it.' In Pulling v. Great Eastern R. Co., L. R. 9 Q. B. Div. 110, the Bradshaw Case was further commented upon. Denman, J., said: 'None of the authorities go so far as to say that where the cause of action is in substance an injury to the person, the personal representative can maintain an action merely because the person so injured incurred in his lifetime some expenditure of money in consequence of the personal injury. The case of Bradshaw v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co. certainly does not go to that length, because the judgments in that case are expressly based upon the distinction, in this respect, between actions of contract and actions of tort, and upon the fact that in that case the action was an action of contract.' The opinion (Pollock, B., concurring) decided that the plaintiff could not sue for damage to the intestate's person. In view of these comments, the support which the Bradshaw Case gives the plaintiff turns out to be more apparent than real. Prior to these cases, that of Read v. Great Eastern R. Co., L. R. 3 Q. B. 555, had been decided in 1868, holding that satisfaction received by the deceased in his lifetime for the injury was a bar to the suit for the death. That case stated the principle upon which the compensatory act is founded. It creates no new cause of action by reason of the death, but gives a new right of recovery in substitution for the right of action which the deceased would have had if he had survived. Upon this principle the new remedy must be exclusive, since otherwise there would be two recoveries for the same cause of action, namely, the negligence of the defendant, which is the cause of action on which the deceased would have sued at common law if he had survived. Moreover, the recognized rules of construction lead to the conclusion that the remedy for the death is exclusive. While the act relates to a remedy, it is, nevertheless, in derogation of the common law, because it gives a right of action where none existed at common law; and so it should be strictly construed. The provisions for survival of actions for damages to the person and for the remedy for the death have been embodied in the same statute in this state since 1857, although the latter was first adopted. The general provision should not be construed to modify the special, since the intention to modify the former statute by giving an additional remedy is not plain, and both can stand together; the act of survival embracing damages to the person other than those which result in death. This is the construction which was given to precisely similar provisions in Holton v. Daly, 106 Ill. 131, where it was held that the only cause of action was the wrong done, irrespective of consequences, and that a statute of survival subsequently passed did not give a remedy additional to that of the prior act relating to the death. . . . So in Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. O'Connor, 119 Ill. 586, it was held that where the plaintiff, pending an action for injuries, dies from some other cause than the injury, the action survives, and may be prosecuted by his administrator. In McCarthy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 18 Kan. 46, 26 Am. Rep. 742, where both provisions for an action for death and for survival of an action for injury to the person had been embodied in a revision, as in our own statutes, it was held that they must be construed in pari materia, and that the latter provision applied only to cases where the death did not result from the injury. This decision was followed in Hulbert v. Topeka, 34 Fed. Rep. 510."

In Griffiths v. Dudley, L. R. 9 Q. B. Div. 357, Field, J., said: "Read v. Great Eastern R. Co. L. R. 3 Q. B. 555, is a clear decision that Lord Campbell's act did not give any new cause of action, but only substituted the right of the representative to sue in the place of the right which the deceased himself would have had if he had survived." In Canadian P. R. Co. v. Robinson, 19 Can. S. C. 292, Taschereau, J., quotes with approval the language of Field, J., in Griffiths v. Dudley, L. R. 9 Q. B. Div. 357. In Wood v. Gray [1892] A. C. 576, it appears that a workman, having been injured through the fault, as he alleged, of his employers, brought an action against them for damages. While the action was pending, he died intestate and unmarried. His mother was appointed his executrix, and she raised a second and concurrent action for solatium for her son's death, and asked that the second action should be remitted to the same jury who were to try the first. It was held, affirming the court of sessions, that the second action was incompetent. Lord Watson, who delivered the opinion of the house of lords, among other things, said: "There is not a single instance in which the court has allowed two actions to be brought in respect of the same negligent act leading to the injury and death of one person. Even in cases where the right of relatives to sue has been recognized, they must bring one suit, and one only, in which the damages due to them respectively may be assessed. In that state of the law, I do not think this house ought to encourage the creation of a new right and corresponding liability which are at present unknown in Scotland." Lord Field, concurring in that opinion, said: "The appellant did cite to your lordships a great many cases. I have been carefully through them, and have considered them, and it seems to me, so far as I can follow the question, that there is no foundation whatever for the appellant's contention." That two actions cannot be maintained for the same wrongful act, see Bigelow v. Nickerson, 34 U. S. App. 261, 70 Fed. Rep. 113, 17 C. C. A. 1, 30 L. 43 L. R. A.

K. A. 336; Re City of Norwalk, 55 Fed. Rep. 98; American S. B. Co. v. Chase, 16 Wall. 532, 21 L. ed. 372; Dibble v. New York & E. R. Co. 25 Barb. 188; Proctor v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 64 Mo. 119; Foulkes v. N. & D. R. Co. 5 Baxt. 663.

In a late case in Kansas, decided July 10, 1897,—Martin v. Missouri P. R. Co. 58 Kan. 475—it was held that § 420 of the survival statute only permits actions to survive for injury to the person when death does not result from the injury, but occurs from other causes; but, however, where death results from the wrongful act or omission of another, § 422—the death act—is exclusive. That court cites in support of that rule of construction: Andrews v. Hartford & N. H. R. Co. 34 Conn. 57; Read v. Great Eastern R. Co. L. R. 3 Q. B. 555; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. O'Connor, 19 Ill. App. 591; Holton v. Daly, 106 Ill. 131; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. O'Connor, 119 Ill. 586; Tiffany, Death by Wrongful Act, § 119.

In Hill v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 178 Pa. 223, 35 L. R. A. 196, decided by the supreme court of Pennsylvania November 9, 1896, it appeared that the act of 1851 of that state provides that no action for personal injuries by negligence or default shall abate by reason of plaintiff's death, but shall survive to his personal representatives; that where the injured person did not sue during his life, his widow or personal representative may sue; that the right of action to children and parents of a decedent be extended; and also provides for the distribution of damages recovered. It was held that a widow was not given an independent cause of action for an injury causing her husband's death which he could not in his lifetime release or compound. In that case the court cites Read v. Great Eastern R. Co. L. R. 3 Q. B. 555, and the opinion of Lush, J., with approval, in which he said: "The intention of the statute is not to make the wrongdoer pay damages twice for the same wrongful act, but to enable the representatives of the person injured to recover in a case where the maxim, Actio personalis moritur cum persona would have applied. It only points to a case where the party injured has not recovered compensation against the wrongdoer."

I am aware that in some of the states it is held by the courts that two actions may be maintained under statutes somewhat similar to our own; but the case of Needham v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 38 Vt. 294, we have seen, has been effectually overruled by the later case of Legg v. Britton, 64 Vt. 652, and the case of Boces v. Boston, 155 Mass. 344, 15 L. R. A. 365, shown not to be well reasoned, by the Rhode Island court in Lubrano v. Atlantic Mills, 19 R. I. 129, 34 L. R. A. 797. In Vicksburg & M. R. Co. v. Phillips, 64 Miss. 693, it is held that two actions may be maintained under somewhat similar statutes to our own; but the court cites no cases sustaining such a rule, though counsel for plaintiff in that case in his brief seems to rely upon Needham v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 38 Vt. 294. In Davis v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 53 Ark. 117, 7 L. R. A. 283, the court seems also to have relied upon Needham v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 38 Vt. 294. In the case of Hedrick v. Ilwaco R. & Nav. Co. 4 Wash. 400, decided by the supreme court of Washington in 1892, the statutes treated of are very different from our own, and the case is not authority for the contention made for it.

It is claimed that in construing these acts the amendment of 1885 of the survival act must speak from the date of the original act. This is undoubtedly true. But it has never been contended in this state, so far as I can ascertain, until the present action was brought, that a cause of action survives for a negligent injury, or for an assault and battery, where death results from the wrongful act, though these two statutes have been on the statute books for fifty years, and the amendment of 1885 as to negligent injuries over twelve years. Apparently it was thought by the profession that actions in such cases must be brought under the death act, as no one ever before claimed that two actions would lie for the same wrongful act. From the history of the cases in this state, it is at once apparent what the legislative intent was in passing the amendment of 1885. Prior to that time, if the party negligently injured brought suit for damages, and died during the pendency of the case from some other cause than the negligent injury, the suit immediately abated, and no right of action accrued to his personal representatives under §§ 8313 and 8314, because his death was not the result of the wrongful act or omission. The profession was often confronted with this condition, as all such suits abated by the death of the party. But since 1848, when death resulted from the wrongful act, actions could be maintained under the death act. It was not necessary to amend either statute to give a right of action where death did result from the wrongful act. That right already existed. The purpose of the legislature, therefore, was to provide a remedy when one was lost by the death of the party, by the survival of the action which the party himself might have brought in his lifetime for wrongful injuries not resulting in death, and which cause of action did not survive under the former acts. The only logical construction of these statutes, so as to give effect to both, is that the death act applies to cases of death caused by wrongful injuries, while the survival act applies to cases of personal injuries not causing death. If these two acts had been passed at the same time, each being embodied in different sections of the same act, what ground would this have afforded for the contention that the survival section applies to injuries resulting in death? We should then have to reconcile and render operative both sections, as now. The question of the legislative intent of the survival provision in reference to injuries causing death would still be open. The illogical result of holding that the survival provision was intended to cover cases of wrongful killing would still be presented, and would force the conclusion that the legislature intended the survival provision should apply only to 43 L. R. A. personal injuries not causing death. If we start with the survival act as in existence at the date when the death act was passed, the result is not changed. We then have an act which provided for the survival of actions for personal injuries followed by another giving a right of action for personal injuries resulting in death. It cannot be contended that the survival act conferred a right of action for wrongful killing. More definite and specific language indicative of the legislative purpose to do this would be required. In Illinois the death act was passed first. In Holton v. Daly, 106 Ill. 131, both these Illinois statutes were construed, and it was held that both should be given effect; that where death occurred from the injury the death act applied, and where the person died from some other cause than the injury the survival act applied. This decision was not based upon the fact that the death act was first passed. In Rhode Island the survival act was passed first; and the court, in the Lubrano Case, 19 R. I. 129, 34 L. R. A. 797, construed these statutes with the same result as reached in Holton v. Daly, and by the same reasoning, that both acts must be construed together. In the McCarthy Case, 18 Kan. 46, 26 Am. Rep. 742, it appeared that both acts were passed and took effect upon the same day, and effect was given to both, and it was held that the survival act applied to cases only where the death resulted from some other cause than the wrongful act. In all the cases cited by counsel where a different result has been reached the decisions have been based upon the ground that Lord Campbell's act created a new cause of action. I think there is nothing, either upon principle or authority, in the fact that one act was passed before the other which affects the construction to be given these statutes. The real question is (both statutes being in force), How should they be construed so as to give effect to both? And I think the only logical construction is that given by most of the cases; that is, that the survival act applies to cases of negligent injuries to the person that are not fatal, and that Lord Campbell's act applies to fatal cases.

But it is suggested that another view might be taken of these statutes, and thus give a definite and certain rule; that is, that where the person is injured, and survives the injury for a time, a right of action accrues to him which survives in case of his death before judgment, and that in such case the death act has no application. But, if the person is killed outright, no right of action could accrue to him; therefore none could survive, and the death act would necessarily furnish the only relief. Let us see how this construction would leave the parties who were dependent upon the deceased. Under the survival act, the amount recovered goes into the estate for the benefit of creditors, and, if the estate be insolvent, the creditors might receive every dollar of the amount. Is it possible that the legislature was so solicitous for the creditors of the deceased that a limitation was put upon the death act, and a recovery under that act

(the proceeds of which go to the dependent ones) made possible only when the death was instantaneous? To illustrate: Suppose A is thirty years of age, has a wife and children, earns $125 per month, and receives an injury which he survives one hour. During that hour a right of action has accrued to him. The death act, then, has no application to the case, and no recovery can be had under it. The administrator, under such a construction, could recover under the survival act for the pain and suffering caused by the injury, which might be merely nominal, and this would go to the creditors if the estate were insolvent. If the action could be brought under the death act, the widow and children would receive the whole of the fund recovered, and the damages would be founded upon the pecuniary loss of those dependent upon the deceased. It cannot be possible that the legislature ever intended such a limitation upon the death act. A recovery under the death act has always been permitted in this state when the death results from the wrongful act, and this without regard to whether the death was instantaneous or not. In Van Brunt v. Cincinnati, J. & M. R. Co. 78 Mich. 530, it appeared that the plaintiff's intestate was injured January 1, 1888, and died from the injuries on the next day. On the trial it was shown that the deceased was an unmarried man, and had no one dependent upon him for support. The court below directed the verdict in favor of defendant. In this court the case was fully considered, and it was assumed that, if the plaintiff had been able to show pecuniary loss by next of kin, a recovery might be had. A point was made that a recovery might be had under the survival act, and that point overruled. In Hunn v. Michigan C. R. Co. 78 Mich. 513, 7 L. R. A. 500, plaintiff's intestate, a fireman, was killed in a collision of defendant's trains. The action was brought under the death act. Just how long he survived the injury does not appear, but that fact was ignored. The case was reversed upon the ground that the court improperly admitted certain testimony, and a new trial was granted. In Sweet v. Michigan C. R. Co. 87 Mich. 559, plaintiff's intestate was injured by striking against a shed adjacent to the track. He lived thirty minutes after the accident. The action was brought under the death act, and judgment was rendered for $5,000, and was affirmed in this court. Mr. Justice Grant dissented, but not on the ground that the action could not be sustained under the death act. In Richmond v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 87 Mich. 374, plaintiff's intestate, a street-car driver, was killed in a collision of the defendant's cars with the street car he was driving. The injury occurred about 4 or 5 o'clock in the afternoon, and he survived until the evening of the same day. The action was brought for the benefit of the mother and an invalid sister, and a recovery had under the death act. The judgment was for $5,313, and was affirmed in this court. Justices Grant and Champlin dissented, but not upon the ground that the action could not be maintained under the death act. In Schlacker v. Ashland Iron 43 L. R. A.

Min. Co. 89 Mich. 253, the action was under the death act. The plaintiff's intestate was injured, and survived several days. The fact that the death was not instantaneous was ignored. The judgment was reversed, and a new trial ordered. In O'Donnell v. Duluth, S. S. & A. R. Co. 89 Mich. 174, though the deceased lived about an hour after the injury, the action was brought under the death act, and no one questioned that the act was applicable if the circumstances had been such that a recovery might have been had. In Pennington v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. 90 Mich. 505, plaintiff's intestate was injured while switching cars. He survived six hours. The action was brought under the death act. Plaintiff recovered in the court below for the pecuniary loss sustained by the widow and children, and for the expense of his care, nursing, and funeral expenses. While the case was reversed, no one questioned the right of recovery upon the ground that the action could not be maintained under this act, or questioned that the damages claimed could not be recovered as claimed if the defendant had been guilty of the several acts of negligence averred in the declaration. In Racho v. Detroit, 90 Mich. 92, it appeared that the plaintiff's intestate was injured June 25, 1889, and died June 10, 1890. No action was instituted in the lifetime of the intestate. After his death the widow, as administratrix, brought suit under §§ 8313, 8314, 2 How. Anno. Stat. The lower court directed verdict and judgment in favor of defendant. That judgment was reversed, and a new trial ordered; it being held that the widow, as administratrix, could recover under the above sections of the statute. Not one of these cases could have been maintained if these statutes had been construed as now contended for, for in no case was the death instantaneous. Other cases of like character might be cited. I have examined the cases with some care, for the purpose of ascertaining in what proportion of them the death was shown to have been instantaneous, and find but very few. If, therefore, the death act can be applied only to cases where the death is instantaneous, it should be amended in order that the widow and children of the deceased may have some benefit under it. From the cases it appears that few persons were killed who did not have some one dependent upon them, and that few were killed outright. Are we, by construction of the statute, to cut off all the rights which such dependents may have? No case can be found in this state giving such construction, though this statute (the death act) has been upon the statute books for upwards of fifty years. I am aware that in Maine this construction is given to a similar statute. State v. Maine C. R. Co. 60 Me. 490. But in no other jurisdiction is such a limitation put upon the death act, that I am aware of. In Massachusetts a contrary view is expressly held under a statute similar to the Maine statute. Com. v. Metropolitan R. Co. 107 Mass. 236.

It must be held that the plaintiff could not maintain this action under the first count of the declaration. The only remedy was under §§ 8313 and 8314. The court below was in error in permitting a recovery on the first count of the declaration. That part of the verdict and judgment must be reversed and held for naught. The verdict and judgment for the value of the personal property destroyed will stand. No new trial will be permitted. Defendant should recover the costs of this court.

Grant, J., concurred with Long, Ch. J.

Montgomery, J., dissenting:

The plaintiff brought an action based on the negligence of the defendant company, resulting in the death of the plaintiff's intestate. The evidence shows that while deceased was a passenger on one of defendant's trains a collision occurred with another of defendant's trains on the same track; that the car in which deceased was riding took fire; that when she was extricated from the car life was extinct. The plaintiff offered testimony which it is claimed shows that death was not instantaneous. The declaration contains three counts: The first, based upon the cause of action which accrued in favor of the deceased for pain and suffering caused by the injury; the second, for the loss of personal property in the possession of the deceased at the time of the accident, and consumed by fire; and the third count, on the statute permitting a recovery of the pecuniary loss sustained by the next of kin, in case of death caused by the wrongful act of another. The verdict of the jury was taken separately on each count, and was for the plaintiff in the sum of $1,000 on the first count, and also for the plaintiff in the sum of $110 on the second count, and for defendant on the third count. The defendant brings error, and contends that there is no testimony fairly tending to show that the decedent's death was not instantaneous, and, further, that under our statute no right of action in favor of the administrator generally survives for injuries causing death, but that in such case the sole remedy is under the statute giving relief to the next of kin. Counsel on both sides are to be commended for the instructive briefs which have been furnished, and which have been of great aid to the court.

1. The question which lies at the threshold of the case is whether a cause of action lies in favor of the administrator, under § 7397, 3 How. Anno. Stat., as amended in 1885, or whether in case of death the remedy given under §§ 8313 and 8314 is exclusive. This question has arisen elsewhere under statutes somewhat similar to ours, and the decisions are inharmonious; nor are they in all cases to be reconciled on differences which exist in the terms of the statutes. Before entering upon a discussion of the cases, reference should be had to the history of our legislation, with a view of ascertaining, if possible, whether the legislative intent can be clearly gathered therefrom. The act embodied in §§ 8313 and 8314 is substantially a re-enactment of Lord Campbell's act, omitting the preamble and the third section. Our statute provides that wherever the death of a person shall be caused by wrongful act, neglect, or default, and the act, neglect, or default is such as would, if death had not ensued, have entitled the party injured to maintain an action and recover damages in respect thereof, then and in every such case the person who, or the corporation which, would have been liable if death had not ensued, shall be liable to an action for damages, notwithstanding the death of the person injured, and although the death shall have been caused under such circumstances as in law amounts to a felony. The second section provides that the action shall be brought in the name of the personal representatives of the deceased, and that the amount recovered shall be distributed in the proportions required by law in relation to the distribution of personal property left by persons dying intestate, and that in every such action the jury may give such damages as they shall deem fair and just, in reference to the pecuniary injury resulting from such death to those persons who may be entitled to such damages when recovered. This statute was first enacted in 1848, and amended in 1873. Section 7397, as it now reads, is as follows: "In addition to the actions which survive by the common law the following shall also survive, that is to say: Actions of replevin and trover; actions of assault and battery, false imprisonment, for goods taken and carried away, for negligent injuries to the person; and actions for damage done to real or personal estate." Except for the interpolation of the words, "for negligent injuries to the person," which were incorporated in 1885, this section reads precisely as it has since the adoption of the Revised Statutes of 1846, and was therefore in force at the time of the adoption of Lord Campbell's act, in 1848.

The inquiry naturally suggests itself, What were the rights under § 7397 before Lord Campbell's act was adopted? Could a recovery have been had by the executor for an assault and battery committed on the person of his testator, resulting in the latter's death? It is contended by the defendant's counsel that § 7397 was intended to apply to pending actions, and was intended to provide for the revival of the action when commenced by the deceased in his lifetime; and this view is supported by considerations of great weight, among which is the fact that this statute is found in chapter 261, 3 How. Anno. Stat., the title of which is, "Of Death, Marriage, or Other Disability Occurring after the Commencement of the Suit." If the question were altogether new, we should strongly incline to the view presented by defendant's counsel; but as early as 1882 this question was before the court, and in the case of Rogers v. Windoes, 48 Mich. 628, it was held that the section in question was intended to provide for the survival of the cause of action. It will be seen, therefore, that when the words providing for a survival of the cause of action in this case were incorporated into, and became a part of, § 7397, that section as it theretofore existed had a judicial construction; and it is fair to assume that the amendment in question was made in view of such construction, and that, therefore, the legislative intent was to provide for the survival of the cause of action in the cases specified, as by the amendment of 1885 the right to recover for injuries resulting from negligence is placed on the same plane as the causes of action enumerated in the section before its amendment.

The question recurs, What were the rights, as to injuries causing death, prior to the act of 1848? Could a recovery for damages prior to the death of the injured party have been had? We think this question should be answered in the affirmative. Any other conclusion must rest upon the idea that the legislature, by providing in § 7397 that the action for assault and battery should survive, intended that, if the injuries were not severe enough to result in death, an action might lie by the executor, but, if the assault were of so aggravated a character as that death ultimately resulted from it, no action could be maintained. To what extent, then, was the statute of 1848 intended to amend or repeal the provisions of § 7397? Having in mind the rule that repeals by implication are not favored, we turn to the act of 1848 to ascertain if it is reasonably clear that the legislature intended to substitute for the provisions of section 7397 the provisions of the later section in all cases in which death ensued. There are some considerations which tend to support the view that such was the intent,—as the one that it is not to be inferred lightly that two remedies are given for the same evil, and that the act of 1848 is apparently broad enough to cover all cases in which death results from the wrongful act of another. The remedies afforded are, however, quite distinct and different. Under § 7397 it is clear that no recovery could be had by the executor because of the fact of the death of his testator, but he could recover for such injuries as his testator sustained in his lifetime, notwithstanding his death, while under the act of 1848 the recovery is limited to the pecuniary loss resulting from such death to the persons who may be entitled to such damages when recovered. It is clear, therefore, that the act of 1848 does not cover the whole ground, as, if the case be such that the widow or next of kin is unable to show pecuniary loss resulting from the death, no recovery can be had, notwithstanding the deceased may have been entitled to substantial damages if he had taken action in his lifetime, and notwithstanding the express provision of § 7397 that his cause of action shall survive. It is generally held—and, we think, properly—that, if the deceased settles for the injuries received in his lifetime, or recovers his damages in an action, an action cannot be maintained after his death under Lord Campbell's act. Cooley, Torts, p. 309. Plaintiff's counsel contends that this view tends to show that two causes of action are not created. It is of equal force to show that the remedy under the act of 1848 is not exclusive. But in the wording of the act of 1848 is found authority for this limitation upon the right given in favor of the widow or next of kin. Under this act it is only where the default or wrong would have entitled the injured party to maintain an action had death not ensued, that the remedy is given to the widow or next of kin. Plainly, if the injured party had recovered damages or settled for the injury, he would not at the time of his death have been entitled to maintain the action if death had not ensued. See Littlewood v. New York, 80 N. Y. 24, 42 Am. Rep. 271; Legg v. Britton, 64 Vt. 652. Judge Cooley, in his work on Torts, 2d ed. p. 309, says: "It is seen, on a perusal of this statute, that it gives an action only when the deceased himself, if the injury had not resulted in his death, might have maintained one. In other words, it continues, for the benefit of the wife, husband, etc., a right of action which at the common law would have terminated at the death, and enlarges its scope to embrace the injury resulting from the death. If, therefore, the party injured had compromised for the injury, and accepted satisfaction, previous to death, there could have been no further right of action, and consequently no suit under the statute." It is hardly accurate to say that under the statute of 1848 the right of action is continued for the benefit of the widow or next of kin; for this court has held repeatedly that in the action under this statute no recovery could be had for the pain and suffering preceding death, nor, indeed, for any damages resulting to the injured party which precede his death. Nor, as we have seen, can there be any recovery at all, under the statute of 1848, unless, in addition to the injury and the resulting death, the fact exists that by withdrawing the means of support a direct pecuniary loss is shown to have resulted to some one or more of those who take of the estate of the injured party under the statute of distribution. Certainly this statute does not continue the right of action in all cases. It must be held that two distinct actions are provided by law,—the one under § 7397, and the other under §§ 8313 and 8314. This view was indicated in Hurst v. Detroit City R. Co. 84 Mich. 539, and again in Racho v. Detroit, 90 Mich. 95, and is supported by Vicksburg & M. R. Co. v. Phillips, 64 Miss. 693; Davis v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 53 Ark. 117; Boves v. Boston, 155 Mass. 344, 15 L. R. A. 365; Needham v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 38 Vt. 294; Hedrick v. Iwaco R. & Nav. Co. 4 Wash. 400; Belding v. Black Hills & Ft. P. R. Co. 3 S. D. 369. See also Whitford v. Panama R. Co. 23 N. Y. 465.

In a carefully prepared series of articles published in 28 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 385, 513, 577, the statutory provisions of the various states are reviewed, together with the decisions which had been rendered up to that date; and the conclusions reached are: First, that the right of action under Lord Campbell's act is a new cause of action; and, second, that, where there is likewise a survival act, two remedies are intended. The learned author says: "As to the right to maintain two actions after the death of the injured person (supposing him not to have recovered damages in his lifetime), where there is, in addition to the special act, a general provision of law making rights of action for injury to the person survive, it seems that such right should be ordinarily recognized, in the absence of an express provision to the contrary. The opposite and inconsistent courses adopted by different courts, in the attempt to escape from this result, seem to convict them all of being without warrant." This criticism of decisions which deny the existence of two remedies is fully justified. In Illinois it is held that the remedy under Lord Campbell's act is exclusive. Holton v. Daly, 106 Ill. 131. The same view is taken in Kansas (McCarthy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 18 Kan. 46, 26 Am. Rep. 742), and in Rhode Island (Lubrano v. Atlantic Mills, 19 R. I. 129, 34 L. R. A. 797), while in Kentucky it is held that the election of the legal representative determines which action may be maintained (Conner v. Paul, 12 Bush, 144); thus leaving the right conferred under Lord Campbell's act dependent upon the question of whether the executor shall be more concerned for the creditors than for the beneficiaries named in the act,—a view which we regard as totally untenable. In Vermont, in Legg v. Britton, a view which to us seems equally untenable was taken, viz., that a previous recovery under the survival act would bar a recovery under Lord Campbell's act, although the converse is not declared. In two of the states in which the existence of two remedies is denied, the reasoning of the court does not meet the reasoning which we have attempted in this opinion. On the contrary, in the leading case which denies the existence of two remedies (Holton v. Daly, 106 Ill. 131), the reasoning of the court sustains the conclusion which we have above stated. It appears from that report that a death act corresponding to Lord Campbell's act was enacted February 12, 1853. In 1872 an act was passed providing that certain actions named therein, including "actions to recover damages for an injury to the person, . . . shall survive." The question considered was whether this act gave the executor a right of action for an injury resulting in death, over and above that provided by the previous statute. It was held that it did not, and this conclusion was reached by applying the rule that repeals by implication are not favored, and where statutes are seemingly repugnant they should, if possible, be so construed as that the latter may not operate as a repeal by implication of the former. Under this rule the court held that the survival act, having been passed after the death act, should be construed as applying to such personal injuries as were not covered by the death act; that is, injuries which did not result in death. The chronology of our legislation is the reverse of this. The survival act (§ 7397) was in force before the death act was passed. It is clear that under the former statute, when enacted, a right of action for injury resulting in death survived. If, therefore, the reasoning of the court in Holton v. Daly be accepted (that is, that repeals by implication are not favored, and that statutes seemingly repugnant should be so construed as, if possible, to give effect to both), a result exactly opposite to that which was reached in Holton v. Daly, and which accords with the conclusions already stated, seems inevitable. In Kansas the two sections of statute were given effect on the same day. The court held that they were to be construed in pari materia. It will be seen, therefore, that the decisions which we have cited from that state do not conflict with the reasoning which we have adopted as the rule, that repeals by implication could not be applied. The authority of the Kansas case is weakened by the fact that Judge Brewer, who was a member of the court at the time the judgment in the McCarthy Case was pronounced, later, in the case of Hulbert v. Topeka, 34 Fed. Rep. 510, expressed grave doubts as to its correctness. The only American case which we have found which denies the existence of a right under the survival act, where both acts are in force,—the survival act being prior in point of enactment to Lord Campbell's act,—is the Rhode Island case of Lubrano v. Atlantic Mills, 19 R. I. 129, 34 L. R. A. 797; and this case is largely based on Holton v. Daly, which we have seen does not conflict in its reasoning with the views expressed herein. It will be seen that the courts have encountered great difficulty in construing these statutes, which difficulty has been aggravated by any attempt to depart from the letter of the statutes. Our conclusion is that the act of 1848 was not intended to repeal the survival act of 1846; that the amendment of 1885 to § 7397 is to be treated as though it had been a part of the statute from the first. Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 294. We do not determine whether these actions can be joined, as the assignments of error do not raise the question.

2. Under statutes similar to our § 7397, it has been generally held that where the death was instantaneous no recovery could be had. Tiffany, Death by Wrongful Act, § 74, and cases cited; The Corsair, 145 U. S. 335, 36 L. ed. 727. And recovery cannot be had where the evidence fails to show whether or not the death was instantaneous. Corcoran v. Boston & A. R. Co. 133 Mass. 507; Riley v. Connecticut River R. Co. 135 Mass. 292. The evidence in this case was given by one Allen, who witnessed the collision, and by Dr. Sweetland, who witnessed the autopsy. Allen testified that the car in which decedent was riding and one of the other train were "telescoped." The witness testified that he first went into the window, and next went into one baggage car, before going to the telescoped car; that this took about three or four minutes; that when he got to the telescoped car somebody was alive there; that not to exceed a minute or two after this the car was afire. He did not know decedent, and knew nothing of the exact time of her death. It appears by the testimony that decedent, when taken out, was badly burned. Dr. Sweetland testifies that he was present at the post mortem, and described the condition of the body; that the legs and arms were completely burned away; but it is inferable that the vital parts of the body were not so disfigured but that it could be seen whether any fatal injury had been received from the collision. He testified that in his opinion the death was caused from burning, and that death from burning cannot be instantaneous. We think this testimony presented a question of fact for the jury. Nourse v. Packard, 138 Mass. 307; Pierce v. Cunard S. S. Co. 153 Mass. 87. The judgment should be affirmed.

Hooker, J., dissenting:

The plaintiff's intestate lost her life through a collision and consequent burning of the car in which she was riding upon the defendant's railroad. The plaintiff recovered a judgment of $1,110,—$1,000 upon the first and $110 upon the second count of the declaration. A verdict was rendered for the defendant upon the third count. The defendant has brought error. The questions to be discussed pertain to the construction to be given to two statutes of this state, viz., 3 How. Anno. Stat. § 7397, and 2 How. Anno. Stat. §§ 8313, 8314, the first of which, for convenience, we will call the "survival act," and the last two sections the "death act."

Section 7397 existed in 1846 but not in its present form; the words "for negligent injuries to the person" having been inserted by amendment in 1885. Sections 8313 and 8314 were enacted in 1848 (Laws 1848, p. 31) substantially in their present form, though a slight amendment not affecting this case was made in 1873. Act No. 94, Pub. Acts 1873. These several sections now read as follows:

"Sec. 7397. In addition to the actions which survive by the common law, the following shall also survive, that is to say: actions of replevin and trover; actions of assault and battery, false imprisonment, for goods taken and carried away, for negligent injuries to the person; and actions for damage done to real or personal estate."

"Sec. 8313. Whenever the death of a person shall be caused by wrongful act, neglect, or default, and the act, neglect, or default is such as would (if death had not ensued) have entitled the party injured to maintain an action, and recover damages, in respect thereof, then and in every such case, the person who, or the corporation which, would have been liable if death had not ensued, shall be liable to an action for damages notwithstanding the death of the person injured, and although the death shall have been caused under such circumstances as amount in law to felony.

"Sec. 8314. Every such action shall be brought by, and in the names of, the personal representatives of such deceased person, and the amount recovered in every such action shall be distributed to the persons and in the proportions provided by law in relation to the distribution of personal property left by persons dying intestate; and in every such action the jury may give such damages as they shall deem fair and just, with reference to the pecuniary injury resulting from such death, to those persons who may be entitled to such damages when recovered."

The plaintiff's declaration contained three 43 L. R. A.

counts; the first and second being laid under § 7397, respectively, claiming damages for the injury to the person and property of the intestate. The last count is based upon §§ 8313 and 8314, and claims damages for causing the death of the plaintiff's intestate.

The defendant's counsel contend that there should have been no recovery under the first count, for two reasons: (1) Because the death was instantaneous, and therefore there was never a right of action in the intestate, and consequently none to survive; (2) because, when death results from a negligent act before judgment rendered in an action brought by the deceased, the survival act does not apply, and redress must be sought under the death act. It is contended by plaintiff's counsel that rights of action may exist under both statutes when the death is not instantaneous, and that they may be joined in one action. If this contention of the plaintiff's counsel be correct, there would seem no good reason for holding that the recovery of a judgment by the injured person should be a bar to an action under the death act for his subsequent death, as recovery in such case is permitted, not upon the injury sustained by the deceased, but upon the pecuniary injury to the survivors occasioned by his death. Yet we find the courts generally holding that such recovery is a bar to a subsequent action by the administrator, and we think the legislature intended that it should be. Had the intention been otherwise, it is probable that the act would have permitted each survivor to bring and prosecute his own action, for his own benefit, instead of requiring it to be brought by the personal representative, and permitting the proceeds of the litigation to be distributed among those entitled to the personal property of the decedent, which some of the provisions of the act seem to require; thereby giving portions to persons who confessedly were not injured, and upon whose behalf no recovery could be had, to the injury of those who suffered such injury as was recovered for. The greater number of the cases discussing the question deny the dual right of recovery (28 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 528, 576); and several cases sustain the proposition that, in case death results from the wrongful act before judgment, the death act, and not the survival act, must be relied upon, as contended here. The various cases in the different states arise on varying statutes, and are supported by different reasons; but, as already said, they generally concur in holding that there is a single remedy, and they are not so uniform in holding that death deprives the representatives of a right of action under the survival act, and confers a right to another action, for a different ground and measure of damages, upon one or several of their number, to the exclusion of some. If we are to sustain the contention that the death act is exclusive, it must be by holding that it repeals by implication so much of the survival act as before the enactment of the death act applied to and supported actions by representatives for rights of action which accrued to persons injured through assaults and batteries, and that the amendment, whereby personal injuries caused by negligence were added, falls within the same rule, and was not intended to apply to cases where death resulted from the injury; thus ingrafting upon the statute an exception not expressed, and which clearly was not intended, when the first statute was passed. This means that there can be no survival of an action in the cases where death ultimately results from the wrong. It would be lost by death, not only where there are representatives to suffer by the death, and who may therefore recover for their pecuniary injury, but also where there is no pecuniary injury to anyone through death, in which case all right of action would be lost; and this rule would go so far as to put an end to pending suits, at whatever their stage before verdict, and notwithstanding the fact that large sums had been expended, which would be lost to the estate. The case of Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Stout, 53 Ind. 143, so holds. We are of the opinion that these two acts are to be construed together; that they were designed to enlarge, rather than to diminish, the rights of recovery, and, as held of the later act in Merkle v. Bennington Twp. 58 Mich. 158, 55 Am. Rep. 666, they are both remedial. We very much doubt if the death act was intended to prevent the survival of actions, though it is not so clear that it was intended to permit a recovery on both theories, or to allow an election of remedies, which the courts very generally deny. Indeed, we feel confident that such was not the intention.

There is one view of the law that might reconcile these two acts without doing violence to either, and give a definite and certain rule. It is, that where the person is injured, and lives after the transaction, a right of action accrues to him, which survives in case of his death before judgment, and that in such case the death act has no application. But, if the person is killed outright, no right of action could accrue to him, therefore none could survive, and consequently the death act would necessarily furnish the only relief. Some cogent reasons suggest themselves for this view, if we consider the rule at common law, and the nature of the statutes. At common law, rights of action growing out of torts did not survive, and there was no recovery allowed for causing death. Both were considered to be against public policy. That was the rule in Michigan until the legislature modified it by permitting survival in certain cases of tort. This did not thereby change the law as to recovery for causing death in any case, which we may assume to have been still considered against public policy. And, if a person was instantly killed, it will probably not be contended that the representatives would take a right of action under this act; for how could it be, when by reason of the simultaneous wrongful act and death no right of action could accrue to the deceased. But later an act was passed modifying that rule also. This was not a sweeping act. The matter was approached cautiously, and with evident reverence for the rule of public policy. The widow and next of kin were recognized as sufferers by the death of a husband and relative, and it would have been easy to give to each a right of action for the loss or injury occasioned by death. But this was not done. The right of action was carefully limited to cases where a direct pecuniary injury could be shown. If it had stopped here, it might have existed in all such cases where death followed as a result, and whether a recovery had been had by the deceased or not, and notwithstanding the survival of his right of action if there had not been a recovery by him. But it did not stop there. It was limited to cases where the act, neglect, or default would have entitled the deceased to maintain an action and recover, but for the death. Manifestly, had death not been immediate, an action would have accrued which might have been maintained and recovery had by the deceased, if he should live long enough; and, if not, then by his representatives, under the survival act then existing. But, on the other hand, if death was instantaneous a right of action could not accrue to him, though it would have done so, as we have already seen, had he lived long enough to suffer pain or injury of any kind. Now let us look at the act. What cases are there in which the representatives may recover for death? Is it not in those cases where the act would have given to the deceased a right of action, had he not died simultaneously with the act, but which did not and could not on that account accrue to him? See Tiffany, Death by Wrongful Act, §§ 73-75, inclusive, and cases cited; 28 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 393, 394, and cases cited. Whatever may be indicated by these authorities as to actions by administrators where death was instantaneous, under the various statutes, it does not seem to be contended that a right of action could accrue to a man who was stricken instantly dead by the wrongful act. Is it not plain that the survival act was impotent to afford relief in such cases, and that the death act applied to such cases? Our attention has been called to no case where it has been held that the death act does not cover such a case. But, while this may account for the enactment of the death act, it does not necessarily follow that such act is not broad enough to cover cases where death was not immediate, but it seems quite as probable that the legislature should have intended this construction, as that it was designed to supplant the survival act in so important a class of cases as those based upon negligent injuries resulting in death; and it is not strange that defendants should not have raised and insisted upon the construction under discussion, i. e., that, when death has ensued after the lapse of time, recovery could only be had under the survival act, thereby subjecting them to a judgment for all the pain and suffering of the deceased. A majority of the courts that have considered these questions have found in these statutes (for they are usually associated in the statutes of the different states) that which precludes the double remedy, and which makes the recovery by the deceased a bar to a subsequent action under the death act.

The strongest arguments against the construction suggested are, first, that other courts have not usually discussed this theory, and have applied the remedy under the death act to cases when death was not immediate, which it must be admitted has been often done,—a practice which is clearly inconsistent with this view. Our attention has not been called to any case where the reasonableness of such a construction has been denied. On the other hand, it is said by Ross, Ch. J., in Legg v. Britton, 64 Vt. 652, that: "In Maine and some other states, it is held that the acts of those states, framed after Lord Campbell's act, give a right of action only when instant death follows the injury." See State v. Maine C. R. Co. 60 Me. 490; State v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 61 Me. 114, 14 Am. Rep. 552.

It is possible that this construction is foreclosed by decisions heretofore made by this court, and it is unnecessary to decide the question, because the jury found a verdict for the defendant upon the count based upon this statute; but, to my mind, the foregoing are conclusive reasons for believing that it was not the intention of the legislature to give the double remedy. In my opinion, the judgment should be affirmed.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

Samuel D. PETERSON, Respt.,
v.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY, Appt.

(.....Minn.....)

*1. Where the station agent of a telegraph company, acting within the scope of his employment, maliciously transmits a libelous message over the wires of said company to another of its station agents, addressed for delivery to a third person, which is done accordingly, the company is liable in punitive damages.

*2. The verdict of the jury on behalf of plaintiff for the sum of $2,000, held excessive, and that a new trial should be granted, unless the plaintiff consent to remit all of the same in excess of $1,000.

(January 25, 1899.)

APPEAL by defendant from an order of the District Court for Brown County denying a motion for new trial after judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged publication of a libel. Reversed subject to filing remittitur.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Ferguson & Kneeland, for appellant:

The infliction of punitive or exemplary damages questionable at best rests in this jurisdiction on the theory that such damages are for punishment and example.

Hoffman v. Northern P. R. Co. 45 Minn. 53; North v. Johnson, 58 Minn. 212.

In this case what is there in the conduct of the defendant which ought to be punished and made an example "to deter it and others from committing similar wrongs?"

It is not just nor right nor politic nor expedient to go further after the principal has made full reparation for the consequences of his agent's act, and throw him upon the tender mercies of a jury to be further mulcted in indeterminate damages for a wrongful animus which he never had, which he had no part in, nor any reason to anticipate, and which he has never approved.

*Headnotes by BUCK, J.

NOTE.—For former decision in this case, see Peterson v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Minn.) 40 L. R. A. 661.
43 L. R. A.

Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Prentice, 147 U. S. 101, 37 L. ed. 97.

The master can be liable only for actual damages from a wrongful act of his servant unless he participated in or approved of the wrong.

Staples v. Schmidt, 18 R. l. 224, 19 L. R. A. 824; Ricketts v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 33 W. Va. 433, 7 L. R. A. 354; Downey v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 28 W. Va. 732; Talbott v. West Virginia, C. & P. R. Co. 42 W. Va. 560; Robinson v. Superior Rapid Transit R. Co. 94 Wis. 345, 34 L. R. A. 205; Hagen v. Providence & W. R. Co. 3 R. I. 88, 62 Am. Dec. 377; Cleghorn v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 56 N. Y. 44, 15 Am. Rep. 375; Murphy v. Central Park, N. & E. R. R. Co. 16 Jones & S. 96; Eviston v. Cramer, 57 Wis. 570; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Garcia, 70 Tex. 207; Dillingham v. Anthony, 73 Tex. 47, 3 L. R. A. 634; Gulf, W. T. & P. R. Co. v. Holzheuser (Tex. Civ. App.) 45 S. W. 188; Kiel v. Chartiers Valley Gas Co. 131 Pa. 466; Sullivan v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 12 Or. 302, 53 Am. Rep. 364; Ackerson v. Erie R. Co. 32 N. J. L. 254; Haines v. Schultz, 50 N. J. L. 481; Great Western R. Co. v. Miller, 19 Mich. 305; McCoy v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 5 Houst. (Del.) 599; Mendelsohn v. Anaheim Lighter Co. 40 Cal. 657; City Nat. Bank v. Jeffries, 73 Ala. 183; Foster v. Pitts, 63 Ark. 387; Kutner v. Fargo, 20 Misc. 207; Warner v. Southern P. Co. 113 Cal. 105.

There can be no ratification without both knowledge of the fact to be ratified and the intention to ratify it.

Edwards v. London & N. W. R. Co. L. R. 5 C. P. 449.

The mere retention of a servant is not evidence of ratification.

Dillingham v. Anthony, 73 Tex. 47, 3 L. R. A. 634; Gulf, W. T. & P. R. Co. v. Holzheuser (Tex. Civ. App.) 45 S. W. 188; Williams v. Pullman Palace Car Co. 40 La. Ann. 87.

For those aggravations which may arise out of his wantonness and malice, the employer is not on the same footing with the agent.

Great Western R. Co. v. Miller, 19 Mich. 305; Hagen v. Providence & W. R. Co. 3 R. I. 88, 62 Am. Dec. 377.

When an outrageous verdict is rendered by a jury it is the duty of the court to set it aside, no matter how many similar verdicts may have been returned in the case.

Peterson v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 65 Minn. 18, 33 L. R. A. 302; Woodward v. Glidden, 33 Minn. 108; Dillon, Laws & Jurisprudence of England and America, 130; Sedgwick, Damages, 520-528; Pratt v. Pioneer Press Co. 32 Minn. 217; Bridge v. Oshkosh, 71 Wis. 363; McCarthy v. Niskern, 22 Minn. 90; Dennis v. Johnson, 42 Minn. 301.

Mr. S. L. Pierce, for respondent:

In common-law actions the parties are entitled to trial of issues of fact by jury.

Judges may differ widely from the jurors, but there is no justification for disturbing the decision of a jury on matters left by the law to their determination.

Fabrigas v. Mostyn, 2 W. Bl. 929.

Courts will not disturb a third verdict when the only ground of complaint was excessive damage.

Meeks v. St. Paul, 64 Minn. 220.

Aside from the question of punitive damages, was not here something in the way of actual injury to the plaintiff of a serious and, indeed, irreparable character?

Williamson v. Freer, 43 L. J. C. P. N. S. 161.

When the act of an agent is malicious or grossly negligent, evincing wanton indifference, the principal may, in the discretion of the jury, be punished, although the act of the agent may have been neither directed nor authorized by the principal, provided it was done under the authorized employment of the principal.

1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 749; Lucas v. Michigan C. R. Co. 98 Mich. 1; Goddard v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 57 Me. 202, 2 Am. Rep. 39; Wood, Mast. & S. § 323; Francis v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 58 Minn. 262, 25 L. R. A. 406.

The mere difference in opinion between judge and jury will not justify the judge in granting a new trial.

Pratt v. Pioneer Press Co. 32 Minn. 221.

The policy of the law is to bring litigation to an end within a reasonable time.

Clerk v. Udall, 2 Salk. 649; Chambers v. Robinson, 2 Strange, 692; Shaw v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 8 Gray, 45; Wilcox v. Landberg, 30 Minn. 93; Harrigan v. Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. 84 Ga. 793; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 10 U. S. App. 645, 54 Fed. Rep. 481, 4 C. C. A. 454.

The more invulnerable a man's good reputation may be the more aggravating the libel and the heavier the damages.

Malloy v. Bennett, 15 Fed. Rep. 371; Ferguson v. Evening Chronicle Pub. Co. 72 Mo. App. 462; Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Sellers, 93 Ala. 9; Marble v. Chapin, 132 Mass. 225.

Buck, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Action for libel. Verdict for plaintiff for $2,000 damages, motion for new trial on part of defendant, which was denied, and it appeals. The plaintiff was a state senator, whose home was at New Ulm, but, the senate being in session, and while the plaintiff was attending the same at St. Paul, the defendant, through its station agent, G. R. McHale, 43 L. R. A.

at New Ulm, sent to the plaintiff the following telegraphic message:

S. D. Peterson, care Windsor:

Slippery Sam:

Your name is pants.

Many Republicans.

This case has been before us on two former occasions. 65 Minn. 18, 33 L. R. A. 302, and 74 N. W. 1022, 40 L. R. A. 661. Upon the first appeal this court construed the message as susceptible of a libelous meaning on its face, but that the verdict of $5,000 damages against the defendant was so excessive as to justify the conclusion that it was the result of passion and prejudice. Upon the second appeal the order of the trial court denying a new trial was reversed for errors of law occurring at the trial. The case has been tried four times, the verdicts each time varying in amount.

The more distinct and important errors assigned by the appellant are: First, that the plaintiff is not in any event entitled to recover, under the evidence in this case, anything more than actual damages, and not entitled to punitive damages or smart money; second, that the court erred in charging the jury that McHale, the agent of the defendant in receiving and transmitting the message in question, represented and stood in the place of the telegraph company, and the defendant is liable and responsible for his acts and conduct in receiving and transmitting the message to the same extent that McHale would have been personally responsible had he been the owner and operator of the telegraph line; third, that the damages awarded by the jury are excessive, and appear to have been given under the influence of passion and prejudice. Upon the first proposition we do not agree with the contention of counsel, unless his second proposition is sound as to the acts of the agent and want of liability of the company for his acts. The trial court charged the jury that, if they found from the evidence that the defendant or its agent maliciously published the libel as charged, it was their duty to return a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for such damages as he had sustained to his reputation by reason of the publication, and also gave as part of his charge the language used in the second assignment of error. This, of course, involves the question of the liability of the defendant for the act of the agent if he was actuated by malice or bad faith, and upon this question the jury found in favor of the plaintiff; that is, under this instruction the jury returned a verdict against the defendant for $2,000. Of course, if the action had been against McHale personally for his malicious publication of the libel, and the jury had found him guilty, they could have awarded punitive, vindictive, or exemplary damages. It is clearly competent for a jury to find vindictive damages in an action for libel, where the publication was done maliciously. Newell, Defamation, Slander & Libel, §42; Bergmann v. Jones, 94 N. Y. 51. In the last case cited it is said that, when the falseness of the libel is proved, as a general rule it is sufficient to warrant the jury in giving exemplary damages.

But the important question in the case at bar is this, Is the company itself liable for exemplary damages by reason of the act of the agent McHale, although it did not know, direct, or authorize it? The answer to this is reached by considering and determining the powers and duties of the agent, and whether he was acting within the scope of his employment. The defendant maintained a general telegraph office at New Ulm, and there McHale had the entire management of the business. Under this power and duty his business required him, as such agent, to examine writings, messages, and communications, and transmit them to persons to whom they were addressed. From the very nature of the business, his position required him to do this. The company cannot well act in the numerous telegraph stations throughout the country except through agents. While these branch offices in general are under the management and control of a superintendent, manager, or the corporation itself, yet this agent is almost universally recognized, as he must necessarily be, as the representative of the corporation itself. In the absence of the master the agent is the vice principal, superintending and controlling the business there transacted, and of course stands in the place of the master for the time being. It is right, therefore, that the responsibility and obligation of the master should flow with the duty conferred and imposed, where the representative is acting within the scope of his employment. That is the case at bar. McHale had control of the business at the New Ulm telegraph station. He alone saw the libelous message, and sending it was a matter incidental to his business, and pertaining to the particular duty of his employment. He was acting in the capacity for which he was employed, and, having this power, he was acting within the scope of his authority. He did not perform the act for his own purpose, but for that of the master who employed him, and for the master's benefit. That he abused the authority is no defense in such case. The master had the choice of his agent, and for the abuse of that agent the master should answer to the citizen who became the victim of that abuse without his fault. One who employs another to do an act for his benefit, and who has the choice of the agent, ought to take the risk of injury to third persons by the manner in which he does the business. A telegraph corporation derives its legitimate corporate powers from the law, and that law should not be violated without a corresponding liability for torts committed under it. Station agents may be irresponsible pecuniarily, and if, for their malicious acts done in the scope of their employment, the corporation is not liable, the public would be at the mercy of an unscrupulous telegraph operator; and hence the public are greatly interested in such a question, and the liability for such wrongs should rest upon that body which by its acts creates the power and the opportunity for committing them. It would be a lamentable condition of the rights of the citizen if, under the guise of exercising lawful corporate powers, the corporation could permit the citizen to be defamed by the false and malicious publication of its agent while acting as its duly-appointed representative. In Scott & Jarnagin's Law of Telegraphs (§ 138) it is said that "the company can only perform the duty of sending and receiving a message through the intervention of an agent; and if he may wilfully and corruptly interfere with commercial transactions, or malignantly expose family affairs, and not involve the company, such a ruling would stimulate the wicked, while at the same time good men would be convinced that their chances for indemnity rested alone upon the solvency of treacherous agents. We have seen no instance in the litigated cases where telegraph companies have claimed such immunity. . . . However, the authorities are numerous and highly respectable, and conclusive except where controlled by binding local decisions, which hold the former [company] liable for the wilful acts of the latter [agent], when done in the performance of duties assigned." In the same work it is said (§ 138a): "Aside from the statutory and common-law duty of good faith in the transmission of messages for the public, there is another sense in which telegraph companies may become responsible for mala fides and malicious use of its franchises. A libel is any false, malicious, and personal imputation, effected by any writings, pictures, or signs, tending to alter the party's situation in society or business for the worse; and a corporation may become responsible for its publication, even in punitive damages." Mr. Wood in his work on the Law of Master and Servant (§ 323) says that "it may be regarded as settled by the better class of cases that, whenever exemplary damages would be recoverable if the act had been done by the master himself, they are equally recoverable when the act was done by his servant"—and he cites the well-considered case of Goddard v. Grand Trunk & R. Co. 57 Me. 202, 2 Am. Rep. 39, where numerous authorities are collected supporting this view. It is true that this doctrine thus enunciated was applied in an action against a railroad corporation, but we perceive no distinction between it and a telegraph corporation. For "a telegraph company is liable ex delicto for an injury done by its agents or servants to third persons, for misfeasance as well as nonfeasance." Scott & Jarnagin, Law of Telegraphs, § 6. In Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 5th ed. pt. 2, chap. 9, [§ 141], this question is thoroughly discussed, and it is there said that "where the relation of master and servant exists, the master is responsible to third persons for the damage caused by the wrongful acts or omissions of his servants in the course of their employment as such. This liability . . . extends also to their wilful acts. . . . The principle which lies at the foundation of this rule has been differently stated in different judicial opinions, and the abstract justice of the rule itself has been occasionally questioned. But the soundness of the principle and the necessity of the rule, which we have inherited from the Roman law, have received new and convincing illustrations in the immense development of modern corporations. If the rule of respondet superior were now to be abrogated, it would be almost impossible to carry on the present complex business of society. Every person having any pecuniary responsibility would shelter himself behind the forms of a corporation, which would, in such case, be free from all responsibility for the negligence and violence of its agents without direct evidence of authority for their acts while such evidence could be, in almost every instance, suppressed." This rule may frequently work a hardship, but when the master substitutes an agent or servant in his own place, and clothes him with power to act for the master's benefit in serving the public, he is not permitted to shelter himself behind the plea of nonliability for the act of the agent, and the rule of respondet superior should not be relaxed, whether the master is a corporation or an individual.

Upon the proposition that the verdict of the jury awarding the plaintiff $2,000 is excessive, the court is in accord with the contention of the defendant. "The sole publication of the libel in this case by the defendant was in making it known to its own agent at St. Paul, and the damages of the plaintiff were estimated to be such as he sustained by reason of the publication to such agent. In view of the fact that such agent could not disclose the contents of the libel without becoming a criminal, and exposing himself to serious punishment, and that there is no evidence to justify the inference that the message ever reached the public except through the plaintiff, a verdict assessing his damages at $5,200 is simply farcical. It can only be accounted for on the ground that it was the result of passion or prejudice." This is the language used by this court in disposing of this case on the first appeal. 65 Minn. 18, 33 L. R. A. 202. The same facts as ground for damages appear on this appeal, but the verdict is very much less. The criminal liability for divulging the contents of any telegraph message or despatch intrusted to him for transmission or delivery is found in Gen. Stat. 1894, § 6782, and is there made a misdemeanor, and punishable as such. This law also applies to all employees. If McHale had merely received the message, without any further act, neither he nor the company would have been liable, although he well knew its contents. The publicity consisted in sending it to another agent or employee. If it could possibly be presumed that other employees might have heard its contents in its transmission, the same presumption exists of silence and secrecy on their part because of their liability to punishment under the criminal law if they should divulge its contents. But it is not proved, nor can it be legally inferred, that others knew of its contents. The only person to whom its contents were divulged was the agent at St. Paul then under a penal obligation not to divulge the despatch except to deliver it to the plaintiff. The transmission of the despatch, its receipt by the St. Paul agent, and the mental distress of the plaintiff constituted the basis of his right to damages. Of 43 L. R. A.

course, plaintiff himself making the message public would not be ground for damages, even if so made in order to maintain his right to prosecute this action. Considering all these facts, we are of the opinion that the damages awarded are excessive; that the jury must have been actuated by passion, prejudice, partiality, or swayed by some improper influence. In such case the amount should be reduced or a new trial granted. See Frederickson v. Johnson, 60 Minn. 337.

The order of the District Court denying the defendant's motion for a new trial must be reversed, and a new trial granted, unless the respondent file in the office of the clerk of the district court where the trial was had a remittitur of the sum of $1,000 within thirty days after the mandate of this court shall be filed in said district court. In case such remittitur is so filed, the plaintiff may recover judgment upon said verdict in his behalf in the sum of $1,000, and the order of the lower court stand affirmed for that amount.

C. J. McCONVILLE, Respt.,

City of ST. PAUL, Appt.

(.....Minn.....)

*In 1891 the city of St. Paul instituted proceedings for opening, widening, and extending East Third street therein, and made assessments on abutting property for such purpose. The improvement was partly made, and plaintiff, who owned several abutting lots, was assessed $1,233.50 thereon, and compelled by judicial proceedings to pay the same to said city. His lots were not benefited by said grading, and the contemplated work and improvements of said street were abandoned by the city in June, 1893. This action was commenced in January, 1898. Held, that the finding of the trial court that the work on said street, and the projected improvement thereon, were never completed, and were wholly abandoned by the city, was justified by the evidence, and that plaintiff is entitled to recover from said city the amount so paid by him, as upon a failure of consideration.

(County, J., dissents.)

(January 27, 1899.)

A PPEAL by defendant from an order of the District Court for Ramsey County denying a new trial after judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover back the amount of a street improvement assessment which had been paid by plaintiff. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. James E. Markham and Carl Taylor, for appellant:

The last work was done on East Third street in June, 1893, about four years and eight months prior to the commencement of this action.

This lapse of time is not sufficient to raise *Headnote by BUCK, J.

NOTE.—As to the right to recover back payment of an assessment for a local improvement or tax, see Phelps v. New York (N. Y.) 2 L. R. A. 626, and note; see also Budge v. Grand Forks (N. D.) 10 L. R. A. 165; and Kelley v. Rhodes (Wyo.) 39 L. R. A. 594.

a presumption that the improvement has been abandoned.

State, Minnesota Transfer R. Co., v. Ramsey County Dist. Ct. 68 Minn. 242.

The plaintiff's remedy in this case is by mandamus to the board of public works to compel them to proceed with the improvement.

Messrs. Ambrose Tighe and John W. Lane, for respondent:

The respondent's remedy was not by mandamus to the board of public works.

It would have been a sufficient answer to any such demand for the board to have said that it could not proceed because, under the decision in Hennessey v. St. Paul, 44 Minn. 306, it was barred from entering on the property to be graded.

The measure of damages adopted by the court below was the right one.

Strickland v. Stillwater, 63 Minn. 43; San Antonio v. Peters (Tex. Civ. App.) 40 S. W. 827.

Buck, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In January, 1891, the defendant instituted proceedings for opening, widening, and extending East Third street, in the city of St. Paul, from White Bear avenue to the eastern boundary line of said city, a distance of 1 mile, across section 35, township 29, range 22, in Ramsey county, in this state. This property was then owned by one David J. Hennessey, who opposed such proceedings. The board of public works of said city confirmed the proceedings, and Hennessey appealed to the district court. On the 16th day of June, 1891, the common council of the defendant duly established the grade of said East Third street from Earle street to White Bear avenue, a distance of  $1\frac{1}{2}$  miles, and on September 22, 1891, established the grade of said East Third street from White Bear avenue to the east city limits. This last-described grade of one mile so ordered was on the land of Hennessey; the city having given a bond of indemnity to him, in order that it might proceed with the condemnation of said land, and grade the same. Prior to the spring of 1891 East Third street had been graded as far east as Earle street. In March, 1892, the contract for the improvement was let at the price of \$47,000, and an assessment levied to cover it and the attendant expenses. About \$21,000 of this assessment was levied on the Hennessey farm, and \$28,000 was divided among the lots fronting on the other mile and a half of street to be graded. The plaintiff owned fourteen lots, and the aggregate assessment on these was \$1,294.43. One of the lots was assessed \$201; 12, \$80.50 each; and 1, \$76.50. On August 24, 1892, the plaintiff paid this aggregate amount into the city treasury, and the city ever since has had, and still has, his money. The work, as a consideration for which it was paid, was begun and continued at intervals until June, 1893. In 1893 the defendant city council passed the following resolution: "Resolved, that all proceedings heretofore had for the opening, widening, and extension of East Third street from White Bear avenue to the east city limits be, and the same are hereby, in all things annulled, and that all proceedings had for the condemnation of an easement for slopes along the line of East Third street from White Bear avenue to the east city limits be, and the same are, in all things annulled. Resolved further, that the corporation attorney be, and he is hereby, authorized to stipulate for judgment in the action pending in the United States circuit court, wherein David H. Hennessey is the complainant and the city of St. Paul and Thomas Keough and Daniel Donnelly are defendants, that judgment be entered that the condemnation proceedings heretofore had for the opening of Third street, across section 35, town 29 north, range 22 west, be declared null and void, and the condemnation proceedings had for the acquiring of an easement for slopes across said section on the property abutting on the line of East Third street be also declared null and void, and that the assessment made against said section for the grading of East Third street be set aside and declared null and void, and that the defendants in said suit have no right to enter or do any work upon said section under the contract heretofore entered into between the city of St. Paul and Thomas Keough and Daniel Donnelly; and the corporation attorney is also authorized to stipulate for proper judgments in the appeal cases of David J. Hennessey against the city of St. Paul from the confirmation of the assessments for the opening of East Third street, and also from the confirmation of the assessment for the acquiring of an easement for slopes along the line of East Third street." Upon the trial the defendant also admitted that prior to the 1st day of October, 1893, the contract for doing the work of grading on East Third street from Earle street to the east city limits was rescinded by the city. In its answer the defendant says (referring to Hennessey's objection to the assessment upon his land) that "thereafter such proceedings were had in this court that an order and judgment were entered in said cause so appealed to this court by said Hennessey, in all things annulling the assessment as made by said board of public works, in so far as it related to said real estate designated as section 35 aforesaid." The trial court found as a fact "that the defendant has, through its said contractors, done some work on said street east of said Clarence street, but has never completed said street east of said point so that it is capable of being traversed either by teams or foot passengers; that in June, 1893, the defendant ceased entirely work on said street, wholly abandoned said projected improvement, and has never completed the same east of said Clarence street; that the plaintiff's said property is situated between Bock and Kennard streets, which are to the east of Clarence street, and that the nearest of plaintiff's said lots to Clarence street is about  $\frac{1}{2}$  mile east of said Clarence street; that between said Clarence street and the first of plaintiff's said lots next east thereof are two deep holes, and that access to plaintiff's property cannot be had over said Third street as the same has been left by the defendant; that, had said improvement been completed as projected, access to plaintiff's said property from the center of St. Paul and to the east city limits would have been secured it therefrom, and said property would have been benefited thereby to the amount of the assessment imposed as aforesaid, to wit, in the sum of twelve hundred and thirty-three dollars and fifty cents (\$1,233.50); that the grading of said street to the extent actually done is not, and at no time has been, of any actual benefit whatsoever to the plaintiff's said property; that the allegations of the pleadings, save as hereinbefore found, are not sustained by the evidence." The court found as conclusion of law that plaintiff was entitled to recover from the defendant the sum of \$1,294.43, and legal interest from August 24, 1893. From an order denying a motion for a new trial, the defendant appeals.

The defendant contends that the evidence does not sustain the finding of the trial court that the improvement of East Third street was abandoned by it. We are of the opinion that this contention is not well founded. There is no claim made in defendant's answer, and none was made on the trial, or on the argument in this court, that defendant wishes, desires, or ever intends to grade, widen, or improve said Earle street, or the proposed street over the Hennessey land. In fact, no substantial proceedings were ever instituted by the defendant with a view to further carrying on the original proceedings instituted in January, 1891. It is true, the city council, after plaintiff had remonstrated with it on account of its delay in the matter, directed the board of public works to investigate the feasibility of completing the grading of East Third street, not from Clarence street to the east city limits, as contemplated by the original petition, but to White Bear avenue, which is a mile west of the east city limits, and even this proceeding was substantially abandoned; and the plaintiff, fearing that an action for his claim for the money so paid to the defendant would be barred by the statute of limitations, brought this action January 31, 1898. The evidence is quite conclusive that the plaintiff's lots have not been benefited by the grading, or any acts done under the proceedings instituted by the city for such purpose. The city, by judicial proceedings, compelled him to pay to it the full amount of the assessment; and with commendable forbearance, he waited nearly six years for the city to complete its work after obtaining his money in August, 1892, which it keeps without the slightest evidence of its intent to complete its work of grading and improving the street named. If it intends to complete this work, it should do so or say so. We do not approve of a great and wealthy city remaining passive, inactive, and its officers silent, upon such matters of public concern, for so long a period, to the great injury of one of its citizens, especially without signifying its intent to proceed with the projected improvement. He had a right to elect to have them act promptly, and determine whether they would abandon or not. Mills, Em. Dom. § 312, 43 L. R. A.

says that there should be no unreasonable delay in determining whether or not the proceedings shall be abandoned, and that the public must be held to a speedy and prompt termination of the proceedings. It is to be noted that this is not a case of attempting to condemn and appropriate land for city purposes where the city takes and keeps possession of the property, and has not paid the damages, and where possession would be evidence that it had not abandoned the undertaking. It is evident that the undertaking was an unwise one, and the expense entirely beyond the resulting benefits to all the property involved; and the delay of six years is prima facie evidence that the improvements were unnecessary, and doubtless justified the city in abandoning the work. Lewis, in his work on Eminent Domain (§ 687), says: "In most of the cases which have arisen, the intention to abandon has been manifested by affirmative acts. But this intention may be manifested in other ways. Where a statute required the final order establishing a highway to be filed with the town clerk within ten days from its date, a failure to do so was held to constitute an abandonment of the proceedings. Where a motion to accept an award was made and lost in a county board, it was held to amount to a vote to abandon. The failure to pay the damages within a reasonable time after their final determination will itself constitute an abandonment of any right to take the property under the proceedings had. What will constitute a reasonable time must, of course, depend upon circumstances. Four years has been held to be an unreasonable delay, constituting an abandonment; and in the same case it is said that after one year, no offer to pay having been made, the assessment would become functus officio."

We are of the opinion that the facts in the case fully justify and sustain the findings of the trial court that the defendant city had abandoned the grading of East Third street as contemplated in the proceedings under which the assessment was made and levied, and that, as the plaintiff has received no benefit or consideration for the money paid by him to the city by coercion of law, he can maintain this action to recover it back. Valentine v. St. Paul, 34 Minn. 446. This being so, it is not necessary for us to consider the question as to whether the plaintiff has a remedy by mandamus to compel the board of public works to proceed with the improvement. If he had such a remedy, it was not an exclusive one.

The appellant claims that the rule laid down by this court in the case of Strickland v. Stillwater, 63 Minn. 43, is not applicable to the case at bar, or that, if it is, it should not be adhered to. In that case the city adopted a general plan for grading parts of the several streets, which included that part of a street in front of Strickland's lots, and extending beyond the same in each direction. The assessment included her property, and all other property benefited by such grading, although not abutting on the improvement. Part of the contemplated grading was done, but none in front of her property, and the street was graded nearly up to her property. The city abandoned doing any further work, although she had paid the full amount of her assessment for making the entire improvement; and she sued the city for the sum so assessed and paid, and recovered judgment for the full amount, upon the ground that her property had been assessed upon the basis of frontage, and, no grading having been done on the street in front of her abutting property, she was entitled to recover the whole sum paid by her as benefits. This court held that this was error, but that as her property was so assessed, and it having been done in pursuance of a general plan which included an assessment upon all property benefited by such improvement within the limits of such plan, she might have been benefited by such grading done in part, although none of it was done directly in front of her property, and, if so, her property was liable for the amount of such benefit, whatever it might be, and that whatever sum she was entitled to receive, if any, would be the difference between the actual benefits added to her property by the grading as an entirety, so far as done, and the sum which she was compelled to pay to said city of Stillwater. We think this rule a sound and equitable one, protecting the rights of the citizen, and imposing a duty upon the municipality to perform its obligations. The principle upon which that case rested is applicable to the one at bar; that case differing from this only in the fact that in the Strickland Case the plaintiff received some benefit from the partial performance of the improvement, and in this the plaintiff received none. The counsel for the appellant contends that, if the rule in the Strickland Case is to be adopted as the law of this state, some peculiar situations will result. Any such conditions can be easily avoided by municipal corporations fully, completely, and honestly performing their duties and obligations, and not sheltering their defaults behind the plea of nonaccountability. The doctrine in the Strickland Case is adhered to. Our conclusion is that the plaintiff is entitled to recover in this action from the defendant city the amount so paid it by him, with interest, as upon a failure of consideration.

Order affirmed.

Canty, J., dissenting:

I cannot concur. The majority assume that they are following Strickland v. Stillwater, 63 Minn. 43, but the facts in that case were wholly different. There it was not claimed that any money was squandered or spent foolishly. Every dollar expended returned a full dollar's benefit to the property holders, but the city in fact abandoned a part of the improvement district and a part of the improvement. That action was brought on the theory that the plaintiff's property was wholly without the limits of any assessment district which the city authorities were warranted in carving out for the purpose of assessing thereon the cost of the improvements as actually made. We held that the property was not outside such an assessment district, but that as the assessment district was in fact changed by the abandonment of the improvements in a part of it, and the improvements also changed, the court or the jury must in this action make a new assessment to meet these new conditions, and determine the amount of benefit to plaintiff's property and award him the balance assessed against the property. Here the plaintiff is not outside of the assessment district, or on the edge of it, where his assessment should be lighter, but he is in the very midst of it; and it is not claimed that the change made in the district by the abandonment of the improvement of the street through the Hennessey tract before any improvement was made in that part of the street could in any event make the assessment against plaintiff's property any the less. But this action is brought upon the theory that when a special tax is levied on property specially benefited by an improvement, to defray the cost of making that improvement, and the money is spent in the improvement, but does not complete the same, and it turns out, in the light of subsequent events and subsequent experiences, that the improvement was an injudicious undertaking, the taxpayer can recover back from the city the money thus injudiciously spent in the abortive enterprise. On the same principle, if a general tax of, say five mills on the dollar, was levied to build a court-house, and the money was all spent in building a court-house on such a foolish plan that before it was completed it fell down and became a total wreck, any taxpayer who paid his part of the tax could immediately recover it back from the county. There is no difference in this respect between a special tax on property specially benefited and a general tax on all the property in the city or county. Each is levied by the same sovereign power. That power acts in its sovereign capacity, not in its private or contractual capacity, in levying such a tax, and therefore is not liable for the failure of the tax to bring any benefit to him who pays it. True, the special tax is levied on the supposition that the party paying it is benefited to an amount equal to the amount of the tax. But the question of whether he is or will be thus benefited is tried at the time the assessment is made, and cannot be subsequently reviewed in an action brought to recover back the tax after it is paid, merely because the improvement was injudiciously undertaken. Of course, where the assessment district and the improvements are changed after the tax is levied and collected, so that one taxpayer has paid more than his share, he may recover the excess. Such was the Strickland Case. But here he is allowed to recover back taxes collected and squandered in the construction of abortive improvements. A part of the tax so collected has not been expended, and I concede that plaintiff may recover back such part; but the tax was not collected with an implied warranty that it would bring to the taxpayer the benefit contemplated, and for the portion of it which has been spent he has, in my opinion, no claim against the city.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

NEW LINCOLN HOTEL COMPANY

v.

Stewart P. SHEARS et al., Appts.

(.....Neb.....)

*A lease executed October 16, 1890, contained a provision that it should operate as a lien on all the personal property of the lessees at any time in or upon the demised premises, to secure payment of rent. The building leased was in process of erection for use as an hotel, and was not completed until January, 1891. The furniture was ordered for the hotel after the lease had been made, and, because of delays in finishing the building, was not placed in the hotel until December, 1890, and January, 1891. In January, 1895, there was rent unpaid, and the lessees' successors mortgaged the furniture to secure debts by them owing to other parties, who were aware of the above-noted provision in the lease. Held, that the mortgagees were entitled to the first lien upon the furniture mortgaged.

(January 19, 1899.)

APPPEAL by a portion of the defendants from a judgment of the District Court for Lancaster County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to foreclose a lien upon the furnishings of the hotel Lincoln. Reversed. The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Mr. J. H. Broady, for appellant John L. Carson:

If the lease gives the right to distrain by stipulation it is not a chattel mortgage. If it does not, still it is not good as a chattel mortgage, because the property was not in existence nor acquired until long afterwards.

Steele v. Ashenfelter, 40 Neb. 770; Deeley v. Dwight, 132 N. Y. 59, 18 L. R. A. 298; Cole v. Kerr, 19 Neb. 553; Single v. Phelps, 20 Wis. 398; Winslow v. Merchants Ins. Co. 4 Met. 306, 38 Am. Dec. 368.

It was void as to appellees, because no possession of the chattels was given to mortgagee, and it was not recorded.

Farmers & M. Bank v. Anthony, 39 Neb. 343.

Appellees are estopped from setting it up against appellants, who gave credit on the faith of apparent unencumbered ownership of the property.

Standard Paper Co. v. Guenther, 67 Wis. 101; Patrick v. Paulson, 34 Neb. 416; Sykes v. Hannavault, 5 N. D. 335.

Equity courts deal in equitable titles, because law courts are inadequate.

Putnam v. Reynolds, 44 Mich. 113; Crippen v. Jacobson, 56 Mich. 386; Noyes v. Brace, 8 S. D. 190; Stephens v. Perrine, 143 N. Y. 476; Willamette Casket Co. v. Cross Undertaking Co. 12 Wash. 190.

Messrs. Ames & Pettis, for appellant First National Bank:

By omitting the power of sale by the use of the word "distrain," and by withholding the instrument from the chattel-mortgage record, the parties evidently attempted to revive by contract the obsolete process of "distrain," which has never been in use in this state, and which unless sanctioned is against public policy.

*Headnote by RYAN, C.

NOTE.—As to the efficacy of a mortgage on chattels to be acquired as independent articles, and not as the increase or fruits of existing property, see note to Deeley v. Dwight (N. Y.) 18 L. R. A. 298.
43 L. R. A.

Cornell v. Lamb, 2 Cow. 652; Bohm v. Dunphy, 1 Mont. 333; Dalglish v. Grandy, 1 N. C. (Taylor & C.) 161; Crocker v. Mann, 3 Mo. 472, 26 Am. Dec. 684; Wait, Appellant, 7 Pick. 100, 19 Am. Dec. 262; Lamphere v. Lowe, 3 Neb. 131.

If the lease could be treated as a mortgage it was never recorded in the county of the residence of the mortgagors.

Jones, Chattel Mortgages, ¶¶ 256, 257, 258.

The right of distrain being of feudal origin is dependent upon the relation of landlord and tenant, and it is not found that that relation ever existed between the new hotel company and Stewart and Mary Shears.

Helser v. Pott, 3 Pa. St. 179.

Even where distrain for rent is preserved by statute there is no lien until actual seizure; the process runs only against the goods of the lessee, and is subject to a mortgage on them before seizure.

Woodside v. Adams, 40 N. J. L. 417.

A chattel mortgage does not convey the legal title, but merely creates a lien for the security of the mortgage debt.

Musser v. King, 40 Neb. 892; Bedford v. Van Cott, 42 Neb. 229; Murray v. Loushman, 47 Neb. 256.

A creditor attacking an unrecorded mortgage must prove that he is such in good faith.

Thompson v. Van Vechten, 27 N. Y. 568; DeCoursey v. Collins, 21 N. J. Eq. 357; Willamette Casket Co. v. Cross Undertaking Co. 12 Wash. 190; W. W. Kimball Co. v. Kirby, 4 S. D. 152.

Messrs. Field & Brown also for appellants.

Messrs. Pound & Burr, for appellee:

The lien was valid for the full rent for the whole term, and not simply for any portion that might become delinquent.

Wright v. Bircher, 72 Mo. 179, 37 Am. Rep. 433; Ludlum v. Rothschild, 41 Minn. 218.

The right to sell was included in the right to distrain.

2 Taylor, Land. & T. § 609.

The provisions of the lease created a lien upon all the personal property of the lessees that was placed in or upon the premises.

3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1237; Flagg v. Mann, 2 Sumn. 486; Wagner v. Steffin, 38 Neb. 392; Merrill v. Ressler, 37 Minn. 82; Wisner v. Ocumpaugh, 71 N. Y. 113; Kuschell v. Campau, 49 Mich. 34; Fejavary v. Broesch, 52 Iowa, 88; Wright v. Bircher, 72 Mo. 179, 37 Am. Rep. 433; Butt v. Ellett, 19 Wall. 544, 22 L. ed. 183; Beall v. White, 94 U. S. 382, 24 L. ed. 173; Everman v. Robb, 52 Miss. 653, 24 Am. Rep. 682; Harris v. Jones, 83 N. C. 317.

A chattel mortgage may be perfectly valid and may be foreclosed in equity without containing a power of sale. The power of sale is merely a cumulative remedy.

Jones, Chatt. Mortg. §§ 778, 779; Sparks v. Wilson, 22 Neb. 112.

This is a mortgage on all personal property of known and designated persons located in a certain place particularly described. In these respects at least its validity should not be questioned.

Jones, Chatt. Mortg. §§ 54, 65, 86, 94-97; Wiley v. Shars, 21 Neb. 712; Wagner v. Steffin, 38 Neb. 392; Love v. Putnam, 41 Neb. 86; Merrill v. Ressler, 37 Minn. 82; Wheeler v. Becker, 68 Iowa, 723; Louden v. Vinton, 108 Mich. 313; Veazie v. Somerby, 5 Allen, 280; Ackerman v. Hunsicker, 85 N. Y. 43, 39 Am. Rep. 621; Berry v. O'Connor, 33 Minn. 29.

A partnership having a local abiding place may be said to reside there for the purpose of determining the proper place to file a chattel mortgage.

Hubbardston Lumber Co. v. Covert, 35 Mich. 254.

All the appellants took their chattel mortgages with actual knowledge of the claim to a lien under the lease.

Notice of the claim was equivalent to knowledge of the lien.

Gillespie v. Cooper, 36 Neb. 775; Reed v. Gannon, 50 N. Y. 345; Preston v. Williams, 81 Ill. 176; George v. Kent, 7 Allen, 18; Ransom v. Schmela, 13 Neb. 77; Fitzgerald v. Andrews, 15 Neb. 52; Earle v. Burch, 21 Neb. 702; Farmers & M. Bank v. Anthony, 39 Neb. 347; Spaulding v. Johnson, 48 Neb. 830; Forrester v. Kearney Nat. Bank, 49 Neb. 655; Karst v. Gane, 136 N. Y. 316.

Only those creditors who have availed themselves of legal process can question the validity of unrecorded mortgages.

Railsback v. Patton, 34 Neb. 490; Wagner v. Steffin, 38 Neb. 392; Sherwin v. Gaghagen, 39 Neb. 238; Sanford v. Munford, 31 Neb. 792; Fuller v. Brownell, 48 Neb. 145; Sayre v. Hewes, 32 N. J. Eq. 652; Houk v. Condon, 40 Ohio St. 569; Gill v. Pinney, 12 Ohio St. 38; Grace v. Wade, 45 Tex. 522; Overstreet v. Manning, 67 Tex. 657; Ludlum v. Rothschild, 41 Minn. 218; Cameron v. Marvin, 26 Kan. 612; People's Sav. Bank v. Bates, 120 U. S. 556, 30 L. ed. 754; Jones, Chatt. Mortg. §§ 245, 318.

An unrecorded chattel mortgage of which a subsequent mortgagee had notice before accepting his mortgage is valid as against the latter mortgage, although it was promptly recorded.

Neerman v. Caldwell, 50 Kan. 61; Jones, Chatt. Mortg. § 317.

To be a mortgagee in good faith under the statute one must be without notice of the prior encumbrance and the object of requiring a chattel mortgage to be filed or recorded is to give notice of its contents.

Ransom v. Schmela, 13 Neb. 73; Gillespie v. Brown, 16 Neb. 457; Sanford v. Munford, 31 Neb. 792.

Whenever parties by their contract intend to create a positive lien or charge either upon real or upon personal property, whether then owned by the assignor or contractor, or not, or if personal property whether it is in esse or not, it attaches in equity as a lien or charge on the particular property as soon as the assignor or contractor acquires a title thereto against the latter and all persons asserting a claim thereto under him, either voluntarily or with notice or in bankruptcy.

Mitchell v. Winslow, 2 Story, 630; Jones, Chatt. Mortg. § 173; Wisner v. Ocumpaugh, 71 N. Y. 113; McCaffrey v. Woodin, 65 N. Y. 459, 22 Am. Rep. 644; Wright v. Bircher, 72 Mo. 179, 37 Am. Rep. 433, 5 Mo. App. 322; Fejavary v. Broesch, 52 Iowa, 88, 35 Am. Rep. 261; Whiting v. Eichelberger, 16 Iowa, 422; McLean v. Klein, 3 Dill. 113; Webster v. Nichols, 104 Ill. 160; Everman v. Robb, 52 Miss. 653, 24 Am. Rep. 682; Ludlum v. Rothschild, 41 Minn. 218; American Cigar Co. v. Foster, 36 Mich. 368; Kuschell v. Campau, 49 Mich. 34; Curtis v. Wilcox, 49 Mich. 425; Buswell v. Marshall, 51 Vt. 87; Harris v. Jones, 83 N. C. 317; Driver v. Jenkins, 30 Ark. 120; Gafford v. Stearns, 51 Ala. 434; Beall v. White, 94 U. S. 382, 24 L. ed. 173; Butt v. Ellett, 19 Wall. 544, 22 L. ed. 183.

A subsequent mortgagee with notice cannot question the validity of a prior unrecorded mortgage.

People's Sav. Bank v. Bates, 120 U. S. 556, 30 L. ed. 754; Tolbert v. Horton, 31 Minn. 518; Neerman v. Caldwell, 50 Kan. 61.

Messrs. Wharton & Baird also for appellee.

RYAN, C., filed the following opinion:

This action, for the foreclosure of an alleged lien by virtue of a provision in the lease hereinafter described, was successfully prosecuted in the district court of Lancaster county. The First National Bank of Lincoln and the personal representatives of John L. Carson have appealed from the decree, whereby the mortgage to the bank and Carson was found and decreed junior and subject to the lien of the New Lincoln Hotel Company, which has succeeded, by assignment, to the rights of the Lincoln Hotel Company, the original lessor. From the fact that briefs have been filed only on behalf of the aforesaid bank and the personal representatives of Carson as appellants, and of the New Lincoln Hotel Company and Jacob E. Markel as appellees, we assume that the controversy is between those parties alone, and hence shall content ourselves with quoting and describing such findings of the district court as affect the interests of these parties in this appeal. These findings were as follows: "(1) On the 16th day of October, 1890, the Lincoln Hotel Company, a corporation, by lease of that date, demised certain premises, to wit, the Hotel Lincoln, in the city of Lincoln, Nebraska, to Samuel Shears and Jacob E. Markel, for a term of ten years from the 1st day of December, 1890, to the 1st day of December, 1900. (2) The lease contained the following provisions, to wit: "That upon the nonpayment of the whole or any part of the said rental at the time when the same as above is promised to be paid, or upon violation or nonfulfilment of any of the covenants of this lease, the said party of the first part may, at its election, either distrain for the rent due and damages sustained, and shall have a lien upon all the personal property of the party of the second part at any time, in or upon the said premises, for the payment of rent, and for the security of each and every covenant herein contained, and the party of the first may also declare this lease at an end, and recover possession, as if the same were held by forcible detainer. The said party of the second part hereby waives any notice of such election or any demand of the possession of the said premises.' (3) On the 16th day of October, 1890, the building was in process of erection, and was not ready for occupancy as an hotel until after January 1, 1891. (4) By an oral agreement between the parties to said lease, rent did not commence until January 15, 1891, and none of the property of the lessees involved in this suit was placed in said building until after December 1, 1890. (5) In the latter part of October, 1890, Shears and Markel, the lessees, placed with Dewey and Stone, of Omaha, an order for furniture, amounting to over $11,000 in value, for the Lincoln Hotel, and the same was placed therein by them, mainly, in the month of December, 1890. Said lessees, on the 28th of October, 1890, placed with the Union Porcelain Works, in Greenport, Long Island, an order for chinaware for said hotel, stamped 'The Lincoln,' which chinaware was delivered to said lessees at Brooklyn, New York, December 3, 1890, and thereafter placed by them in said hotel. On November 6, 1890, said lessees placed an order with Reed and Barton, of New York, and Taunton, Massachusetts, for silverware for the Hotel Lincoln; which, in value nearly $1,600, was delivered to said lessees at Taunton, Massachusetts, and shipped from there to said lessees at Lincoln, December 20, 1890, and January 10, 13, 14, 1891, and was placed in said hotel on arrival at Lincoln. On November 8, 1890, said lessees placed with the John Van Range Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, an order, in value over $1,500, for ranges, boilers, and culinary utensils for the Hotel Lincoln, shipped November 26, 1890, from Cincinnati, and on arrival placed in said hotel, where all said personal property has since remained and now is." "(9) The Lincoln Hotel Company, a corporation, said lessor, on or about the . . . day of April, 1893, sold its said hotel property to the plaintiff in this suit, and assigned its said lease to the plaintiff. (10) A copy of said lease and assignment was by the plaintiff filed in the office of the county clerk of Lancaster county, on the 24th day of January, 1895. (11) Rent to the amount of $10,500, to wit, from the 1st day of December, 1893, to the 1st day of March, 1895, is due to plaintiff from defendants." Mary P. Shears and Stewart Shears had succeeded to the rights and liabilities of Samuel Shears and Jacob E. Markel before February 2, 1895, and on that day executed a chattel mortgage on all the personal property of the Lincoln Hotel to secure a note owing by them to John L. Carson, and another note owing by them to the First National Bank of Lincoln. The amounts of these notes are indicated in the conclusions of law hereinafter set forth. This 43 L. R. A.

mortgage was filed for record on the day of its execution. It was found by the court that the bank and Carson had actual notice of the provision by which the hotel sought to create a lien for rent before said lease was recorded.

Upon the facts found, there were the following conclusions of law: "First. The plaintiff is entitled to a valid and subsisting and first lien upon all the personal property of Shears and Markel, in the possession of Shears and Shears in the Hotel Lincoln, on the 1st day of March, 1895, for the sum of $10,500, with interest at 7 per cent from said 1st day of March, 1895. Second. That the defendants the First National Bank and John L. Carson have a valid and subsisting and second lien upon said personal property contained in said hotel; the said bank for the sum of $4,489.80, with interest at 10 per cent from February 14, 1896, and the said Carson for the sum of $3,126.81, with 10 per cent from the 15th day of February, 1896. Third. That the defendants Hargreaves Bros. have a valid, subsisting, and third lien upon said property for the sum of $1,053.19, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent per annum from August 23, 1895. Fourth. That said liens are due, unpaid, and plaintiff and said defendants are entitled to have said liens foreclosed, and said property sold according to law."

In accordance with the above findings and conclusions, the lien of the hotel company was declared paramount to that of the bank and the representatives of Carson, and the question which we feel called upon to determine is whether or not this adjustment of priorities was correct. The appellees insist that the provision of the lease quoted in the second finding of fact operated as though a lease had been made October 16, 1890, contemporaneously with which there had been executed a chattel mortgage, to secure payment of the rent, upon all the personal property of the lessee at any time in or upon the demised premises, and we shall accept this assumption as being correct. While this lease was of date October 16, 1890, it is evident, from the findings hereinbefore quoted, that not until afterwards was any of the personal property ordered or selected for use in the hotel. All of the property was sent upon orders placed in other cities than Lincoln, and the delivery in Lincoln was delayed by reason of the unfinished condition of the hotel building until December of 1890 and January of 1891.

The appellees insist that there is no party to the record who can question the validity of the provision for the reservation of a lien in the lease, because the bank and Carson were mortgagees with notice, and were not, therefore, mortgagees in good faith. We cannot see that the validity of the provision of the lease is affected by this consideration. Whether or not a chattel mortgage or its equivalent can be made so as to affect future-acquired property is a question entirely dependent upon general principles, independent of statute.

The case most directly in point for the appellees is Wright v. Bircher, 72 Mo. 179, 37 Am. Rep. 433. The scope of that opinion is accurately reflected in that portion of the syllabus which is as follows: "The proprietors of a hotel took a lease for a term of years upon an unfinished building to be used, when completed, as part of their hotel. The rent was payable monthly. The lease was to commence, or take effect on the first of the month after the completion of the building. It contained a stipulation that all fixtures, furniture, and other improvements should be bound for the rent. When the lease was signed the house was unfurnished, but before it took effect certain furniture and fixtures had been placed in the house. Held, that the stipulation created a lien, valid, at least, in equity; that this lien was for the full amount of the rent reserved, and not simply for any portion that might from time to time become delinquent; and that it had priority of a mortgage given after the lease took effect but before any rent became delinquent, to a person having knowledge of the existence of the stipulation." While we cannot approve the conclusion reached, there is in the opinion such a fair statement of the attitude of the courts with reference to the validity of a lien in the case stated, that we shall borrow the language of Henry, J.; premising, however, that we have examined the numerous cases cited by counsel in this case, and not noted in the opinion from which we quote, with the result that they serve but to increase the number of citations which might have been made in support of one or the other of two lines of cases. The language which we borrow is as follows: "One of the principal questions discussed by counsel relates to the validity of a sale or mortgage of goods and chattels not in esse at the date of the mortgage or sale. One might write a volume, if inclined, to review all of the adjudged cases on the subject. We are not so inclined, and deem it necessary only to state what we regard as the conclusion reached by the best-considered cases. It has been frequently and ably discussed, both in English and American courts, and highly respectable authorities might be cited in support of either of the opposite views urged by the respective counsel here. The earlier English and American authorities, we think, sanction the doctrine contended for by the counsel of Nannie M. Wright [the mortgagee]. Jones v. Richardson, 10 Met. 488; Moody v. Wright, 13 Met. 17, 46 Am. Dec. 706; Gardner v. McEwen, 19 N. Y. 125; Head v. Goodwin, 37 Me. 187; Barnard v. Eaton, 2 Cush. 294; Winslow v. Merchants Ins. Co. 4 Met. 306, 38 Am. Dec. 368; Codman v. Freeman, 3 Cush. 306; Otis v. Sill, 8 Barb. 108; Lunn v. Thornton, 1 C. B. 379. The doctrine maintained in most of the cases was clearly stated in Otis v. Sill, and was substantially 'that a grant of goods not in existence, or which do not belong to the grantor, at the time of the execution of the deed, is void, unless the grantor ratify the grant by some act done by him with that view, after he has acquired the goods; that an assignment of property to be acquired in future, if valid in equity, is only valid as a contract to assign when the property shall be acquired, and is not an assignment of the present interest in the property, and, if enforced in equity, can only be enforced as a right under the contract, and not as a trust attached to the property as against the creditors of the assignor or mortgagor; that the mortgage of such subsequently acquired property can only be regarded as a mere contract to give further mortgage on such property, binding on the mortgagor personally, and the only remedy of the mortgagee on such contract is as a general creditor.'"

The broadest contrary doctrine was announced by Mr. Justice Story in Mitchell v. Winslow, 2 Story, 630, in the following language: "It seems to me a clear result of all the authorities that wherever the parties, by their contract, intended to create a positive lien or charge, either upon real or upon personal property, . . . whether it is then in esse or not, it attaches in equity as a lien or charge upon the particular property, as soon as the assignor or contractor acquires a title thereto, against the latter and all persons asserting a claim thereto under him, either voluntarily, or with notice, or in bankruptcy." This has been followed by this court in the case of Page v. Gardner, 20 Mo. 508; in New York, in the case of Seymour v. Canandaigua & N. F. R. Co. 25 Barb. 305, in which Otis v. Sill, 8 Barb. 108, was cited and distinctly disapproved; also in Sillers v. Lester, 48 Miss. 526; Benjamin v. Elmira, J. & C. R. Co. 49 Barb. 441; Brett v. Carter, 3 Cent. L. J. 286, 2 Low. Dec. 458; Morrill v. Noyes, 56 Me. 458, 96 Am. Dec. 486; and in England in Langton v. Horton, 1 Hare, 549; Holroyd v. Marshall, 9 Jur. N. S. 213; Whitworth v. Gaugain, 3 Hare, 416; Douglas v. Russell, 1 Myl. & K. 488. The opinion of the court in Morrill v. Noyes, delivered by Davis, J., is an able review of the authorities, and states the doctrine more clearly and precisely than any other case to which our attention has been called. It does not recognize the validity of mortgages of mere contingencies, or sales or mortgages of property which "the mortgagors might purchase if they should purchase any," but the sale or mortgage must relate to property then in contemplation of the parties to be purchased or acquired by the vendor or mortgagor. In line with the adjudicated cases in the class led by Mitchell v. Winslow, the supreme court of Missouri held the provisions of the lease operated to create a lien for the entire rent, and not for instalments as they fell due monthly, and gave that lien a precedence over the chattel mortgage made on the personal property after it had been placed in the hotel building.

By the above quotation having pointed out the conflict which exists, it remains now to indicate the group in which this court, by its opinions, has placed itself. In Lanphere v. Lowe, 3 Neb. 131, the judgment under consideration had been rendered by the district court over which Chief Justice Lake was presiding. The opinion of this court was therefore expressed by but two judges, for whom Gantt, J., said: "Can a valid charge be made upon a thing not in existence? I think it cannot. It is a very ancient rule of law that a man cannot grant or charge that which he has not; and in Jones v. Richardson, 10 Met. 488, it is said that this 'is a maxim of law too plain to need illustration, and which is fully supported by all the authorities.' 4 Bacon, Abr. p. 514, Grants, D. 2; Codman v. Freeman, 3 Cush. 309; 2 Kent, Com. p. 703; Heau v. Goodwin, 37 Me. 187; Robinson v. Macdonnell, 5 Maule & S. 228; Chynoweth v. Tenney, 10 Wis. 400. This doctrine is applied to mortgages of goods which may be subsequently acquired by the mortgagee; it is equally applied to sales of personal property and rights of property. Chesley v. Josselyn, 7 Gray, 490; Rice v. Stone, 1 Allen, 569."

In Cole v. Kerr, 19 Neb. 553, it was held that a mortgage executed, delivered, and properly recorded, March 30, 1882, purporting to convey "40 acres of wheat, 30 acres of oats now growing, and 75 acres of corn to be planted, and 50 acres of broom-corn to be planted, tended, and delivered in Juniata," conveyed no title or lien upon the corn as against the levy of an execution of date November 25, 1882. The opinion of the court was delivered by Cobb, J., who said: "There is, to say the least of it, a great confusion of the authorities on the point being considered, but, after a careful examination of those cited on either side in this case, I have reached the conclusion that, as a question of law, the lien of a chattel mortgage of a crop of corn, not planted at the time of its execution and delivery, will not attach to the corn when it comes into existence until it is seized by the mortgagee; or until, in the language of a member of the court in the case of Holroyd v. Marshall, 10 H. L. Cas. 191, 'a new intervening act.' Until then it remains a mere license, and until acted upon it conveys neither a lien nor a right of property which the mortgagee can assert against a purchaser or execution creditor of the mortgagor. Presumptuous as it may seem to say so, I cannot agree to the proposition stated by Lord Hobart in the case cited by counsel for defendant in error, that the owner of the land, though he had not the future crop 'actually in view nor certain, yet he had it potentially.' While it is true, as he adds, that 'the land is the mother and root of all fruits,' the word 'potentially,' as defined by Craig, means 'in possibility, and not in act; not positively; in efficacy, not in actuality.' With this definition in view, it cannot be said that the mere ownership or possession of the soil carries with it the production of crops, potentially. Soil alone does not produce crops of corn in this degenerate age, if it ever did. It now requires, in addition to soil, seed and labor, both of man and beast; so that the proposition that a sale or mortgage of a crop of corn not yet planted carries with it a property in, or lien upon, such crop, to attach and come into efficacy without 'a new intervening act' upon the crops coming into existence, carries with it the proposition that a man may mortgage his labor to be performed,—something which I never heard contended for in this country, but which is a right which, un-43 L. R. A.

der the name of peonage, is recognized in our sister republic to the south of us. The true distinction, I think, is that indicated in 1 Shep. Touch. 241, in the enumeration of things which pass by grant, to wit: 'Leases for years, be they present or future, wardships of tenants in capita, or by knight's service, trees, oxen, horses, plate, household stuff, and the like. Also trees, grass, and corn growing and standing upon the ground, fruit upon the trees, wool upon the sheep's back, are grantable.' Doubtless the fruit on the trees, the grass in the meadow, and wool on the sheep's back may be granted without regard to the state of their growth or perfection; because, in the due course of time, nature, without the necessary assistance of new forces, will in the one case develop fruit, etc. But, as we have already seen, the mere soil, except with the assistance of other elements and forces, in the latitude of Nebraska, will not develop crops of corn."

In Johnson v. Walker, 23 Neb. 736, the case of Cole v. Kerr, 19 Neb. 553, was cited with approval as to the impossibility of mortgaging a crop of corn before it has been planted. In Wagner v. Steffin, 38 Neb. 392, there was under consideration the validity of a mortgage of date May 15, 1888, by the terms of which the mortgagee was to have a lien on all crops grown on certain premises. This mortgage was held valid, but there was no reference in the opinion to the actual or prospective condition of the corn when mortgaged, and in this respect we are not assisted by its date. The opinion was written by Post, J., and, as he makes no mention of the crop not being planted, it could hardly have been mortgaged before it was in esse; for we find that he, in Steele v. Ashenfelter, 40 Neb. 770, delivered the opinion of this court in which the doctrine of Cole v. Kerr, 19 Neb. 553, was recognized and enforced as to personal property attempted to be mortgaged before possession of it had been acquired. Many of the cases attempted to make a distinction between legal and equitable rights under a mortgage of the nature of that just referred to, but this distinction was not recognized in Steele v. Ashenfelter, 40 Neb. 770, which was an action by a receiver for the possession of property taken under an execution, and it was expressly held that the receiver had no rights which could be enforced by a court of equity.

From this review of cases, it is clear that in this action the clause in the lease whereby there was attempted to be provided a lien to become operative against personal property afterwards to be brought upon the premises, but which was not yet capable of description, because not segregated from stocks of goods of which it was a part, was void, as against the rights of appellants, hereinbefore designated.

As the rights of parties in this court cannot be determined upon the record as it stands, there will be no decree ordered or entered at this time, but the judgment of the District Court will be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

George W. BRACKENRIDGE, Plff. in Err.,
v.

CLARIDGE & PAYNE.

(91 Tex. 527.)

1. A person employing brokers to sell land is not liable to them for commissions, where he was acting for an undisclosed principal and his agency was disclosed after the brokers had brought persons to accept an option merely, but before a binding agreement was made.
2. The agent of an undisclosed principal cannot be held responsible for the subsequent dealings with his principal after his agency is disclosed.
3. A broker claiming commissions on a sale to a person who declines to take the property because of defective title has the burden of proving the actual existence of the defect.

4. The opinion of an attorney that the title of land is defective is not evidence, as that is a question of law for the court.
5. A Confederate certificate properly located, surveyed, and returned with field notes, to the land office in Texas, confers a good title upon the holder.

(March 3, 1898.)

ERROR to the Court of Civil Appeals for the Fourth Supreme Judicial District to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the District Court for Bexar County in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover commissions for the sale of real estate. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

NOTE.—Real-estate broker's commissions as affected by the negligence, fraud, or default of the principal, and a defective title.

I. Default of principal in entering into or carrying out contract with purchaser.

- a. In general.
- b. Refusal to enter into written contract or to make the sale.
- c. Refusing to accept purchaser found.
- d. Where the contract is oral.
- e. When a binding contract exists.
- f. Principal's refusal to enforce contract, and release of purchaser.
- g. Refusing to execute deed or conveyance.
- h. Refusal of other parties to convey.
- i. Inability of principal to complete sale.
- j. Negligence of principal.
- k. Refusing to accept purchase money.
- l. Purchaser's pecuniary responsibility.
- m. Necessity of tender of performance by purchaser.
- n. Effect of stipulations in broker's contract.
- o. Principal's acts justified.
- p. Actions relating to, and damages therefor.

II. Default in carrying out contract with broker.

- a. Principal's interference with broker.
- b. Wrongful termination of agency.

III. Defective title.

- a. General doctrine.
- b. The question of notice.

IV. Misrepresentation and fraud of principal.

The question of performance by a real-estate broker of his contract to find a purchaser or effect an exchange of his principal's property will be found in note to Lunney v. Healey (Neb.) — L. R. A. —.

Real-estate broker's commissions as affected by his negligence, or fraud, or other acts or agreements on his part respecting the sale or exchange of real estate, will form the subject of note to Feathers v. Canfield (Mich.) — L. R. A. —.

I. Default of principal in entering into or carrying out contract with purchaser.

- a. In general.

The general rule is that the principal must act in good faith towards the broker, and a 43 L. R. A. breach of faith on his part will not bar the broker's right to commissions. Davis v. Gassette, 30 Ill. App. 41.

The principal cannot by his own act disregard the services performed by the broker and refuse payment of the latter's commissions. Howe v. Werner, 7 Colo. App. 530, 532; Gottschalk v. Jennings, 1 La. Ann. 5, 7, 45 Am. Dec. 70; Gillett v. Corum, 7 Kan. 156.

A broker or agent undertaking to sell property for another for a certain commission, who finds a purchaser able, ready and willing to purchase at the price, has earned and can recover his commission, though the sale is never completed, if the failure to complete the same is on the part of the principal without any fault of the broker or agent. Doty v. Miller, 43 Barb. 529; Buckingham v. Harris, 10 Colo. 455; Monroe v. Snow, 131 Ill. 128, 136.

And if a purchaser able, ready, and willing to complete the sale is found by the broker, and the sale is not consummated owing to the principal's fault, he cannot cut off the broker's right to commissions. Swigart v. Hawley, 40 Ill. App. 610, 611; Monroe v. Snow, 131 Ill. 128; Birmingham Land & Loan Co. v. Thompson, 86 Ala. 146; Sayre v. Wilson, 86 Ala. 151; Chambers v. Seay, 73 Ala. 372; Henderson v. Vincent, 84 Ala. 99; Vinton v. Baldwin, 88 Ind. 104, 45 Am. Rep. 447; McClave v. Paine, 49 N. Y. 561, 10 Am. Rep. 431; McFarland v. Lillard, 2 Ind. App. 160; Cheatham v. Yarbrough, 90 Tenn. 77, 79; Fraser v. Wyckoff, 63 N. Y. 448; Gilchrist v. Clarke, 86 Tenn. 583, 585; Parker v. Walker, 86 Tenn. 569; Schwartz v. Yearly, 31 Md. 270; Holder v. Starks, 159 Mass. 503; Cook v. Flake, 12 Gray. 491; Desmond v. Stebbins, 140 Mass. 349; Witherell v. Murphy, 147 Mass. 417; Loud v. Hall, 108 Mass. 404, 407; McGavock v. Woodlief, 20 How. 221, 15 L. ed. 884; Kock v. Emmerling, 22 How. 69, 16 L. ed. 292; Duclos v. Cunningham, 102 N. Y. 678; Edwards v. Goldsmith, 16 Pa. 43; Prickett v. Badger, 1 C. B. N. S. 296, 26 L. J. C. P. N. S. 33, 3 Jur. N. S. 66; Parmy v. Head, 33 Ill. App. 134, 136; McGuire v. Carlson, 61 Ill. App. 293; Walker v. Tirrell, 101 Mass. 237, 3 Am. Rep. 352; Fischer v. Bell, 91 Ind. 243, 244; Lane v. Albright, 49 Ind. 279; Hawley v. Smith, 45 Ind. 183; Jacobs v. Shenon, 2 Idaho, 1002; Platt v. Johr, 9 Ind. App. 58; Cook v. Welch, 9 Allen, 350; Tombs v. Alexander, 101 Mass. 255, 3 Am. Rep. 349; Pate v. Marsh, 65 Ill. App. 482, 483.

So, if the broker finds a purchaser, and does all that he has agreed to do, and the deal falls through owing to the act of his principal in re-

Messrs. Franklin & Cobbs, for plaintiff in error:

It must appear from plaintiffs' petition that they performed the contract alleged, by procuring and presenting a purchaser to defendant who was able, ready, and willing to buy the land, and who, in fact, made or offered to make a binding contract with the vendor to purchase, unless it appears that defendant refused to sell.

Runyon v. Wilkinson, G. & Co. 57 N. J. L. 420; Mottingly v. Pennie, 105 Cal. 514; Kirkland v. Little, 41 Tex. 456; Mims v. Mitchell, 1 Tex. 443; Malone v. Craig, 22 Tex. 609.

If plaintiffs recover they must do so upon the ground that they procured and presented to defendant purchasers who were able, ready, and willing to buy the land, and who in fact did enter into a binding contract to purchase. The allegations in regard to the absence of defendant are, in the manner stated, without legal significance, and not supported by any legitimate evidence, and this issue should have been withdrawn from the jury.

Willis v. Whitsitt, 67 Tex. 676; Love v. Wyatt, 19 Tex. 316.

It appears for the first time during the trial that the witness, Disney, was a partner with Claridge in the sale of the lands and entitled to a portion of the commissions. He was a necessary party to the suit.

Ship Channel Co. v. Bruly, 45 Tex. 8; Stachely v. Peirce, 28 Tex. 328; Allison v. Shilling, 27 Tex. 450, 86 Am. Dec. 622; Maverick v. Maury, 79 Tex. 439.

Before the jury could find for the plaintiff they must have found: (1) that defendant employed plaintiffs to find a purchaser or purchasers for the land at $3.50 per acre; (2) that he agreed to pay plaintiffs 5 per centage of the matter, and not by reason of the fault of the broker or the purchaser, the broker will be entitled to recover his commissions. Harwood v. Diemer, 41 Mo. App. 48.

The principal cannot avoid the contract by his voluntary act disabling himself from performance. Phelan v. Gardner, 43 Cal. 306, 311; Schultz v. Griffin, 5 Misc. 499, 500; Moses v. Bierling, 31 N. Y. 462; Willes v. Smith, 77 Wis. 81, 86; Stewart v. Mathers, 32 Wis. 344, 349; Delaplaine v. Turnley, 44 Wis. 31; O'Connor v. Semple, 57 Wis. 243; Bailey v. Chapman, 41 Mo. 536, 538; Nesbitt v. Helser, 49 Mo. 383; Woods v. Stephens, 46 Mo. 555; Buckingham v. Harris, 10 Colo. 455; Hayden v. Grillo, 26 Mo. App. 289, 293; Monroe v. Snow, 131 Ill. 126; Rees v. Spruance, 45 Ill. 308, 310; Bryan v. Abert, 3 App. D. C. 186; Corbel v. Beard, 92 Iowa, 360; Ward v. Cobb, 148 Mass. 518.

Neither can he avoid the contract by his refusal, upon the ground that he has a better offer. Thornton v. Moody (Tex. Civ. App.) 24 S. W. 331.

And if a real-estate broker fully performs his contract with the landowner, he cannot be prevented from recovering his commission because the owner subsequently changes his mind about making a sale or trade of the property. Neiderlander v. Starr, 50 Kan. 770.

So, where a purchaser is found within the time specified, but delay in closing the sale is caused by the negligence, fault, or fraud of the seller, the agent who finds the purchaser is entitled to his commissions. Ratts v. Shepherd, 37 Kan. 20; Fultz v. Wimer, 34 Kan. 576.

And a broker's right to commission is not affected by the fact that the principal who has a good title takes steps to have it rejected by the purchaser's attorney. Phelps v. Prusach, 83 Cal. 626.

And the right to commissions continues notwithstanding the fact that the sale is prevented by the principal's attempt to change the terms of sale or impose additional ones. Hildebrand v. Lillis, 10 Colo. App. 522.

So, if the broker has found a purchaser of sufficient responsibility, willing to take the property upon the terms stated, the fact that either party has refused subsequently to carry out the contract does not affect the right to the commissions which have already accrued. Seymour v. St. Luke's Hospital, 28 App. Div. 119, 122; Knapp v. Wallace, 41 N. Y. 479; Kalley v. Baker, 132 N. Y. 1.

The principal cannot set up his own dereliction of duty as a reason for his nonfulfilment of the contract, and thus avoid payment of the 43 L. R. A.

broker's commissions. Cavender v. Waddingham, 2 Mo. App. 551, 554.

And the broker's claim for commission is not dependent upon the fact that the principal represents himself to be the owner of the premises. Lansberger v. Murray, 6 Misc. 605.

Again, it has been held that the mere fact that the broker has declined to make his commissions dependent upon the performance of the contract by the purchaser is no excuse for the principal's refusal to perform the contract, where a purchaser is procured able and prepared to bind himself to the bargain. Friend v. Jetter, 19 Misc. 101, 103, Affirming 18 Misc. 368.

So, if it should be known to the principal that the agent who introduces the purchaser to him has by the usual arts of competition taken such purchaser out of the hands of a rival broker, such fact will not justify the principal in refusing to complete the contract in the absence of collusion. Scott v. Lloyd, 19 Colo. 401.

And it has been held that if the broker completes his part of the contract the fact that there is a defect in the quality or the condition of the land will not defeat his right to commissions. Lockwood v. Halsey, 41 Kan. 166.

It has also been held that if the principal refuses to answer in damages for the nonperformance of the contract on his part, the broker will still be entitled to his commissions on finding a purchaser ready, willing, and able to perform the contract. Wright v. Brown, 68 Mo. App. 577, 582; Chiple v. Leathe, 60 Mo. App. 20.

So, where the exchange of property is not completed by reason of the principal's fault, his agent is entitled to commission where he has complied with all the requirements of his contract. Brown v. Wilson, 98 Iowa, 316, 318.

Where the agent made a bargain he was authorized to make for real estate, and the purchaser was ready to carry out the same, and he informed his principal of it before it was put into writing, and the principal declined to be bound by it, and then named a higher price at which he would sell, and the broker then obtained an acceptance of her offer on condition that she would make a deed at once when she again declined to sell unless he could get a much larger sum, and the broker then put the agreement in writing, and delivered to the purchaser his original contract, and the purchaser accepted it, and was ready to perform his part of it, it was held the broker was entitled to the sum named in the contract as commission for the making of the sale, as the principal could not intentionally defeat the sale and thus deprive cent upon the price for which the sale was to be made, to wit: $3.50 per acre; (3) that plaintiffs did procure a purchaser who was ready, able, and willing to purchase the property; (4) that plaintiffs presented such purchasers to defendant; and, (5) that the proposed purchasers entered into a binding contract with defendant to purchase said land.

Conkling v. Krakauer, 70 Tex. 739; Love v. Miller, 53 Ind. 294, 21 Am. Rep. 196; Mattingly v. Pennie, 105 Cal. 514.

Before plaintiffs may recover it must appear that the proposed purchasers did in fact enter into a contract to purchase, mutually binding upon themselves and the defendant. An option is not such a contract. The great preponderance of testimony shows that no contract of purchase was ever sought or made by the proposed purchasers.

him of his right to commissions. Witherell v. Murphy, 147 Mass. 417.

Yet the fault of the principal in not completing the sale must be averred and proved. Hinds v. Henry, 36 N. J. L. 328.

And if the broker proves that it was the principal's fault that the exchange of the property was not carried out he can recover his commissions. Woolley v. Lowenstein, 83 Hun. 155.

So, an act of protection, beyond the protection afforded by law such as the completion of the sale by the purchaser, is not within the broker's duty to perform. Friend v. Jetter, 19 Misc. 101, 103, Affirming 18 Misc. 368.

But where there was no special contract relating to the commission, and the only contract was for the sale of the property by the broker, and the sale was not effected between the parties owing to a misunderstanding or disagreement in reference to the form of the conveyance, the broker was held not entitled to his commissions, it not being shown that any act of capriciousness on the part of his principal existed which would render him liable to the broker for his commissions. Garcelon v. Tibbetts, 84 Me. 148, 150.

b. Refusal to enter into written contract, or to make the sale.

It is the general rule that the broker's right to commissions on a sale made by him will not be defeated by the fraudulent, capricious, or arbitrary refusal of the principal to comply with the agreement entered into with the purchaser and to make the same binding, or to complete the sale when there is no express stipulation to the contrary, and the sale made to a purchaser able, ready, and willing to purchase is within the broker's authority, and according to the terms named by the principal. Hildebrand v. Lillis, 10 Colo. App. 522; Kock v. Emmerling, 22 How. 69, 16 L. ed. 202; Hyams v. Miller, 71 Ga. 608, 618; Love v. Owens, 31 Mo. App. 501; Monroe v. Snow, 131 Ill. 126, 136; Bailey v. Chapman, 41 Mo. 537; Sayre v. Wilson, 86 Ala. 151; Chambers v. Seay, 73 Ala. 372; Henderson v. Vincent, 84 Ala. 99; Vinton v. Baldwin, 88 Ind. 104, 45 Am. Rep. 447; McClave v. Paine, 40 N. Y. 561, 10 Am. Rep. 431; Fiske v. Soule, 87 Cal. 313, 321; Warren v. Cram, 71 Mo. App. 638; Wright v. Brown, 68 Mo. App. 577, 582; Chipley v. Leathe, 60 Mo. App. 20; Jones v. Stevens, 36 Neb. 849; Greenwood v. Burton, 27 Neb. 808; Wilkes v. Smith, 77 Wis. 81, 86; Stewart v. Mather, 32 Wis. 344; Delaplane v. Turnley, 44 Wis. 31, 41; O'Connor v. Semple, 57 Wis. 243; Block v. Ryan, 4 App. D. C. 283; 43 L. R. A.

Conkling v. Krakauer, 70 Tex. 735; Kimberly v. Henderson, 29 Md. 512; Love v. Miller, 53 Ind. 294, 21 Am. Rep. 196; Wilson v. Mason, 158 Ill. 304; Stitt v. Huidekoper, 17 Wall. 393, 21 L. ed. 647; Warvelle, Vendors, p. 187; Runyon v. Wilkinson, G. & Co. 57 N. J. L. 420; Mattingly v. Pennie, 105 Cal. 514; Parker v. Walker, 86 Tenn. 566.

An agreement to purchase land provided a certain attorney says the title is good is not such an agreement as will constitute the party a "purchaser" in law, and entitle the broker to his commission.

Hammond v. Crawford, 35 U. S. App. 1, 36 Fed. Rep. 425, 14 C. C. A. 100; Tombs v. Alexander, 101 Mass. 255, 3 Am. Rep. 349; Gilchrist v. Clarke, 86 Tenn. 583; Aigler v. Carpenter Place Land Co. 51 Kan. 718.

Messrs. Clamp & Harris, Dan Lewis, and J. O. Terrell for defendants in error.

Bryan v. Abert, 3 App. D. C. 180; Atkinson v. Pack, 114 N. C. 597, 603; Cavender v. Waddingham, 2 Mo. App. 551; Rice-Dwyer Real-Estate Co. v. Ruhlman, 68 Mo. App. 503, 506; Hamlin v. Schulte, 34 Minn. 534, 536; Stillman v. Mitchell, 2 Robt. 523, 537; Holly v. Gosling, 3 E. D. Smith, 262; Chilton v. Butler, 1 E. D. Smith, 150; Doty v. Miller, 43 Barb. 329; Armstrong v. Wann, 29 Minn. 128; Jones v. Adler, 34 Md. 440; Rupp v. Sampson, 16 Gray, 398; Mooney v. Elder, 56 N. Y. 238; Lynch v. McKenna, 58 How. Pr. 42; Hinds v. Henry, 36 N. J. L. 328, 332; Felner v. Kobre, 13 Misc. 400, 500; Platt v. Kohler, 65 Hun, 560; Barnard v. Monnot, 33 How. Pr. 440, 1 Abb. App. Dec. 108; Forrester v. Price, 6 Misc. 308; Schultz v. Griffin, 5 Misc. 490, 500; Moses v. Bierling, 31 N. Y. 462; Fenn v. Ware, 100 Ga. 563; Love v. Miller, 53 Ind. 294, 21 Am. Rep. 192, 196; McGavock v. Woodlief, 20 How. 221, 15 L. ed. 884; Nelderlander v. Starr, 50 Kan. 770; Edwards v. Goldsmith, 16 Pa. 43; Hayden v. Grillo, 35 Mo. App. 647, 654, 42 Mo. App. 1; Huggins v. Hearne, 74 Mo. App. 86, 87; Bailey v. Chapman, 41 Mo. 537; Buckingham v. Harris, 10 Colo. 455; Fisk v. Henarie, 13 Or. 156, 164; Nesbitt v. Helsar, 49 Mo. 383; Woods v. Stephens, 46 Mo. 555; Cook v. Kroemeke, 4 Daly, 268, 269; Beebe v. Ranger, 3 Jones & S. 452, 453, 455; Stewart v. Mather, 32 Wis. 344, 349; Davis v. Lawrence, 52 Kan. 383; Lockwood v. Halsey, 41 Kan. 166; Fultz v. Wimer, 34 Kan. 576; Ratts v. Shepherd, 37 Kan. 20; Wray v. Carpenter, 16 Colo. 271; Lawson v. Thompson, 10 Utah, 462; Lestrade v. Ferrera, 6 La. Ann. 398; Phelan v. Gardner, 43 Cal. 306, 311; Tousey v. Etzel, 9 Utah, 329; Fraser v. Wyckoff, 63 N. Y. 445, 448; Knapp v. Wallace, 41 N. Y. 477; Martin v. Sullivan, 53 N. Y. 615; Lloyd v. Matthews, 51 N. Y. 124; Hart v. Hoffman, 44 How. Pr. 168.

So, the principal cannot deprive the broker of his commission by fraud or bad faith on his part toward the broker or agent. Flower v. Davidson, 44 Minn. 46.

And it has been said that if, from any failure of the owner to enter into a binding contract, the sale is not completed, the agent may recover his commissions. Cawker v. Apple, 15 Colo. 141; Finnerty v. Fritz, 5 Colo. 174.

Again it has been held that when the broker has effected a bargain and sale by a contract which is mutually obligatory on the vendor and vendee, he is entitled to his commission whether his employer chooses to comply with or enforce the contract or not. Love v. Miller, 53 Ind. 294, 21 Am. Rep. 192.

So, the unexcused refusal of the principal to

Gaines, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendants in error sued the plaintiff in error to recover commissions as real-estate brokers for procuring at plaintiff in error's instance a purchaser for a tract of land. They alleged, in substance, that Brackenridge entered into a contract with them, in which, at his instance, they undertook to make a sale of a large tract of land in consideration of his promise to pay them a commission of 5 per cent upon the purchase money, and that they procured purchasers ready, willing, and able to buy the property, but that the purchase was not consummated on account of a defect in his title. There was evidence to show that the plaintiff in error employed Claridge to procure a sale of the land, and that Payne subsequently became the partner of Claridge, and actively participated in the negotiations for the attempted sale. Claridge, who made the contract with Brackenridge, in his testimony states the latter's promise in this language: "That is, that if they brought him a buyer for the land that would pay him his price for it, he would pay me a commission." Claridge also testified that, at the time of making the contract, Brackenridge represented that he was the owner of the land. Subsequently, Claridge found Messrs. Beney & Freeman, of the state of Iowa, who, in connection with him, examined the land, with a view to negotiating for its purchase. After the examination, Claridge introduced the proposed purchasers to Brackenridge. The depositions of Beney & Freeman were read in evidence upon the trial in behalf of the plaintiffs, and their purpose in seeking the interview with Brackenridge is very perform his part of the contract to which the other party is ready and willing to be bound will not preclude the broker from recovering his commission, where the party is procured by the broker in fulfillment of his agreement with his principal, although the transaction does not culminate in success, if such success is prevented solely by the principal's act, and the broker has performed all that was expected of him. Friend v. Jetter, 19 Misc. 101, 103, affirming 18 Misc. 368; Sibbald v. Bethlehem Iron Co. 83 N. Y. 378, 22 Am. Rep. 441; Rockwell v. Hurst, 36 N. Y. S. R. 735; Burling v. Gunther, 12 Daly, 6.

And the rule is applied in all cases where the refusal on the part of the principal to fulfill the agreement which the broker had power to make is without sufficient reason. Hinds v. Henry, 36 N. J. L. 328, 332; De Cordova v. Bahn, 74 Tex. 643, 645; Kock v. Emmerling, 22 How. 73, 16 L. ed. 293; Harrell v. Zimpleman, 66 Tex. 292; O'Brien v. Gilleland, 79 Tex. 602, 604.

Yet the broker must not have been guilty of any fraud or deception on his part. Bach v. Emerich, 3 Jones & S. 548, 551.

Again, in such cases the broker's compensation is regulated by the terms of the contract or by established usage, if there is no contract. De Cordova v. Bahn, 74 Tex. 643, 645; Kock v. Emmerling, 22 How. 73, 16 L. ed. 293; Harrell v. Zimpleman, 66 Tex. 292.

So, it has been held that he is entitled to the compensation agreed upon, or to the usual compensation or commission. Bennett v. Egan, 3 Misc. 421, 422.

If the testimony adduced on behalf of the broker shows that he produced a purchaser acceptable to the owner, able and willing to purchase on the terms offered by the owner, and that the failure to consummate the sale was due entirely to the failure of the owner to enter into a binding contract with such purchaser, the broker will still be entitled to his commissions. Milllett v. Barth, 18 Colo. 112; Woodall v. Foster, 91 Tenn. 195, 197; Cheatham v. Yarbrough, 90 Tenn. 77.

And if the principal accepts the purchaser whose ability to perform the contract is unquestioned, but no written contract is entered into between them, and the purchaser fails to perform his part, the broker, in the absence of collusion between himself and the purchaser, will still be entitled to his commissions, as the mere fact of the purchaser changing his mind cannot in such a case affect the broker's right. Heinrich v. Korn, 4 Daly, 74.

It has been held that if the property is sold 43 L. R. A.

to a purchaser ready, able, and willing to take and pay for it, and any of the terms of such contract as to payment, abstract, or deed, are unsatisfactory to the principal, he should object to them on that ground, and not refuse absolutely to sell; and in such a case he will be held liable to commissions if he does so. Weaver v. Snow, 60 Ill. App. 624, 626; Smith v. Keeler, 51 Ill. App. 267, 151 Ill. 518.

It has been held that the broker's right to commission is not affected by the principal selling the property when the broker has found a purchaser ready and willing to complete the sale, and has the money ready on deposit waiting the principal's action, or by his refusal to complete the contract. Sullivan v. Hampton (Tex. Civ. App.) 32 S. W. 235; Goss v. Broom, 31 Minn. 484.

In the latter case the principal sold on the day following that on which the broker notified him of the sale to the purchaser, and the broker had performed his contract, although he had not received the purchase money, as by the construction of the contract the same was to be paid in cash only when the principal performed his obligation and conveyed the property.

The case of Phelan v. Gardner, 43 Cal. 306, 311, is also in the same line. In that case the purchaser found by the broker tendered performance of the written contract, and was refused upon the ground that the principal had sold to another.

The same principles will also be found in Schultz v. Griffin, 5 Misc. 499, 500; Huggins v. Hearne, 74 Mo. App. 86, 87; Hayden v. Grillo, 35 Mo. App. 665.

So, a real-estate broker's right to commissions is not affected or defeated if the sale is prevented by the principal's attempt to change the terms or impose additional ones. Hildebrand v. Lillis, 10 Colo. App. 522.

And if the principal is guilty of bad faith in varying the terms of the sale to the purchaser found by the broker, the latter will be entitled to his commissions. Mears v. Stone, 44 Ill. App. 444, 447.

Again, the fact that the principal changes his mind, and refuses to enter into a written contract with the purchaser found by the broker, will not defeat the broker's right to recover the compensation agreed upon or the usual commissions, in the absence of an express agreement to the contrary. Levy v. Kottman, 11 Misc. 372; Bennett v. Egan, 3 Misc. 421, 422; Platt v. Kohler, 65 Hun, 557, 560; Felner v. Kobre, 13 Misc. 499, 500; Davis v. Lawrence, 52 Kan. 383; Fultz v. Wilmer, 34 Kan. 576; Ratts v. Shepherd, 37 Kan. 20; Lockwood v. Halsey, 41 clearly disclosed in their testimony. Beney, among other things, testified as follows: " . . . I first met Col. Brackenridge, at San Antonio National Bank, on August —, 1895. Was taken to the bank by Mr. Claridge, and there introduced, either by Mr. Claridge or L. N. Disney, of Houston. I went to the bank at the suggestion of Mr. Claridge, for the purpose of talking over with Col. Brackenridge the terms and conditions he would give us on an option of sixty days on the Lytle ranch, looking to a purchase of the same if title proved good. Col. Brackenridge refused to give an option on Lytle ranch for longer than thirty days; and on August 2, 1895, we concluded to accept his offer of option of $3.75 per acre and privilege of thirty days in which to examine title. As to the agreement, it was principally oral. We received a receipt in writing from defendant for draft of $1,000 specifying that draft was for option of thirty days on land deeded by sheriff of Medina county to G. W. Brackenridge. The receipt was returned to the San Antonio National Bank, August 31, 1895, on surrender of the $1,000 paid for option. As was stated in my answer to interrogatory sixth, the only writing was the receipt for the draft for $1,000 stating that it was paid for option, and that $9,000 additional was to be paid at the expiration of thirty days, and balance on or before five years. . . . Col. Brackenridge stated that the title to the Lytle land was vested in him, but said that the San Antonio National Bank was the direct owner of the lands, and signed the option receipt, 'San Antonio National Bank, by G. W. Brackenridge, President.' . . . We expected to raise the money from our own resources."

Kan. 166; Nelderlander v. Starr, 50 Kan. 770; Lestrade v. Perra, 6 La. Ann. 398.

And the rule is the same in cases where the owner has for reasons of his own afterwards concluded not to sell upon the terms given to the broker. Wilson v. Dyer, 12 Ind. App. 320; McFarland v. Lillard, 2 Ind. App. 160; Barnett v. Glutting, 3 Ind. App. 415; Lockwood v. Rose, 125 Ind. 588.

If a valid contract of exchange has been entered into between the principal and the party owning the property to be taken in exchange, the principal cannot avoid payment of a broker's commissions upon the ground that the title of the party to the property to be taken in exchange is defective, and for that reason the contract is not performed. Kalley v. Baker, 132 N. Y. 1.

In a case in which an intending purchaser wrote a broker stating that he would give a named sum for the property "and pay you a commission," and this offer was communicated by the broker to the owner of the property, and the parties were brought together, but the contract was never fulfilled owing to the defendant's evading the same by new excuses which were merely dilatory, it was held that the broker was still entitled to recover his commissions, as they could not be defeated by such conduct. Auten v. Jacobus, 20 Misc. 609, 21 Misc. 632.

And where the broker employed to sell upon certain commissions found a purchaser and entered into a written contract with him in his principal's name, advanced the purchaser money with which to bind the bargain, the check for which was subsequently handed to the principal who took the same and expressed no dissatisfaction with the contract except as to an unexpired lease upon the premises which he tried to buy out but failed, and upon the value of the premises increasing, refused to carry out the contract, assigning as his reason that he could not deed except subject to the lease, although the purchaser tendered the full amount of the purchase price and demanded a deed, it was held that the broker was entitled to his commissions. Lawson v. Thompson, 10 Utah, 462.

Where a broker was employed to sell real estate, and an option was given him, and such option was to expire at a given date, and the broker produced a party ready and willing to buy the property upon the terms specified by him, and the broker communicated that fact to the principal and arranged for a meeting of the parties to execute the contract before the time mentioned by the option expired, and the principal agreed to meet the purchaser and close the bargain on the day previous to the expiration 43 L. R. A.

of the option, but made default with the purchaser until after the date fixed in the option, it was held that the broker's right to commissions was not defeated by such act. Vanderveer v. Suydam, 83 Hun, 116, 118.

So, where the broker procured an offer to be made at the price named by his principal on stated terms of payment, which offer was accepted by the owner, the broker was held entitled to his commissions, even though there was a failure to consummate the sale because of the refusal of the owner to proceed further with the transaction upon the ground that he was dissatisfied with the terms of payment, and further that if this was the sole ground of objection assigned by the owner at the time of refusal other grounds of objection then known to him were waived and would not avail as a defense to an action for the commissions. Fenn v. Ware, 100 Ga. 563.

And, where the evidence showed that a complete sale of the property through the service of the broker was only prevented by the wrongful refusal of the principal to comply with the terms of the contract which he had authorized the brokers to make in his behalf, it was held the broker was still entitled to his commissions. Rice-Dwyer Real Estate Co. v. Ruhlman, 68 Mo. App. 503, 506.

Again, where it was not disputed that the broker made a contract of sale to one who for a long time afterwards was able, ready, and willing to take the property and pay the price, but was prevented from so doing by the principal's refusal to carry out the contract, although part payment of the purchase money was made with the intention of rendering the contract irrevocable, it was held that if such broker was authorized to make the sale as an agent employed by the principal, he was, under the circumstances, entitled to compensation, although the purchaser could not have been compelled to carry out his contract if he had chosen to set up the statute of frauds, as it was the principal's own fault that the contract was not consummated. Holden v. Starks, 159 Mass. 503.

Where, under a written authority to sell for a given sum, the broker within the time named in the contract made an agreement with the purchaser to sell for a larger sum than that mentioned by his principal, and gave the purchaser a given time to examine the title with liberty to withdraw if not satisfactory, and with a condition releasing him if the principal did not sign the agreement before a given time, from which contract the purchaser withdrew after the principal upon presentation of such

Freeman also testified: "I was introduced by either Mr. Claridge or Mr. Disney to Col. Brackenridge at the bank where we went, at the suggestion of Mr. Claridge, for the purpose of talking over the terms and conditions he would give us on an option of sixty days on the Lytle ranch, intending to purchase the same if title was good. Col. Brackenridge refused to give an option on Lytle ranch for a longer time than thirty days; and on August —, 1895, we decided to accept his offer of option of $3.75 per acre and privilege of thirty days to look up title. The agreement was mainly oral. We received, in writing, from Col. Brackenridge, a receipt for draft of $1,000 specifying that it was paid for option of thirty days on land deeded by sheriff of Medina county to George Brackenridge. This receipt, I suppose, was returned to the San Antonio National Bank by my partner, upon the surrender of the $1,000 paid for the option, and is now not under my control. The only writing was the receipt above mentioned. The contract was $1,000 cash on the option, and $9,000 to be paid in thirty days, and balance on or before five years at 6 per cent. All parties understood it to be an oral agreement. Col. Brackenridge said, in his opinion, the title was good. There was no other writing in the trade, except the option receipt referred to. The agreement to purchase made on the lands was subject to examination of title; that, if title proved to be defective, the negotiations were to cease. I do not know of my own knowledge whether there was any other writing in the transaction or not, as I did not return to Texas with my partner on August 31, 1895. Col. Brackenridge stated that the title to the land rested in himself, but that the San Antonio contract had refused to sign it, it was held that the principal's refusal to ratify the agreement amounted to a refusal to sell the property at the price and on the terms agreed upon, and that as the broker had found a purchaser able and willing to purchase, he was entitled to recover his commission. Nellson v. Lee, 60 Cal. 535, 567.

In this case, however, there were two dissenting opinions to the effect that the principal was not bound by the acts of his agent inasmuch as he had not ratified the contract of sale made by the agent, which was conditional, giving the purchaser a right to withdraw if the contingency named therein did not happen.

Where the principal employed the broker to procure a purchaser at a given price, on stated terms and to pay him a commission, and the broker procured a purchaser willing, anxious, and able to take the land on the terms specified subject to the lease upon it, and the only reason for not consummating the sale was the refusal of the principal to complete because the broker would not accept a certain commission on the amount of the sale, and the fact that the principal had concluded to hold the property for a higher price, the broker was held entitled to his commissions in the same manner as if the sale had been completed, as the evidence showed that the broker named a certain percentage as commission which was tacitly acquiesced in by the principal, and was afterwards, during the negotiations, mentioned as the understood rate, and the broker had performed his part of the undertaking. Buckingham v. Harris, 10 Colo. 455.

In Gorman v. Scholle, 13 Daly, 518, the broker brought the parties together, and the principal and the purchaser agreed on the terms and conditions with a waiver by the principal of the stipulation for a cash sale. The principal declined to execute a written agreement until he had consulted counsel as to the effect of a lease on the premises, but accepted the purchaser subject only to such advice, and after consulting counsel he declined to enter into the contract except upon condition that the lessee might remove buildings, to which right the purchaser refused to accede, but offered to take it as it stood at the price. The broker recovered his commissions as the sale fell through for the sole reason that the defendant declined to sell except subject to the right to remove the building, as, if such right were a fact known to the defendant, and was not made a part of the terms upon which the broker was to procure a purchaser, and was not mentioned until after a purchaser was procured, the plaintiff's right was 43 L. R. A.

not affected thereby as the purchaser procured by him was ready to buy the lots on the terms fixed by the defendant when he authorized plaintiff to offer them.

Where the broker negotiated with the agent for the sale of property to a purchaser at a price to be paid on a certain date, the commissions to be paid by the purchaser, and details were arranged, and upon the day set for the completion of the sale the defendant was notified that the purchaser was ready and willing to complete upon the terms of the sale, but defendant declined to fulfil his contract, it was held that the broker could recover damages against the seller for nonperformance of the contract, and his claim therefor was allowed. Atkinson v. Pack, 114 N. C. 597, 603.

A similar case to Atkinson v. Pack, 114 N. C. 597, is that of Cavender v. Waddington, 2 Mo. App. 531. In that case the broker was also employed to purchase, but his commissions were to be paid by the vendors. He made the negotiations and procured a deed to be made to the purchaser according to the contract, and tendered the same and demanded the purchase money for the vendors, but the purchaser refused to comply with the contract, and the broker sued him to recover damages for the loss of commissions by reason of such refusal, and it was held they had a good cause of action.

In Eichberg v. Ware, 92 Ga. 508, the broker alleged that the principal accepted the purchaser's offer, and promised to bring the deeds for examination, but finally repudiated the sale and refused to complete. The court refused to disturb the verdict found for the plaintiff upon evidence which was irreconcilably conflicting.

Rut, in Bennett v. Egan, 3 Misc. 421, 423, where the parties had signed a memorandum to enter into a formal contract for the sale and purchase of the property, and a dispute arose as to the amount and terms of a mortgage upon the premises for part of the purchase money, and finally the vendor refused to do anything further in the matter, and broke off the negotiations, which were never renewed, it was held that the broker could not recover his commissions.

c. Refusing to accept purchaser found.

It has been held that the refusal of the principal to accept a purchaser found by the broker will not defeat the broker's right to commissions, where such purchaser is ready, able, and willing to purchase upon the principal's terms. Weinstein v. Golding, 17 Misc. 613; Wright v. Brown, 68 Mo. App. 577, 582; Chipley v. Leathe, 60 Mo. App. 20.

National Bank was the direct owner of the land, and signed the option receipt as follows: 'San Antonio National Bank, by Geo. W. Brackenridge, President.'"

It is evident that during the negotiation for the option it was disclosed that Brackenridge was not acting for himself, but as the agent and trustee of the bank of which he was president. This is shown by the writing referred to in the testimony of Beney, and that of Freeman. That writing was introduced in evidence, and is as follows:

Received this 2d day of August, 1895, from Messrs. Bennie & Freeman, a sight draft on the Mount Ayr Bank, of Mount Ayr, Iowa, for one thousand dollars, in payment for an option of thirty days upon a certain tract of land described in deed from the sheriff of Medina county, to Geo. W. Brackenridge, dated the 24th day of July, 1894, aggregating about eighteen thousand seven hundred and five acres, agreed to be sold to them, at three dollars and seventy-five cents per acre, upon the following terms: Nine thousand dollars additional, to be paid within thirty days, balance in notes of one thousand dollars each payable, in five years, with six per cent, interest semiannually. Notes or coupons on each note to be given, retaining the privilege to pay any or all notes at any time before maturity. If draft for one thousand dollars is not paid, this receipt and agreement to be void.

San Antonio Nat. Bank,
by G. W. Brackenridge, President."

The testimony further discloses that the attorney of the proposed purchasers advised that the title to a large part of the lands

So, the broker's right to commissions cannot be barred by the rejection of such a purchaser by his principal and by his refusal to carry out the sale. Flood v. Leonard, 44 Ill. App. 113.

And the fact that the principal refuses to accept such a purchaser found within a reasonable time, and either to consummate the sale, or pay the broker's stipulated commissions, shows a good cause of action, and entitles the broker to recover his commissions. Spaulding v. Sattiel, 18 Colo. 86.

Yet the refusal of the principal to accept the purchaser for any reason which would be sufficient if true will impose upon the broker the burden of disposing of it. Greene v. Hollingshead, 40 Ill. App. 105.

So, the fact that the principal refuses to comply with his agreement upon the ground that the name of the purchaser is not revealed to him, and that he has had no opportunity of exercising his judgment in the question of accepting such purchaser, does not do away with the necessity of the broker's showing a performance on his undertaking, in order to enable him to recover the price of his services. Hayden v. Grillo, 26 Mo. App. 280, 293.

See, upon the question of the principal's acceptance of the purchaser as affecting the question of the broker's performance of the contract, note to Lunney v. Healey (Neb.) — L. R. A. — #### d. Where the contract is oral.

Although the contract between the principal and the purchaser is merely oral if it is one that the purchaser, procured by the broker and with whom the principal negotiates, is ready and willing to carry out but for the default of the principal, the broker's right will not be affected by the inability or refusal of the principal to consummate the sale. Mooney v. Elder, 56 N. Y. 238, 240; Lery v. Ruff, 4 Misc. 180, Affirming 3 Misc. 147; Barnard v. Monnot, 3 Keyes, 203; Krahner v. Hellman, 16 Daly, 132; Kalley v. Baker, 132 N. Y. 1; Gilder v. Davis, 137 N. Y. 306, 20 L. R. A. 398; Parker v. Walker, 86 Tenn. 566, 569.

And if the principal sees fit to let the contract rest in parol, he cannot on that account refuse to pay the broker's commissions if the sale is not fully consummated. Potvin v. Curran, 13 Neb. 302, 303.

It has been held that if the purchaser is able, and willing, and offers to complete an oral contract if the principal will make a conveyance, the latter cannot defeat the broker's right to commissions by refusing to complete the sale. Hayden v. Grillo, 35 Mo. App. 647, 654. 45 L. R. A.

And if the minds of the parties have met upon the terms given the principal by the broker, the fact that the principal, when a written contract is being prepared, insisted upon incorporating into it a new clause, a forfeiture clause, never before proposed to the purchaser or even suggested until after the negotiations for the purchase and after the terms had been verbally agreed upon, in consequence of which the sale falls through, the broker will still be entitled to his commissions. Beebe v. Ranger, 3 Jones & S. 453, 455.

The above holding is based upon the doctrine that the principal cannot thus take advantage of his own fault. McFarland v. Lillard, 2 Ind. App. 160.

In a case in which the contract of sale was not reduced to writing, nor followed by a conveyance of the premises to the proposed purchaser, but no objection was made by the principal to it or to the solvency of the purchaser, yet he refused to go on with the transaction solely upon the ground that the broker had not effected the sale within the time limited, for the reason that the purchaser required a reasonable time thereafter to examine the title to the property before paying for it and taking the conveyance, it was held that the broker had performed his contract and was entitled to his commissions. Watson v. Brooks, 8 Sawy. 316, 319.

So it has been held that where the purchaser introduced by the broker and accepted by his principal fails to perform his part of the contract, and the principal neglects to make a binding contract with such purchaser, and no collusion is shown between the broker and such purchaser, whose pecuniary ability to perform the contract cannot be questioned, the mere fact that the purchaser changes his mind does not affect the broker, and is no fault of his, and therefore he is entitled to recover his commissions. Heinrich v. Korn, 4 Daly, 74.

e. When a binding contract exists.

The broker can recover commissions if he finds a purchaser with whom his principal enters into a building contract for sale, and who is ready to purchase, even if the sale is never consummated owing to the refusal of the principal to fulfil the same. Fraser v. Wyckoff, 63 N. Y. 445, 448; Knapp v. Wallace, 41 N. Y. 477; Martin v. Stillman, 53 N. Y. 615; Lloyd v. Matthews, 51 N. Y. 124; Goss v. Stevens, 32 Minn. 472, 474; Mooney v. Elder, 56 N. Y. 238; Delaplaine v. Turnley, 44 Wis. 31; Phelan v. Gardner, 43 Cal. 306; Nesbitt v. Helser, 49 Mo. 383; Hamlin v. Schulte, 34 Minn. 534, 536; was bad, and that for that reason the proposed purchasers declined to take the land, and demanded the $1,000 paid for the option, and that the money was refunded by the bank.

Do these facts show that Claridge & Payne had earned the commissions claimed by them for procuring a purchaser of the land? We understand the law to be established by the great weight of authority that where, under a contract like the present, the broker brings to the principal a customer who is ready, able, and willing to purchase the land upon the principal's terms, and no sale be effected, the broker is entitled to his commissions, provided the failure result from the fault of the principal. It is evident, also, both from the testimony of Beney, and from that of Freeman, that, when they were introduced to Brackenridge, they were then neither ready nor willing to purchase. The willingness to purchase must appear by an offer to purchase, either express or implied. Of course, the offer may be, and we presume usually is, upon the condition, also either express or implied, that the title is perfect. A mere willingness existing in the mind of the customer, and not communicated to the principal, cannot affect the rights of the parties. What Beney & Freeman intended to do in this case—what they offered to do—was to procure an absolute right for a limited time of buying the land, provided they should determine to do so. They did not propose to purchase or to bind themselves to purchase upon any condition whatever. The writing signed by the bank through Brackenridge, as its president, fully evidences their proposal to take an option, and not to bind themselves to purchase. Though in the form of a receipt, this is a Stillman v. Mitchell, 2 Robt. 523, 537; Holly v. Gosling, 3 E. D. Smith, 262; Chilton v. Butler, 1 E. D. Smith, 150; Doty v. Miller, 43 Barb. 529; Armstrong v. Wann, 29 Minn. 126; Jones v. Adler, 34 Md. 440; Rupp v. Sampson, 16 Gray, 398, 77 Am. Dec. 416; Moses v. Bierling, 31 N. Y. 462; Barnard v. Monnot, 3 Keyes, 203; Lynch v. McKenna, 58 How. Pr. 42; Kock v. Emmerling, 22 How. 69, 16 L. ed. 292; Parker v. Walker, 86 Tenn. 566, 569, 570; Love v. Owens, 31 Mo. App. 501; Burke v. Cogswell, 39 Minn. 344.

The principal cannot by his own act disregard the services performed by the broker in finding the purchaser with whom the principal consummates the sale, and then refuse to carry out the contract with the broker. Howe v. Werner, 7 Colo. App. 530, 532.

In a case in which the principal canceled the contract entered into with the purchaser found by the broker, and a quitclaim deed was executed by the purchaser, but subsequently the husband of such purchaser negotiated a sale to his father which finally resulted in the purchaser found by the broker and her husband obtaining and holding possession, the court held that the transaction was to be regarded as one, and was attributable to the broker's efforts, and that his right to commission was not affected thereby. Burke v. Cogswell, 39 Minn. 344.

The necessity of a binding contract of sale as affecting the question of performance of his contract by the broker will be found discussed in note to Lunney v. Healey (Neb.) — L. R. A. —.

1. Principal's refusal to enforce contract, and release of purchaser.

The prevailing doctrine upon the right of a real-estate broker to commissions where the principal refuses to enforce the contract against the purchaser and releases him therefrom, would seem to be that where the broker by his efforts has brought the parties together and procured a person ready and willing to take the premises as they had intended to do, and the meeting of the parties results in the execution of a contract under seal, he has performed all he is called upon to do, and it is no part of his duty to see that the terms of the contract are complied with, and therefore the subsequent inability of the party, and the rescission of the contract by the mutual consent of the parties in consequence of such inability, cannot be charged against the broker in the absence of an express agreement to the effect that he shall have no compensation unless the contract between the parties is fully 43 L. R. A.

performed. Cromble v. Waldo, 42 N. Y. S. R. 225.

The above rule is supported by the following cases: Donohue v. Flanagan, 28 N. Y. S. R. 757; Cawker v. Apple, 15 Colo. 141; Flinnerty v. Fritz, 5 Colo. 174; Crouse v. Rhodes, 50 Ill. App. 120, 123; Love v. Miller, 53 Ind. 204, 21 Am. Rep. 192; Rice-Dwyer Real Estate Co. v. Ruhlman, 68 Mo. App. 503; Love v. Owens, 31 Mo. App. 501; Parker v. Walker, 86 Tenn. 566, 569, 570; Watson v. Brooks, 8 Sawy. 316, 319; Wilson v. Mason, 158 Ill. 304; Coleman v. Mende, 13 Bush, 358, 360; Tombs v. Alexander, 101 Mass. 255, 3 Am. Rep. 349; Hipple v. Laird, 189 Pa. 472; McLaughlin v. Wheeler, 1 S. D. 497.

And in such cases it has been held that the purchaser's ability to perform the contract is to be assumed unless the contrary appear, and when a contract in writing for the sale of the property at the price asked is signed by the owner and the purchaser, the broker has earned his commissions, and his right to them is in no way affected by the subsequent refusal of the purchaser to fulfil the contract. Simonsen v. Kissick, 4 Olay, 143, 145.

In Love v. Owens, 31 Mo. App. 501, it is said that to permit the seller to escape his liability to the agent merely because he is willing to let the purchaser go, rather than bring a suit on a valid contract, would be to encourage injustice and open up the way for the purchaser and vendor to get off merely by one failing to comply voluntarily with his written contract and the other to enforce it, the one forfeiting merely his first payment, and the other pocketing it, leaving the agent without redress for the wrong done him.

And if the principal elects to release him rather than to incur expense, etc., of litigation he cannot in equity and justice make such election at the expense of the broker. Parker v. Walker, 86 Tenn. 566, 570.

In such a case it has been held that if the broker has brought the parties together, and his principal accepts the person procured as a purchaser, and enters into a written contract with him, and such contract is not carried out, the question of the failure to carry out such contract is a matter that concerns only the parties to it, the one in the right having a complete remedy against the other at fault, which he might prosecute or not as he pleases, and therefore where the contract is mutual the broker will still be entitled to his commissions. Donohue v. Flanagan, 28 N. Y. S. R. 757.

So, the rule was applied with equal force in a case where the principal kept the amount paid valid and binding contract, expressing in writing the terms upon which the minds of the parties met, and is not subject to be added to or varied by parol evidence. It follows that, in our opinion, at the time the negotiation was entered into which resulted in this contract, the proposed purchasers had not determined to buy the lands upon the terms proposed by Brackenridge; and that, therefore, up to that period, the plaintiffs had not complied with their agreement, and had no cause of action against him.

Can Brackenridge be held liable by reason of what subsequently occurred? Claridge testified that, when Brackenridge employed him, the latter told him he was the owner of the land. Therefore, if that were true, and if Brackenridge was acting for the bank, he could either hold him or his undisclosed principal upon the contract. But, in order to hold Brackenridge, he must either have brought to him a purchaser ready and willing to buy upon his terms, or Brackenridge must, in his own right, have agreed upon different terms, to which the parties would have acceded but for a defect in the title. When, however, before any liability accrued, the agency was disclosed, the parties entered into a contract with the bank as the owner of the land, Brackenridge could not, in our opinion, be held liable for any default of the bank upon that contract. It is settled that the contract for the option is that of the principal, and not that of the agent, and that parol evidence to the contrary is not admissible. Heffron v. Pollard, 73 Tex. 96. If Brackenridge's agency was not disclosed in the first instance, as claimed by Claridge, and if the title was imperfect, and for that reason alone Beney & Freeman declined to by the purchaser and refused to sue for the balance under a binding contract. Ward v. Cobb, 148 Mass. 518.

And the rule has also been held to apply where the principal has an option given him to terminate the contract if he chooses to do so, or to enforce performance of the contract by suit in equity. Willis v. Smith, 77 Wis. 81, 86.

A land agent or broker who procures a party with whom his principal is satisfied, and who enters into a written contract to buy, and is financially able to perform the condition of the contract. Is entitled to his commission, although the principal has the option by the contract to declare a forfeiture thereof if the instalments are not paid, and declares the contract forfeited on account of the nonpayment of an instalment when it becomes due. Betz v. Williams & White Land & Loan Co. 46 Kan. 45.

So, it has been held that if after a purchaser is accepted and contracts to purchase upon the terms named by the principal, the latter refuses to perform the contract for the reason that the principal has made unfounded representations as to the character of the property, such fact will not excuse the principal from paying the broker the regular commissions. Glentworth v. Luther, 21 Barb. 145, 146.

And in a case in which such facts existed it was held that the circumstance that the broker procured another purchaser and claimed commissions for such finding did not affect his right to commissions on the first sale effected by him. Bach v. Emerich, 3 Jones & S. 548, 551.

And the fact that the purchaser refuses to consummate a sale evidenced by a valid enforceable contract will not affect the broker's rights when his default is not attributable to the broker. Glider v. Davis, 137 N. Y. 504, 20 L. R. A. 398.

The broker's commissions were allowed in a case wherein he procured a purchaser who entered into a binding contract to purchase, but requested the principal (the seller) to release him from the same which the principal was seeking specifically to enforce. Hipple v. Laird, 189 Pa. 472.

In a case in which evidence was offered by the principal for the purpose of establishing the existence of a custom among real-estate agents in and about a certain city, not to accept or demand any commissions where the purchaser failed to come up to his contract, in which the evidence failed to establish any such custom, it was held the court properly disregarded such issue. Love v. Owen, 31 Mo. App. 501. 45 L. R. A.

In Coleman v. Meade, 13 Bush, 358, 368, the principal prepared a written proposition containing the terms upon which he would sell, and delivered it to the broker, who procured the proposed purchaser's acceptance of it in writing. It was held that by such acceptance the purchaser was bound by an executory contract which the principal might enforce against him if he so desired, and that there was a sufficient fulfilment of the broker's contract so as to entitle him to commissions.

And in an action in which the evidence showed that the broker brought the parties together, was the procuring cause of the sale, and a deed had been executed to the purchaser, it was held that the principal could not avail himself of the defense that the purchaser had not paid the consideration money in an action by the broker to recover his commissions. The court therefore reversed the judgment of the court below which found for the defendant. Travis v. Graham, 23 App. Div. 214.

So, a contract signed by both parties in these words, "This is to certify that I . . . [the defendant] sell to . . . [the purchaser] for the sum of $17,000 the house (describing it) . . . and that I have received the sum of $75 . . . 'the balance amounting to $16,925 to be paid in thirty days,'"—was held sufficient to bind the purchaser specifically to perform the same in equity, and therefore the broker was entitled to his commissions although the purchaser subsequently refused to perform the contract. Simonson v. Klissick, 4 Daly, 143.

Where the broker, employed to procure a purchaser of a lease, procured one who agreed to buy, and who was accepted by the principal and with whom the principal entered into a written contract for the sale of the lease, but when the parties met to deliver the assignment of the lease and complete the sale such purchaser declined to take it on the ground that the lease contained certain covenants which did not suit him, the court held the broker entitled to commissions even though the contract was not carried out, as the parties mutually agreed upon the terms of the sale and executed a written contract embodying the same. Rosenberg v. Smith, 25 Misc. 774.

In a case in which real-estate brokers were employed to find a purchaser and they found one ready, able, and willing to purchase, and he entered into a contract which imposed no burdens, and gave no time, to which, so far as the record showed, the principal objected, nor such as were not usual in the community, the court held that the principal could not escape liability for commissions by declining to execute purchase under their option, it may be that the bank was liable for the commissions. But we do not think that the agent of an undisclosed principal can be held responsible for the subsequent dealings with the principal after the agency is disclosed. The theory of the case of the plaintiffs is that the defendant contracted as if for himself; and upon this theory, in order for them to recover, they must have brought him a purchaser ready, willing, and able to purchase. This, as we have seen, they did not do.

But there is another question which arises upon the facts of this case. While a broker may recover commissions of his principal who holds himself out as having a good title when he has procured a purchaser, and a sale is not effected by reason of a defect in the title, yet, in our opinion, the burden is upon him to show the defect. The theory of the recovery in such case is not that the broker has brought a party ready, able, and willing to buy, but that he would have been willing but for the fault of the principal in failing to make good his implied warranty that he would be able to make a good title to the property. Therefore, we think, in such a case it is incumbent upon the broker to show the want or defect of title. The principal may stipulate that he will exhibit a title satisfactory to the purchaser or to his counsel, but, in the absence of an express agreement to that effect, that obligation cannot be implied from the mere employment to procure a purchaser. We have not found the point expressly decided; but, in numer-

the contract, and releasing the purchaser from liability thereon, and canceling the same. Crouse v. Rhodes, 50 Ill. App. 120, 123, Distinguishing Munson v. Jacques, No. 4360, Ill. App.

So, in the case of Greene v. Hollingshead, 40 Ill. App. 105, the court affirmed the judgment in favor of the broker where the purchaser notified the principal that he could not carry out the contract, and the principal replied that it would be all right, as it was further shown that the contract was considered enforceable as the determination of the principal not to enforce the binding contract made between himself and the purchaser was wholly his own concern, and could not deprive the broker of his right to commissions.

In this case the broker, employed to find a purchaser at a certain price per acre, part in cash and part on time, was to have for his services all he could get in excess of that amount. He obtained an offer for a larger sum per acre including a section of land in another state, which land he agreed to take on account of his commission, and procured the purchaser's signature and seal to a contract reciting the terms of sale, the modes of payment, and the mortgage security to be given, took the same to his principal, who after making some objection to the security signed and sealed it without change and delivered it to the broker, who produced it to the purchaser.

But there was a special agreement as to payment of the balance of commissions when the transaction was completed and the deeds were executed, and the contract contained a proviso that in case of failure the broker waived all further claims, and the contract between the principal and purchaser was canceled by mutual consent without the broker being consulted. It was held that the broker could not recover his commissions as the contract was not performed, as the mere fact of the principal's default in not enforcing the contract by the purchaser was not such a default on his part as rendered him liable to the broker for commissions, as he was at liberty to enforce the contract or treat it as at an end as he chose. Seymour v. St. Luke's Hospital, 28 App. Div. 110, 122.

g. Refusing to execute deed or conveyance.

It has been held that so far as the right of the real-estate broker to recover commissions is concerned, it is not material whether the power conferred upon him by the contract is to sell, or merely to secure a purchaser, and that if he procures a purchaser, and the principal refuses to convey to him, he will still be liable 43 L. R. A.

to commissions. Fiske v. Soule, 87 Cal. 313, 321.

The general rule is that when a broker, who has undertaken to sell his principal's property on a commission, negotiates a sale which is satisfactory to his principal, it rests with the latter to make the deed and convey the property, and if he fails to do so the broker has done all he can do, and if the contract and sale are defeated by the failure of the principal, the broker will still be entitled to his commissions. Carpenter v. Rynders, 52 Mo. 278, 281; Bailey v. Chapman, 41 Mo. 538. To the same effect, Felts v. Butcher, 93 Iowa, 414; Burns v. Olliphant, 78 Iowa, 456; Hague v. O'Conner, 41 How. Pr. 287; Heyn v. Phillips, 37 Cal. 529; Hyams v. Miller, 71 Ga. 608, 618; Fraser v. Wyckoff, 63 N. Y. 445, 448; Knapp v. Wallace, 41 N. Y. 477; Martin v. Stillman, 53 N. Y. 615; Lloyd v. Matthews, 51 N. Y. 124.

So, the mere fact that the owner declines to convey or complete the sale, for the reason that he may get more by holding and raising his price, does not relieve him from his liability to pay his broker for services rendered in procuring a person able, ready, and willing to purchase at the terms given, the same as if he had completed the sale. Buckingham v. Harris, 10 Colo. 455.

And where the broker, authorized to sell at a stipulated price upon a given commission, finds a purchaser who agrees to take the property at the price, and pays a small sum down to bind the bargain, but upon applying to the principal for the deeds the latter refuses to convey, upon the ground of an increased value, and his withdrawal of them from the market, such refusal is no defense in an action for commissions. Smith v. Fairchild, 7 Colo. 510.

So, if a principal refuses to execute a deed pursuant to the terms of the sale made by his authorized agent, and notifies the agent that he will not execute such deed, neither the agent nor the purchaser is required to tender the purchase money before the agent can legally bring suit for his services in making a sale of such land. Vaughan v. McCarthy, 59 Minn. 199.

In a case in which the broker, engaged to sell under an oral agreement at a stated price, was also given an option to purchase himself at a larger price, and the evidence clearly showed that he procured the organization of a corporation which was ready and willing and offered to purchase the property at the option price mentioned to him, and that he performed the entire parol contract, he was held entitled to his commissions when by his principal's refusal to convey the land to such corporation he was forced, in order to keep his engagement with ous cases in which it has been held that commissions could be recovered where the proposed purchaser was ready to make the purchase but for an infirmity in the title, the specific defect has been shown in the case. There is a line of cases which hold that where the broker has made, or has caused to be made, a binding contract with the purchaser, and the latter refuses to perform the agreement by reason of some supposed flaw in the title, the agent is entitled to his commissions without showing that the title is bad. Parker v. Walker, 86 Tenn. 566, and cases there cited. But these cases proceed upon the principle that, when the broker has procured a binding contract, he has performed his obligation; for, if the title is good, the principal may enforce the contract of sale; if bad, the failure to consummate the transaction is attributable to his own fault. But when no written contract of sale has been procured, and the proposed purchaser declines to take the property on account of some supposed infirmity in the title, it is incumbent upon the broker, in order to recover, to show by competent evidence that the defect actually exists.

Did the defendants in error show that the title to the lands was defective? The evidence relied on is that of the attorney of the proposed purchaser, who testified that it was not good. His conclusion necessarily involved his opinion as to the law of the title. The opinion of counsel, however able and learned, is not evidence. The court must determine the law for itself. The facts stated the purchasers, to fall back upon his option and take the land himself, and thus make himself the channel through which the title passed to the corporation. Riemer v. Rice, 88 Wis. 16, 20.

The general question of the necessity of a conveyance as constituting a performance of the broker's contract will be found in note to Lunney v. Healey (Neb.) — L. R. A. —.

b. Refusal of other parties to convey.

In a case in which the principal sought to escape liability for commissions for the reason that the sale fell through owing to the refusal of his wife to join in the conveyance, and that it was not shown that the purchaser was ready and willing to contract with him alone, and also upon the ground that he had no right to ratify an unauthorized contract on behalf of his wife, and there was a mutual understanding between the principal and the agent that the wife should join, and the executory contract made with the agent alone stipulated that the wife should join and be a party to a warranty deed in order to perfect the title, and that if she refused to do so the purchaser might refuse to complete, it was held that the terms of the employment were satisfied by the broker's finding a purchaser ready and willing to purchase, not merely on the terms agreed to as to price and security, but also upon the condition that the wife should be bound by the contract, and that in such a case if the purchaser was procured with whom the principal assumed to be prepared to sell, and made certain stipulations for himself, he could not object that he had no authority to make such terms as a means of depriving the broker of his commissions. Hamlin v. Schulte, 34 Minn. 534, 536; Kock v. Emmerling, 22 How. 69, 16 L. ed. 292.

And where the wife of the principal refused to join in a deed to the purchaser, who declined to take without a release of the wife's right of dower, for which reason the sale was not completed, the broker was held entitled to his commissions as he had performed his contract to find a purchaser for the property by succeeding in bringing the parties together and effecting an agreement for an exchange. Clapp v. Hughes, 1 Phila. 382.

1. Inability of principal to complete sale.

The general rule is that if the sale effected by the broker, which is in all things satisfactory, is not carried out owing to the inability of the principal to perform his part of the contract, the broker will still be entitled to his commissions, provided there is no stipulation to the contrary in the contract with his principal, 43 L. R. A.

and no fault on the broker's part. Fraser v. Wyckoff, 63 N. Y. 445, 448; Knapp v. Wallace, 41 N. Y. 477; Martin v. Stillman, 53 N. Y. 615; Lloyd v. Matthews, 51 N. Y. 124; Hart v. Hoffmann, 40 How. Pr. 168; Hamlin v. Schulte, 34 Minn. 534, 536; Stillman v. Mitchell, 2 Robt. 523, 537; Holly v. Gosling, 3 E. D. Smith, 262; Chilton v. Butler, 1 E. D. Smith, 150; Doty v. Miller, 43 Barb. 529; Armstrong v. Wann, 29 Minn. 126; Jones v. Adler, 34 Md. 440; Phelan v. Gardner, 43 Cal. 306; Rupp v. Sampson, 16 Gray, 398, 77 Am. Dec. 416; Moses v. Bierling, 31 N. Y. 462; Mooney v. Elder, 56 N. Y. 238; Barnard v. Monnot, 3 Keyes, 203; Lynch v. McKenna, 58 How. Pr. 42; Kock v. Emmerling, 22 How. 69, 16 L. ed. 292; Goss v. Stevens, 32 Minn. 472, 474; Delaplaine v. Turnley, 44 Wis. 31; Nesbitt v. Helsner, 49 Mo. 383; Jones v. Stevens, 30 Neb. 849; McLaughlin v. Wheeler, 1 S. D. 497.

If the trade falls through because of the principal's inability to comply with certain conditions the parties have agreed to, the broker will still be entitled to his commissions. Hecht v. Hall, 62 Ill. App. 100.

So, the fact that the principal finds himself unable to complete the sale according to the terms, because a mortgage upon the premises is not then due, does not deprive the broker of his right to agreed commissions. Jones v. Henry, 15 Misc. 131, 152.

And if the consummation of the sale falls through owing to the inability of the principal to procure a loan, the broker will still be entitled to his commissions, where he has not undertaken the business of negotiating such sale upon the condition that the commissions were not to be paid unless he did procure the loan, and was able to carry out the sale. Hecht v. Hall, 62 Ill. App. 100.

Again, the mere fact that an exchange as at first proposed is not carried out through the principal's inability to execute it, will not defeat the broker's right to commissions, where other property is substituted, and the deal is carried out all parties consenting. Pollatschek v. Goodwin, 17 Misc. 587, 590.

So, if the principal sells to a third person after he has extended the time for the purchaser introduced by his broker to decide upon the terms and before such extended period has expired, he cannot defeat the broker's right to commission. Reed v. Reed, 82 Pa. 420.

The case of Goss v. Broom, 31 Minn. 484, shows that if the broker has performed his part of the contract in every particular, and the principal, after notice that a purchaser has been found who is ready, able, and willing to carry out the same sells the property to another, the broker will still be entitled to his commissions.

without objection by the counsel who examined the title, that a large portion of the lands were located by virtue of certificates commonly known as "Confederate Certificates," do not show that the title to such lands is invalid. Such a certificate, properly located, surveyed, and returned with field notes to the land office, confers a good title upon the holder. Von Rosenberg v. Cuellar, 80 Tex. 249; Smith v. McGaughey, 87 Tex. 61. Whether those in question were properly or improperly located does not appear. We conclude that upon the trial the plaintiffs failed to make a case. It follows that the charge of the court, which is assigned as error, should not have been given. A charge which authorized a verdict for the plaintiff upon any phase of the testimony was necessarily erroneous. The assignment is good, though the reasons urged in its support may be untenable. Clarendon Land Invest. Agency Co. v. McClelland Bros. 86 Tex. 179, 22 L. R. A. 105.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

In the cases of Phelan v. Gardner, 43 Cal. 306, 311; Huggins v. Hearne, 74 Mo. App. 86, 87; Hayden v. Grillo, 35 Mo. App. 655; and Schultz v. Griffin, 5 Misc. 499, 500,—the same principle is upheld. In the former case the purchaser tendered performance of his contract, but was refused upon the ground that the principal had already sold.

The subject of a sale by the principal as affecting the broker's rights will be found discussed in its various phases in note to Lunney v. Healey (Neb.) — L. R. A. —.

j. Negligence of principal.

The broker's commissions were allowed in the case of an exchange which went through owing to the fact that the principal refused to complete the sale, in which case the principal sought relief upon the ground of false representations as to taxes due, but as the tax bills were before him for examination pending the negotiations, and he neglected to examine them, the court held him liable. Mason v. Hinds, 47 N. Y. S. R. 163, 166.

So, in a case where the principal claimed that he limited the time within which the sale was to be made to a certain date, and the evidence showed that the sale to a purchaser procured by the broker was not completed by that date owing to the delay of the principal in closing the sale and that he was purposely negligent in doing so in order to escape commissions, the broker was held entitled to recover. Ratts v. Shepherd, 37 Kan. 20.

k. Refusing to accept purchase money.

It has been held that if the purchase money is not paid owing to the fault of the principal the broker will still be entitled to his commission. Melvin v. Aldridge, 81 Md. 650.

So, if the purchase money is tendered to the principal by the purchaser, and is refused, the principal cannot avail himself of the defense that the purchase money is not paid, in an action to recover commissions. Fiske v. Soule, 87 Cal. 313, 321.

l. Purchaser's pecuniary responsibility.

The question of the position of the purchaser considered in connection with the broker's performance of the contract will be found in note to Lunney v. Healey (Neb.) — L. R. A. —.

If a purchaser is introduced to the principal to whom he is satisfied to sell, and such purchaser is accepted by the principal, but subsequently the principal refuses to carry out the contract, and there is no proof of the purchaser's pecuniary responsibility, it will be assumed that he is solvent, and ready and willing to perform the contract, and the broker is entitled to recover his commissions, as there is a meeting of the minds of the parties to the contract of sale and purchase. Krahner v. Hellman, 16 Daly, 132.

And in such a case, in the absence of evidence 43 L. R. A.

to the contrary, the purchaser's pecuniary ability to perform the contract he offered to make will be presumed. Hart v. Hoffman, 44 How. Pr. 168; Buckingham v. Harris, 10 Colo. 453; Goss v. Broom, 31 Minn. 484.

So, if the broker finds and produces a purchaser willing to purchase on the precise terms, and the principal declines to execute a contract of sale or to sell the property, without assigning any reason for so doing, it is incumbent upon the principal to prove on the trial that the person so introduced as a purchaser was not able pecuniarily to pay the price he agreed, or was willing to contract, to give, and until such facts are shown the purchaser will be presumed to be solvent and able to pay what he expressed his willingness to pay. Cook v. Kroemeke, 4 Daly, 268, 269; Hart v. Hoffman, 44 How. Pr. 168.

And in order to escape responsibility for commissions in finding a purchaser upon the ground of nonpayment of the balance of the purchase money by the purchaser, and a rescission of the contract on that ground, the principal must prove that he returned, or offered to return, the amount paid him on account of the purchase money under the contract. Wilson v. Sturgis, 71 Cal. 226; Henderson v. Hicks, 58 Cal. 364; Bohall v. Diller, 41 Cal. 535; Morrison v. Loda, 39 Cal. 381; Miller v. Steen, 30 Cal. 402, 80 Am. Dec. 124.

Yet the principal cannot escape liability for commissions upon a sale made to a purchaser, accepted by him, with whom a valid contract of sale is entered into by canceling the contract or releasing the purchaser therefrom, where the purchaser is able to perform his bargain, and would do so if not released. Foster v. Wynn, 51 Ill. App. 401, 402.

If, however, the preponderance of the evidence falls to show that the purchaser furnished by the broker was able to carry out the trade a verdict in favor of the broker's commissions will be set aside and a new trial granted. Leahy v. Hair, 33 Ill. App. 461.

m. Necessity of tender of performance by purchaser.

With reference to the necessity of a tender or offer to perform the contract on the part of the purchaser found by the broker, in order to entitle the broker to succeed in an action for his commissions, it has been held that after the principal has repudiated the contract made by the agent a tender of performance thereof on the part of the purchaser is not necessary. Harwood v. Diemer, 41 Mo. App. 48.

And in such a case it has also been held that it is not necessary for the purchaser, who is ready, able, and willing to complete the contract in every respect, to tender the amount of the purchase money before the broker brings an action to recover his commissions where the principal refuses to execute the conveyance to the purchaser found by the broker. Vaughan v. McCarthy, 59 Minn. 199.

In Millett v. Barth, 18 Colo. 112, the principals refused to consummate the sale made by their brokers who had sold the property according to the terms of their contract, and the purchase money was tendered to the principal, yet the brokers recovered their commissions, although by the terms in the original contract for sale the sale was to be for cash.

And in a case where the sale was to be negotiated within a specified period, in which the brokers found a purchaser ready, willing, and able to purchase within the time specified, the principal was held bound to pay the commissions, where the purchaser tendered a check the day before the last day specified in the broker's contract, but the same was refused by the principal, and such purchaser on the following day made every effort to pay the amount in cash free from all limitations, and his efforts to make such payment were not successful owing to his failure to secure a personal interview with the principal, who in the meantime sold the property to another, as the principal's act in making such sale was a waiver of the tender of the first payment required to be made by such purchaser. Oullahan v. Baldwin, 100 Cal. 648, 655.

n. Effect of stipulations in broker's contract.

The mere fact that the contract between the principal and the broker contains a stipulation that the commissions are to be paid out of the purchase price cannot be taken advantage of by the principal in an action to recover commissions where the consummation of the sale has been prevented by the fault or refusal of the principal. Cheatham v. Yarbrough, 90 Tenn. 77, 79.

o. Principal's acts justified.

In some cases the acts of refusal on the principal's part have been held justifiable on account of the action of the broker, and in such cases the principal will not be held liable for commissions, as, where the broker refused to disclose the name of the intending purchaser to his principal, it was held that the latter had a right to assume a private speculation of the property on the part of the broker himself, and might therefore refuse to close the transaction without liability for commissions. Hayden v. Grillo, 85 Mo. App. 647, 654.

So, where an executory contract of sale was entered into between the principal and the proposed purchaser, and the principal was aware that the execution of such contract involved the perpetration of a fraud upon a third person, and therefore refused to consummate the contract, it was held that the broker could not recover commissions. Zittle v. Schlesinger, 46 Neb. 844.

p. Actions relating to, and damages therefor.

A petition by a real-estate broker in an action to recover commissions, which alleges in substance that the broker was engaged in the business of buying and selling on commission, and that on a given date the defendant requested him to purchase certain property at a certain price, and agreed to pay a specified commission therefor, and that the broker, in pursuance of such employment and agreement, purchased the property at the agreed price and was ready, willing, and able to deed, or cause to be deeded, to him the property, and that defendant, after plaintiff had procured the property to him, refused to take it, and also to pay the commissions, correctly states a cause of action in proof of which the verdict in the plain-tiff's (broker's) favor will not be set aside. Ackerman v. Bryan, 33 Neb. 515.

In an action by brokers to recover commissions on a sale of real estate it is not error to instruct the jury that, if they believe from the evidence that the brokers were engaged in business as real-estate agents or brokers, and were requested or authorized by the principal to sell or find a purchaser for the property at a given price, and such authority was not limited, and was not revoked, and that pursuant thereto they did find a purchaser willing and able to buy on the terms proposed by the principal, and that the principal, on being notified that such purchaser was found and was ready to close the bargain on the terms, refused to carry out the contract, the brokers have earned their commissions and are entitled to recover. Monroe v. Snow, 131 Ill. 126.

So, it is not error to instruct the jury in such a case that if the principal rejects the purchaser, and the broker claims his commissions, the broker must show that the person furnished by him to make the purchase was willing to accept the offer precisely as made by the principal, and that he was an eligible purchaser, and such an one as the principal was bound in good faith, as between himself and the broker, to accept, and that when the broker in good faith has produced a purchaser who is acceptable to the owner, and able and willing to purchase on the terms satisfactory to the owner or as offered by the owner, he has performed his duty, and if from any failure of the owner to enter into a binding contract the sale is not completed the agent may recover his commissions. Buckingham v. Harris, 10 Colo. 455; Finnerty v. Fritz, 5 Colo. 174; Smith v. Fairchild, 7 Colo. 510.

And in an action by a real-estate broker for commissions the question whether the principal wilfully broke off the trade which the broker had worked up, and which the proposed purchaser was ready, able, and willing to carry out, is a subject to be finally determined by the jury. Swigart v. Hawley, 40 Ill. App. 610, 611.

So, it has been held that if the sale is not consummated owing to the refusal of the principal to keep appointments with the purchaser found by the broker, the burden is upon the principal to prove the reason why he did not keep such appointments. Cook v. Kroemeke, 4 Daly, 268, 269.

In some cases the question has been raised whether in actions against the principal on account of his failure to carry out his contract with his broker, the broker is entitled to recover his commissions, or whether he is only entitled to damages as for a breach of contract. Upon this question it has been held that if there is a breach of contract between the broker and the principal on the part of the latter, the broker's action is for damages against his principal, and not for commissions. Metzen v. Wyatt, 41 Ill. App. 487.

It has also been held that the measure of damages in an action by a broker against a party to the contract to recover damages for breach thereof where the other party to such contract is ready, able, and willing to carry it into effect, and where there is no just cause shown for refusing to carry out the same, is such sum as will compensate the broker for the loss sustained by the breach of the contract; and in a case where, by the refusal to carry out the contract, the broker has lost his right to commissions from the other party to the contract, the amount of such commissions is a proper amount of damages. Atkinson v. Pack, 114 N. C. 597, 603.

In Prickett v. Badger, 1 C. B. N. S. 296, 26

L. J. P. C. N. S. 33, 3 Jur. N. S. 66, it was held that a broker employed to sell at an agreed price, for an agreed commission, who succeeds in finding a purchaser at such price, is entitled to recover a reasonable remuneration for his work and labor, where his principal declines to sell, and rescinds his authority; and he is not bound to resort to a special action for the wrongful withdrawal of the authority.

II. Default in carrying out contract with broker.

a. Principal's interference with broker.

The general question of the right of the principal to interfere with or sell the subject-matter of the contract with the broker, and his liability for commissions in such cases, will be found discussed in note to Lunney v. Healey (Neb.) — L. R. A., and Hoadley v. Savings Bank of Danbury (Conn.) — L. R. A. —.

It may be stated generally that if the broker performs his part of the contract by doing all that he is required to do, and is prevented from or deprived of the opportunity of consummating the sale by the act of the principal, he is still entitled to his commission, as the principal cannot wrongfully interfere with the broker in his performance of the contract. Fischer v. Bell, 91 Ind. 243, 244; Lane v. Albright, 49 Ind. 279; Hawley v. Smith, 45 Ind. 183; Chilton v. Butler, 1 E. D. Smith, 150, 151; Doonan v. Ives, 73 Ga. 295, 301; Hartley v. Anderson, 150 Pa. 391; Keys v. Johnson, 68 Pa. 42; Howe v. Werner, 7 Colo. App. 530, 532; Reynolds v. Tompkins, 23 W. Va. 229, 235; Williams v. Bishop, 11 Colo. App. 378; Clifford v. Meyer, 6 Ind. App. 633; Wilson v. Dyer, 12 Ind. App. 320; Lynch v. McKenna, 58 How. Pr. 42, 45; Woolley v. Loew, 80 Hun, 294, 295; Carroll v. Pettit, 67 Hun, 418; Larow v. Bozarth, 68 Mo. App. 406, 411; Jacobs v. Shenon, 2 Idaho, 1002; Briggs v. Rowe, 1 Abb. App. Dec. 189, 195; Satterthwaite v. Vreeland, 3 Hun, 152; Levy v. Kottman, 11 Misc. 372; Bennett v. Egan, 3 Misc. 421; Henderson v. Vincent, 84 Ala. 99; Byrd v. Frost (Tex. Civ. App.) 29 S. W. 46, to the same effect.

So, the broker's right to commissions is not affected by the fact that the principal takes the matter out of his hands and deprives him of the benefit of the deal, with a knowledge that in so doing he is acquiring to himself the benefit of the broker's services, and is preventing the fulfillment of the contract by the broker. Carroll v. Pettit, 67 Hun, 418. To the same effect Wilson v. Sturgis, 71 Cal. 226, 229; Phelan v. Gardner, 48 Cal. 306; Blood v. Shannon, 29 Cal. 393.

The broker is entitled to be protected against any unfairness or fraud, and the owner, where there is a general employment to sell, cannot avail himself of the services of the broker in finding a purchaser, and then, by taking the negotiations into his own hands and reducing his price, effect a sale and refuse payment of commissions. Briggs v. Rowe, 1 Abb. App. Dec. 189, 195; Heaton v. Edwards, 90 Mich. 500; Lane v. Albright, 49 Ind. 275, 279; Henderson v. Vincent, 84 Ala. 99.

And when a broker is employed to sell real estate, and brings the property to the notice of the purchaser, and opens negotiations with him, the owner cannot step in and complete the sale and escape liability for commissions. Glascock v. Vanfleet, 100 Tenn. 603; Royster v. Mageveney, 9 Lea, 148; Arrington v. Cary, 5 Baxt. 609.

Where by the terms of the agreement between the principal and the broker the latter was to have eight months in which to find a purchaser for the land in question, and under which the principal agreed to send any purchaser who might come to him to the broker, and as a remuneration for the services the broker was to receive all he might sell the property for over and above a certain price, under which agreement the broker advertised the property and continued to do so for some months, and the principal without his knowledge or consent sold the same, in an action by the broker to recover the amount claimed to be due to him under such a sale, it was held that the contract between the principal and the broker was supported by a sufficient consideration, and that by the terms mentioned therein the broker had exclusive authority to sell, and that the principal could not deprive him of his rights under the contract by a sale, especially where the broker was fulfilling the contract, and was endeavoring to negotiate a sale with a purchaser at the time. Stringfellow v. Powers, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 109.

And the same rule applies to a sale by the principal, even upon modified terms. Doonan v. Ives, 73 Ga. 295, 301.

As to the effect of a sale by the principal upon modified terms, see note to Lunney v. Healey (Neb.) and Hoadley v. Savings Bank of Danbury (Conn.) — L. R. A. —.

Again, a principal who has knowingly interfered between the agent and his client, while the client has the purchase under advisement and the negotiation is still incomplete, and who has induced the client to purchase directly from himself, cannot successfully resist the agent's claim for commissions upon the ground that the latter had not in the first instance introduced him to the prospective purchaser. Williams v. Bishop, 11 Colo. App. 378.

And the fact that the deed is made to a party other than the purchaser found by the broker will not defeat his right to commissions when the act is done with intent to defeat commissions. Bogart v. McWilliams (Tex. Civ. App.) 31 S. W. 434.

In a case where it was shown that the principal agreed that if the broker would within one year from a certain time find a cash purchaser for his property for more than a given sum he would give the broker all the purchase money over that sum, and that within the year the broker produced a purchaser who would pay considerably more for the property, but to whom the broker had stated the terms to be partly on time, and that such purchaser in case he could not purchase the property partly on time, was willing and able to pay cash therefor, and that the purchaser did not make the purchase for cash at that price, for the reason that the principal interfered and entered into independent negotiations with him and finally himself sold the property to the purchaser, partly on time at a still further advanced price. It was held that the broker had performed his contract and was entitled to recover according to the terms thereof. Larow v. Bozarth, 68 Mo. App. 406, 411.

And the principal cannot complete the sale to a purchaser found by the broker for the purpose of evading payment of commissions. Geery v. Pollock, 16 App. Div. 321; Lane v. Albright, 49 Ind. 275, 279.

Again, the owner of property employing a broker to effect a sale cannot effect such sale at a small reduction from the price at which he was authorized to find a purchaser, nor make immaterial changes in the terms of the sale, if the purpose of the reduction is merely to save the commissions agreed to be paid to the agent. Cook v. Forst, 116 Ala. 395.

So, if the broker is the efficient cause or agent in procuring the contract between the parties, the fact that he is not consulted in making the final contract with the purchaser respecting its consummation will not defeat his right to commissions, especially where it is shown that the final negotiations with such purchaser, and the completion of the bargain, are made by the principal himself for the purpose of avoiding the payment of commissions, and in bad faith for the purpose of defrauding the broker. Woolley v. Loew, 80 Hun, 294, 295.

And a principal cannot deprive his agent of his compensation by selling at a different price, or by switching the buyer from one agent to another with whom he might be more friendly, and thus open the way for the perpetuation of the rankest injustice. Wright v. Brown, 68 Mo. App. 577; Hayden v. Grillo, 35 Mo. App. 654.

So, the principal cannot impose conditions other than, and in addition to, the conditions named in the contract under such circumstances as to prevent the broker from receiving his commissions. Gaty v. Foster, 18 Mo. App. 639, 644.

If the performance of the contract by the broker is prevented by the act of his principal, the broker may recover in damages such sum as would fully compensate him for the injury which he has sustained by reason of the nonperformance of the contract. Lane v. Albright, 40 Ind. 275, 279.

And if the principal prevents a performance by the broker, the latter may recover his commissions without proving a strict performance of the contract. Fraser v. Wyckoff, 63 N. Y. 445, 448; Young v. Hunter, 6 N. Y. 203.

If a sale with the purchaser is declared off by the principal, or by other brokers or agents engaged by the principal for the purpose of depriving the broker of his commissions, he will still be entitled to them where by his exertions a trade has been effected between his principal and an intending purchaser. Blaydes v. Adams, 35 Mo. App. 526.

And in such a case the burden of proof is upon the plaintiff to show the authority existing in such other agents to determine the bargain. Ibid.

Where a contract existed between real-estate agents and their principals relating to the platting of land as an addition to a city, and the sale thereof, and all the expenses leading up to such sale were to be borne by the brokers, who as their compensation were to receive half the profits arising from the transaction over and above a certain amount, and the brokers continued the performance of such contract, and upon the land increasing greatly in its value the principal sought to revoke the agency, and refused to permit the continuing partner of the firm of brokers who had bought out the interest of his partner in the business which included the transaction in question to carry out the contract of sale, or indeed to perform the contract, it was held that the principal could not thereby escape liability for damages resulting as the proximate cause of such breach of contract. Durkee v. Gunn, 41 Kan. 496.

An interference by the principal with the broker by the removal of a sign board put upon the property by the broker has been held to be an unreasonable interference with the efforts of such broker to consummate a sale of the property. Green v. Wright, 36 Mo. App. 298.

The sale of the property by the principal while the contract is in force puts it out of the power of the broker to perform his part of it, and is a breach of the agreement for which he will be entitled to recover damages. Green v. Cole, 127 Mo. 587.
43 L. R. A.

In this case the written proposition between the parties allowed the broker two years in which to make the sale, and the evidence tended to prove that he did perform some service under the contract in having the land prepared for sale, and therefore under such circumstances, and without any other cause, the principal had no right to revoke the authority given to the broker.

So, a broker was held entitled to recover, although the lot was sold, where his principal, having employed him as agent to sell, concealed the fact that the property was sold, and continued the agency, and the customer was procured and presented by the agent in good faith. Blester v. Evans, 59 Ill. App. 181. To the same effect, Phelan v. Gardner, 43 Cal. 306, 311; Schultz v. Griffin, 5 Misc. 499, 500.

In a case in which the broker was to have as commissions upon the sale of real estate all that he could obtain above a certain price, and he obtained a purchaser at a figure over and above what his principal had mentioned as the selling price, and subsequently the party who had made the contract with such broker and who claimed an interest in the land notified the purchaser that it could be purchased from the owner at a less price than that mentioned by the broker, and in consequence of such statement the purchaser refused to consummate such sale, it was held that the broker could still recover the amount which the sale would have produced to him as commissions under such contract, as no duty was imposed upon such a party to furnish the purchaser with information which would defeat the sale. Taylor v. Cox (Tex.) 18 S. W. 1063, 1064.

But where the broker was given the exclusive privilege for six months from a given date, subject to be revoked by a notice of thirty days, to sell for a given sum upon a given commission, and alleged that his inability to effect the sale was brought about by his principal's action in breaking the market and thus depriving him of the opportunity to earn his commissions, and the testimony showed that a committee of three persons proposed to the broker to hire the property for six months with a right to buy at a given price at the end of that period, but did not show what the conversation between the broker and the committee was, but the broker testified that he went to one of the principals and stated to him in the presence of the others that the committee told him that they had been offered the property at a less sum, and that one of them admitted that he had stated that the property was in the broker's hands at a given sum, but that they would accept a less sum for it, but the evidence did not show that there was any market for the property at either of the prices mentioned,—the court held that before the jury were justified in finding that the remarks made prejudiced the agent there must be some evidence tending to show that he probably had or could have found a market at the price at which the property was given to him, and that the remark reached the market or any intending purchaser, but that the jury ought not to find that there was a market thus ruined in the absence of evidence tending to show it, and in the presence of evidence tending strongly to show that there was no such market. Barkley v. Olcott, 52 Hun, 452.

So, the mere fact that the principal after signing the contract wrote to the purchaser informing him of an agreement for commissions which were outrageous, in consequence of which the purchaser refused to proceed further, was held not to constitute such an unlawful interference with the broker as would render the principal liable for commissions upon such incomplete sale, as such letter attached no terms or conditions to the sale, and it was right to inform the purchaser of the fact. Smith v. Nicoll, 91 Hun, 173, 174.

b. Wrongful termination of agency.

The general question of the revocation of the broker's authority will be found in a future note, and only the phase of it which touches upon the wrongful revocation of his agency will be found treated of in this section.

It may be stated as a general doctrine of the law governing the question of the revocation of a real-estate broker's agency that such agency cannot be revoked in bad faith as a device for escaping payment of commissions. Carroll v. Pettit, 67 Hun, 418; Ware v. Dos Passos, 4 App. Div. 32, 35; McKnight v. Thayer, 48 N. Y. S. R. 620, 622; Ames v. McNally, 6 Misc. 93, 94; Stedman v. Richardson, 100 Ky. 79; Liye v. Ludewick, 14 Ill. App. 372, 375; Sibbald v. Bethlehem Iron Co. 83 N. Y. 378, 22 Am. Rep. 441; Smith v. Anderson, 2 Idaho, 495; Schuster v. Martin, 45 Ill. App. 481; Lapsley v. Holridge, 71 Ill. App. 652; McConaughy v. Mahannah, 28 Ill. App. 169; Wilson v. Dyer, 12 Ind. App. 320; Doonan v. Ives, 73 Ga. 295, 301; Geery v. Pollock, 16 App. Div. 321; Cook v. Forst, 116 Ala. 395; Woolley v. Loew, 80 Hun, 294, 295; Gillett v. Corum, 7 Kan. 156; Gottschalk v. Jennings, 1 La. Ann. 5, 7, 45 Am. Dec. 70; Prickett v. Badger, 1 C. B. N. S. 296, 26 L. J. C. P. N. S. 33, 3 Jur. N. S. 66; Henderson v. Vincent, 84 Ala. 90.

If there is a fraud on the part of the principal in the revocation of the broker's authority, and he avails himself of the information procured by the broker, the latter will still be entitled to his commissions. Beale v. Creswell, 8 Md. 166, 201.

The principal cannot withdraw the property from the broker's hands where the latter's acts or services have inured to the principal's benefit without paying the broker's compensation. Gottschalk v. Jennings, 1 La. Ann. 5, 7, 45 Am. Dec. 70.

And it has been held that if the broker places the matter before his principal in such a manner that success is practically certain and immediate, the revocation by the principal of the broker's authority and the termination of the agency before the completion of the sale will not deprive the broker of his commissions. Blumenthal v. Goodall, 89 Cal. 251.

So, the principal cannot arbitrarily cut off the agent's authority in the midst of what would be a successful agency, and then, although taking advantage of the agent's services, refuse him compensation. Knox v. Parker, 2 Wash. 34, 37.

And the principal cannot where he has knowledge that the broker is negotiating with the proposed purchaser cancel his authority and effect the sale himself, and thereby avoid payment of the broker's commission. Heaton v. Edwards, 90 Mich. 500; Lane v. Albright, 49 Ind. 275, 279.

Again, it has been held that the principal cannot make such a withdrawal where the broker's introduction or disclosure is the foundation for the sale. Keener v. Harrod, 2 Md. 63, 56 Am. Rep. 706, 708; Wilkinson v. Martin, 8 Car. & P. 1; Re Gibson, 3 Pa. Dist. R. 147, 148.

So, after negotiations begun through a broker's intervention have virtually culminated in a sale, the broker cannot be discharged so as to deprive him of his commissions. Livezy v. Miller, 61 Md. 336, 343.

And if, in the midst of negotiations instituted by the broker which are plainly and evidently approaching success, the principal should revoke the authority of the broker with a view of concluding a bargain without his aid and avoiding the payment of commissions about to be earned, it may well be said that the due performance of his obligation by the broker was purposely terminated by the principal. Carroll v. Pettit, 67 Hun, 418; Ames v. McNally, 6 Misc. 93, 94.

In the last-mentioned case the principal withdrew the property after the broker had found a purchaser, stating at the time that he did not know that he cared to sell, but sold the same within three days to the same purchaser without any appreciable effort at a less price.

In a case in which brokers claimed commissions for making a trade of real estate under a promise of a certain commission or compensation in case the same was effected, in which the brokers claimed they brought about the sale, but the facts showed that the principals had changed their propositions and the same appeared to have been done in order to dispense with the brokers' services, and no notice was given to them of the fact, it was held the brokers were still entitled to their commissions. Bash v. Hill, 62 Ill. 216; Lane v. Albright, 49 Ind. 275, 279.

So, if the agency is allowed to run for a considerable period, and the broker has expended labor and large sums of money, and the same is suddenly revoked by the principal at a time when the broker is accomplishing his purpose. It has been held that he can recover for his time, labor, and expense on a quantum meruit. Jaekel v. Caldwell, 156 Pa. 266, 276.

And the broker will be entitled to recover his expenses and the value of his services in a case where he is employed for a definite period and the principal revokes his authority without cause within such period. Glover v. Henderson, 120 Mo. 367, 376; Ehrlich v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 88 Mo. 249; Kirk v. Hartman, 63 Pa. 97; Durkee v. Gunn, 41 Kan. 496; Vincent v. Woodland Oil Co. 165 Pa. 402, 410.

If there is a special contract by which the broker has the exclusive right to sell for a given period, and is to have all over a given amount by way of commissions, he cannot be deprived of his commissions by a sale by his principal at a price below that at which the broker could have sold, as such an agency is not revocable at the pleasure of the principal. Stringfellow v. Powers, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 199.

So, where all the expenses leading up to the sale were to be borne by the brokers, who were to have half of the profits over a certain amount, the principal's revocation of authority after the brokers had acted in the matter was held not to bar their right to commissions. Durkee v. Gunn, 41 Kan. 496. In this case the authority was originally given to a firm of brokers, and after a dissolution by the retirement of a partner the principal sought to revoke the authority.

If the consent of the brokers to a contract accepting a less sum in lieu of the full commissions due to them under a contract for the sale of property is obtained through fraud exercised by the principal, it may be rescinded by the broker provided such rescission is made promptly upon discovering the facts which entitled them to rescind, coupled with an offer to restore to the principal the amount so received by the broker. Dobinson v. McDonald, 92 Cal. 33, 37.

And in cases in which the property has been withdrawn, and a sale subsequently made, the question should be submitted to the jury as to whether or not the property was withdrawn, and if it was withdrawn whether the withdrawal was in good faith or in order to defraud the broker of his commissions,—especially where from the facts the jury might find that such a withdrawal under the circumstances was nothing more than an expedient for cheating the broker of his commissions. Ames v. McNally, 6 Misc. 93, 94.

It has, however, been held that if it does not appear that the broker has got anyone to the point of buying, or that there is a material certainty that any one of the persons with whom he has been negotiating has finally entered into a contract of purchase, the termination of the broker's agency will not deprive him of anything he has acquired; and that, even if it should appear that the owner may have fancied that he could effect a sale with the party who has been in negotiation with the broker, and that he might by such means avoid the payment of commissions, yet if it is uncertain that he could effect a sale, and there is no one standing ready to buy, the principal cannot in such a case be chargeable with legal fraud, especially where it is shown that the broker had the property in hand for a long period of time, and the principal's evidence tends to show that the agency was not abruptly and arbitrarily terminated, whatever may be thought of the propriety or the fairness of the principal's conduct in taking the property away from the agent, when he has informed him that he had parties in view whom he hoped to bring to an acceptance of the offer. Slater v. Holt, 10 N. Y. S. R. 257, 261.

And it is in all cases a question for the jury to decide whether the revocation of the broker's authority was made in good faith, or was a mere subterfuge to relieve the principal from payment of commissions. Kelly v. Marshall, 172 Pa. 396, 399.

In a case in which the broker was employed to effect an exchange of property and the negotiations failed, and the principal notified the broker that he withdrew his offer, and the other party placed his property in the hands of other brokers, and subsequently the same parties were brought together under other influences, and a trade was consummated upon the terms first proposed by the party introduced by the broker, it was held that the fact that the principal accepted such terms after revocation of the broker's authority was not of itself such evidence of bad faith as would entitle the broker to recover,—especially where the evidence showed that when the first negotiations were ended neither of the parties intended or expected to renew them. Uphoff v. Ulrich, 2 Ill. App. 399, 401.

Upon the general question of a sale by the principal after withdrawal or termination of the agency as affecting the broker's performance of his contract, see note to Hoadley v. Savings Bank of Danbury (Conn.) — L. R. A. —

III. Defective title.

a. General doctrine.

In general it may be stated that if the broker has acted in good faith, performed his contract, and done all that he was bound to do, and the sale with the purchaser procured by the broker is not carried out, or falls through, owing to the defective title of the principal, the vendor, the broker will still be entitled to his commission in the absence of evidence showing that the broker had knowledge of such defect, or of a stipulation to the contrary in the contract between the principal and the broker. Smith v. Mooney, 14 N. Y. Week. Dig. 237; Sullivan v. Hampton (Tex. Civ. App.) 32 S. W. 235; Conkling v. Krakauer, 70 Tex. 735; Goodridge v. Holdaday, 18 Ill. App. 363, 365; Hart v. Hopson, 52 43 L. R. A.

Mo. App. 177, 193; Doty v. Miller, 43 Barb. 529, 530; Glentworth v. Luther, 21 Barb. 145; Holly v. Gosling, 3 E. D. Smith, 262; Fiske v. Soule, 87 Cal. 313, 321; Smith v. Schiele, 93 Cal. 144, 149; Middleton v. Findia, 25 Cal. 76, 81; Gonzales v. Board, 57 Cal. 225; Phelps v. Prusch, 83 Cal. 626, 628; Birmingham Land & Loan Co. v. Thompson, 86 Ala. 146; Knapp v. Wallace, 41 N. Y. 477; Stange v. Gosse, 110 Mich. 153; Block v. Ryan, 4 App. D. C. 283; Parker v. Walker, 86 Tenn. 566; Kyle v. Rippey, 20 Or. 447, 453; Gilder v. Davis, 137 N. Y. 504, 20 L. R. A. 398; Roberts v. Kimmmons, 65 Miss. 332, 334; Kock v. Emmerling, 22 How. 69, 16 L. ed. 292; Sibbald v. Bethlehem Iron Co. 83 N. Y. 378, 22 Am. Rep. 441; Christensen v. Wooley, 41 Mo. App. 53; Collins v. Fowler, 8 Mo. App. 588; Love v. Owens, 31 Mo. App. 501; Hynes v. Brettelle, 70 Mo. App. 344; Barber v. Hildebrand, 42 Neb. 400; McLaughlin v. Wheeler, 1 S. D. 497; Jarvis v. Schaefer, 105 N. Y. 289, 292, 293; Lockwood v. Halsey, 41 Kan. 166; Cheatman v. Yarbrough, 90 Tenn. 77, 79; McGavock v. Woodlief, 20 How. 221, 15 L. ed. 884; Fraser v. Wyckoff, 63 N. Y. 448; Cook v. Fiske, 12 Gray. 493; Gilchrist v. Clarke, 86 Tenn. 583, 585; Parker v. Walker, 86 Tenn. 566; Hamlin v. Schulte, 34 Minn. 534, 536; Stillman v. Mitchell, 2 Robt. 523, 537; Chilton v. Butler, 1 E. D. Smith, 150; Armstrong v. Wann, 29 Minn. 126; Jones v. Adler, 34 Md. 440; Phelan v. Gardner, 43 Cal. 306; Rupp v. Sampson, 16 Gray. 398, 77 Am. Dec. 416; Moses v. Bierling, 31 N. Y. 462; Mooney v. Elder, 56 N. Y. 238; Barnard v. Monnot, 3 Keyes, 203; Lynch v. McKenna, 58 How. Pr. 42; Farmly v. Head, 38 Ill. App. 134, 136; Monroe v. Snow, 131 Ill. 126, 136; Buckingham v. Harris, 10 Colo. 435; Watson v. Brooks, 8 Sawy. 316, 319, 320; Tousey v. Etzel, 9 Utah, 329; Halsey v. Monterio, 92 Va. 581, 583; Martin v. Stillman, 53 N. Y. 615; Lloyd v. Matthews, 51 N. Y. 124.

And if the purchaser procured is accepted by the principal, and the sale is not consummated by the principal's inability to make a good title, the broker's right to commissions is not dependent upon the question of the purchaser's ability to perform the contract. Davis v. Morgan, 96 Ga. 518, 520.

The rule has also been stated as follows; when a proposed purchaser agrees to buy, and nothing is said about the title, he has a right to believe he will get a good title, and the inducement to buy is that the purchaser may acquire a good and indefeasible title, and if after investigation a defect in the title is discovered the purchaser has a right to repudiate the contract without incurring any liability on account thereof, and the repudiation of such a contract by the purchaser will not excuse the principal from his obligation to pay the broker's commissions. Birmingham Land & Loan Co. v. Thompson, 86 Ala. 146; Flinn v. Barber, 64 Ala. 193; Cullum v. Branch Bank, 4 Ala. 28, 37 Am. Dec. 725.

And if within a reasonable time the broker has done all that he was bound to do under his contract to find a purchaser, he is entitled to his commissions, and his right to compensation does not depend upon the validity or invalidity of his principal's title, and is not affected by the purchaser's refusal to accept the same and complete the sale solely on that ground. Gonzales v. Broad, 57 Cal. 224.

And the fact that the seller's title to the property proves defective, and therefore the contract to purchase is not carried out, will not defeat the broker's right to recover his commissions from the purchaser who employed him to find a seller, when the seller was introduced in good faith by the broker, and a valid written contract of sale and purchase was entered into between the parties. Knapp v. Wallace, 41 N. Y. 477.

It has also been held that the rule is the same where the sale falls through owing to an encumbrance upon the property. Birmingham Land & Loan Co. v. Thompson, 86 Ala. 146.

So, it has been stated that if the broker does not know of defects in the title at the time he enters into the contract, or at the time he performs the work, he has the right to assume that the title to the property he deals with is free from infirmity, and in such a case he will be entitled to recover his commissions. Berg v. San Antonio Street R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 43 S. W. 929; Gibson v. Gray (Tex. Civ. App.) 43 S. W. 922; Gauthier v. West, 45 Minn. 192; Birmingham Land & Loan Co. v. Thompson, 86 Ala. 146; Sweeney v. Tenmile Oil & Gas Co. 130 Pa. 193; Phelps v. Prusich, 83 Cal. 626; Peet v. Sherwood, 43 Minn. 447.

And in the case of an employment of an agent to find a purchaser of real estate where nothing is said or understood between them as to the title, it has been held that the implication of the law is between the principal and the agent as between owner and purchaser, that the owner has an intent to convey a good title, and it is no defense to the agent's claim for commissions that his agreement provided that the purchaser should get a good title, either in general terms, or that certain particular encumbrances should be removed. McLaughlin v. Wheeler, 1 S. D. 497; Birmingham Land & Loan Co. v. Thompson, 86 Ala. 146.

So, the fact that the contract contains a condition that the title shall be made clear and satisfactory to the purchaser has been held to be but an expression of what is implied by law, in the absence of an agreement that the purchaser will take the risk of the title, and will not bar the broker's right to commission if the title proves defective. Roberts v. Kimmons, 65 Miss. 332, 334.

And if the owner refuses or declines to take any steps to remove the defect or cloud, or to produce to the purchaser evidence that the title is not in fact faulty, the agent is entitled to his commissions the same as if he had consummated the sale. Gerhart v. Peck, 42 Mo. App. 644, 651; Carpenter v. Rynders, 52 Mo. 278; Budd v. Zoller, 52 Mo. 238; Nesbitt v. Hesler, 49 Mo. 383; Love v. Owens, 31 Mo. App. 501; Holly v. Gosling, 3 E. D. Smith, 263; Christensen v. Wooley, 41 Mo. App. 53.

The fact that the principal's title is good, bad, or indifferent will not affect the broker's right to commission upon an exchange where the party procured by him has a good title and such party is produced to his principal and offers to make a binding contract. Moskowitz v. Hornberger, 20 Misc. 558, Affirming 19 Misc. 429.

The rule is supported by the doctrine that there is no breach on the purchaser's part in declining to take a defective title as he is entitled to a merchantable one, a marketable title, such a one as will bring in the market as high a price with as without objection. Farmly v. Head, 33 Ill. App. 134; Parker v. Porter, 11 Ill. App. 605; Brown v. Cannon, 10 Ill. 174.

The rule is also founded upon the theory that the principal, as the owner of land, impliedly warrants that he has a marketable title thereto for the purposes desired, and impliedly contracts that he has the ability and can confer a perfect title. Middleton v. Thompson, 163 Pa. 112, 120; Berg v. San Antonio Street R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 43 S. W. 929; Gauthier v. West, 45 Minn. 192, 193; Birmingham Land & Loan Co. v. Thompson, 86 Ala. 146; Sweeney v. Tenmile Oil & Gas Co. 130 Pa. 193; Phelps v. Prusich, 83 Cal. 626; Peet v. Sherwood, 43 Minn. 447.

Loan Co. v. Thompson, 86 Ala. 146; Sweeney v. Tenmile Oil & Gas Co. 130 Pa. 193; Phelps v. Prusich, 83 Cal. 626; Peet v. Sherwood, 43 Minn. 447; Hamlin v. Schulte, 34 Minn. 534; Gerhart v. Peck, 42 Mo. App. 644, 651.

The rule also arises from the fact that the broker is not a guarantor of his principal's title. Clapp v. Hughes, 1 Phila. 382; Hart v. Hopson, 52 Mo. App. 177, 193; Barber v. Hildebrand, 42 Neb. 400.

And that the broker is not responsible for the condition of his principal's title. Kyle v. Rippey, 20 Or. 447.

And that it is the duty of the principal seeking to sell his real estate to look to his title, and that it is no part of the duty of the broker to do this for him. Christensen v. Wooley, 41 Mo. App. 53.

The agent, upon his agreement to negotiate a sale, assumes no obligation or responsibility in reference to the title, unless it is made a part of his duty to have the title examined before attempting to effect a sale, and his right to commission is not dependent upon the contingency of the principal's title being good. Gerhart v. Peck, 42 Mo. App. 644, 651; Roberts v. Kimmons, 65 Miss. 332, 334.

So, it is no part of the broker's duty to make representations as to the title for the reason that he has nothing to do with it, in the absence of evidence showing any violation of trust or duty on his part. Hart v. Hopson, 52 Mo. App. 177, 193.

And it has been held that the broker has nothing to do with the title or ownership of the property, and that even his knowledge as to the title or the equitable estate of another therein is of no consequence, and if the principal wishes to make any stipulations respecting the same they should be made in the contract between himself and the broker. Martin v. Ede, 103 Cal. 157.

But see infra, III. b.

So, the fact that at the time the written contract was entered into between the principal and the agent for compensation for services rendered in procuring a purchaser, the principal had only a possessory title, and afterwards procured a full title, was held not to bar his right to recover. Campbell v. Thomas, 87 Cal. 428.

Again, it has been stated that the question of the delivery of the possession, the examination of the title, and the form of the conveyance with its covenants, are matters which require conference and time for completion, and are for the determination of the owner, and do not pertain to the duties, and are not within the authority, of a real-estate broker. McCullough v. Hitchcock, 71 Conn. 401.

So, if the contract of sale is made without any stipulation as to the examination of the title, the right of the purchaser to examine it is implied and if upon such examination it appears that there is a substantial defect in the title he may decline to proceed and yet the broker will be entitled to his commissions. Watson v. Brooks, 8 Sawy. 316, 319, 320.

Upon the above stated doctrine it was held that where the broker procured a purchaser within the time specified, and the principal refused to complete the transaction upon the assumption that such purchaser was not entitled to examine the state of the title before paying the purchase money and taking the conveyance, unless he could do so within the time limited for making the contract, such refusal on behalf of the principal was wrongful, and constituted a default on his part which entitled the broker to recover his commissions. Ibid.

Where a principal accepted the purchaser introduced by the broker, and entered into a binding contract with him which was not carried out owing to a defect in the title. It was held that the principal could not avail himself of the fact that such purchaser insisted upon the insertion of a clause in the contract referring the question of title to the opinion of counsel, and made his position conclusive upon that question, especially where such condition was agreed to and adopted by the principal as satisfactory to him, and the purchaser was accepted with such modifications of the original terms, and especially as there was no suggestion that such counsel did not act in perfect good faith, or that he did not reach a true and just conclusion, or that the title was not in fact imperfect. Goodridge v. Holladay, 18 Ill. App. 363, 366.

So, it has been held that if the defects shown by the abstract of title are only apparent, and are merely some cloud on the title which could be easily removed, it is the principal's duty to have such cause removed, so that the sale may not fall through on that account, and his neglect in this respect will not bar the broker's right to commissions. Kyle v. Rippey, 20 Or. 447.

And in a case in which there was a defect in the principal's title, and the sale was not completed for two years after the time fixed by the contract, the broker was still held entitled to commissions as there had been no abandonment of the transaction. Michaells v. Gahren, 9 App. Div. 495.

Again if the principal represents that he owns and has a good title to real estate, and employs an agent to sell the same he cannot in the absence of an agreement to that effect deny to the agent compensation for his services in making a sale which is afterwards defeated because the title proved defective. Roberts v. Kimmons, 65 Miss. 332, 334; Middleton v. Findia, 25 Cal. 76, 81; Knapp v. Wallace, 41 N. Y. 477; Doty v. Miller, 43 Barb. 529; Holly v. Gosling, 3 E. D. Smith, 262; Hamlin v. Schulte, 34 Minn. 534; Kock v. Emmerling, 22 How. 69, 16 L. ed. 292; Sibbald v. Bethlehem Iron Co. 83 N. Y. 378, 22 Am. Rep. 441.

Where the principal asserted his title to be good and that his attorneys had so advised him, and there was nothing to show that the broker undertook to pass upon the question of title, or that his right to compensation for services could be denied, it was held that the broker's right to commissions was not affected by any question of title arising between the principal and the purchaser in consequence of which the contract was not performed. Conkling v. Krakauer, 70 Tex. 735.

So, in a case in which the purchaser was ready and willing, and even anxious, to buy, but the principal was unable or unwilling to give a perfect title, and while the money was on deposit awaiting the action on the principal's part he sold the land to another, where the evidence proved that the principal had represented to the broker and to a person who desired to purchase that his title was perfect, but investigation and evidence showed it was not, and the evidence failed to show that the broker was employed to procure a purchaser to take the property regardless of title, it was held that the broker was entitled to his commissions upon the sale, which was never consummated. Sullivan v. Hampton (Tex. Civ. App.) 32 S. W. 235.

And where it was admitted that a purchaser was found willing to purchase at the price, and that a written contract was entered into with the principal, who guaranteed the title to be free and unencumbered, and it subsequently appeared that there was a mortgage upon the property, and the purchaser then refused to purchase, it was held that such fact was not a defense to the broker's right to commissions, as he was not employed to effect a binding contract for the purchase of the property, and did not act as agent in executing the contract, as the contract was signed by the principal himself, whose failure to consummate a binding contract could not militate against the broker's rights, as the broker's duties were performed and his commission earned on finding a purchaser ready and willing to purchase, the duty of effecting a binding contract then devolving upon the principal, whose duty it was to incorporate therein such performance as would make it binding notwithstanding the existence of the mortgage. Helntz v. Boehmer, 4 Ohio N. P. 226.

Again, it has been held that the fact that there is a written agreement to sell signed by the principal, and his tender to the purchasers of a deed with general warranty, precludes any pretense that he intended to sell less than a perfect title, or that he expected the broker to find a purchaser who would be willing to take a title such as his might actually be. Conkling v. Krakauer, 70 Tex. 735.

So, the mere fact that the contract, procured by the broker with the purchaser, provides that the title to the principal's properties, and the legality of the same, shall be satisfactory to the purchaser's attorneys, is not a recognition that an adverse contingency, such as a defect in title, might arise sufficient to defeat the broker's right to commissions. Berg v. San Antonio Street R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 43 S. W. 929.

It has also been held that if the principal enters into an agreement with the purchaser with a condition attached that the deposit made by the purchaser is to be returned if the title should not prove good, the mere fact that such deposit is returned to the purchaser without the knowledge or consent of the principal, owing to a defect in the title, will not affect the broker's right to commission,—especially where the principal, for the purpose of defeating the sale, leads the purchaser to believe the title is bad so as to deprive the broker of his commissions. Phelps v. Prusch, 83 Cal. 626.

And the mere fact that the contract between the broker and his principal contains a stipulation that the commissions are to be paid out of the purchase price will not prevent the broker from recovering the same when the sale is prevented by reason of the defective title of his principal. Cneatham v. Yarbrough, 90 Tenn. 77, 79, 80.

So, under a contract to pay commissions upon a sale of real estate, when the property is transferred to the purchaser by deed, the principal cannot escape liability for commissions where the completion of the sale is prevented by a flaw in his title, especially where the purchaser produced stands ready and willing to complete the purchase upon a perfect title. Gauthier v. West, 45 Minn. 192, 193.

And if the broker agrees to wait for payment of his commissions until the sale is completed, there is still an implied contract that the principal has the ability and can confer upon the purchaser a perfect title to the property. Berg v. San Antonio Street R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 43 S. W. 929.

In Cawker v. Apple, 15 Colo. 141, the broker was held entitled to his commissions upon a sale of property where it turned out, that the title to the whole was not in his principal, and where the principal refused to execute a conveyance of the contract unless he received pay for the land owned by another.

So, it has been held that if the principal has no perfect title in the property, but has merely secured an option to purchase, and such fact is known to the broker at the time of his employment, it will not affect the broker's right to commissions in the absence of a provision in the contract to that effect between the principal and the broker, as it is the principal's fault if he does not guard himself against any defects that may arise in the title to the property which he seeks to purchase. Martin v. Ede, 103 Cal. 157.

In an action against a broker to recover moneys in his hands, in which he made a counterclaim for commissions, and alleged that the noncompletion of the sale was caused by the delay of the principal in procuring a deed to complete his title to the land, an instruction to the jury which directed them that the question as to what would be a reasonable time for procuring a deed, was to be determined by the opinion of men of "ordinary skill and prudence" was held to be erroneous, for the reason that the principal was required to exercise reasonable diligence in his efforts to obtain a deed, and was entitled to the time required in the exercise of such diligence, and the determination of such question of time and of facts as to the acts to be done, and the time required to do such acts, were subjects of consideration which must be shown by proper evidence upon which the jury should determine the question; although the opinion of a party familiar with such business based upon evidence showing what was necessary to be done might be competent, yet in such a case the jury could not be guided by the independent opinion of men "of skill and prudence" not based upon the facts established by the evidence. Dent v. Powell, 80 Iowa, 456.

And in the absence of specific instructions to the contrary the principal's employment of a broker is sufficient authority to the latter to make representations and negotiations upon the basis that the former's title to the property is good, and the mere fact that a real-estate broker, in effecting a sale, makes representations respecting the title to the purchaser, as a matter of opinion, and not on the strength of the personal knowledge of such broker, will not defeat his commissions on a resale of the property to the purchaser under the first sale, even though the purchaser on such second sale refuses to carry out his contract on the ground of a defect in title. Christensen v. Wooley, 41 Mo. App. 53.

In a case in which the principal objected to the claim on the ground that the agent or broker had no authority to make a stipulation that "full briefs of title and searches with opinion of counsel will be required," and to make a memorandum of an acceptance upon the same for the opinion of a specified counsel, the court held that this was within the implied authority of the broker, as the broker had an authority to stipulate that the title should be marketable in the opinion of counsel, and therefore the broker's right to commissions was not affected thereby. Middleton v. Thompson, 103 Pa. 112, 120.

So, even if it be a fact that the legal title to the property was not in the party employing the broker, but in his wife, it would not follow that the broker could not recover in an action against such party, where there is evidence that the party represented himself as owner, and as such put the property in the hands of the broker to sell or exchange, knowing at the time that the plaintiff was a broker, and that he expected a commission, especially where such party stated that it was all right; that he always paid a commission and expected to pay it, and 43 L. R. A.

the evidence did not conclusively show that he was acting on behalf of his wife, and that he so stated, or that he assumed to act in any other than an individual capacity. Jarvis v. Schaefer, 105 N. Y. 289, 292, 293. To the same effect, Clapp v. Hughes, 1 Phila. 382.

In Stange v. Gosse, 110 Mich. 153, the principal and his wife had executed an option for the sale of real estate for a certain sum within a given time, by the terms of which a certain amount was paid down and the balance at a future date. Under this contract the party to whom it was executed was to receive a certain percentage from the amount for his services. The option was assigned to the plaintiff, and a contract was entered into between the principal and his wife and the plaintiff, by which the principal was to sell at a certain price, and an abstract was to be furnished showing a good and perfect title. The title proved defective. In an action to recover the amount paid and the commissions, it was held that the agent was entitled to recover as the failure to consummate the sale by proving a good title was the fault of the principal himself and not of the broker.

Where a written contract was entered into between the parties, and was drawn up by the broker at the instance of his principal, but the same was never consummated owing to the purchaser's rejection of the title and refusal to complete, and the principal alleged that the failure to complete was due to negligence and the careless manner in which the contract was drawn up by the broker, it was held that in the absence of evidence warranting the imputation to the broker of fraud or deceit, or of culpable acts of negligence in the drawing up of such contract, the principal could not escape payment of commissions. Brown v. Helmuth, 50 N. Y. S. R. 524.

The broker was held entitled to recover his commissions under a contract by which he was employed to find a purchaser for his principal's property, and found one who accepted the terms, provided "the titles and franchises are to be subject to proper examination and approval," where the evidence showed that the sale was never consummated owing to a defect in the title to the property which was leased to his principals. Sweeney v. Tenmile Oil & Gas Co. 130 Pa. 193.

In Hart v. Hopson, 52 Mo. App. 177, 193, a broker was employed to procure a contract from a third party of his interest in certain real estate at a fixed compensation to be paid when the contract was obtained, but the sale was never consummated for the reason that the title was valueless. The broker was held entitled to his commission, as he acted in ignorance of the fact, and performed his contract so far as he was bound to.

It has also been held that the mere fact that the title to partnership real estate is vested in one of the partners will not affect the agent's right to commissions where the proceeds of the sale are treated by them as partnership assets distributable according to their interests in such real estate. Copp v. Longstreet, 5 Colo. App. 282.

In an action by a real-estate broker to recover commissions, when the defense turns upon the question whether the title is good or bad, it has been held that such a question is one of law, and that an attorney who is a witness is not to state his opinion on such question of law, but must state the fact as to the title if he knows what the facts are, and it is for the court to state to the jury whether the title is good, if the facts are found as claimed. Leahy v. Hair, 33 Ill. App. 461, 464.

In a case where an action was brought to recover commissions, and where the facts showed that the defendant was an agent to sell lands for a principal, and that he agreed with the plaintiff to pay him a certain commission if he would find a purchaser ready, able, and willing to purchase, and the plaintiff found such a purchaser and then the defendant discovered that the land was not the property of his principal, and that there was therefore a mutual mistake which he claimed avoided the contract to pay commissions, the plaintiff was nevertheless held entitled to his commissions as he was in no way responsible for the mistake. Barthell v. Peter, 88 Wis. 316.

But if the broker's right to receive commissions from a purchaser is made dependent upon the title to the property being satisfactory he cannot recover when the title proves defective and the purchaser withdraws from the transaction in consequence. Bab v. Hirschbels, 35 N. Y. S. R. 580, Reversing 33 N. Y. S. R. 423.

Where the record did not show that the principal's title was not good, and the examination of the title showed that there was a good possessory title, although a quitclaim deed was necessary to make it a good record title, it was held that a good title did not necessarily mean a perfect record title, and that under a report of persons who examined the title, in order to entitle the broker to recover he must show that the title was not good without a quitclaim deed, and that such fact prevented the completion of the sale, before he can recover commission from his principal upon the ground that the sale fell through owing to defective title. Block v. Ryan, 4 App. D. C. 288.

In the above case the broker was employed to find a purchaser. He found one, and the contract was signed by both parties and was confirmed by his principal, and a deposit was paid. The contract provided that the title was to be good or the money was to be refunded, and was to be completed by a certain date, or in default the deposit was to be forfeited. The title was found to be a "good possessory title," although in order to make it a good record title a quitclaim deed was necessary, and this the principal offered to make provided the purchaser made an extra cash payment which could be deducted from the balance, and this the purchaser refused to do and the matter fell through. It was held that the broker was not entitled to his commissions.

And if the broker merely procures a party to make an offer which his principal accepts, without any binding agreement between the parties, and such party refuses to consummate the sale on the ground of a real or supposed defect in the title, the broker cannot claim his commissions as the proposed purchaser has not committed himself to a purchase. Blankenship v. Ryerson, 50 Ala. 426.

So, it has been held that the broker will not be entitled to recover his commission where his principal employs him to sell the estate for an agreed price, and states the source of his title, how he holds the same, and that he can give a warranty deed of the same, and the broker finds one desirous of purchasing, but does not require him to enter into a legal contract, and sends him to the principal, who makes an oral agreement with him as to the terms of the purchase, and the purchaser takes time to examine the title, with which he is dissatisfied and declines to purchase, as the contract being oral is not binding, and the parties are not brought together so as to entitle the broker to his compensation, the principal not being in fault as he made a disclosure of his title and did all he could to complete the sale. Tombs v. Alexander, 101 Mass. 255, 256, 3 Am. Rep. 349. 43 L. R. A.

In a case in which bonded land was given to a broker for sale under an agreement whereby the bondholder was first to make a given sum out of the sale, giving the broker all above that sum for compensation, the broker's right to commission was denied where the sale for an amount in excess of the land was never consummated, by reason of the purchaser's objecting to the title. Seattle Land Co. v. Day, 2 Wash. 451.

So, where an agreement was entered into between the purchaser procured by the broker and the principal, who thought he had a title, under which the purchaser was to take the property at a certain price down, and give his acceptance for the balance of the purchase money, and the principal was to execute a quitclaim deed, but the title was not examined, and the deeds were to be deposited as an escrow to be delivered up on the title proving good, otherwise there was to be no sale, and the sale was not complete as the principal's title proved to be bad. It was held that the broker was not entitled to recover his commissions as there was no failure on the part of the principal to abide by the offer or agreement to sell, and the negotiations failed because the purchasers availed themselves of the privilege which they had stipulated for to recede from the propositions to purchase upon a specified contingency which happened without the fault of the principal. Condict v. Cowdrey, 139 N. Y. 273, 280.

The court distinguished the above case from the cases of Duclos v. Cunningham, 102 N. Y. 678; Sibbald v. Bethlehem Iron Co. 83 N. Y. 378, 22 Am. Rep. 441; Knapp v. Wallace, 41 N. Y. 477; and Barnard v. Monnot, 1 Abb. App. Dec. 110,—as it was not a case in which the owner refused to consummate the sale after the broker had found a purchaser upon the terms originally proposed, or where the principal had been unable to give the stipulated title on account of some defect in it either known at the time the contract was executed or subsequently discovered. Condict v. Cowdrey, 139 N. Y. 273, 280.

And the same conclusion was also reached in the case of Budd v. Zoller, 52 Mo. 238, wherein the broker was employed, not only to enter into negotiations, but to examine the title to the property and see if it was good, and whether the deal could be carried out upon the title, as it was his duty in such a case first to examine into the title. This case is distinguishable from that of Christensen v. Wooley, 41 Mo. App. 53, as in that case there was no claim that the principal agreed to have the title examined before offering the property for sale, the broker's right to commissions being allowed in that case.

If the principal refuses to convey to the purchaser or to carry out the contract owing to a defect in his title, or owing to circumstances which lead him reasonably and honestly to doubt his title to a certain portion of the property, his action in so doing cannot be said to be capricious or arbitrary, and the broker will therefore not be entitled to recover his commissions under a contract relieving the principal from payment of commissions if "for any reason" the sale should not be fully consummated. Flower v. Davidson, 44 Minn. 46.

b. The question of notice.

The general rule as stated in the preceding section, and as indicated by the authorities cited therein, will not, however, hold in cases where the broker has notice of the defective title of his principal; thus—

In Hynes v. Brettelle, 70 Mo. App. 344, where the question of the agent's right to commissions turned upon the question whether or not he had notice of the imperfect condition of the title to the property at the time he made the sale for his principal, the court held that if at the time he made the contract of sale he had no knowledge or information that a certain claim existed against the title, he was entitled to his commissions, as it was not his fault that the sale was not completed, but the fault of his principal in failing to disclose to him the true condition of his title, and the mere fact that he told the purchaser that she was not compelled to accept an imperfect title after he had discovered the defect, would not deprive him of his right to commissions.

And in a case in which a broker was employed to sell property for which he knew his principals had no title, except under a contract to purchase, and the broker found a purchaser who refused to carry out the contract upon the ground that the principal had only a title under the contract to purchase, but no other defect of title was shown, the broker's claim for commissions was disallowed, the sale proving abortive through no fault of the principal. Hoyt v. Shipherd, 70 Ill. 309, 311. See, however, Martin v. Ede, 103 Cal. 157; and Cawker v. Apple, 15 Colo. 141, 111. a, supra.

So, if the broker has knowledge at the time he undertakes to procure a purchaser that some of the vendors are under age and can only make a title to the property and vest the same in a purchaser under an order obtained from the court, even though the broker may be erroneously informed that such an order has been provided for, yet he will not be entitled to commissions where the purchaser objects to take the title under such an order, and insists upon a foreclosure and to taking the title under a sale. Folsom v. Lewis, 14 Misc. 605.

In the above case the court pointed out that the sale did not fall through owing to the inability or unwillingness of the owner to give a title, and the broker knew at the outset the source from which the title was offered, and it was for him before offering a purchaser to ascertain that the latter would take such title.

Yet, where the purchaser found by the broker had knowledge at the time he entered into the contract that proceedings affecting the title were pending in the probate court, it was held that the fact was not sufficient to defeat the broker's right to commissions, especially where the purchaser was ready and willing to complete the contract, and was accepted by and contracted with the principal. Lemon v. Lloyd, 46 Mo. App. 452.

And where there is no evidence whatever as to notice or knowledge on the part of the broker of any defect in the title, when he undertakes to sell the property, it is error for the court to charge the jury that, if the broker has notice or knowledge of any infirmity in the title of the principal to the property to be sold when he undertakes the sale or when he finds a purchaser he cannot recover. Davis v. Morgan, 96 Ga. 518, 520.

IV. Misrepresentation and fraud of principal.

The principal cannot relieve himself from liability to the broker for commissions by any fraud or misrepresentation toward him.

It has been held that if the principal voluntarily sells to the purchaser found by the broker for a less sum than that given by him to the broker as the selling price he commits a fraud upon the broker. Rees v. Spruance, 45 Ill. 308, 310.

And in any dealing with the purchaser procured by the broker the principal must show that he acted in good faith, and if bad faith intervenes the broker's claim for commissions will be sustained. McKnight v. Thayer, 48 N. Y. S. R. 620.

So, any false representation or affirmation of any matter which is material as an existing fact distinguished from mere opinion, or any intention or promise made as an inducement to lead the broker to enter into an agreement relinquishing his full rights to commission and to accept a less sum, is such a fraud as will authorize a rescission of such contract. Dobinson v. McDonald, 92 Cal. 33, 37.

And under a contract whereby the broker had a specified time in which to sell the property at a certain commission if he procured a customer, or if the principal sold within twelve months, a false statement made by a principal to the broker to the effect that he had not sold the property, whereby he induced him to take a certain sum and surrender the agreement, was held not to relieve the principal from the payment of the commissions due to the broker. Ibid.

In Geery v. Pollock, 16 App. Div. 321, 323, where the brokers proved their employment by the principal to bring about a sale to him of certain premises; that their efforts in that direction procured an offer and a sale; and that the sale was made by the principal directly for the purpose of evading the payment of the commissions to the brokers and securing them for himself,—it was held that under such circumstances the brokers were entitled to recover.

Where the principal informed the broker he had sold the property, asked what his charge was, and was told that as he, the broker, had not sold the property he had no charge unless he had advertised it which he had not done, but that the principal might give him what he chose, and the principal made a payment which the broker said was satisfactory, but the plaintiff's evidence showed that he furnished the information which induced the purchaser to purchase the property, it was held proper to submit the question to the jury whether the failure of the principal to inform the plaintiff of the name of the party to whom he sold the house, considering all the circumstances under which it occurred, was such a concealment of the material fact by the principal as would entitle the plaintiff to avoid the settlement made, and into which he had been entrapped by the defendant. Newhall v. Pierce, 115 Mass. 437.

So, the principal and the purchaser cannot by any arrangement between them disappoint the broker's right to commission, when the broker has brought about an introduction of the purchaser, and the negotiations result in a sale to him. Vreeland v. Vetterlein, 33 N. J. L. 247, 249.

In Randrup v. Schroeder, 22 Misc. 365, a new trial was ordered. Upon such trial new evidence was introduced which showed that the husband of the defendant told the plaintiff broker after the introduction of the purchaser that if any one of the houses was sold to that individual commissions would be paid to him upon such sale. In this case the original intention was that the houses which were placed in the plaintiff's hands should be sold in a certain order, but this order was waived. The court held that as the plaintiff had exerted his influence upon such purchaser with respect to all the houses, and as there was to be implied from the promise a ratification or adoption of the act of such broker in endeavoring to induce a sale of the properties in an order other than that originally intended, that the broker was the procuring cause of the sale of one of such houses, and was entitled to his commissions, although the title of the same was taken in the name of a nominal purchaser, for the purpose of defrauding him of his commissions.

Upon the first trial of the above case in support of a claim for commissions, the broker called the purchaser of record as a witness who testified that the purchaser originally found by the broker with whom a sale was not consummated had told him that the title on a subsequent sale was taken in his name in order that both parties to the transaction might defraud the broker of his commissions. It was held that while such evidence might have supported a finding of an admission by the party who made it that the broker was entitled to a commission it did not serve as evidence of the defendant's admission of the fact. Randrup v. Schroeder, 21 Misc. 52.

If the broker's power to effect a sale is uncertain, and no one is ready to purchase, whatever may be thought of the property or fairness of the principal's actions in taking the matter out of the broker's hands after the latter has informed him that he has parties in view who he thinks will accept the offer and with whom he hopes to conclude a bargain, the principal is not chargeable with legal fraud in revoking the agency and concluding a sale himself, especially when the facts show that the broker has had the property in his hands for a long time, and that the principal's action is not arbitrary. Slater v. Holt, 10 N. Y. S. R. 257, 261.

In Hannan v. Moran, 71 Mich. 261, the purchase fell through owing to a misrepresentation on the part of the principal that a certain sewer privilege existed which in point of fact did not exist, and a bargain with a subsequent purchaser also fell through by reason of the principal backing out of his offer owing to his wife having an interest in the property which he had not mentioned or disclosed. The court upheld the broker's claim for commission.

The mere fact, however, that the brokers in their claim for commissions allege fraud on the part of the principal, but do not establish the same, will not defeat their claim for commissions which are earned under their contract as their claim for commission is not dependent thereon. Anderson v. Wedeking, 102 Iowa, 446.

But if negotiations for an exchange are declared off with the purchaser found by the broker, and the principal notifies the broker that he withdraws his offer, and the other party then places the property in the hands of another broker, and a deal is subsequently made between the same parties under other influences upon the terms of the first one, the mere fact that the parties finally treat upon the same terms is not of itself evidence of such bad faith on the principal's part as will render him liable for the broker's commissions, especially where the evidence shows that the parties did not intend or expect to renew them. Uphoff v. Ulrich, 2 Ill. App. 399, 401.

In Cohen v. Hershfield, 16 Daly, 96, the broker was employed to find a purchaser and found one in the person of the defendant, who he claimed conspired with one to cheat and defraud him out of his commissions by concealing the fact that she had become such purchaser through the efforts and instrumentality of the broker, and falsely and fraudulently with intent to deceive induced the principal to pay such commissions to the other party and brought action against the defendant to recover damages. The court, however, refused the broker's claim and dismissed such action.

In a case where the broker found a party ready, willing, and able to purchase at the price and upon the terms mentioned by the principal, provided the monthly rentals were equal to those represented to him by the broker, and the broker obtained his information respecting such rentals from his principal, who stated that they amounted to a given sum, whereas in point of fact they were much less, and the purchaser thereupon refused to complete, it was held that the broker could not recover his commissions. Curtiss v. Mott, 90 Hun, 439. In this case, however, Justice O'Brien dissented. The court also questioned whether the broker might not have an action to recover damages occasioned by the misrepresentations of his principal which prevented the performance of his contract, but as the question was not directly raised did not pass an opinion thereon.

In a case in which the contract or agreement between the principal and the purchaser had been abrogated and a new one entered into, which entirely disregarded the broker's claim for commissions, it was held that a charge that the whole question was one of fraud, and that unless the principal made the consequent contract of sale with the dishonest and corrupt purpose of preventing the broker from getting his commissions due under the original contract, he could not recover, was erroneous. Bishop v. Averill, 17 Wash. 209.

E. W.

TEXAS COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEALS.

Charles GUSTAFSON, Appt.,

v.

STATE of Texas.

(.....Tex.....)

1. The exclusion of residents of the state who are not taxpayers, but who are willing to pay the license tax, from fishing in the public waters of the state as taxpayers are allowed to do, is in violation of Const. art. 1, § 3, which guarantees equal rights, and prohibits exclusive, separate public emoluments or privileges, except in consideration of public services.

NOTE.—As to equal rights in respect to taking oysters or fish from public waters, see note to Louisville Safety Vault & T. Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 14 L. R. A. on page 582; also Bittenhaus v. Johnston (Wis.) 32 L. R. A. 380; and State v. Higgins (S. C.) 38 L. R. A. 561. 43 L. R. A.

2. A statute authorizing the granting of a license for taking oysters in public waters is altogether invalid when it limits the privilege to taxpayers, and cannot be enforced to the extent of requiring a license from those within its benefits and privileges.

(December 21, 1898.)*

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Galveston County convicting him of taking oysters from the public beds of the state without having first procured a license. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

*A decision was reached and an opinion handed down in this case on May 4, 1898, affirming the judgment below. A rehearing was subsequently granted and the present opinion handed down, which supersedes the other and makes its publication of no value. [Ed.]

Messrs. Byron Johnson and Marsene Johnson for appellant.

Messrs. Spencer & Kincaid, for the State:

None of the appellants had offered to pay the license fee or taken any steps to procure a license, and hence the question as to whether the restriction of such license to "a resident taxpayer of the state of Texas" is constitutional or not does not arise in the case.

Curry v. State, 28 Tex. App. 477.

The public reefs and oyster beds of the state are the property of the state, and the state owns them just as it owns its public lands, and the legislature of the state may dispose of the right to take oysters from the reefs and beds of the state to whomsoever it pleases.

State v. Harrub, 95 Ala. 176, 15 L. R. A. 761, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 99.

The license fee required in this case is not an occupation tax.

Tiedeman, Pol. Power, p. 279; 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 532, 533.

Messrs. W. W. Walling and Mann Trice also for the State.

Henderson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant was convicted of a violation of the fish and oyster law, and his punishment assessed at a fine of $15. The case was affirmed at the Austin term, 1898, and now comes before us on motion for rehearing. The decision was predicated on the proposition that the statute making this a penal offense had not been repealed. Appellant, however, insists that we overlooked the constitutional question raised by him, and now urges the same. He claims that the statute is violative of that provision of § 3 of article 1 of our Bill of Rights which reads as follows: "All free men when they form a social compact have equal rights, and no man or set of men is entitled to exclusive separate public emoluments or privileges, but in consideration of public services." The clause of the statute which he contends is in violation of this provision of the Constitution is that portion which limits the right to pursue the business of catching oysters in the public waters of the state to all citizens of the United States, resident in the state of Texas, who are taxpayers; thus inhibiting all citizens of the United States who may be residents of the state of Texas, but who are not taxpayers, from taking oysters in waters controlled or owned by the state. We are referred to articles 529k and 529l, Penal Code 1895. Article 529k is as follows: "It shall be unlawful for any person to catch or take oysters from the public beds and reefs for sale who is not a bona fide citizen of the United States and a resident and taxpayer of the state. Any person offending against this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not less than $10 nor more than $250." Article 529l reads: "It shall be unlawful for any person to gather oysters with tongs or otherwise from the public beds and reefs of this state for sale without a license from the fish and oyster commissioner or his deputy for each and every pair of tongs that shall be used on his boat, and for such license he must pay to the fish and oyster commissioner or his deputy the sum of $5 for each pair of tongs; and any person shall be entitled to hold such license who is a citizen of the United States and a resident and taxpayer of the state of Texas. Such license shall be good from day of issuance until April 30th next; such license shall be signed by the fish and oyster commissioner or his deputy, and stamped with the seal of his office, and shall state the name of applicant and date of issuance; provided, that any person holding such license in his own name may take or catch oysters from any boat. Anyone offending against this article shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not less than $10, nor more than $250, and each day shall constitute a separate offense." So it will be seen that the statutes on the subject are as claimed by him; that is, that persons who are not taxpayers, although they may be citizens of the United States, and residents in the state of Texas, cannot procure a license to take oysters within the waters of the state, although they may be able to purchase a license, and make tender of the amount to the proper authority. The question then is, Does the fact that such persons are prohibited from procuring a license, while all other persons, citizens of the United States, and residents within the state of Texas, and taxpayers, can procure a license, to take oysters, render the statute in question violative of the Constitution of the state, above quoted. We can find no case in which the question as here presented has been adjudicated. We do find a number of cases in which the question of proprietary rights and common rights in fisheries has been discussed. In all the cases, so far as we are advised, it is held that navigable rivers, and contiguous portions of the sea embraced within the territory belonging to the state, are the property of the state, that they belong to all the citizens thereof, and that every citizen has a right in common with every other citizen to take fish in such waters. See Collins v. Benbury, 25 N. C. (3 Ired. L.) 277, 38 Am. Dec. 722; Carson v. Blazer, 2 Binney, 475, 4 Am. Dec. 463; Chalker v. Dickinson, 1 Conn. 382, 6 Am. Dec. 250; Lay v. King, 5 Day, 72; Peck v. Lockwood, 5 Day, 22. The last-cited case was a case involving the right to take shellfish on land claimed by plaintiff. The facts were that plaintiff owned a tract of land fronting on the river, where the tide ebbed and flowed. At low tide the locus in quo was dry land, but, when the tide was in, it was covered by the flow of the sea. Plaintiff claimed proprietary rights in the locus in quo, and defendant justified on the ground that at high water it was a part of the river or sea, and was open, for the purposes of fishing, to all the citizens of the state. The court discussed a number of common-law authorities on the subject, and from them deduced the following: "That the right to fish on the soil of another, when overflowed with the tide from the sea or arm of the sea, is a common right; and everyone may fish in the sea, of common right, though it flows on the soil of another." As stated, however, there is no controversy upon this point: that is, that the locus in quo in this case was the property of the state. Nor is it controverted that the state may properly regulate the use of all its property, but it is insisted that in granting privileges to use its public domain, whether of land or water, it must do so under the operation of the fundamental principle upon which our government is established,—that is, equality. Our Constitution provides (§ 3, art. 1): "All free men when they form a social compact have equal rights, and no man or set of men is entitled to exclusive separate public emoluments or privileges, but in consideration of public services." Section 26 provides: "Perpetuities and monopolies are contrary to the genius of a free government, and shall never be allowed." Mr. Cooley says on this subject (Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 485): "Equality of rights, privileges, and capacities unquestionably should be the aim of the law; and if special privileges are granted, or special burdens or restrictions imposed in any case, it must be presumed that the legislature designed to depart as little as possible from this fundamental maxim of government. The state, it is to be presumed, has no favors to bestow, and designs to inflict no arbitrary deprivation of rights. Special privileges are always obnoxious, and discrimination against persons or classes is still more so." But it is contended here that the right to take the oysters in the public waters of the state is a privilege which the state can bestow as it pleases; that it can lease or let its public domain on whatever terms it sees fit. We cannot assent to this proposition. It might be so in a kingly government, but not in a free government, in which all are equal before the law. And right here, it occurs to us, is where the provisions of our Constitution above quoted come into operation. The state has no right to discriminate against any citizen or class of citizens as to the enjoyment of its public domain. The state has no more right to authorize one class of its citizens, to the exclusion of another class, to use or rent this character of property, than it would have to authorize one class of its citizens, to the exclusion of another class of its citizens, to rent or use its public lands. We do not believe it would be seriously contended that the state could authorize only taxpayers to rent its public domain of lands, to the exclusion of another class of its citizens, who were not taxpayers. This would not only be a discrimination, but discrimination in favor of the rich as against the poor; and this, as we understand it, was exactly what our Constitution intended to guard against. If the state could authorize its citizens who were taxpayers to fish, and inhibit its citizens who were not taxpayers from fishing, in its public waters, it could equally authorize its citizens who were not taxpayers to fish in such waters to the exclusion of those who were taxpayers. In this connection, we would observe that we think the law on this subject, as passed by the legislature, intended to apply to persons who paid taxes on property. If this be the true construction, then a great number of our citizens would be deprived of the power to procure a license to take oysters in the public waters of the state, no matter how willing they might be to pay the license tax and comply with the law in other respects. But it is said that our Constitution authorizes a poll tax. But if one who pays a poll tax be considered a taxpayer, under the provisions of this law, we find that the legislature has eliminated certain citizens from the payment of the poll tax: that is, it has exempted persons over a certain age from the payment of a poll tax. And the defendant in one of these cases offered to prove that he was exempt, under the provisions of the statute, from the payment of the poll tax, and that, not being even a poll-tax payer, under the law he was debarred the right of procuring a license. This illustrates the fact that if it be conceded that a poll-tax payer is a taxpayer, in contemplation of this law, still it operates against a class of our citizens. It may be said, however, that the law may be unconstitutional in part, but operative as to those who are not excluded from its benefits and privileges. To this we reply that we do not believe that the act is so framed as to be separated, and a part held to be constitutional. The fact that it is class legislation qualifies the act, or that provision of it authorizing the granting of a license, and so renders it unconstitutional and void. Pullman Palace Car Co. v. State, 64 Tex. 274; Ex parte Jones, 38 Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 43 S. W. 513.

43 L. R. A.

We hold that the waters of the state, as well as all its domain of public lands, are equally open to all of its citizens upon the same terms and conditions, and that the attempt of the legislature to prohibit residents of the state who are not taxpayers, but who are willing to pay the license tax, from fishing in the public waters of the state, is violative of those provisions of the Constitution before mentioned. We therefore hold that the act in question levying the license tax is null and void.

The motion for rehearing is granted, and the judgment is reversed, and the prosecution ordered dismissed.

Hurt, P. J.:

Owing to bad health, I have not given the subject discussed in this opinion that investigation necessary for me to form an opinion. I therefore express no opinion upon the question upon which the judgment was reversed.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, FIRST CIRCUIT.

Christine HEKKING, Plff. in Err.,
v.

Henry PFAFF, Jr.

(91 Fed. Rep. 60.)

1. A Federal court in which a suit is brought upon the decree of a court in a state other than that in which it is sitting may inquire into the jurisdiction of that court to render the decree for the purpose of determining its validity.
2. A personal judgment for alimony cannot be rendered in a divorce suit against a defendant over whom the court has acquired no jurisdiction.
3. The acceptance by a defendant in a divorce suit over whom no jurisdiction was obtained of the decree, and his remarrying, do not estop him from disputing the validity of a subsequent ex parte proceeding in the divorce suit by which the judgment is opened and a decree for alimony entered against him.

(December 29, 1898.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Massachusetts to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to enforce payment of alimony. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Before Colt, Circuit Judge, and Webb and Aldrich, District Judges.

Messrs. Charles H. Winsor and David F. Kimball for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. James Fox, Edwin B. Hale, and Gerard Bennett for defendant in error.

Aldrich, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The parties to this case were married in December, 1889, at the city of Stuttgart, in the Kingdom of Wurtemberg, Germany. Henry Pfaff, Jr., the husband, who is the defendant here, was then, and is now, a citizen of Massachusetts. The wife's maiden name was Christine Hekking, and it is not claimed that she was either a citizen or resident of South Dakota at the time of her marriage, but according to her present claim she subsequently became a resident of that state, and was a resident in good faith for more than ninety days prior to bringing her proceeding in such state for a divorce. The husband was never a citizen of South Dakota, and it does not appear that he ever resided or had property there. The wife's divorce proceedings were begun in South Dakota in December, 1892. After alleging residence, and her causes, she prayed for a divorce and for alimony. The proceeding was advanced upon the theory that the husband was not in South Dakota, and that his residence was unknown. A summons was issued, and an officer made return that the defendant could not be found.

NOTE.—As to validity of divorce obtained on publication or service out of the state, where the defendant did not appear, see note to Butler v. Washington (La.) 19 L. R. A. 814; also Atherton v. Atherton (N. Y.) 40 L. R. A. 291. 43 L. R. A.

Thereupon the judge, reciting the fact that the defendant husband could not be found within the state after due diligence, that he was not a resident of said state, and that his residence was unknown, ordered that the summons be served by publication in the Sioux Valley News, that a copy of the summons be deposited in the postoffice directed to the defendant at Hotel zur Krone, Cassel, Germany, where it was ascertained he last was, and another copy directed to him at the city of Boston, in care of his father, at 330 Walnut avenue. It does not appear from the record that the defendant's property was attached in the state of South Dakota, and it is not claimed that the defendant had actual notice of the proceeding against him, or that he appeared therein by counsel or otherwise. It does, however, appear that the cause came on for trial in April, 1893, the husband not appearing, and, upon evidence that the order of notice had been complied with, the state court assumed jurisdiction of the cause, adjudged the bonds of matrimony between the parties dissolved, and that the plaintiff have leave to resume her maiden name. The prayer for alimony was not passed upon at this time, and there was no express reservation of that question for future consideration. In March, 1896,—nearly three years later,—upon motion of the plaintiff's attorney, leave was granted to amend the complaint, and add material allegations as to the plaintiff's lack of means of support and the defendant husband's income and ability to afford relief. There was no notice of this motion, and none in the cause other than that originally given. The defendant did not appear, and there is no evidence that he had knowledge of this proceeding. On the contrary, the fact appears from the pleadings here that he had no knowledge of the motion to amend, or of the alimony proceedings and judgment, until this suit was commenced, in July, 1896. It appears that, as the cause progressed ex parte in the South Dakota court, the decree of April, 1893, was "opened so as to allow plaintiff, as a part of said decree, an allowance for alimony and support from defendant to plaintiff," and in June, 1896, it was ordered and adjudged, after hearing allegations and proofs, that the plaintiff be allowed the sum of $25,000, to be immediately paid by the defendant to her or her attorneys, and that this order or judgment be a part of the original judgment, and take effect from the date thereof. So much for a statement of a history of the South Dakota proceedings as disclosed by the record.

The case before us is based upon the money-demand feature of the South Dakota judgment, and the question is whether such judgment is binding upon the defendant, and should be upheld and enforced extra territorium. Before coming to the precise question upon which the plaintiff makes her chief contention, we may refer generally to the well-settled doctrine that the Federal constitutional provision that full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the records, acts, and judicial proceedings of the courts and magistrates of every other state does not preclude inquiry into the jurisdiction of the court in which the judgment is rendered (Simmons v. Saul, 138 U. S. 439, 448, 34 L. ed. 1054, 1059); and, though the Federal courts are not foreign tribunals in the sense of their relations to the courts of the various states (Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 732, 24 L. ed. 565, 572), they are tribunals of a different sovereignty, exercising a distinct and independent jurisdiction, and bound to no greater measure of faith and credit than is required between the courts of the different states.

The question of jurisdiction being thus open to us, and it appearing from the records of the South Dakota court that no personal service was made upon the defendant, we must treat the judgment, so far as it relates to a recovery of the $25,000, or, in other words, the money part of the judgment, as not binding upon the defendant, unless the feature urged by the plaintiff, which we shall consider further on, excepts this judgment from the general rule in respect to judgments in personam. Indeed, counsel for the plaintiff makes no serious contention to the contrary of this doctrine as a general rule of law, for he says in the concluding paragraph of his brief: "Had he [the defendant] not married in this case, I would not be here presenting it, for I believe it [the judgment] would have been worthless outside the state limits of South Dakota." In view of this statement of counsel, and the well-settled doctrine to which we have referred we do not feel called upon to discuss further the general question as to the validity of such judgments or decrees; and it may be further observed that no point is presented which calls for consideration of the question of the power of states to regulate and determine the civil status of its own citizens or residents towards the citizens or residents of other states; and there is no question here as to the power of a state to regulate the causes and the procedure upon which the marital relations between a resident of such state and a resident of another state shall be dissolved. Such questions, if ever material to the validity of such judgments and decrees, are rendered immaterial here in respect to the pecuniary feature of this judgment by the absence of personal service,—an original, fundamental, and, as a general rule, an indispensable, essential of judgments in personam.

We now come to the question on which the plaintiff principally relies. The defendant subsequently knowing of the original ex parte divorce proceeding in South Dakota, and the original decree of dissolution, and in reliance thereon, married again. Such marriage was prior to the proceeding which resulted in the decree for alimony, and the point taken is that, the defendant having recognized the original decree for divorce, and acted upon it, he ratified and made good all defects in the procedure, if there were any, and that he is not only estopped by his conduct from questioning the validity of the 43 L. R. A.

original judgment, but the subsequent proceeding and judgment for alimony, which it is claimed were incident thereto. The case before us was a jury-waived case, and was tried in the circuit court by a judge upon issues to the court. The question of estoppel by conduct is one of mixed law and fact, and the general finding was that the judgment on which the action is based is void, and upon such general finding judgment was ordered for the defendant. We infer from the record and the opinion of the circuit court, which is annexed thereto, that the general finding involved, in the first instance, a finding and decision of the question of estoppel against the plaintiff. The record is incomplete, in that no bill of exceptions is disclosed, and the assignment of errors is general, and directed, first, against the decision of the circuit court that the subsequent marriage did not operate as a waiver, ratification, or an estoppel, and, second, against the general finding that the South Dakota judgment is void. General exceptions do not, ordinarily, lie, in jury-waived cases, to general findings upon mixed questions of law and fact, but are limited to specific rulings in respect to controverted points of law involved therein. We are inclined, however, in this case, to take the view most favorable to the plaintiff, and treat the first error assigned as directed against the holding, involved in the opinion of the circuit court, that the second marriage did not operate as an estoppel or ratification in respect to subsequent proceedings in the South Dakota court; and, as the pleadings indicate that both parties intended to raise this question for decision, we are disposed to consider it. This must not be accepted, however, as an indication that cases will be considered in the future without specific exceptions to rulings, and a distinct assignment of errors, but rather as an admonition that they will not. We do not think it necessary to consider and determine the correctness or incorrectness of the probable rule, sometimes questioned, that in divorce proceedings the questions of alimony and support are open until finally considered and passed upon, and that such questions are then treated as incidents of the original judgment or decree, for the reason, as it seems to us, that, if this were assumed to be strictly true, the case logically and necessarily turns upon another view. The doctrine of estoppel is an equitable doctrine; that is to say, equitable in the sense that the law holds it would be unjust, unfair, and inequitable to allow a party to take a position, and hold it, in respect to matters within his knowledge, while another party acts in reliance thereon, and then change to another and different position, to the prejudice of the one who has so acted and relied. So a rule of law has resulted which enjoins a party, under certain circumstances, from denying that which he has once asserted and acted upon as true. It may be that the defendant, having acted upon the divorce decree in South Dakota, would be estopped in a proceeding in respect to the decree of divorce from setting up its invalidity. It may be that he would be estopped from questioning the validity of the proceeding so far as what had been done at the time of his second marriage in reliance thereon. But these are questions which we need not determine, for the validity of the decree dissolving the marriage is not in question. Admittedly, the motion to open the original decree in South Dakota and the actual proceeding for alimony, which resulted in an allowance and a judgment for $25,000, were subsequent to the defendant's second marriage, and according to the record here he had no knowledge of such proceedings until this suit was brought on the South Dakota judgment. So, in order to hold according to the contention of the plaintiff, we must, by force of a supposed abstract theory or rule of law which makes things subsequent incident to, and a part of, the prior original transaction, adjudge the defendant estopped, not only from denying conditions of which he had no knowledge, but conditions not in existence. As we understand it, estoppel by conduct applies to conditions known to the party who is to be estopped, and perhaps operates upon incidents and conditions naturally and necessarily flowing therefrom; but a rule that such estoppel should operate upon conditions not known, and especially upon things not in esse, or upon conditions resulting, as in this case, from subsequent affirmative procedure, investigation, and proofs, would give a scope and effect to estoppel by conduct beyond that disclosed in any decision brought to our attention, and would be against equity, contrary to principle, and dangerous to all interests. The doctrine of estoppel by conduct as now understood and administered, is sometimes characterized as a harsh doctrine in practical operation. However that may be, we do not think we should be expected to unwarrantably enlarge its scope in favor of a plaintiff who, knowing the defendant to be absent and in Europe, and while his whereabouts were unknown, precipitates divorce proceedings in a distant state remote from that of the defendant husband, under circumstances which force the presumption that such forum was sought for the reason that the law of the state was more favorable to her than that of the state of her husband's residence, and so favorable to parties seeking a divorce as to be generally accepted as against public policy and morality. We do not think the defendant is estopped from denying the validity of the South Dakota proceedings subsequent to his second marriage, and, aside from the question of estoppel, the decree and judgment for alimony are void for want of notice to the defendant, and consequently of jurisdiction.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed, with costs of this court.

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

STATE of Connecticut

v.

John H. BRADNECK, Appt.

(69 Conn. 212.)

1. The record and judgment of dismissal in a divorce proceeding for adultery is not admissible in a subsequent criminal prosecution for nonsupport of wife in defense of which the same acts of adultery are sought to be set up.
2. Error in admitting a judgment as evidence in another suit is not relieved by the court's statement to the jury that the judgment is not conclusive but merits serious consideration.
3. Statements by a man when stopped on his way from the room of a married woman at night are not admissible as part of the res gestæ upon the question of the woman's adultery.
4. One who pleads adultery of his wife to a criminal charge of nonsupport cannot be held to the answers given on cross-examination by a witness for the state to the effect that witness never had said that he had been criminally intimate with defendant's wife, but may introduce evidence to contradict him.

(May 25, 1897.)

NOTE.—As to admissibility of judgment in other action in which parties are not the same, see also Tierney v. Phenix Ins. Co. (N. D.) 36 L. R. A. 700; Carlisle v. Killebrew (Ala.) 6 L. R. A. 617; Brown v. Bradlee (Mass.) 15 L. R. A. 509; and Re Kirby (S. D.) 39 L. R. A. 856, 859.
43 L. R. A.

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Criminal Court of Common Pleas for New Haven County convicting him of refusing and neglecting to support his wife. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. P. W. Chase, for appellant:

Circumstances so intimately interwoven as the guilty act of a man running from the house of another, and while so running and at the time of being caught by an officer of the law, making statements explanatory of his acts, certainly was admissible evidence.

Enos v. Tuttle, 3 Conn. 250; Wooden v. Cowles, 11 Conn. 300; Comins v. Comins, 21 Conn. 418; Sears v. Hayt, 37 Conn. 407; Douglas v. Chapin, 26 Conn. 92; Spencer v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 62 Conn. 248.

Defendant could have proved that Donegan made statements which would have conclusively shown that he had been in the sleeping apartments of the defendant's wife on said night, and that she had invited him there. These statements were material to the defendant's case, and should have been admitted by the court.

Wright v. Boston, 126 Mass. 161; Salem v. Lynn, 13 Met. 544; May v. Bradlee, 127 Mass. 414; Blake v. Damon, 103 Mass. 199.

A record of the court to be used in evidence for the purpose of affecting the issue involved is not evidence if not conclusive.

Bethlehem v. Watertown, 51 Conn. 494, 47 Conn. 237; Burdick v. Norwich, 49 Conn.

228; Parker v. Kenyon, 112 Mass. 264; Globe Works v. Wright, 106 Mass. 207.

The record and file of the superior court relative to the petition for divorce wherein the defendant in this case and Mary C. Bradneck, his wife, were the parties, was a matter entirely foreign to the criminal proceedings in this case, and did not bear upon it in any way which the law will recognize.

State v. Alford, 31 Conn. 41.

The fact that the trial court stated that this evidence was not conclusive will not excuse his error. If it was not conclusive it was not evidence.

Bethlehem v. Watertown, 51 Conn. 494, 47 Conn. 237; Burdick v. Norwich, 49 Conn. 225; Globe Works v. Wright, 106 Mass. 207; Parker v. Kenyon, 112 Mass. 264.

The state's witness, Donegan, had emphatically in several different forms denied that he had ever been guilty of adultery with said Mary C. Bradneck at any time. Upon cross-examination said Donegan was specifically asked if he had not made statements out of court, contradicting his testimony during the trial to which said Donegan replied in the negative. Thus, it will be seen that all conditions necessary to make evidence to contradict him admissible and pertinent and material were complied with, and therefore a gross error was committed in excluding the same.

Thorp v. Brookfield, 36 Conn. 325; McGinnis v. Grant, 42 Conn. 79; Beecher v. Beecher, 43 Conn. 561; Beardsley v. Wildman, 41 Conn. 516; White v. Griffing, 44 Conn. 448; Saunders's Appeal, 54 Conn. 114; Hedge v. Clapp, 22 Conn. 268, 58 Am. Dec. 424; State v. Randolph, 24 Conn. 368; Stevens v. Curtiss, 3 Conn. 265; Beers v. Broome, 4 Conn. 257; Salisbury v. State, 6 Conn. 104.

Mr. George M. Gunn for appellee.

Fenn, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant was tried in the court of common pleas for the transaction of criminal business in New Haven county, charged with the crime of refusing and neglecting to support his wife. He was convicted, and appealed to this court.

It appears, from the finding, that upon the trial the state offered evidence to prove the neglect and refusal of the appellant to support his wife; that the appellant offered no evidence to contradict this, but relied for his defense upon the claim, as an excuse, that his wife had been guilty of adultery with one Daniel Donegan of New Haven. Under such claim the appellant offered testimony tending to prove, and claimed he had proved, various acts of adultery on the part of his wife with said Donegan upon particular dates in July, August, September, and October, 1895. The state, in rebuttal offered in evidence the files and records in certain divorce proceedings brought by the appellant against his wife, tried in the superior court, and dismissed. This evidence was objected to; but the court, after examining the papers, said: "It appears, from an examination of the files in the divorce proceedings in the case of John H. Bradneck v. Mary C. Bradneck, that the specific statement filed by the plaintiff contains allegations of adultery on all the dates which have been claimed here; that these allegations were denied, and therefore put in issue. I think the record is admissible." To this ruling the appellant excepted. The court in its charge to the jury, referring to this evidence, said: "There is one thing I ought to suggest to the jury, and that is that Mr. Bradneck on his own volition, or at his own volition, has had a portion, at least, of this case submitted to a tribunal which had jurisdiction of it. He brought an action for divorce against his wife, and had a trial, and that tribunal was not satisfied that he had there proved the charges on the dates which he now alleges in this court were the dates on which she committed adultery. While I do not rule that this is conclusive evidence in this case, it is my duty, having admitted it, to suggest to the jury that it is evidence to which they ought to give serious consideration."

We think it clear that in admitting this evidence the court below erred. That criminal sentences are not evidence in civil issues has been often held, the reason being that the parties to a criminal prosecution and those in a civil suit are necessarily different, and the objects and results of the two proceedings are equally diverse. See Betts v. New Hartford, 25 Conn. 185; 2 Wharton, Ev. § 777. So the converse of this rule, namely, that a judgment in a civil action is not admissible in a subsequent criminal prosecution, is equally true. Thus, for example, a judgment recovered against a defaulting tax collector and his sureties, in a civil action at the suit of the county, was held not competent evidence against them in a prosecution on the criminal side afterwards instituted for the default. Britton v. State, 77 Ala. 202. So, in Riker v. Hooper, 35 Vt. 457, 82 Am. Dec. 646, a former judgment in a civil action was held not conclusive in a penal action between the same parties, though the same question was litigated in both actions, because the measure of proof is different in the two actions. The only case upon which the state relied, in argument before us, as holding a different doctrine, is that of Dorrell v. State, 83 Ind. 357. This was a prosecution for the unlawful removal of a fence from land; and it was there considered that a judgment in a former civil action between the defendant and the prosecuting witness, rendered before the commission of the alleged trespass, whereby the disputed boundary line between their respective lands was defined and settled, was admissible in evidence. But the court here also recognized the general rule that civil judgments are not admissible in criminal prosecutions, but decided as it did because it thought that the establishment of the boundary line was one of the "legal consequences" of the judgment, to prove which, as well as the fact of its rendition, a judgment is always admissible, even against strangers. The error to which we have referred, in admitting the evidence in question, was not relieved by what the court stated to the jury, to the effect that such evidence was not conclusive, but merited serious consideration. As was held by this court in Bethlehem v. Watertown, 51 Conn. 494: "A judgment is conclusive, or it is nothing. If not conclusive, there is no rule by which courts can measure and determine its effect."

The appellant offered evidence to prove that on one occasion the said Donegan was caught at night in the bedroom occupied by the appellant's wife; that he endeavored to escape, but, as he came running out of the house, hat in hand, he was arrested by an officer. Thereupon the appellant's brother, who was present at the time of such arrest, was asked, as a witness for the defense: "What was the conversation that you had with Daniel Donegan at the time when Officer Shields grabbed him, or what statements, if any, did he make?" The question was objected to by counsel for the state on the ground that whatever Donegan then said was hearsay, and not admissible in the absence of Mary Bradneck. It was claimed by the appellant to be admissible as part of the res gestæ, as words accompanying an act and explanatory of the act. The question was excluded, and the appellant excepted. A similar question was asked of another witness, and a similar ruling made, and exception taken. These rulings were correct. Stirling v. Buckingham, 46 Conn. 461. The declarations in question neither grew out of the main fact—the alleged adultery,—were not contemporaneous with it, nor did they serve to illustrate its character. It would be useful to the appellant only as a statement out of court by one person concerning the past conduct of another not present at the time such statement was made. But a far different situation was presented later during the trial. The said Donegan was offered as a witness for the state upon rebuttal, and testified regarding the events which happened on the various dates on which it was claimed that he had committed adultery with Mrs. Bradneck, and denied that on those dates he had been in her apartments, and in general testified that he had never committed adultery with her, or been unduly intimate with her. On cross-examination Donegan was asked if he had not, at a certain place and on a certain day, while in conversation with one Evans, stated to said Evans that he was criminally intimate with Mrs. Bradneck. The witness replied in the negative. In reply to the objection of the state that Mrs. Bradneck ought not to be convicted of adultery on any general statements that this witness or any other might have made outside the court, the court replied that the question was admissible as proper cross-examination of the witness, but that the court would hold the defendant to the answer to the extent that he would not be permitted to bring in witnesses on surrebuttal to prove that the witness had made these statements out of court. The appellant did afterwards offer several witnesses upon surrebuttal to prove such statements, but the court adhered to its ruling, and excluded all such evidence. This was error. Hedge v. Clapp, 22 Conn. 262, 58 Am. Dec. 424.

The other reasons of appeal are of slight importance, and do not seem to require special attention.

There is error, and a new trial is granted.

The other Judges concur.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA COURT OF APPEALS.

ANGLO-AMERICAN SAVINGS & LOAN ASSOCIATION et al., Appts., v.

William D. CAMPBELL et al.

(.....D. C.....)

1. A mortgage for money to be advanced for building purposes, when put on record before any contract for building, has priority over all liens for labor and materials subsequently supplied for the buildings.
2. A mortgagee may continue to make advances to a mortgagor, when the loan is made expressly for building purposes, although he has notice of claims for labor and materials furnished for the buildings, and of the filing of liens therefor, if his contract does not require him to see to the application of the money advanced.
3. A mere promise to advance the full amount of a loan for building purposes does not impress a trust upon a part thereof retained by the mortgagee in favor of the holders of mechanics' liens.

NOTE.—On the subject of constructive trusts in a fund, see also Curdy v. Berton (Cal.) 5 L. R. A. 189; and American Sugar Refining Co. v. Fancher (N. Y.) 27 L. R. A. 757. 43 L. R. A.

4. The breach of a mortgagee's promise to advance funds to the mortgagor does not create any liability in equity to creditors of the mortgagor who would have derived benefit from the performance of the promise, unless the mortgagee owed them some obligation or duty.
5. Money withheld by a mortgagee in breach of his promise to advance the full amount of a mortgage loan made expressly for the erection of buildings by the mortgagor, on land not yet paid for, is subject to a constructive trust in favor of persons who have furnished labor or materials for the buildings in reliance upon the mortgagee's representations that the money was to be advanced to the mortgagor.
6. Representations may constitute an estoppel, although not made to any particular person, if made to all persons likely to come into contractual relations with another, and relied upon by one of them in good faith.
7. The purchaser under foreclosure sale of property subject to a mechanic's lien is within the meaning of a statute providing that in proceedings to enforce such liens the "defendant" may file an undertaking with sureties and release the property from the lien.

8. In a suit for the compensation by persons who have performed labor on a building to which a mortgagee who has failed to comply with his contract to advance money to erect the building, and the obligors in a bond to release the building from mechanics' liens, are made parties, the decree should not go against the latter if it merely impresses the funds in the hands of the mortgagee with a trust in favor of the laborers, and does not purport to foreclose the liens.

(December 13, 1898.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to enforce a mechanic's lien. Modified and affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Ralston & Siddons and William F. Mattingly, for appellant Anglo-American Savings & Loan Association:

If complainants have any right to proceed against the appellant association, it could only be after they have exhausted all remedies against the person primarily and exclusively liable to them on account of their claims, the defendant Lea, and by showing that the money paid by the association on account of the loan was not sufficient to pay the bills incurred in constructing the buildings under the building contracts.

Comp. Stat. chap. 45, § 1, 2d proviso; Martin v. Campbell, 6 Mackey, 296; Phillips, Mechanics' Liens, § 225; Davis v. Alford, 94 U. S. 545, 24 L. ed. 283.

There is no express trust made out in favor of the complainants, and it appears equally certain that there is no such relation between the appellant association and appellees as could give rise to any implied or constructive trust in the latter's favor, thereby entitling them to treat the money in question as trust funds for their benefit.

Boisot, Mechanics' Liens, § 322; Hadley v. Hill, 73 Ind. 442; Patrick Land Co. v. Leavenworth, 42 Neb. 715; Rogers v. Central Loan & T. Co. 49 Neb. 676; Hill v. Aldrich, 48 Minn. 73; Moroney's Appeal, 24 Pa. 373; Richardson v. Belt, 13 App. D. C. —, 26 Wash. L. Rep. 505; Thompson v. White Water Valley R. Co. 132 U. S. 68, 33 L. ed. 256; Toledo, D. & B. R. Co. v. Hamilton, 134 U. S. 296, 33 L. ed. 905.

The mechanic's lien statute in force in this District fixes the priority and extent of the lien that it gives to materialmen and its other beneficiaries, and the court will not extend the statute to meet cases for which the statute itself does not provide, though they may be of equal merit with those provided for.

1 Jones, Liens, 2d ed. § 105; Copeland v. Kehoe, 67 Ala. 594; Rogers v. Currier, 13 Gray, 129.

The statute provides that every building erected or repaired by the owner or agent and the ground upon which such building is erected or repaired shall be subject to a lien. 43 L. R. A.

The remedy is against the property, and to the extent only of the interest of the building owner in said property (2 Jones, Liens, § 1244), and no personal judgment can be rendered, except where, after a sale of the property in satisfaction of the lien, the proceeds of such sale are insufficient for the purpose, then a judgment for the deficiency may be rendered against the party who incurred the debt, if he be made or become a party to the suit, but not otherwise.

D. C. Comp. Stat. chap. 45, § 5; Emack v. Rushenberger, 8 App. D. C. 254.

Where the mortgage has been executed and recorded before the work of construction has been commenced or any materials furnished, the mechanic or materialman furnishes the labor or material solely on the personal credit of the mortgagor and on his interest in the land, subject to the mortgage.

2 Jones, Liens, § 1480.

The appellant association was not charged with constructive notice of the liens recorded subsequent to the recordation of its own mortgage or deed of trust.

Jones, Mortg. §§ 372, 562; Truscott v. King, 6 Barb. 349; Moyer v. Hinman, 13 N. Y. 191; Ackerman v. Hunsicker, 85 N. Y. 49, 39 Am. Rep. 621; Birnie v. Main, 29 Ark. 591; Ward v. Hague, 25 N. J. Eq. 397; Leach v. Beattie, 33 Vt. 195; Kyle v. Thompson, 11 Ohio St. 616; King v. McVickar, 3 Sandf. Ch. 192; Doolittle v. Cook, 75 Ill. 354; Heaton v. Prather, 84 Ill. 330; Taylor v. Maris, 5 Rawle, 51.

The mere fact that the building was commenced after the mortgage was given, and that the mortgagee knew this, is not sufficient to charge him with knowledge of the lien.

Jones, Mortg. § 562; Ward v. Hague, 25 N. J. Eq. 397; Cotton v. Holden, 1 McArth. 463.

A mortgage for obligatory future advances is valid.

Jones, Mortg. § 365; Phillips, Mechanics' Liens, § 236; United States v. Hooe, 3 Cranch, 73, 2 L. ed. 370; Shirras v. Craig, 7 Cranch, 34, 3 L. ed. 260; Lawrence v. Tucker, 23 How. 14, 16 L. ed. 474; Leeds v. Cameron, 3 Sumn. 489; Commercial Bank v. Cunningham, 24 Pick. 270, 35 Am. Dec. 322; Goddard v. Sawyer, 9 Allen, 78; Truscott v. King, 6 N. Y. 147; James v. Morey, 2 Cow. 292, 14 Am. Dec. 475; Brinckerhoff v. Lansing, 4 Johns. Ch. 73, 8 Am. Dec. 538; Fassett v. Smith, 23 N. Y. 252; Brackett v. Sears, 15 Mich. 244; Seaman v. Fleming, 7 Rich. Eq. 283; Garber v. Henry, 6 Watts, 57; Robinson v. Consolidated Real Estate & F. Ins. Co. 55 Md. 105.

It is not necessary that the mortgage should express on its face that it is given to secure future advances.

Jones, Mortg. § 374; Collins v. Carlile, 13 Ill. 254; Darst v. Gale, 83 Ill. 136; Bank of Utica v. Finch, 3 Barb. Ch. 293, 49 Am. Dec. 175; Murray v. Barney, 34 Barb. 336; Craig v. Tappan, 2 Sandf. Ch. 78; Wescott v. Gunn, 4 Duer, 107; Walker v. Snediker, Hoffm. Ch. 145; Townsend v. Empire Stone-Dressing Co. 6 Duer, 208; Foster v. Rey- nolds, 38 Mo. 553; Griffin v. New Jersey Oil Co. 11 N. J. Eq. 49.

Advances covered by a mortgage have preference over the claims of junior encumbrancers who have become such with notice of an agreement under the mortgage for the advances.

Jones, Mortg. § 308, and cases cited in note 4; Kramer v. Farmers' & M. Bank, 15 Ohio, 253; Truscott v. King, 6 N. Y. 147; Taylor v. LaBar, 25 N. J. Eq. 222; Platt v. Griffith, 27 N. J. Eq. 207; Wisconsin Planing Mill Co. v. Schuda, 72 Wis. 277.

The mortgage or deed of trust in this case was for obligatory advances, and where this is the case it is well settled that actual notice of subsequent liens will not relieve the mortgagee of his obligation to the mortgagor to make such advances, and having made them his position of priority of lien is preserved to him.

Jones, Mortg. § 370; Boisot, Mechanics' Liens, § 152; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 799; Lyle v. Ducomb, 5 Binn. 585; Moreney's Appeal, 24 Pa. 372; Wilson v. Russell, 13 Md. 495, 71 Am. Dec. 645; Brooks v. Lester, 36 Md. 65; Crane v. Deming, 7 Conn. 387; Griffin v. Burnett, 4 Edw. Ch. 673; Brinkmeyer v. Browneller, 55 Ind. 487; Brinkmeyer v. Hebling, 57 Ind. 435; Nelson v. Iowa Eastern R. Co. (Iowa) 8 Am. Ry. Rep. 82; Martsolf v. Burnwell, 15 Kan. 612; Taylor v. LaBar, 25 N. J. Eq. 222; Macintosh v. Thurston, 25 N. J. Eq. 242; Platt v. Griffith, 27 N. J. Eq. 207; Jaeger v. Bossieux, 15 Gratt. 83, 76 Am. Dec. 189; Hill v. Aldrich, 48 Minn. 73; Wisconsin Planing Mill Co. v. Schuda, 72 Wis. 277; Richards v. Waldron, 9 Mackey, 585; Frye v. Bank of Illinois, 11 Ill. 387; Spader v. Lawler, 17 Ohio, 371, 99 Am. Dec. 461; Ladue v. Detroit & M. R. Co. 13 Mich. 380, 87 Am. Dec. 759.

Messrs. A. S. Worthington and J. C. Heald, for appellant Thomas H. Pickford:

The act provides that "the defendant" may file a written undertaking, etc. The principal in these undertakings, Harvey T. Winfield, never was a defendant in the cause, and the court had no authority to accept the bonds in which he was principal.

These being bonds, taken in a judicial proceeding, not authorized by law, are void, and the principles relating to voluntary bonds cannot be invoked to give them validity.

Charter Oak v. Hosmer, 1 Mackey, 297; Wallace v. Prott, 4 Mackey, 259; United States, Davis, v. Draper, 8 Mackey, 85.

Messrs. Bates Warren and J. J. Darlington, for appellees:

The appellant association cannot, in equity and good conscience, be permitted to gain the security of the complainants' material and labor by its representations that it would advance a specified sum with which to construct the buildings, and then, when the materials and labor have been furnished upon the faith of those representations, withdraw that promise and cut down the amount to be so advanced, with or without the consent of the builder, retaining the benefit of the complainant's labor and materials so advanced upon the faith of that promise.

Kinney v. Farnsworth, 17 Conn. 355; Hef- 43 L. R. A.

ner v. Vandolah, 57 Ill. 520, 11 Am. Rep. 39; Patrick Land Co. v. Leavenworth, 42 Neb. 715; Rogers v. Central Loan & T. Co. 49 Neb. 676; Taylor v. Ely, 25 Conn. 250; Crane v. Deming, 7 Conn. 388.

The association has $3,000 in its hands which is justly applicable to payment of the materialmen, and therefore falls clearly under the equitable principle declared and applied by this court in Emack v. Rushenberger, 8 App. D. C. 254, and Keller v. Ashford, 133 U. S. 610, 33 L. ed. 667.

The lien may be filed either against the party who was the owner at the time the contract was made, or against the party who is owner at the time of lien filed.

Lester v. Forsberg, 1 App. D. C. 36.

Shepard, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit to enforce a mechanics' lien was begun on February 19, 1897. The bill was filed by William D. Campbell for himself and on behalf of all others having like demands against David M. Lea, the debtor and owner of the legal title to the premises, and the Anglo-American Savings & Loan Association, a corporation of New York, and other encumbrancers, together with the trustees in the conveyances securing the several encumbrances.

Leave having been granted for the purpose, Allen S. Johnson, the Julius Lansburgh Furniture & Carpet Company and Landon & Merriam intervened by petition, respectively, setting up demands for labor and materials furnished David M. Lea in the construction of certain houses on the lots described in the bill; and joining in the prayers of said bill.

The aggregate amount of the indebtedness sought to be recovered in the bill and petitions of intervention is $3,253.40 with interest, and notices of liens having been duly registered by the parties, respectively, in the manner required by law.

There is no question in respect of the amount of each demand and the validity of the lien therefore as against David M. Lea.

There is little or no conflict in the evidence, and the material facts shown in the record may be stated substantially as follows:

On and before March 27, 1896, David M. Lea was the owner of the premises—then vacant lots—at the corner of R and Seventeenth streets, Northwest, in the City of Washington. These, when conveyed to him, were subject to a vendor's lien secured by a deed of trust for about $10,000. He became indebted to his grantors for part of the purchase money, amounting to $6,157, for which he executed notes as follows: one for $1,500, payable one month after date; another for $2,500 payable two months after date; and a third for $2,157 payable three months after date. All bore date as of March 28, 1896, and were secured by a trust deed of the same date, that was recorded March 30, 1896.

The dates of these notes and trust deed were so arranged as to give precedence to the trust deed securing the Anglo-American Savings & Loan Association hereinafter mentioned.

Lea purchased the lots for the purpose of improving them, and made a subdivision of them to accord to the plan for the erection of five substantial dwellings.

The Anglo-American Savings & Loan Association of New York is what is ordinarily called a building association, and is a corporation of that state. M. I. Weller, who resides in the District of Columbia, was the appraiser of property offered to the association as security for loans.

On March 2, 1896, David M. Lea addressed him a note saying: "I propose to spend $46,500 in the construction of five houses at the corner of Seventeenth and R. sts., N. W., for which purpose I make application to your association for a loan." This was followed on March 7, 1896, by a formal application upon the blank form provided by the association for the purpose.

In this form the application was required to answer in detail questions propounded in respect of the location, condition, and value of the lots, and to describe the contemplated buildings, as well as to furnish the plans and specifications therefor. He was also required to describe the property owned by him, his indebtedness, and so forth. He stated that he had purchased the property in December, 1895, paying therefor $24,000, and declared that the buildings to be erected would cost $46,500, and would be insured for that amount for the benefit of the association.

The association agreed to make the loan of $46,500, which was to be secured upon the property and upon the four hundred and sixty-five shares of the stock of the association for which Lea subscribed in accordance with its rules.

He therefore executed a bond to the association, dated March 27, 1896, in the sum of $93,000, which recited the subscription to, and delivery of, the stock, and the loan of the said $46,500; and was conditioned upon the payment by the said Lea, monthly, of certain stipulated sums, as interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, as premiums on the principal, and by way of monthly dues on said stock, and the said bond was secured by the conveyance of the premises to Stephen Van Wyck and F. L. Siddons, trustees, in the usual form, which was recorded March 28, 1896. The certificate for the 465 shares of stock was returned to the association by Lea with a formal assignment thereof executed March 27, 1896. As additional security, Lea, with two sureties, Samuel Ross and Thomas H. Pickford, executed and delivered a bond to the association of the sum of $46,500. This recited the agreement for the loan, and, among other things, that:

"Whereas, it was a condition precedent to such loan or advance that said David M. Lea, together with a sufficient surety, should execute and deliver to said association a bond obligating said David M. Lea to complete and finish the construction and erection of the aforesaid improvements on or before the 27th day of August, A. D. 1896, and to protect said association from any loss or damage by reason of any lien or claim made against said land and improvements under the law commonly known as the 'Mechanics' Lien Law.'"

The conditions were that they should indemnify the association against any loss and damage incurred by the failure of Lea to perform his agreements, and should pay any and all sums by the said association or its successors, paid, laid out, expended, or incurred, on account of, or by reason of, the failure, omission, neglect, or refusal to fully erect, complete, and finish the said building or buildings and the appurtenances on or before the 27th day of August, A. D. 1896, or on account of, or by reason of, any lien or claim, or notice of any lien or claim, hereafter filed, within the period allowed by law, under the law commonly called the "Mechanics' Lien Law," by any person or persons, firm or firms, body or bodies corporate, association or associations, against said land, or any part thereof, or against said building or buildings, or either of them, for or on account of any work or labor done or to be done, or for and on account of any materials, apparatus, implements, machinery, fixtures, or ornaments, furnished or to be furnished, on, in, about, for the benefit of, or in relation to, said building or buildings, or either of them, from the commencement of said buildings to the full completion thereof, and which may be held to be paramount to the lien of the aforesaid mortgage, or any of them, or any part thereof, or prior or paramount to any of the advances made or to be made as aforesaid, then this obligation to be null and void; otherwise to be and remain in full force and virtue at law and in equity.

There was some arrangement, the particulars of which do not appear, by which Lea's grantors agreed to postpone the lien for the remainder of the purchase money to that in favor of the association; and in accordance therewith the dates of their notes and trust deed were given as before stated.

There was also a collateral agreement between Lea and the association, the details of which do not appear, relating to the times and amounts in which the $46,500 should be advanced, and controlling their disbursement. The allegations of the bill in respect of the manner of the advancement, which the answers admit, are: One third when the first-floor joists should be in all of the said houses; one sixth when the roofs should be on all of them; one sixth when all should be "white-coated"; one sixth when the plumbing and carpenter work should be completed; and one sixth when all the houses should be completed.

The first building contract was not made by Lea until March 31, 1896, and the work was commenced thereafter.

The first payment made by the association was $15,217.38 on April 28, 1896, through a check on itself, signed by its treasurer, and payable to David M. Lea or order. This was indorsed by Lea to Ralston & Siddons, who were the attorneys of the association in Washington. Other payments were made in the same way.

Mr. Siddons testified that the association first deducted the monthly dues of Lea to date, and sent the draft for the remainder of the instalment to be at the time advanced. Ralston & Siddons deposited the drafts received for collection and disbursed the money on account of Lea.

Out of the first payment they discharged the first mortgage on the lots, amounting to about $10,300, principal and interest.

Certain fees due M. I. Weller, the appraiser, and some other bills were paid for taxes and insurance. Some of the bills on account of building were paid at the request of the sureties on Lea's bond, and the remainder was paid to one of the sureties, Samuel Ross, in pursuance of a written order of Lea dated April 11, 1896. It was upon the written order of Ross that the first mortgage was paid off. Mr. Siddons also testified that he notified the sureties of the existence of claims that came to his knowledge from time to time and paid the same at their request; among these was the bill of a watchman employed by Weller.

The contractor-in-chief for the erection of the buildings failed before completion, and the remainder of the work was done under the direction of the sureties on Lea's bond aforesaid. Some of the last money paid to the sureties, or on Lea's account, was after the filing of Campbell's lien and perhaps others.

The entire amount actually advanced by the association to Lea, or on his account, including his dues, deducted as aforesaid, was $43,500. The sum of $3,000 was deducted from the last draft by Lea's consent. He indorsed the last draft with that understanding and at the request of his sureties. He stated further that the association claimed that he had not come up to his plans, specifications, and agreements with them; but that he and his sureties and the architect claimed that the building had been done according to the plans and specifications.

No evidence was introduced on the part of the association tending to show a failure to complete the buildings according to the plans and specifications submitted with the application for the loan. M. I. Weller, the appraiser for the association, testified that he supervised the construction of all buildings in the District under loans made by it, including the houses in question; and that they were completed on December 9, 1896, and so reported to the association.

There is also a stipulation, noted by the examiner taking the depositions, to the effect "that the buildings were completed on or about December 9, 1896, formal proof of the date and facts of completion being waived."

It also appears from the evidence of Campbell that when he notified Weller of his contract to furnish Lea with certain lumber and stairwork, Weller informed him that it would have to be good or he would not pass it.

Campbell testifies that he knew of the trust deed to secure the association; that Lea told him of his arrangement to get the money for building; and that he would pay him for his material from that loan. He further testifies that he entered into his contract on that representation, and that he learned from Mr. Siddons at what stages of the building the instalments were to be paid.

43 L. R. A.

The contract between Lea and Campbell shows that the amount contracted for—$3,750—was to be paid as follows: $875 when the roofs are on all the houses; $1,000 when said houses are "white-coated"; and the remainder, $1,875, in four months from date.

The interveners' contracts were made with R. M. Boyle, the general contractor with Lea, and they understood from Boyle that the money to pay for the work was to come from the loan of the association.

Pending the suit the premises in controversy appear to have been sold under the second mortgage to secure the purchase-money notes, and the legal title thereof conveyed to one Harvey T. Winfield.

Said Winfield, as owner, filed the statutory undertaking with sureties, binding himself to the claimants of the liens in case they should be established, and thereupon a decree was entered discharging the premises from the liens.

Upon the hearing a final decree was entered requiring the association to pay into the registry of the court, within thirty days, the sum of $3,000, with interest from December 9, 1896, for distribution among the complainant and interveners. In default of such payment by the association, it was decreed that the said sum should be paid by the said Winfield and M. I. Weller and Thomas H. Pickford, sureties on the undertaking given to secure the payment of the liens on the premises, which had been discharged thereby.

There are several questions suggested by the facts in this case, as stated above, that, in view of the terms of the decree, do not necessarily require decision; but, at the same time, they enter more or less into the consideration of the principles upon which that decree must stand or fall, and will, therefore, be briefly considered.

1. The obligatory character of the contract of the Anglo-American Savings & Loan Association with David M. Lea to advance him the full sum of $46,500, to be paid in instalments at certain stages in the construction of his houses, and the record of the conveyance to its trustees to secure the same, before any contract by him let or entered into for the construction in any particular, gave that mortgage priority over all liens for labor and materials supplied to him under his subsequent contracts for construction. D. C. Comp. Stat. § 3, p. 367; Moroney's Appeal, 24 Pa. 373; Hoagland v. Lowe, 39 Neb. 397, 407.

2. Nor is there anything in the arrangement between Lea and his vendors and the association, contemplating a scheme for the purchase of the property and the joint construction of the buildings thereon, that would justify the subordination of the mortgages of the former to the liens of the furnishers of labor and materials, in accordance with the doctrine of such cases as Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Kountze, 30 Neb. 719, 725, 12 L. R. A. 33, and Henderson v. Connelly, 123 Ill. 98. And that doctrine need not, therefore, be either approved or denied.

3. Although the loan was obtained for the express purpose of erecting the houses according to plans and specifications submitted with the application therefor there is nothing in the nature of the contract or in its terms that made it obligatory upon the association to see that the money advanced thereunder was applied to payments for labor and material furnished in the construction. Hence, payments made to Lea, after, as well as before, notice of the claims due the appellees, and the filing of their liens were in discharge of the contract of the association and brought it under no liability to them. Moroney's Appeal, 24 Pa. 373; Rogers v. Central Loan & T. Co. 49 Neb. 676; Patrick Land Co. v. Leavenworth, 42 Neb. 715.

4. The right to recover the amount of money retained by the association from the last instalment cannot be enforced in favor of the mechanics' lien holders by virtue of any declared trust, or one to be implied from the terms and conditions of its contracts alone. From the proposition that the association was under no obligation by virtue of its contract to see to the application of the money advanced, the conclusion necessarily follows, that from the mere promise, no matter how binding, to advance Lea the full sum of $46,500, no trust was impressed upon the part thereof retained by the association, in favor of the holders of the mechanics' liens any more than in favor of Lea's creditors generally.

It likewise follows that the promise made to Lea of the payment of the entire sum cannot be enforced in equity, upon that ground alone, in favor of the appellees, under the doctrine enounced in Keller v. Ashford, 133 U. S. 610, 625, 33 L. ed. 667, 674, and explained again in Constable v. National S. S. Co. 154 U. S. 51, 74, 38 L. ed. 903, 914.

In this last case it was said, following the court of appeals of New York, that, "to give a third party, who may derive a benefit from the performance of a promise, an action, there must be, first, an intent by the promisor to secure some benefit to the third party, and, second, some privity between the two, the promisor and the party to be benefited, and some obligation or duty owing from the promisor to the latter, which would give him a legal or equitable claim to the benefit of the promise, or an equivalent to him personally."

5. It now remains to inquire whether by reason of the special circumstances disclosed in the evidence, there is any other ground upon which the decree, enforcing the claim of the appellees against the $3,000 retained from the loan, can be upheld.

If there is, it must be by virtue of a constructive trust raised up by those special circumstances and conditions, consisting of representations and conduct upon one side, and of action founded thereon, upon the other, in accordance with established principles of equitable estoppel.

The special circumstances relied on to create the trust are summed up as follows for consideration:

It appears, with sufficient certainty, that the houses had been completed in compliance with the plans and specifications submitted with the application for the loan, and that they cost the sum of $46,500.

43 L. R. A.

If the association had any defense upon either of those grounds, the facts were within its knowledge, and it was its duty to prove them. It had a supervisor, charged with the duty of seeing that the building was carried on according to the plans and specifications, and he had a watchman employed also. He was a witness, and testified that the buildings were completed December 9, 1896, and no question was asked him regarding the character of that completion, or the cost of the entire construction. The evidence shows that the appellees, particularly Campbell, looked to the fund to be advanced under the contract for the loan as a means of obtaining payment for their labor and materials.

The written contract with Campbell shows the times of his payments corresponding with those of the advances to be made to Lea. They knew the details of the loan contract, and say that they relied upon it as the basis of the credit extended to Lea. That they did so, and did not rely upon the individual capacity of Lea, or their right to a last lien upon the premises, is supported by every reasonable inference deducible from the surrounding circumstances. Lea was engaged in building upon land for which he had not paid, and that was under mortgages to secure at least two thirds of the purchase money. The existence of these mortgages emphasized the incapacity of Lea to build without a pre-arranged loan, that was attested by the contract with the association for the express purpose of building. It appears, moreover, that the loan could not be obtained without giving the mortgage for its security priority over the second purchase-money mortgage. It required very little testimony therefor, to produce the conclusion that, without confidence in the payment to Lea of the full amount of the loan contracted for, the appellees would not have extended him credit for their labor and materials. The reasonableness of such expectations on their part ought, naturally, to have suggested itself to the association. Engaged in the business of lending money to enable owners of city lots to improve, the association must have known, in the ordinary course of such transactions, that the consummated contract for the money to be advanced to Lea as the building progressed, under a mortgage taking priority over the statutory liens available to those contracting with him, would constitute a material inducement to them in supplying him with labor and materials. Charged with this knowledge it contracted to advance Lea the full sum of $46,500. It is true, as we have before said, that this contract with Lea did not bind the association to see that he actually applied the money, when advanced, to the payment of the contractors.

Payment into his hands was all that it was bound to make, and Lea's creditors had, therefore, no legal right to ask anything more. Had he received all of the money and then failed to pay them, they would have no remedy against the association, for its obligation would have been completely discharged.

Notwithstanding this, it appears, as if in express recognition of the reasonable expect-tations of Lea's contractors, that the practice in making payments was this: When the time for a payment arrived, a draft payable to Lea's order was sent by the association to its attorneys in Washington. Lea at once indorsed it to them and they collected the draft and disbursed the money. Claimants of money on account of the buildings often notified them of the same, and they, in turn, notifying Lea's sureties, were sometimes directed to pay them, and did so. All that remained was then delivered to the sureties on the bond given by Lea to indemnify the association; among other things, against mechanics' liens. It was, of course, to their interest, as such sureties, to see that the money went to the contractors of Lea, and it would seem, from the failure of others to intervene in the suit, that the contractors were paid as long as the association continued to make the advances.

But when the time for the payment of the last instalment arrived, the association, for its own advantage and without justification shown in the conditions of the contract, or by the evidence in the cause, withheld the sum of $3,000, which, imputing common sense to Lea's sureties, and to him common honesty and an intention to fulfil his obligations to the appellees, would have been paid over to them. If any presumption is to be indulged in respect of this it ought to be in favor of honesty and right doing. Be that as it may, however, the association would be entitled to no benefit from any lack of certainty on that point if it acted wrongfully as to the appellees in retaining the money and giving Lea no opportunity to discharge his obligations with it. Angle v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. R. Co. 151 U. S. 1, 12, 38 L. ed. 55, 62.

Conceding, as has been done, that there was no intention on the part of the association to create a trust in favor of Lea's contractors, by the terms of the contract, and granting that the contract made it no wrong, actionable on behalf of the appellees, to withhold the money, does not, in our opinion, answer the conditions presented by the special facts and circumstances stated above.

Equity will impress a trust contrary to the intention and will of a party where a fund has been obtained by him in violation of his duty to another.

In order to raise this duty as the foundation of a constructive trust there need be neither a promise for the benefit of another, nor express fiduciary relations between them. It may be raised by representations, conduct, and the like, that have been relied upon by another under such circumstances as create an equitable estoppel upon one to pursue thereafter an opposite course for his own advantage. To create such an estoppel it is not always essential that same special representation be made to a particular person at the time. In this case the representation was made, in the first place, to all persons likely to come into contractual relations with Lea in the construction of his buildings; but when acted upon by one of them in good faith it became as if made personally to him. Horn v. Cole, 51 N. H. 287, 293, 12 Am. Rep. 111. 43 L. R. A.

That the representations in respect of the amount and purposes of the loan were not made to defraud anyone at the time, is apparent; but this is not essential. Nor is it necessary that the arrangement with Lea, who was in no condition to be specially concerned at the time, for the detention of a portion of the money, should have been made for the purpose of defrauding the appellees. Horn v. Cole, 51 N. H. 287, 292, 12 Am. Rep. 111; 2 Pom. Eq. § 803. Notwithstanding that the association was under no legal obligation to see that Lea paid the money, when advanced, to the appellees, it was under a moral obligation to them, at least, to pay over to him all that it had contracted to advance to enable him to pay for the construction of the houses.

Having, by its conduct, induced or contributed to induce the appellees to contract with Lea, and with their materials to increase the security for its own debt, it would be inequitable and unjust to permit the association to withhold the money upon which they relied for reimbursement.

The foundation of equitable estoppel is justice and good conscience. "Its object is to prevent the unconscientious and inequitable assertion or enforcement of claims or rights which might have existed and been enforceable by other rules of the law, unless prevented by the estoppel; and its practical effect is, from motives of equity and fair dealing, to create and vest opposing rights in the party who obtains the benefit of the estoppel." 2 Pom. Eq. § 802.

Upon these equitable considerations, we conclude that the court did not err in decreeing the enforcement of a constructive trust in favor of the appellees upon the fund withheld from the loan to Lea.

The researches of counsel, likewise our own, have failed to discover a decision directly in point to guide us in reaching the conclusion at which we have arrived in this case: but we are none the less satisfied that its facts, though novel, bring it within the application of the well-established equitable principles that have been stated.

There is, however, a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in an analogous case, within the governing principle of which this case, in our opinion, is clearly included. See Angle v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 151 U. S. 1, 26, 38 L. ed. 55, 67.

In that case it appears that Angle had a contract with a railway corporation called the Portage Company, to construct a certain part of a railway that was to be completed to earn a grant of lands from the state of Wisconsin. The Portage Company arranged with a trust company for the advancement of the necessary money to complete the road, and Angle entered upon the performance of its contract with a large and sufficient force. He had no contract entitling him to a lien upon the Portage Company's land grant, but that formed the chief inducement of the credit that it had arranged for.

Whilst the work was being diligently prosecuted by Angle, the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis, & Omaha Railway Company (called the Omaha Company), by bribery of the Portage Company's officers secured the control of that company and forced the suspension of the work. Its conduct caused the trust company to withdraw its promised aid. The Omaha Company, then, by fraudulent representations, induced the legislature of the state to repeal the grant to the Portage Company and bestow the land upon it, instead. Angle recovered a judgment against the now insolvent Portage Company for the work done by him, and then filed his bill against the Omaha Company to subject the aforesaid land grant thereto. His bill was dismissed, and that decree was, upon his appeal, reversed.

In the course of the opinion delivered by Mr. Justice Brewer for the majority of the court, it was said: "While no express trust attached to the title to these lands, either in the Portage or in the Omaha Company,—while it may be conceded that when the legislature resumed the grant it took the title discharged of any express trust or liability in favor of the creditors of the Portage Company, and might have transferred an absolute title to any third party beyond the reach or pursuit of the Portage Company, or its creditors,—yet it is still true that the lands were given to the Portage Company, as they had been given by Congress to the state in the first instance, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of this road; that a part of the work necessary for such construction had been done, and there is, therefore, an equity in securing to the extent to which the work had been done, the application of these lands in payment thereof. And when the Omaha Company, by its wrongdoings, secured the full legal title to those lands, equity will hold that the party who has been deprived of payment for his work from the Portage Company, by reason of their having been taken away from it, shall be able to pursue those lands into the hands of the wrongdoer, and hold them for the payment of that claim which, but for the wrongdoings of the Omaha Company, would have been paid by the Portage Company, partially, at least, out of their proceeds. While no express trust is affirmed as to the lands, yet it is familiar doctrine that a party who acquires title to property wrongfully may be adjudged a trustee ex maleficio in respect of that property. . . . The property was in the Portage Company for the purpose of aiding in the construction of this road; work was done by the plaintiff in that direction. Equity recognizes a right that that property should be applied in the payment for that work. The wrongdoing of the defendant, the Omaha Company, has wrested the title of this property from the Portage Company and transferred it to itself. It has become, therefore, a trustee ex maleficio in respect to the property."

That case is not distinguishable from this because of the element of actual fraud found to have been practised by the party in whose possession the property was impressed with the trust. Actual fraud, intentional as regards the party seeking relief, is not essential to the raising up of a constructive trust any more than an equitable estoppel. If one makes an appropriation of a fund, which, if permitted to stand, would, by reason of the circumstances attending the transaction, work a wrong to another having an equity therein, and give him an unconscientious advantage over that other, the act will be regarded as what is called a constructive fraud in equity. 2 Pom. Eq. §§ 1044, 1053.

6. There remain to be considered certain questions raised on the appeal of the sureties in the undertaking given under the permission of the statute to release the premises from the lien.

The property, as appears by stipulation made part of the record, was twice sold at public sale after the bill had been filed. The sale under the second deed of trust was made to one Mitchell. That under the association's deed of trust is recited as made to the "party secured thereby, for the sum of $45,300."

It seems, however, that the conveyance of the legal title under this sale was made to Harvey T. Winfield, who filed the undertaking aforesaid with M. I. Weller and Thomas H. Pickford as sureties, and procured orders, on November 25, 1897, releasing the premises from the operation of the liens sought to be established in this suit.

(1) The first contention on behalf of the sureties is, that the undertaking is void because Winfield, the principal therein, was not a defendant in the proceeding and therefore not within the operation of the statute. The statute provides: "That in all proceedings under this act the defendant may file a written undertaking, with two or more sureties, to be approved by the court, to the effect that he and they will pay the judgment that may be recovered, and costs, which judgment shall be rendered against all persons so undertaking, and thereby release his property from the lien hereby created. . . . If such undertaking be approved before the filing of the aforesaid bill in equity to enforce said lien, the said sureties shall be made parties thereto, and if, after the filing of said bill, said sureties, upon the approval of said undertaking, shall ipso facto become parties thereto, and in either case the decree of the court shall run against them as well as the principal on such undertaking." D. C. Comp. Stat. § 11, p. 368.

That this undertaking may be entered into and substituted for the building before as well as after the filing of the bill to enforce the mechanics' lien, is sufficient to indicate that the word "defendant" was not used in its technical sense, but with a meaning broad enough to cover the owner of the premises in whom, at the time, the title may be vested. It was intended as a means whereby the property might be speedily unencumbered and rendered marketable, and this was, necessarily, for the benefit of the owner at the time. The ambiguity of the section of the statute as it now stands under the act of 1884, recited above, grows out of the broadening therein, by amendment, of the scope of § 708 and others of the Revised Statutes of the District of Columbia, the effect of which in permitting notices of the liens claimed thereunder to be made out against the owner of the property, at the time the right to assert the lien accrued instead of the owner at the time of the contract, was declared in Lester v. Forsberg, 1 App. D. C. 36, 40.

It follows that this ground of objection to the decree is not well taken. That Winfield may have become the owner of the premises by purchase under the first mortgage or in any other way, is immaterial; he is bound as owner by the recital of the undertaking and the release of the lien obtained thereon.

(2) The point of the second contention is well taken.

No decree for the payment of the money withheld by the association, and upon which a trust was impressed, should have been rendered against Winfield and his sureties, because there was no foreclosure of the mechanics' liens set up in the bill.

The decree impresses a trust, in favor of the appellees, upon the $3,000 retained by the association from the loan, and orders it paid over.

It is in the nature of the decree approved by this court in the case of Emack v. Ruskenberger, 8 App. D. C. 249, 254.

The undertaking was not entered into to cover any liability of that character on the part of the association or of the former owner of the property. Its obligation is confined to the purpose of the statute.

Upon the failure to establish the mechanics' liens upon the premises, under the allegations and prayer of the bill, the obligation of the undertaking ceased, and it should have been so decreed.

For the reasons given, the decree will be modified so as to release the principal and sureties upon the undertaking, and in all other respects affirmed, with costs to the appellees.

The cause will be remanded to the court from whence it comes, with directions to modify and amend the decree in accordance with this decision.

It is so ordered.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

B. S. CALHOUN, Plff. in Err.,
v.

E. P. LITTLE.

(.....Ga.....)

1. The town of Waresboro derives its authority to exercise corporate functions from an act of the general assembly passed on December 9, 1893 (Acts 1893, p. 335), granting a new charter to such town. Under this act, an ordinance which confers upon the police court of the town authority to punish by imprisonment without giving persons convicted of offenses against the town an opportunity to pay a fine is void for want of authority in the town council to pass it.

2. In all cases where judges of courts of general jurisdiction are exempt from civil liability in damages for their judicial acts, presiding officers of courts of limited jurisdiction are likewise exempt. (a) It follows, therefore, that where the presiding officer of a municipal court judicially determines that a given ordinance is valid, though in fact it is void for want of authority in the town council to pass it, he will not be liable in damages to a person convicted in his court of an offense against the town, and punished under such ordinance by imprisonment, without having been given an opportunity to pay a fine, provided the court in which such person is convicted has jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the offense.

3. Where a section of the Code has been codified from a decision of this court, it will be construed in the light of the source from which it came, unless the language of the section imperatively demands a different construction. (a) Section 752 of the Political Code has no application to acts of a member of a town council when he is presiding in a police court which is authorized by the charter of the town.

*Headnotes by COBB, J.

4. The principles above announced control the case. There was no material error in the charges complained of. The evidence amply warranted the verdict, and there was no error in refusing a new trial.

(December 28, 1898.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Ware County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for alleged false imprisonment. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Hitch & Myers, for plaintiff in error:

An ordinance passed by a municipality in excess of or without charter authority is void.

17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 236, 248, ¶ VIII.

Waresboro had no charter authority for all ordinances inflicting imprisonment without alternative of fine.

Imprisonment as a fine can be inflicted only when the power is given by charter. The power to imprison never arises by implication.

17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 257, 258 (4); Briewick v. Brunswick, 51 Ga. 639, 21 Am. Rep. 240.

Malice and bad faith are not a necessary element of false imprisonment, unless the imprisonment be under warrant. Any illegal

NOTE.—As to the liability of judicial officers to civil action for acts of a judicial nature, see Austin v. Vrooman (N. Y.) 14 L. R. A. 138, and note; Thompson v. Jackson (Iowa) 27 L. 43 L. R. A.

R. A. 92, and note; also Scott v. Fishplate (N. C.) 30 L. R. A. 696; and Glazer v. Hubbard (Ky.) 39 L. R. A. 210.

deprivation is actionable, and good faith can only mitigate the damages.

Code, § 3851; 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 663, notes 2, 3.

The fact that defendant was claiming to act in a judicial capacity makes no difference, for by our statute law a municipal officer is personally liable to anyone whom he damages by an act committed without authority of law.

Code 1895, § 752; Pruden v. Love, 67 Ga. 190.

Any judicial officer acting in excess of jurisdiction is personally liable for his injurious acts.

12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 32, VII., p. 33, 2, a, b, p. 35; Austin v. Vrooman, 128 N. Y. 229, 14 L. R. A. 140, 25 Am. Rep. 902.

Though a court had jurisdiction over the person and subject-matter, but did not have jurisdiction to enter the particular judgment complained of, the judgment is void.

United States, Wilson, v. Walker, 109 U. S. 258, 27 L. ed. 927; Nielsen, Petitioner, 131 U. S. 176, 33 L. ed. 118; 12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 246, 1470, a; Ponce v. Underwood, 55 Ga. 601.

To refuse bail and imprison one entitled to bail is itself false imprisonment.

Manning v. Mitchell, 73 Ga. 663.

Mr. Leon A. Wilson for defendant in error.

Cobb, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On June 26, 1896, Little, as mayor pro tem. of the town of Waresboro, tried Calhoun upon the charge of violating the following ordinance of the town: "It shall be unlawful for any person or persons to engage in fighting or riotous conduct within the corporate limits of the town of Waresboro, or resist or obstruct the marshal or any policeman while in the discharge of their official duties." The accused was convicted, and the following sentence was passed upon him: "After hearing the evidence in the above-stated case, it is ordered and adjudged by the court that the defendant be kept in the jail of the town of Waresboro for three days." It appears from the minutes of the town council that this sentence was afterwards commuted, by the officer who tried the accused, to imprisonment for one day. This sentence was passed pursuant to the following ordinance: "Any person who shall commit any or either of the offenses herein-before mentioned . . . shall on conviction for each offense be sentenced to pay a fine of not less than $1 nor exceeding $20, or imprisonment and work on the public streets not exceeding thirty days." The ordinances herein quoted were passed in 1888. The present suit is an effort on the part of Calhoun to recover damages from Little on account of the alleged illegal detention of the plaintiff in the town jail. The petition alleges that the sentence above quoted was without authority of law, and that the imprisonment of petitioner thereunder was malicious and in violation of law; that petitioner had violated no ordinance of the town; and that the conviction and sentence 43 L. R. A.

was a wilful and malicious persecution. The petition further alleges that efforts were made on the part of friends of petitioner to give bond or deposit any sum of money required to enable him to have the sentence reviewed and set aside, but that these efforts were unavailing. The defendant answered, denying that the sentence and imprisonment thereunder were malicious or without authority of law, and averred that his acts were in furtherance of law and order. The allegations in the petition as to efforts to give bond in order to have the sentence reviewed are also denied. At the trial the evidence showed that the defendant was regularly elected a member of the town council on June 22, 1896. From an extract of the minutes of the council it appears that the defendant was elected mayor pro tem. on July 6, 1896, but there was testimony showing that he was mayor pro tem. at the date of the trial of the plaintiff, for the alleged violation of the ordinance of the town. The defendant testified that no bond was ever offered him either by Calhoun or by anyone in his behalf. The jury returned a verdict for the defendant, and, plaintiff's motion for a new trial being overruled, he excepted.

1. Were the ordinances under which the plaintiff in error was convicted and sentenced to imprisonment by the defendant valid at the time of the trial? These ordinances were passed under authority of a charter granted to the town by the superior court, the provisions of which charter will be found in §§ 685-710 of the Political Code. An examination of these provisions will show that the ordinances were valid at the time of their passage. In 1891 an act was passed prohibiting the general assembly from granting charters to towns of less than 2,000 inhabitants, and conferring upon the superior courts exclusive power to grant such charters. Acts 1890-91, p. 190. This act was repealed on December 1, 1893. Acts 1893, p. 65. In the case of Fullington v. Williams, 98 Ga. 807, this act was held to be constitutional and valid. On December 9, 1893, a new charter was granted the town of Waresboro by the general assembly. Acts 1893, p. 335. This act has never been repealed either expressly or by implication, nor has its validity been in any way impaired. From it, therefore, the town of Waresboro must derive whatever authority it has to exercise corporate functions. This act repeals all former charters granted to the town, but provides that all ordinances then in force, and not inconsistent with its provisions, shall be valid and of force until amended or repealed by the mayor and aldermen of the town. An examination of the act will show that the ordinance which defined the offense for which Calhoun was tried is perfectly consistent with its provisions. Is the ordinance which prescribes the punishment to be inflicted upon persons convicted of offenses against the town also consistent with the provisions of the act? Section 11 of the act is as follows: "Be it further enacted, that the mayor or mayor pro tem. of said town shall hold a police court in said town at any time for the trial and punishment of all violators of their ordinances, by-laws, rules, and regulations of said town, the punishment inflicted not to exceed a fine of $100, or in default of the payment of said fine and costs, by labor on the streets of said town or public works of said town not to exceed sixty days, or confinement in the common jail of the said town not to exceed sixty days." It needs no argument to show that an ordinance of the town which allows imprisonment without first giving the person convicted an opportunity to pay a fine is rendered void by this section of the act.

2. The question therefore arises: Is the defendant liable to the plaintiff in damages for inflicting a punishment upon him under a void ordinance? The court over which the defendant presided had jurisdiction of the person of the plaintiff, and jurisdiction to try and punish him for the offense with which he was charged. The defendant has only exceeded his authority in fixing the punishment. It is universally conceded that judges of courts of superior and general jurisdiction are exempt from liability in damages for judicial acts, even when such acts are in excess of their jurisdiction. This doctrine has become firmly fixed in the jurisprudence of both England and the United States. Upon its strict application depends, to a very great extent, the usefulness of courts, and the fearless and impartial administration of justice. See Broom, Com. pp. 103-106; 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 668; Pratt v. Gardner, 2 Cush. 63, 48 Am. Dec. 652; 2 Hilliard, Torts, p. 161; Cooley, Torts, pp. 472 et seq.; Bishop, Noncont. Law, § 781; Randall v. Brigham, 7 Wall. 523, 19 L. ed. 285; Bradley v. Fisher, 13 Wall. 335, 20 L. ed. 646.

But it is said that the law affords no protection to presiding officers of inferior courts when they exceed their jurisdiction. Piper v. Pearson, 2 Gray, 120, 61 Am. Dec. 438; Vanderpool v. State, 34 Ark. 174; Tracy v. Williams, 4 Conn. 107, 10 Am. Dec. 102; 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 669. Judge Cooley, after stating that there is a distinction as to liability for judicial acts between judges of courts of general and those of limited jurisdiction, gives as the reasons for this distinction the following: "The inferior judicial officer is not excused for exceeding his jurisdiction because, a limited authority only having been conferred upon him, he best observes the spirit of the law by solving all questions of doubt against his jurisdiction. If he errs in this direction, no harm is done, because he can always be set right by the court having appellate authority over him, and he can have no occasion to take hazards so long as his decision is subject to review. The rule of law, therefore, which compels him to keep within his jurisdiction at his peril, cannot be unjust to him, because, by declining to exercise any questionable authority, he can always keep within safe bounds, and will violate no duty in doing so. Moreover, in doing so he keeps within the presumptions of law, for these are always against the rightfulness of any authority in an inferior court, which, under the law, appears doubtful." Cooley, Torts, 43 L. R. A.

p. 491. We are unable to appreciate the force of the reasons embodied in the above quotation, which contains all the arguments we have been able to find in favor of the distinction. On the other hand, we quite agree with the supreme court of Iowa when it says, in Thompson v. Jackson (Iowa) 27 L. R. A. 92, 95 (93 Iowa, 376) that, "after an exhaustive examination of the cases which make this distinction, we have to say that we do not think they are founded upon grounds which can be sustained by any logical or reasonable argument." In the case just referred to, it was held that "a justice of the peace, like judges of the superior courts, is protected from personal liability for judicial acts in excess of his jurisdiction, if he acted in good faith, believing he had jurisdiction." Mr. Bishop, in his work on Noncont. Law (§ 783), commenting upon this distinction, says: "But, in reason, if judges properly expected to be the most learned can plead official exemption for their blunderings in the law, a fortiori those from whom less is to be expected, and who receive less pay, should not be compelled to respond in damages to their mistakes honestly made after due carefulness." And this, we think, is a complete answer to all of the reasons given why such distinction exists. In Bell v. McKinney, 63 Miss. 187, it was held that where a magistrate had authority to require a person brought before him to give bond to appear at the circuit court, but under an erroneous judgment as to the extent of his authority, and in good faith, tried such person, and upon his conviction sentenced him to pay a fine or be imprisoned, the magistrate was not liable in damages to the person aggrieved. In the case of Henke v. McCord, 55 Iowa, 378, the facts were almost identical with those in the present case. It was there held that "a justice of the peace who enforces an ordinance which is void for want of power in the city to enact it cannot be held liable therefor in a civil action." The distinction between the liability of presiding officers of inferior and those of superior courts is mentioned, but it was not necessary to decide whether or not the distinction was rational. We have seen, however, that this same court, in a more recent case, declared in very vigorous terms that the distinction was utterly illogical. In Brooks v. Mangan, 86 Mich. 576, it was held that a justice of the peace, who, in the exercise of his honest judgment, holds an unconstitutional ordinance constitutional, is not liable for such an error of judgment. In the opinion, Grant, J., uses this language: "These inferior tribunals should be left to the exercise of their honest judgment, and, when they have so exercised it, they are exempt from civil liability for errors." In Clark v. Holdridge, 58 Barb. 61, it was held that a justice of the peace who inflicted a larger fine than the law required would be protected by the principle of judicial irresponsibility. See also McCall v. Cohen, 16 S. C. 445, 42 Am. Rep. 641; Scott v. Fishblate, 117 N. C. 265, 30 L. R. A. 696; Lange v. Benedict, 73 N. Y. 12, 29 Am. Rep. 80; Austin v. Vrooman, 128 N. Y. 229, 14 L. R. A. 138.

These decisions settle, we think, beyond doubt, that no good reason exists in law why presiding officers of inferior courts should not be measured by the same rules with respect to liability for their judicial acts as judges of courts of general jurisdiction. We must not be understood, however, as ruling that these officers have immunity from civil liability in all cases. As was said in Bradley v. Fisher, 13 Wall. 335, 352, 20 L. ed. 646, 651. "Where there is clearly no jurisdiction over the subject-matter, any authority exercised is a usurped authority, and for the exercise of such authority, when the want of jurisdiction is known to the judge, no excuse is permissible." But all judicial officers stand on the same footing, and must be governed by the same rules. It follows from what has been said that where the court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the offense, and the presiding officer erroneously decides that the court has jurisdiction of the person committing it, or commits an act in excess of his jurisdiction, he will not be liable in a civil action for damages. But, where there is a clear absence of jurisdiction over the subject-matter, the officer will be liable for exercising it, provided such want of jurisdiction is known to him. There is nothing in § 3852 of the Civil Code to conflict with the ruling made in the present case. That section is as follows: "If the imprisonment is by virtue of a warrant, neither the party bona fide suing out, nor the officer who in good faith executes the same, is guilty of false imprisonment, though the warrant be defective in form, or be void for want of jurisdiction. In such cases the good faith must be determined from the circumstances of each case. The same is true of the judicial officer issuing the warrant, the presumption being always against him as to good faith, when he has no jurisdiction." The section seems to provide that a judicial officer who in bad faith issues either a defective or a void warrant will be liable in an action for false imprisonment, at the instance of the person imprisoned thereunder. It is, however, limited by its very terms, not only to an act done out of court, but one which, though to some extent judicial, is largely ministerial in its nature; and in no event can it have any application to the acts of a judicial officer while presiding in court, and, as a court, in passing upon a question involving the jurisdiction of this court, and which he is bound to decide.

In the present case, the court over which the defendant in error presided had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the offense, and of the person of the plaintiff in error. The sentence was passed pursuant to a void ordinance, it is true; but on the defendant in error, in the first instance, was cast the duty of determining whether or not this ordinance was valid. Acting in a judicial capacity, he, in effect, decided that the ordinance was valid. True, the question was not directly made before him, but he necessarily held it to be valid, because this was the only source from which he could derive his authority.

To hold that he was liable in a civil action for damages for erroneously deciding that this ordinance was valid would be, in effect, to hold that the law makes it the duty of an officer to decide a question, and then punish him for not deciding it correctly. The law never does this. The presiding officer of a court clothed with authority to decide questions of law which may come before it will be protected in the exercise of this authority, however erroneous the decision might be. It is far better for a few innocent persons to suffer than for the ends of justice to be thus hampered.

3. It is contended, however, by counsel for the plaintiff in error, that § 752 of the Political Code makes a different rule applicable to the defendant in error. That section is as follows: "Members of the council and other officers of a municipal corporation are personally liable to one who sustains special damages as the result of any official acts of such officer, if done oppressively, maliciously, corruptly, or without authority of law." By reference to the margin of the page on which this section appears, it will be seen that it is codified from a decision of this court. Unless the language of the section imperatively requires a different construction, it will be presumed that the general assembly, in adopting it, intended merely to adopt the principle of law announced in the decision from which it is taken. See, in this connection, Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 300. The decision from which the section is codified is Pruden v. Love, 67 Ga. 190. In that case it appears that the town council, at a meeting appointed for that purpose, and of which the plaintiff (Love) had no notice, condemned as a nuisance the house of the plaintiff, and had it torn down, without giving him a hearing. The court held that for this act the members of the town council were personally liable in damages to the owner of the building. Chief Justice Jackson, in the opinion, says: "Whilst, therefore, we hold, with the judge below, that the mayor and council could not be held personally liable unless they acted either maliciously, corruptly, oppressively, or without authority of law, yet we agree with him, too, in the opinion, evinced by his denial of a new trial, that there is sufficient evidence to uphold a verdict that they did act without complying substantially with the law in a most essential element of a fair trial,—notice of time and place,—and thereby acted so as to oppress the defendant in error." The mayor and council in that case were not a court, and were not held liable because, when sitting as a court, they made an erroneous decision. The section of the Code, it will be noticed, uses the expression "official acts," and can have no application to a member of a town council when presiding as a judge over the police court of the town.

4. It is not necessary to express any opinion as to whether or not the defendant in error would have been liable for a refusal to accept a valid bond tendered by the plaintiff in error for the purpose of having the decision reviewed, as the evidence on this point was conflicting, and no ruling of the trial judge on this point was excepted to. Under the views above expressed, if any errors were committed by the presiding judge in charging the jury, such errors were immaterial. Judgment affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

OREGON SUPREME COURT.

Waldemar SETON, Respt.,
v.

Ralph W. HOYT, Treasurer of Multnomah County, Appt.

(.....Or.....)

1. A county is but an arm or agent of the state, which cannot be required to pay interest except when self-imposed.
2. County warrants indorsed "Not paid for want of funds," upon which, by Hill's Anno. Laws, § 2465, interest is payable at the legal rate, are thereby made contracts on which the rate of interest cannot be decreased by subsequent statute.

(January 16, 1899.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Multnomah County, Department 2, in favor of plaintiff in a mandamus proceeding to compel payment of interest on county indebtedness at the rate which existed before the passage of a statute reducing the general interest rate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. R. R. Giltner and Russell A. Sewall for appellant.

Mr. W. A. Cleland, for respondent:

The warrants are a legal and valid claim against Multnomah county. They become non-negotiable promissory notes or contracts of Multnomah county.

Frankl v. Bailey, 31 Or. 285.

Where the right to interest is based upon contract either expressed or implied, if allowed by the statute then in force, it cannot be impaired by subsequent legislation declaring their true intent and meaning. Such legislation can only apply to future transactions.

Koshkonong v. Burton, 104 U. S. 668, 26 L. ed. 886.

The Constitution makes no distinction between express and implied contracts.

Eduards v. Kearzey, 96 U. S. 600, 24 L. ed. 796; Effinger v. Kenney, 115 U. S. 566, 29 L. ed. 495; Fisk v. Jefferson Police Jury, 116 U. S. 131, 29 L. ed. 587.

A warrant is a contract to pay money, and the legal rate in effect at the time enters into the contract as a part thereof, and cannot be affected by a subsequent law reducing the rate.

Union Sav. Bank & T. Co. v. Gelbach, 8 Wash. 497, 24 L. R. A. 359; State, Thesis, v. Bowen, 11 Wash. 432; Dill Mun. Corp. §§ 485-487; Dan. Neg. Inst. §§ 427-430.

NOTE.—For a similar case, see Union Sav. Bank & T. Co. v. Gelbach (Wash.) 24 L. R. A. 359.
43 L. R. A.

Where an ordinance provides for interest on warrants upon which payment has been refused by reason of want of funds, the liability of the city is not affected by the repeal of the ordinance.

Scranton v. Hyde Park Gas Co. 102 Pa. 382.

The law existing when a contract is made is a part of it.

First Nat. Bank v. Arthur, 10 Colo. App. 283.

A statute should not receive such a construction as to make it impair existing rights, create new obligations, or impose new duties in respect of past transactions, unless such plainly appears to be the intention of the legislature.

Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 464; Green v. Anderson, 39 Miss. 359; Crigler v. Alexander, 33 Gratt. 674; Campbell v. Nonpareil Fire-Brick & Kaolin Co. 75 Va. 291; Moon v. Durden, 2 Exch. 22; Dash v. Van Kleeck, 7 Johns. 477, 5 Am. Dec. 291; Wood v. Oakley, 11 Paige, 400; Johnson v. Burrell, 2 Hill, 238; Butler v. Palmer, 1 Hill, 324; Snyder v. Snyder, 3 Barb. 621; Hackley v. Sprague, 10 Wend. 114; McMannis v. Butler, 49 Barb. 176; Re Protestant Episcopal Public School, 58 Barb. 161.

Upon a contract which stipulates for interest at the agreed rate, or, in the absence of an agreed rate, the rate prescribed by law at the date of the contract will be the rate recoverable until the payment of the principal sum.

Spencer v. Maxfield, 16 Wis. 179.

A judgment with interest at the legal rate affirmed by the supreme court is not affected by subsequent legislation reducing the legal rate of interest, unless the statute so declares.

Missouri P. R. Co. v. Patton (Tex. Civ. App.) 35 S. W. 477; Butler v. Rockwell, 17 Colo. 290, 17 L. R. A. 611.

Laws should be construed prospectively and not retrospectively, unless the intention clearly appears from the statute.

Bauer Grocery Co. v. Zelle, 172 Ill. 407; Guard, Robinson, v. Rowan, 3 Ill. 499; Marsh v. Chestnut, 14 Ill. 223; Deiminger v. McConnell, 41 Ill. 227; Russell & A. Drainage Dist. v. Benson, 125 Ill. 490.

Wolverton, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a proceeding by mandamus, the purpose of which is to determine whether the act of October 14, 1898, reducing the legal rate of interest, is operative upon interest-bearing county warrants issued prior to its passage, so as to limit the interest thereon to the present rate from and after said date. The act alluded to changes the prescribed rate of interest from 8 to 6 per centum on all moneys after the same become due; on judgments and decrees for the payment of money; on money received to the use of another, and retained beyond a reasonable time without the owner's consent, express or implied, or on money due upon the settlement of matured accounts from the day the balance is ascertained; on money due or to become due, where there is a contract to pay interest, and no rate specified. It contains an emergency clause reciting "that inasmuch as the counties of the state are paying interest on their county warrants at the rate of eight per cent per annum, thereby imposing a useless burden upon the taxpayers, this act shall become a law upon receiving the signature of the governor." Section 3587, Hill's Anno. Laws, Or., of which this act is amendatory, is an amendment of § 1 of "An Act to Regulate the Rate of Interest on Money and to Prevent and Punish Usury," approved October 16, 1862. Or. Sess. Laws 1862, p. 115. The original act contained a provision (§ 6) which has been continued in force until the present day (Hill's Anno. Laws (Or.) § 3592) to the effect that it shall not be construed so as to affect or change the rate of interest to be received by virtue of any contract entered into prior to its becoming a law. Section 2465, Hill's Anno. Laws (Or.) as amended (see Sess. Laws 1893, p. 59), relating to the duties of the county treasurer, provides, among other things, that "he shall pay all orders of the county clerk when presented, if there be money in the treasury for that purpose, and write on the face of such order the date of redemption and his signature. If there be no funds to pay such order when presented, he shall indorse thereon 'Not paid for want of funds,' and the date of such presentment, over his signature, which shall entitle such order thenceforth to draw legal interest, provided that such interest shall cease from the date of notice by publication," etc. By § 2467 county orders are redeemable by the county treasurer according to the time of presentment, but it is further provided that such orders as are payable out of the county revenue shall be received in payment of county taxes without regard to priority of presentment, but that the treasurer shall not pay any balance thereon over and above such tax, when there are outstanding orders unpaid for want of funds. These are the only provisions of the statute which have any bearing upon the case in hand.

Defendant's theory touching the controversy embodies three principal contentions: First, that the county is but an arm or agent of the state, and that the sovereign is not required to pay interest, except when self-imposed; second, that a county order is not a contract between the county and the holder; and, third, that interest, when demandable under the statute, except when due upon an express contract for its payment, is in the nature of a penalty or damages for the detention of money due and unpaid, and, therefore, that it constitutes a part of the remedy in the enforcement of the demand, which may be modified, or even repealed altogether, by subsequent legislation, without impairment of any contractual relations. In our view of the case, we do not conceive the second proposition to be important or essential to the determination of the cause. As to the first, we are in accord with the contention of counsel, but as to the last we cannot give it our approval. There is some conflict in the authorities upon the question whether a sovereign state is required to pay interest unless self-imposed, but the weight thereof seems to support the contention that it is not. The Supreme Court of the United States has adopted the rule that interest is not allowable on claims against the government, whether they originate in contract or tort, or arise in the ordinary business of administration, or under private acts for relief, passed by Congress on special application. But it recognizes the existence of two well-established exceptions,—one wherein the government has stipulated to pay interest, and the other where interest is given by act of Congress either expressly as such, or under the name of damages. United States, Angarico, v. Bayard, 127 U. S. 251, 32 L. ed. 159. In a subsequent case United States v. North Carolina, 136 U. S. 211, 34 L. ed. 336, Mr. Justice Gray says: "Interest, when not stipulated for by contract, or authorized by statute, is allowed by the courts as damages for the detention of money, or of property, or of compensation, to which the plaintiff is entitled; and, as has been settled on grounds of public convenience, is not to be awarded against a sovereign government, unless its consent to pay interest has been manifested by an act of its legislature, or by a lawful contract of its executive officers." The rule applies as well to a sovereign state as to the national government. Nor is the state within the purview of a general law regulating the rate of interest upon money due or to become due, and this goes upon the ground that a sovereign is not bound by the words of a statute unless it is expressly named. State, Parrott, v. Ohio Public Works, 36 Ohio St. 409; Carr v. State, Coetoquet, 127 Ind. 204, 11 L. R. A. 370; Atty. Gen. v. Cape Fear Nav. Co. 37 N. C. (2 Ired. Eq.) 444; Bledsoe v. State, 64 N. C. 392; Mt. Morris v. Williams, 38 Ill. App. 401; Madison County v. Bartlett, 2 Ill. 67.

That the county is but the agent or instrumentality of the state, constituted and employed essentially for the promotion of its general government, and therefore subject to like rules and restrictions governing its liabilities as the state, there can be no controversy. 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 23. We take it, therefore, that a county is not liable for the payment of interest under the general provisions of the statute regulating the rate upon the demands enumerated in said § 3587, as an individual would be where there is no contract to pay interest. As a general rule, it may be conceded that where the demand falls within the purview of the statute, and by reason thereof is subject to an interest charge at the legal rate, the rate upon the demand will vary as the law fixing it may be changed or varied by the legislature during the life of the demand. The reason of the rule is that the person from whom the money is retained or withheld is entitled to an indemnity for the loss which he sustains on account of being deprived of its use, and it is assumed that the legal rate of interest for the time of the withholding is a fair measure of damages by which to determine such loss, in the absence of any other method of arriving at the exact or precise loss actually incurred. State v. Guenther, 87 Wis. 673; Wilson v. Cobb, 31 N. J. Eq. 91; White v. Lyons, 42 Cal. 279; Jersey City v. O'Callaghan, 41 N. J. L. 349.

Where there is an agreement to pay interest upon an obligation at a stipulated rate to a day certain,—as, for instance, at maturity,—and there is no engagement touching the rate the obligation shall subsequently bear, the authorities are in hopeless conflict as regards the rate of interest recoverable upon the deferred payment. They divide accordingly as it has become the settled policy of the courts touching the nature of the indemnity recoverable for the detention of the money beyond the day upon which it has fallen due and payable. Upon the one hand, it is held that such indemnity is purely a matter of damages, not in the least referable to the contract, although for breach thereof; and that the proper and appropriate measure of such damages is the rate of interest which the law has prescribed. Upon the other, it is considered that, while the indemnity is recoverable as damages, yet that the rate of interest which should be allowed is rather to be implied from the terms of the contract touching it prior to the maturity of the obligation. The idea is clearly expressed by Lord Selborne in Cook v. Fowler, L. R. 7 H. L. 27. He says: "Although in cases of this class interest for the delay of payment post dem ought to be given, it is on the principle, not of implied contract, but of damages for a breach of contract. The rate of interest to which the parties have agreed during the term of their contract may well be adopted, in an ordinary case of this kind, by a court or jury, as a proper measure of damages for the subsequent delay; but that is because, ordinarily, a reasonable and usual rate of interest, which it may be presumed would have been the same whatever might be the duration of the loan, has been agreed to." Price v. Great Western R. Co. 16 Mees. & W. 244; Morgan v. Jones, 8 Exch. 620; Keene v. Keene, 3 C. B. N. S. 144,—support this principle. Mr. Justice Gray, while chief justice of the supreme court of Massachusetts, by a most exhaustive and learned opinion, in which he has collated and reviewed all the authorities pro and con, came to the conclusion expressed by the following language: "When a written agreement is made, as authorized by the statute, to pay a greater rate of interest yearly than 6 per cent the intention of the contract and the effect of the statute appear to us to be that the creditor shall receive the stipulated rate of interest so long as the debtor has the use of the principal; and that, in an action upon the contract, the creditor shall recover interest at that rate, not merely until the time when the principal is agreed to be paid to him, but until it is actually paid, or his claim for principal and interest judicially established." Later he denotes the principle upon which it rests. He says: "The interest after the breach of the contract, though not strictly recoverable as part of the debt, but rather as damages, is ordinarily to be measured, according to the intention manifested by the contract, by the standard thereby established." Union Inst. for Sav. v. Boston, 129 Mass. 82, 37 Am. Rep. 305. See also Brannon v. Hursell, 112 Mass. 63. Although the Supreme Court of the United States is committed to the other view, yet it is there held that the question is one of local law. Mr. Justice Field, in Cromwell v. Sac County, 96 U. S. 51, 24 L. ed. 681, after holding, in accord with the Iowa courts, that contracts drawing a specified rate of interest before maturity draw the same rate afterwards, and citing other authorities in support of the rule, says: "There are, however, conflicting decisions; but the preponderance of opinion is in favor of the doctrine that the stipulated rate of interest attends the contract until it is merged in the judgment." Without further citation of authorities, we may say that the later tendency of the courts is in favor of the rule as announced in Union Inst. for Sav. v. Boston, 129 Mass. 82, 37 Am. Rep. 305. Shaw v. Rigby, 84 Ind. 375, 43 Am. Rep. 96, and it is the one which appeals most strongly to our judgment. In consonance with this view it is said in State v. Guenther, 87 Wis. 673, that "on a contract which stipulates for interest, interest at the agreed rate, or, in the absence of an agreed rate, at the rate prescribed by the law at the date of the contract, will be the rate recoverable until the repayment of the principal sum. A change of the legal rate would not affect the rate of interest recoverable upon such a contract,"—citing Spencer v. Mansfield, 16 Wis. 179. So it was held in Pruyn v. Milwaukee, 18 Wis. 368, that city bonds conditioned for the payment of the principal at a specified day, with interest above the legal rate, continued to draw the stipulated rate after maturity. And Earl, J., in O'Brien v. Young, 95 N. Y. 428, 47 Am. Rep. 64, states the rule to be that "where one contracts to pay money on demand 'with interest,' or to pay money generally 'with interest' without specifying time of payment, the statutory rate then existing becomes the contract, and must govern until payment, or at least until demand and actual default, as the parties must have so intended." In support of this proposition, see also Paine v. Caswell, 68 Me. 80, 28 Am. Rep. 21.

With this discussion of the rules of law that obtain relating to the recovery of interest upon agreements for its payment, we are now prepared to consider the effect of the county treasurer's indorsement, "Not paid for want of funds," upon a county order or warrant under the law which requires payment of interest thereon after such indorsement at the legal rate. It is contended by counsel for the plaintiff, contrary to defendant's position, that the order or warrant is itself a contract; but with this we have little concern. It is sufficient if the obligation which the law imposes upon the county, where the parties have dealt with it upon the faith of such obligation, constitutes a contract for the payment of the legal rate of interest obtaining at the time of the indorsement. The order or warrant itself has at least the force of an audited demand against the county, and prima facie will support an action which may be instituted upon it to establish the same by judgment. Goldsmith v. Baker City, 31 Or. 249. People deal with the county upon the understanding that under the law their audited demands, evidenced by orders received from the clerk, will be paid on presentation to the treasurer, or, in case of lack of funds, indorsed so as to entitle them thenceforth to draw interest at the legal rate. They must also understand that the indorsed orders can only be redeemed by the county treasurer according to the priority of their presentment and indorsement. And thus it is that the time for payment is, from the nature of things, indefinite, depending entirely upon the state of the county treasury. This understanding the supreme court of Nebraska has characterized as an implied agreement on the part of the person dealing with the county that he shall wait until money is made available by the ordinary mode of collecting revenues, and in the usual course of the county's business. Breuer v. Otoe County, 1 Neb. 373. This case is cited as authoritative in Chapman v. Douglas County, 107 U. S. 348, 27 L. ed. 378. Now, if there is an implied agreement on the part of the holder of the warrant to abide the accumulation of funds in the ordinary course with which to meet the demand, the converse ought to be, and undoubtedly is, true, that there is an implied, if not an express, agreement, engendered by operation of law and the transaction of public business, which must be in conformity with its requirements, that the county will pay the legal rate of interest upon the indorsed county order. So that here is, in effect, an agreement or contract upon the part of the county to pay the legal rate of interest. But it is argued, admitting a contract to exist to this extent, that the agreement is to pay only the legal rate as it may be established from time to time by the legislature, and that the contract was made with reference to the variable rate, and not solely with reference to that which prevailed at the date of the indorsement. In this we cannot concur, for, if we apply the general rule of law that where a person contracts for the payment of a definite rate of interest to a day certain, or contracts for the payment of interest without naming the rate, that interest is recoverable in the one instance at the agreed rate after the day named, and in the other at the legal rate until judgment, we have a clear case of the right of the holder of the indorsed order or warrant to recover from the county interest at the rate prevailing at the date of the indorsement to the time of its payment by the treasurer; and such we believe to be the law governing the transaction. It is well understood that the county cannot be coerced into making payment, and the warrant holder, although he may sue upon his warrant, and obtain judgment against the county, which would entitle him to another order or warrant in lieu of the judgment, yet he must abide his time, and await the accumulation of funds whereby to discharge the obligation in accordance with his implied agreement. And it would be unjust and inequitable if the other party to the contract, being an agency of the state, could, through the legislature, abolish or reduce interest to a nominal rate, and thus leave the party remediless for the recovery of any compensation for loss sustained by reason of delayed payment of his demand. The constitutional provision against the impairment of contracts is not limited in its scope and purpose to express contracts and specific agreements, but extends as well to "that much larger class," says Mr. Justice Miller in Fisk v. Jefferson Police Jury, 116 U. S. 131, 29 L. ed. 587, "in which one party having delivered property, paid money, rendered service, or suffered loss at the request or for the use of another, the law completes the contract by implying an obligation on the part of the latter to make compensation. This obligation can no more be impaired by a law of the state than that arising on a promissory note." See also 2 Story, Const. § 1377. Even in the absence of a constitutional inhibition to a retrospective operation of legislative enactments, it is a general rule that a statute was intended to operate prospectively only, unless a purpose to give it a retrospective force is declared by clear and positive command, or is to be inferred by necessary and unavoidable implication from the language of the act, taken in its appropriate signification, and construed in connection with the subject-matter and the occasion of the enactment, admitting of no reasonable doubt, but precluding all question as to such intention. Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 271; Lesseps v. Wicks, 12 La. Ann. 739; People, Withersbee, v. Essex County Supers. 70 N. Y. 228; Cheo Heong v. United States, 112 U. S. 536, 28 L. ed. 770; Bay v. Gage, 36 Barb. 447; Bauer Grocer Co. v. Zelle, 172 Ill. 407. Nor does the emergency clause inserted in the amendatory act indicate an intention upon the part of the legislature to extend its regulations to outstanding county orders or warrants, but, when considered in a prospective sense, under the rule which governs unless the intention otherwise clearly appears, the construction of the act in question is obvious, and its application clear. In Koshkonong v. Burton, 104 U. S. 668, 26 L. ed. 886, the question was involved whether the holders of certain municipal bonds were entitled to interest upon coupons thereto attached, after their maturity, they not having been paid at the date stipulated therefor. It appears that the state courts of Wisconsin had construed the statute in force at the time of the issuance of such bonds as in harmony with the allowance of such interest. Thereafter the legislature, by direct enactment, attempted to place the opposite construction upon such statute, but it was held that the later enactment impaired the implied obligation of the municipality to pay interest upon interest as the law stood under the construction of the state courts, and that such interest was recoverable notwithstanding the latter act. Union Sav. Bank & Trust Co. v. Gelbach, 8 Wash. 497, 24 L. R. A. 359, is parallel with the case at bar, and it was there held, but upon reasoning different from that which seems to us to be more in harmony with the legal conditions which prevail and surround the transaction, that a change in the legal rate of interest by legislative enactment did not affect the rate theretofore payable upon warrants issued prior to the date when the new enactment became operative. This case was followed in Williams v. Shoudy, 12 Wash. 362, wherein it is said: "The right of the holder of a warrant legally issued to interest (after proper presentment and indorsement made) is as fixed and certain in law as the right to demand payment of the principal." See also State, Theis, v. Bowen, 11 Wash. 432; Scranton v. Hyde Park Gas Co. 102 Pa. 382; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Patton (Tex. Civ. App.) 35 S. W. 477; First Nat. Bank v. Arthur, 10 Colo. App. 283;

Butler v. Rockwell, 17 Colo. 290, 17 L. R. A. 611; Murdock v. Franklin Insurance Co. 33 W. Va. 407, 7 L. R. A. 572; Marks v. Purdue University, 37 Ind. 155. Upon these principles and authorities we are constrained to affirm the judgment of the court below. We have reached the conclusion after much deliberation, and believe it to be in harmony with justice and fair dealing. The other view would lead, under the system adopted for the transaction of county business and the manner of payment of the orders or warrants of the county, to a practical repudiation of a material portion of the county's obligations. In the present case the county has become obligated by positive enactment to pay the legal rate. Parties have dealt with it upon that understanding, and when claims duly audited, which have accrued in course of business transactions with the county, are presented, and indorsed, "Not paid for want of funds," the law reads into the transaction a contract to pay interest thenceforth upon the warrant, and the measure of recovery for delay in payment is the then existing rate of interest until paid, and subsequent legislation cannot affect or impair the obligation.

Affirmed.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

J. B. CLEVELAND, Receiver of Charleston & Western Carolina Railroad Company, Pf. in Err.,

v.

CITY COUNCIL OF AUGUSTA.

(102 Ga. 233.)

*A railroad corporation, which, under its charter, constructs its tracks across an existing public highway or street of a city, does so on the implied condition that it will yield to the reasonable burdens imposed by the growth and development of the country or the city, and, where the public welfare demands a change of the grade of the highway or street, the railroad company must, at its own expense, make such alteration in the grade of its crossing as will conform to the new grade.

(August 10, 1897.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Richmond County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in a proceeding to determine who should bear the expense of raising railroad tracks to conform to the grade of a city street after the grade had been changed by the common council. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. S. J. Simpson and Ganahl & Ganahl for plaintiff in error.

*Headnote by LITTLE, J.

NOTE.—As to the liability of a railroad company for the cost of changing the grade of a street on abolishing grade crossings, see note to Kelly v. Minneapolis (Minn.) 26 L. R. A. 92. 43 L. R. A.

Messrs. M. P. Carroll, J. S. Davidson, and W. T. Davidson, for defendant in error:

When the city limits were extended, all territory became subject to taxation, and to all the legal jurisdictional rights of the city.

1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 126, and note.

The raising of the grade on either side of the street was an incident connected with the work, which the railroad was bound to do at its own expense.

Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Chicago, 140 Ill. 309; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Chicago, 141 Ill. 586, 17 L. R. A. 530.

Little, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The railroad company, in the construction of its line of railroad, in the year 1880, laid its track across a public highway outside of, but near, the then corporate limits of the city of Augusta. In 1882 the corporate limits of Augusta were, by legislative authority, so extended as to include the area over which said track crossed the highway. In 1893 the city undertook a public improvement for the purpose of protecting the city from overflows of the Savannah river, and determined during the course of such improvement to raise the level of the highway or street at the point where it was crossed or intersected by the railroad track, inasmuch as said street was alleged to be low, and below a proper grade, causing in times of an even ordinary high river the street at that point to become flooded, and to be impassable, cutting off the western portion of the city over that street entirely, said street being the main thoroughfare to reach the manufacturing industries, and what is known as "Harrisburg" and "West End." In pursuance of its plans, the city constructed an iron bridge on the street across a certain canal at a point about 100 yards east of the point where the railroad intersected the street, and then proceeded to raise the grade of the street west of said bridge, and, after it had thus raised the grade on either side of the railroad crossing, notified the receiver of the railroad company, hereafter referred to as the "Railroad Company," to raise the grade of the railroad track. The railroad company claimed that it did not, at the time, have the necessary money to raise the grade of said road, and also denied liability to pay the expense thereof. An agreement was then entered into, whereby the railroad company was to have the work done, the city to pay the expenses, and the question of liability to be submitted to and determined by the courts. It appears that the raising of the grade of the railroad track where it intersected the highway involved an elevation of the track several feet for several hundred yards on either side of the approaches to said street.

The authority of the city to make the improvement of the street is conceded. The sole question presented is, Is the railroad company entitled to damages by way of compensation for so elevating its track and right of way as to conform to the new grade? At common law the rule is that, where a highway is made across another one already in use, the crossing must not only be made with as little injury as possible to the old way, but whatever structures may be necessary to the convenience and safety of the crossing must be erected and maintained by the person or corporation constructing and using the new way. Dyer County v. Chesapeake, O. & S. W. R. Co. 87 Tenn. 712; Northern C. R. Co. v. Baltimore, 46 Md. 445; Eyler v. Alleghany County Comrs. 49 Md. 269, 33 Am. Rep. 249; People, Bloomington, v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 67 Ill. 118; Dyggert v. Schenck, 23 Wend. 446; 1 Thomp. Neg. pp. 328, 343; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. State, 3 Head, 523.

In most of the American states, however, this common-law rule, so far as applicable to railroads and like companies, has been abrogated and superseded by special statutes. The adjudications upon the relative rights of railroads and the public are in harmony in applying the common-law rule—declared as well by statute—that when the railroad constructs its track across a highway or street it must make and maintain suitable crossings. They are largely in harmony, too, in holding that when highways are laid out across a railroad it is the duty of the owner of the latter to construct proper crossings, but they are in conflict on the question as to whether such owners are entitled to damages by way of compensation for making such crossings, as well as to the measure of such damages in the respective jurisdictions 43 L. R. A.

where the right of the railroad to damages is recognized. Prior to the decision of the case of Old Colony & F. R. R. Co. v. Plymouth County, 14 Gray, 155, it had never been judicially determined that a railroad corporation which has, in the ordinary course of business, under an act of incorporation, built a road, and had it in full operation, could recover damages for injuries occasioned by laying out public highways over it. In this case Chief Justice Shaw said that such a corporation is entitled to damages for land taken by the laying out of the public highway across its railroad, subject to its use for such road, and for the expense of erecting and maintaining railroad signs and cattle guards at the crossing, and of flooring the same, and of keeping it in repair, or for any increased liability from accident for the increased expense of ringing the bell, or for its liability to be ordered by the county commissioners to build a bridge for the highway over its track. In Illinois C. R. Co. v. Bloomington, 76 Ill. 447, it was held that "corporations, when brought into existence, except so far as may be otherwise provided in their charters, or the general laws which enter into their charters, become liable to perform all the duties to the public that may be required of natural persons to the extent that they are capable of their performance, and they are entitled to protection in their rights to the same extent as natural persons"; and that "where, long after the construction of a railroad, a street was extended so as to cross the same, and the city passed an ordinance requiring the railway company to make a safe and proper crossing by grading the approaches of the street at the crossing, there being nothing in the charter of the company imposing such duty, or any such duty imposed by any general law in force at the time the company was created; held, that the company was not liable to this new burden any further than might have been required of an individual, and that, as the whole burden was sought to be placed upon the company without regard to benefits, the ordinance was in violation of the Constitution, and could not create any liability upon the company, and that the legislature itself could not impose such burden without making compensation." In Miller v. New York & E. R. Co. 21 Barb. 513, it was held that the legislature could not, under the usual reservation to the legislature, in the charter of a railroad company, of the power to alter, modify, or repeal it, pass a subsequent act requiring the railroad company to cause a proposed new street or highway, laid out by the commissioners of highways, to be taken across their track, and to cause all necessary embankments, excavations, and other work to be done on their road for that purpose, at their own expense. This case, however, was subsequently overruled in Albany Northern R. Co. v. Brownell, 24 N. Y. 345, hereafter referred to. In State, St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co., v. Hennepin County Dist. Ct. 42 Minn. 247, 7 L. R. A. 121, it was held that upon the laying out of a public highway across the track and right of way of a railroad company the latter is not entitled to compensation for providing and maintaining cattle guards and sign boards at the new crossing, such requirements being a legitimate exercise of the police power of the state; but it was further held that it was entitled to compensation for planking the roadway where it crosses the railroad tracks, and for the maintenance of the planking. In Massachusetts C. R. Co. v. Boston, C. & F. R. Co. 121 Mass. 126, it is said: "A railroad corporation across whose road another railroad or highway is laid out has the like right as all individuals or bodies politic and corporate owning lands or easements to recover damages for the injury occasioned to its title or right in the land occupied by its road, taking into consideration any fences or structures upon the land or changes in its surface absolutely required by law, or in fact necessary to be made by the corporation injured, in order to accommodate its own land to the new condition." And in Massachusetts and Maine it was ruled that the company was entitled to recover for lands taken by the laying out of the highway subject to use for railroad purposes. State, Lancaster County, v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 29th Neb. 412.

The various cases allowing compensation, together with the varying measures of damages laid down, may be found in the following reports: State, St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co., v. Hennepin County Dist. Ct. 7 L. R. A. 121, and note (42 Minn. 247); Portland & R. R. Co. v. Deering, 23 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 51, and note (78 Me. 61, 57 Am. Rep. 784); Boston & M. R. Co. v. York County Comrs. 79 Me. 386; Detroit Parks & B. Comrs. v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. 93 Mich. 58; Kansas C. R. Co. v. Jackson County Comrs. 45 Kan. 716; Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Chautauqua County Comrs. 49 Kan. 763; Chicago & G. T. R. Co. v. Hough, 61 Mich. 507; Kansas City v. Kansas City Belt R. Co. 102 Mo. 633, 10 L. R. A. 851; Boston & A. R. Co. v. Cambridge, 159 Mass. 283.

On the other hand, in Albany Northern R. Co. v. Brownell, 24 N. Y. 345, the court overruling the decision in Miller v. New York & E. R. Co. 21 Barb. 513, held: "Nor is there anything unlawful in obliging the railroad company to make the necessary excavations or embankments for taking the highway across the railroad. The disturbance of the surface of the ground, which has rendered such work necessary, was effected by the railroad itself; and the reservation of legislative authority we may suppose to have been inserted for the purpose of obliging the companies to conform to such directions as subsequent legislatures should discover to be necessary for the public good, or which should be required by public policy. The difficulties which arose out of the rule that the grant of corporate power for individual emolument created a contract between the corporators and the state, led to the reservation referred to, and this case presents a strong illustration of the wisdom of the legislative policy." The statute under which this decision was made expressly authorized the laying out of highways across the tracks of railroads without compensation. In the supreme court of Illinois it was held: "Under a statute requiring railroad companies to maintain and construct crossings and approaches at public highways a railroad is bound to construct and maintain a crossing where a street is laid out across its track, without compensation for the expense of such construction and maintenance." Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Chicago, 50 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 150 [140 Ill. 309], in line with which are the following cases: Boston & M. R. Co. v. York County Comrs. 79 Me. 386; State, New York & L. B. R. Co., v. Drummond, 46 N. J. L. 644, 20 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 16; State, Lancaster County, v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 29 Neb. 412; Louiseville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Smith, 91 Ind. 119, 13 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 608; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 41 L. ed. 979; English v. New Haven & N. Co. 32 Conn. 240.

And it has been held in a number of cases that when a highway is laid out by proper authority across a railroad company's right of way, this is not such a taking of property as entitles the company to damages. See State, New York & L. B. R. Co., v. Drummond, 20 Am. & Eng. R. Cas., note on page 16, 46 N. J. L. 644. It is held, however, that the crossing must be so made as to occasion the least possible inconvenience to the railroad company. Northern C. R. Co. v. Baltimore, 46 Md. 425; Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Faribault, 23 Minn. 167; Hannibal v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 49 Mo. 480. The ruling that the laying out of a highway across the right of way of a railroad is not such a taking of property as entitles the company to damages proceeds upon the theory that land already taken for a public use may be taken by proper authority for other public uses, and, when so taken, it is presumed that the second use is not inconsistent with, or destructive of, the former use. Miller v. Craig, 11 N. J. Eq. 175; Talbot v. Hudson, 16 Gray, 417; Peoria & P. U. R. Co. v. Peoria & F. R. Co. 105 Ill. 110; Wood v. Macon & B. R. Co. 68 Ga. 539; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Chicago & E. R. Co. 112 Ill. 589; Mills, Em. Dom. § 143. Whatever may be the true rule as to the right of a railroad company to compensation for the right of way over which a public highway is laid, it is clear, as said by the court in Sixth Ave. R. Co. v. Kerr, 45 Barb. 138, that where a railroad is laid in a public street, under a permissive grant to the company to use a portion of the street for that purpose, the company does not acquire the same unqualified title and right of disposition to the land occupied which individuals have in their lands. The only exclusive power conferred by such grants is that of using railroad carriages in the same manner as the grant of a stage line confers, for the time being, the grant of a monopoly of using such stages for the transportation of passengers for hire on that route. Our statute requires that all railroad companies shall keep in good order, at their expense, the public roads or private ways established pursuant to law, where crossed by their several roads; and build suitable bridges and make proper excavations or embankments, according to the spirit of the road laws. Statutes of similar import have been held constitutional as being a legitimate exercise of the police power of the state. The supreme court of Illinois (Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Chicago, 140 Ill. 309) says: "The only question is whether the appellant is bound to construct and maintain the crossing without compensation, or whether it should have been awarded damages for the expense of such construction and maintenance by the judgment of the court below. Government owes to its citizens the duty of providing and preserving safe and convenient highways. From this duty results the right of public control over public highways. Railroads are public highways, and in their relations as such to the public are subject to legislative supervision, though the interests of their shareholders are private property. Every railroad company takes its right of way subject to the right of the public to extend the public highways and streets across such right of way. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Cincinnati, S. & C. R. Co. 30 Ohio St. 604. In the separate opinion in Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Joliet, L. & A. R. Co. 105 Ill. 388, 44 Am. Rep. 799, it was said: 'Unless, therefore, every railroad corporation takes its right of way subject to the right of the public to have other roads, both common highways and railways, constructed across its track, whenever the public exigency might be thought to demand it, the grant of the privilege to construct a railroad across or through the state would be an obstacle in the way of its future prosperity of no inconsiderable magnitude.' If railroads, so far as they are public highways, are, like other highways, subject to legislative supervision, then railroad companies, in their relations to highways and streets which intersect their rights of way, are subject to the control of the police power of the state,—that power of which this court has said that, 'it may be assumed that it is a power co-extensive with self-protection, and is not inaptly termed the law of overruling necessity.' Lake View v. Rose Hill Cemetery Co. 70 Ill. 191, 22 Am. Rep. 71. The requirement embodied in § 8, that railroad companies shall construct and maintain the highway and street crossings and the approaches thereto within their respective rights of way, is nothing more than a police regulation. It is proper that the portion of the street or highway which is within the limits of the railroad right of way should be constructed by the railroad company and maintained by it because of the dangers attending the operation of its road. It should control the making and repairing of the crossing for the protection of those passing along the street and of those riding on the cars. . . . The grading of the approaches and the planking between the rails and tracks make it possible for men and teams to cross easily and quickly and thus avoid collision with passing trains, thereby insuring their own safety and the safety of the persons and property upon the trains. The Supreme Court of the United States has said: 'Whatever differences of opinion may exist as to the extent and boundaries of the police power, . . . there seems to be no doubt that it does extend to the protection of the lives, health, and property of the citizens.' Northwestern Fertilizing Co. v. Hyde Park, 97 U. S. 659, 24 L. ed. 1036. . . . Uncompensated obedience to a regulation enacted for the public safety under the police power of the state is not taking or damaging without just compensation of private property, or of private property affected with a public interest. Boston & M. R. Co. v. York County Comrs. 79 Me. 386." In Boston & M. R. Co. v. York County Comrs. in passing upon the constitutionality of a statute of this character, the court said: "The purpose of this statute was evidently to promote the safety of travelers both upon the railroad and the county way. In view of the nature of the ordinary steam railroad, and the dangers necessarily attending its operation, and the onerous liability of the railroad company to its patrons and the public, it is clear that the company should have the whole control of all things necessary to be done within its location for any purpose, whether for the benefit of the company or that of the public. It must practically have the exclusive possession of the land within the line of its location,"—citing Hayden v. Skillings, 78 Me. 413. It is of vital importance to those traveling by rail or upon the public road that the crossing should be properly constructed, and kept in good order. Those crossings require attention the same as other portions of the track, and are liable to constantly get out of repair. The section men in the employ of the railroad are daily passing over the track, and would soon discover a defect in the crossing, and remedy it. Not so with the road supervisor. He seldom sees the crossing. The interest of the public as well as that of the railroad company requires that the latter should have an exclusive control of the crossings. If inexperienced road supervisors were required to construct and repair the crossings, great loss of life and property would likely result from the negligent construction of, or the failure to keep in good order, the crossings. The purpose of the legislature in placing this burden upon the railroad corporation was to secure the safety of the public travel and transportation.

The reasoning of the foregoing cases goes far in support of the proposition that the construction of crossings should be done under the direction and supervision of the railroads, but affords no support for the proposition that they should not be compensated. The great fundamental principle underlying the validity of such statutes and supporting adjudications rendered thereunder is that every citizen or corporation must so use his or its property as not unnecessarily to injure another. Therefore, if a railroad is empowered to cross a public highway, it is but just to impose upon the corporation the duty to construct and repair good and sufficient bridges or passages under or over the railroad, so that travel over the highway shall not be impeded, and the public safety not imperiled. Railroad corporations receive many compensations for all the burdens imposed upon them. The company pays nothing for its franchise; pays no tax upon it, as a rule; its road crosses public ways and runs in places along such ways, without compensation to the town or county which paid for its easement to the original owner; may cross canals and navigable streams under some conditions, and this imposes burdens on other public interests; highways may be raised or lowered for its accommodation, thus affecting the grade of highways, and often the convenience and safety of travelers. Statutes requiring railroad companies to make proper crossings are founded on the most obvious principles of equity and justice. By laying its ties and rails and making its grade, the railroad renders a crossing necessary where no such necessity would otherwise exist. It is but requiring the railroad to so operate its property as not to injure the public in its property or otherwise. By reason of their dangerous character, statutes regulating the speed at which they may run their trains, requiring the placing of bells on their locomotives, the ringing of such bells, the fencing of the track, the erection and maintenance of cattle guards, sign boards, and gateways at crossings, and the stationing of flagmen thereat, and the maintenance of such other like measures and precautions as are necessary to shield the public and its passengers from the dangers incident and peculiar to its operation, have been sustained as being a valid exercise of the police power of the state. Indeed, statutes requiring railroad companies to construct and maintain proper crossings and approaches, bridges, etc., at their own expense rest upon the police power; otherwise they could not, under all circumstances, be sustained. The supreme court of Illinois (Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Chicago, 29 N. E. 1109) has said: "The provision of the act of March 31, 1874 (§ 8), requiring railroad companies to maintain and construct crossings and approaches at public highways, is a police regulation; and where railway lands are taken by a municipal corporation for street purposes interruption to travel or the cost and expense of constructing and maintaining such crossings are not proper elements of damage. . . . Requiring a railway company without compensation to construct and maintain street crossings over its railroad by a statute enacted for the public safety under the police power of the state is not a taking or damaging of private property without just compensation." [140 Ill. 309.] Of similar import is the case of Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 41 L. ed. 979. And in construing a similar statute, and holding the same constitutional, and that it applied to a company whose charter provided that it was not to be altered, amended, or repealed, the court said that such statute did not impair the obligation of any contract 43 L. R. A.

with the company; that the power of the legislature to impose such burdens for the general safety is fundamental; that it was the police power, which must be sufficiently extensive to protect all persons and property. The court, in affirming the legislative power to impose uncompensated duties, and even burdens upon individuals and corporations for the general safety, speaking with reference to the police power, says: "Its proper exercise is the highest duty of government. The state may in some cases forego the right to taxation, but it can never relieve itself of the duty of providing for the safety of its citizens. This duty, and consequent power, override all statute or contract exemptions. The state cannot free any person or corporation from subjection to this power. All personal or property rights must be held subject to the police power of the state,"—citing Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 25, 24 L. ed. 989; Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 814, 25 L. ed. 1079; Butchers' Union S. H. & L. S. L. Co. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 111 U. S. 746, 28 L. ed. 585.

In one jurisdiction, at least, such a statute has been treated as not resting on the police power, and it has been declared that a statute which imposes upon the company the expense of cattle guards, fencing, and other outlays to complete the approaches, besides the cost of maintaining them, is in conflict with the constitutional provision forbidding the taking of private property without just compensation, and was therefore unconstitutional and void. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. v. Hough, 61 Mich. 507. The weight of authority and reason sustains such statutes as being a proper exercise of the police power, but the cases are at variance as to the extent of the uncompensated duties or burdens imposed. In Minnesota it is held that the company is not entitled to compensation for providing and maintaining cattle guards and sign boards, but that it is entitled to compensation for planking the roadway where it crosses the railroad tracks, and for the maintenance of the planking. State, St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. v. Hennepin County Dist. Ct. 42 Minn. 247, 7 L. R. A. 121. In another case it is held that the company is entitled to recover the fair value of its land taken, the expenses of making and maintaining in repair the planking, paving, cattle guards, fences, sign boards, posts, gates, and gate house; but that the cost of operating the gates is not to be included in the verdict. Boston & A. R. Co. v. Cambridge, 159 Mass. 283. In still another it is held that the public authorities are required to build that part of the highway within the right of way which they would have been required to make had the railroad not been constructed. State, Lancaster County, v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 29 Neb. 412.

A proper interpretation of the statute will be made when the dividing line between the legitimate exercise of the police power and the taking or damaging of private property for public use is ascertained. The legislative will will not be interpreted as intending to infringe upon this great constitutional provision, where it has not in express terms so declared, and where the statute may have a full and reasonable operation without the limits of such principle. The statute has for its purpose the protection and safety of the public and of the property of the railroads. It so polices their operations as to guard against the dangers incident to such institutions. Upon streets or highways crossed by it, or subsequently laid out, the railroad company must construct proper crossings (State, Lancaster County, v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 29 Neb. 412; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Smith, 91 Ind. 119, 13 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 608), and must alter, change, or otherwise reconstruct such crossings whenever the public welfare demands (English v. New Haven & N. Co. 32 Conn. 240). When the railroad company laid its track across its highway, it did so subject to the right of the public authorities to make such alterations or changes in the highway, either by lowering or raising the grade, widening or otherwise improving the same, as the public safety and welfare might require. In doing so, the presence of the railroad necessitates a certain character of crossings and safeguards which otherwise would not exist; and with however much plausibility it might be argued that the public authorities should be required to do just such work as they would have to do did the railroad not exist, it is certain that the railroad company should bear the burden of such work as is made necessary by reason of the peculiar and dangerous character of its operation. The principle of the common-law rule is embodied in this statute. It is the railroad which makes the construction of a railroad crossing necessary, whether the highway be laid out before or after the construction of the railroad. As was said by the court in Chesapeake, O. & S. W. R. Co. v. Dyer County, 87 Tenn. 712: "There was the best of reasons for requiring the company to bear all the expenses necessary in constructing and keeping up the crossing, . . . so that the county would be injured as little as possible, and have no greater burden imposed upon it in maintaining its public highway than it would have had if the railroad had never been constructed at all." The requirement that compensation be made for private property taken for public use imposes no restriction upon the inherent power of the state by reasonable regulations to protect the lives and secure the safety of the people, and herein is found the principle.—"So use your own property, or so conduct yourself, as not to unnecessarily injure or annoy others,"—which is the root from which the whole doctrine of the police power grows. To protect the health of the public, the sale of provisions has been regulated and abridged, and dealers have been required to submit them to inspection by a public officer. In the interest of public morals, the sale of liquors has been prohibited, licenses to manufacture them have been recalled, the manufacture thereof prohibited, after much expenditure by the licensees; lotteries chartered for a consideration suppressed; to secure the life and safety of the public, the builder is often compelled to use in his structure more expensive material, and adopt more expensive appliances, than he otherwise would; infected places are disinfected, and infected clothing destroyed, all at the expense of the unfortunate owner; one who has been stricken with a fatal and contagious malady must repair to the quarantine station; in the emergency of danger from fire, private buildings may be torn down, and private property otherwise destroyed, without compensation, to prevent a greater destruction from the conflagration. Boston & M. R. Co. v. York County Comrs. 79 Me. 386.

As stated, the provisions of the statute are not repugnant to the constitutional provisions above referred to, but they are intended to coexist with and operate upon that class of cases in which, though property may be injuriously affected, it can in no sense be said that it is taken or damaged. It must be confined, however, within appropriate limits; otherwise the rule, though within itself just and equitable, may become arbitrary and oppressive, and the guide by which the relative rights of the railroad and the public may be ascertained, lost. While the railroad company must build such crossings and approaches as the character of its property renders necessary for the convenience and safety of the public, and must bear just such burdens as the public authorities would not have had to bear had the railroad not been lying across the street, yet the railroad company is not bound to furnish the highway, nor, under such circumstances, is the power of the state to damage its property in the construction or improvement of such highway unlimited. Indeed, except in so far as being required to properly guard and protect its property without cost or inconvenience to the public, the railroad company, with respect to its property, stands on the same footing as any other property owner. Under the guise of the police power, property of corporations or individuals cannot be confiscated. The same authority and reasoning that require the railroad company to so guard and use its property as to prevent it becoming a charge on or menace to the safety of the public will place such property on an equal footing with all other property, when the railroad company has complied with all reasonable police regulations. Thus, in those jurisdictions where statutes requiring railroad companies to construct and maintain suitable crossings at their own expense are upheld, damages are nevertheless allowed, where streets are projected and opened across the right of way of a railroad, for land taken belonging to such railroad as a right of way; the measure of compensation being the amount of decrease in the value of the use for railroad purposes caused by the use for purposes of a street. Portland & R. R. Co. v. Deering, 78 Me. 61, 57 Am. Rep. 784; Boston & M. R. Co. v. York County Comrs. 79 Me. 386; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 41 L. ed. 979; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Chicago, 140 Ill. 309. No such element of damages, however, could arise in the present case, inasmuch as the grant to the company to use a portion of this highway upon which to lay its track does not vest in it the same unqualified title and right of disposition to the land occupied which individuals have in their lands. The only exclusive power conferred by such grant is that of using railroad carriages, upon and over such street, subservient to the right of the public to also use and travel the highway. Sixth Ave. R. Co. v. Kerr, 45 Barb. 138. Our statute requiring railroad companies to keep in good order, at their expense, the public roads or private ways established pursuant to law where crossed by their several roads, and build suitable bridges, and make proper excavations or embankments, according to the spirit of the road laws, and prescribing the extent of such crossings is a general law, which has been of force in this state since 1838 applicable alike to all railroads. The line of railroad of the plaintiff in error was constructed subject to this general law. The rights and powers acquired by the corporation in this state were taken subject to its provisions. As has been before said, the statute is a legitimate exercise of the police power of the state. The duty which it imposes is a continuing one. State, Morris, v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 86 Mo. 13, 29 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 604; Omaha, N. & B. H. R. Co. v. O'Donnell, 22 Neb. 475; Cooke v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 133 Mass. 185, 10 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 328; 3 Elliott, Railroads, § 1111; State, Minneapolis, v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 35 Minn. 131. It has been held, under like provisions, that it was the duty of a railroad company, though its track was originally constructed at grade with a public highway, to construct a bridge or viaduct whenever the same might become necessary. State, Minneapolis, v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 39 Minn. 219; and that although a crossing might have been adequate when constructed, yet if, by reason of increase of business of the railroad, or travel on the street, it became dangerous, or seriously obstructed travel on the street, the company was bound to provide some other mode of crossing, as by carrying the street under or over the track. State, Minneapolis, v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 35 Minn. 131, and authorities cited on page 136. Under such a statute, the corporation does not discharge its duty by making such a crossing as to provide for the wants of travelers at the time of the construction of the road. If, by the increase of population in the neighborhood, or by reason of the increasing use of the highway, the crossing, which was at the outset adequate, becomes inadequate, it is the duty of the railroad corporation to make such alteration as will meet the present needs of the public who have occasion to use the highway. Cooke v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 133 Mass. 185, 10 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 328. To same effect, see Pierce, Railroads, 457, and authorities cited; 3 Elliott, Railroads, § 1111; English v. New Haven & N. Co. 32 Conn. 240. The duty being a continuing one, it is not fulfilled by putting the street, at the time of building the railroad, in such condition as not to impair or interfere with its use at that time, nor by maintaining it in such condition as would have accomplished that end had the state of things originally existing continued. The duty has reference to future exigencies, and requires the railroad company from time to time to put the street in such a condition as changed circumstances may render necessary. State, Minneapolis, v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 35 Minn. 131. The duty of the railroad company to construct and maintain, at its own expense, suitable crossings at the intersection of their railroads with highways applies as well to highways laid out and opened after the construction of the railway as to those existing prior to its construction. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Chicago, 140 Ill. 309; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 266, 41 L. ed. 979; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Smith, 91 Ind. 119, 13 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 608; State, Lancaster County, v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 29 Neb. 412.

We think it follows, as a logical conclusion from the principles of law above announced, that, when the corporation constructed its track across the public highway in question, it did so subject to the right of the public authorities to require such changes in the crossing from time to time as the public safety and welfare might demand, or to readjust its track and crossings to a change of grade of the street, demanded for the safety and convenience of travelers upon the highway, and that in doing so the expense incurred is involved in its compliance with a police regulation of the statute; and we know of no law whereby a corporation or natural person can recover damages on account of being compelled to render obedience to a public regulation designed to secure the common welfare. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Joliet, L. & A. R. Co. 105 Ill. 388.

Let the judgment of the court below be affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

City of DU QUOIN

v.

W. A. KELLY, City Treasurer.

(176 Ill. 218.)

A private bank is not a "regularly organized bank," within the meaning of Rev. Stat. 1874, p. 228, § 9, authorizing the deposit of municipal funds in regularly organized banks.

(December 9, 1898.)

NOTE.—As to the constitutionality of statutes prohibiting private banking, see State v. Scougal 43 L. R. A.

gal (S. D.) 15 L. R. A. 477, and note; also Blaker v. Hood (Kan.) 24 L. R. A. 854.

MOTION for leave to file a petition for mandamus to compel defendant to deposit the city funds in the Bank of Du Quoin. Denied.

The city council passed an ordinance designating a private bank as the place where the city treasurer should deposit the funds of the city. He refused. The funds were already in a national bank, and the city applied for a writ of mandamus to compel him to comply with the ordinance.

Further facts appear in the opinion.
Mr. Silas H. Reid for relator.

Carter, Ch. J. (orally), delivered the opinion of the court:

The city of Du Quoin has entered a motion for leave to file a petition for mandamus to compel the city treasurer of that city to deposit the funds of the city in the Bank of Du Quoin, this being the bank of one Henry Horn. The city council, it seems, passed an ordinance designating that bank as the depository of its funds, and directed the city treasurer to comply with the ordinance, and make the deposit. He declined to do so. The statute provides that city councils may, by ordinance, designate the place or places for the deposit of city funds, provided, however, that such moneys shall be deposited in a "regularly organized bank." Rev. Stat. 1874, p. 228, § 9. The question here is whether the bank of Henry Horn, in which the council directed the treasurer to make the deposit, is, within the meaning of this act, a "regularly organized bank." The petition alleges, in general terms, that it is such bank, but states specifically that it is the bank of Henry Horn; that he is the owner and proprietor of the bank. It therefore appears from the petition which the city asks leave to file that this is a private bank, owned, conducted, and managed entirely by Henry Horn as proprietor. The legislature has passed an act providing for the incorporation and organization of banks, and making the stockholders liable, over and above their stock, to an amount equal to the stock held by them. The act of Congress providing for the organization of national banks contains similar provisions. The state law provides that, in cities and villages having a population not to exceed 5,000, the capital stock shall be $25,000, and it is graded up according to the population. It provides the manner of organizing banks, requires detailed reports from time to time of their resources and liabilities, and makes provision for their inspection and examination by competent persons, under the authority of the state auditor. We are of the opinion that the term "regularly organized bank," in the city and village act, means a bank organized either under the state law or the act of Congress, and that it was not intended by the legislature that a city officer who has given bond for the safe-keeping of the funds in his hands should be required to deposit them in a private bank. There would seem to be no more reason for that than there would be for turning the funds over to a private individual. It is true, provision is made that such banker or bankers shall give bond; but we do not think this alters the case. We think the legislature intended that some bank regularly organized under the law should be designated. The motion for leave to file the petition will therefore be denied.

Motion denied.

John CARPENTER et al., Appts.,
v.
CAPITAL ELECTRIC COMPANY.

(178 Ill. 29.)

1. Electric-light wires and the cross arm attached to a pole which stands outside of an alley cannot be lawfully extended over a private alley the easement of which is confined to abutting owners, although it is done to furnish electric light to one of the parties entitled to the easement, but without the consent of the others.
2. The fact that electric-light wires are about 14 feet above the surface of a private alley over which they are strung without right will not prevent the court from ordering their removal,—especially when they might interfere with the operations of the fire department, and obstruct the transfer of freight or other materials to and from the second-story windows of a building.
3. Equity may order the removal of an obstruction to an easement,—especially when the injury is continuing or permanent.

(February 17, 1899.)

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from a decree of the Circuit Court for Sangamon County in favor of defendant in a suit brought to compel defendant to take down certain electric wires. Reversed.

Statement by Magruder, J.:

This is a bill filed by the appellants against the appellee, praying that the appellee may be decreed to take down two electric wires and a cross arm stretched and extending over a private alley in the rear of the property of the appellants, in the city of Springfield, and to remove said wires and cross arm from said alley, so as to render the use thereof with the appurtenances by the appellants as the same was used previous to the erection of the said wires and cross arm. The bill was answered by the appellee, and, upon hearing had, a decree was entered by the circuit court dismissing the bill at the cost of the appellants. The present appeal is prosecuted from such decree of dismissal.

The facts, as shown by the pleadings and proofs, are substantially as follows: The appellants herein are the children of one William Carpenter, now deceased. William Carpenter in his lifetime purchased at a judicial sale, held under a decree of the circuit court of Sangamon county entered in a certain suit pending therein, certain lots fronting 36 feet on Washington street, in the city of Springfield, and running north 97 feet, and received for said property from the master in chancery of said court two deeds, —one dated October 25, 1852, and the other dated December 26, 1855. One of said deeds conveyed a strip 10 feet wide and 97 feet deep, and the other of said deeds conveyed a strip 26 feet wide and 97 feet deep. The deeds contained these words: "Ten feet in width by 26 feet (or 10 feet) on the north end to be used as an alley." In 1852 said master in chancery, in pursuance of the decree in the same cause, sold to one S. B. Fisher a parcel of land immediately west of the parcel so sold to William Carpenter, and having a frontage of 22 feet on Washington street, and a depth of 97 feet. In the same year the master in chancery, in pursuance of the same decree, sold to Fagan & Fitzpatrick a parcel of land immediately west of the land sold to Fisher, and having a frontage of 22 feet on Washington street, and a depth of 97 feet. All said deeds to Carpenter and Fisher and Fagan & Fitzpatrick were made at the same time, and by virtue of the same decree, in the same cause. Each of the deeds to Fisher and to Fagan & Fitzpatrick contained the words, "Ten feet in width by 22 feet on the north end, to be used as an alley." The grantees in said deeds took immediate possession of the premises so sold to them, and they, or their grantees and descendants, by themselves or tenants, have remained in possession thereof for more than twenty years last past, and are now in possession of the same. There are no other words in said deeds restricting the rights of the grantees therein, except the words above quoted. The said alley was closed at the west end thereof, and extended westward from its eastern opening only 80 feet, and did not run through the block in which it is located. Said alley has been open for the benefit of the parties for whom it was created, since said deeds were executed, and has been in continual use. The property in question is situated on the northeast corner of the public square in Springfield, and was when said deeds were made, and is now, business property, and business buildings were erected thereon soon after said deeds were executed. The appellee is a corporation organized under the laws of Illinois, and has a grant from the city of Springfield to erect poles and wires for the purpose of conducting electric currents for the purpose of furnishing electric lights on all the streets and alleys of said city. The tenant occupying the building on the lot 22 feet wide sold to Fisher, and lying next west of the lot on which the building of the appellants, 36 feet wide, stands, requested the appellee to introduce electric light into the building on said lot next west of the lot of appellants, through said alley, which was accordingly done. The wires were strung for this purpose along said alley, entering the alley at the east end thereof. The eastern ends of said wires are attached to a pole erected in Sixth street, which runs north and south on the east side of the building of appellants, and the wires extend west over said alley to the premises immediately west of the lot of appellants. The west ends of said wires, which are two in number, are attached to a cross arm fastened to a pole at the top thereof, which cross arm extends into the alley. Said wires are about 14 feet above the surface of the ground, and about 3 feet in the rear of the store building on the premises of the appellants. The pole to which the western ends of the wires are attached does not stand in said alley, but said cross arm and pole are wholly upon the premises to the west of the lot of the appellants. Said wires are now used by appellee to furnish electricity for lighting purposes to the tenants of the building adjoining the building of the appellants on the west. The wires were erected without the knowledge or consent of appellants, or of either of them, before the commencement of this suit, and appellants requested appellee to remove said wires and cross arm from said alley, but appellee refused, and still refuses, to take down the two electric wires and cross arm from the alley. The present tenants of the Fisher lot are in the rightful possession of, and entitled to the enjoyment of, all easements and appurtenances created in favor of the Fisher lot.

NOTE.—As to building over right of way, see note to Hollins v. Demorest (N. Y.) 15 L. R. A. 487.

Mr. C. A. Keyes for appellants.
Messrs. Brown, Wheeler, Brown, & Hay for appellee.

Magruder, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The alley in the rear of the building of appellants is a private alley, created for the use of the appellants and of the owners of the two lots lying west of the lot of the appellants. It is alleged in the bill that the easement consisting of the use of said alley, as created by the original deeds conveying the property, was so created for the benefit of the property of the appellants, and of the two pieces of property adjoining the property of the appellants on the west. It is admitted in the answer that the alley was reserved, as alleged in the bill, for the benefit of the properties aforesaid, and for a right of way to and from the rear of said premises. The words contained in the deeds, to wit, "Ten feet in width . . . on the north end, to be used as an alley," taken in connection with the allegations of the bill and the admissions of the answer as above set forth, clearly indicate that the alley is a private alley. The purpose of the reservation in the deeds was not for the use of the public, but for the use of the parties to the deeds; and hence the public acquired no right to the use of the alley, and no public easement was created therein. The fee of that portion of the alley, 10 feet wide and 36 feet long, in the rear of the building of the appellants, was in the appellants, as owners of the abutting property, subject, however, to the right of the property owners on the west to use the strip of land reserved for the purposes of an alley. In other words, the title is in the appellants, but the property owners on the west have the right of passage over the alley, and the title of appellants is burdened only with said right of passage or easement. The question then presented is whether the appellee had the right to extend electric wires over the portion of the alley in the rear of the building of appellants, for the purpose of furnishing light to the occupants of the building lying west of the property of appellants, without the consent of the appellants.

It is conceded that the appellee company had a grant from the city to erect its poles and string its wires for the purpose of furnishing electric light along the streets and alleys of the city. But the alley here was not a public alley, over which the city had control, but was a private right of way, the use of which was confined to the appellants and the owners of the two properties adjoining them on the west. Garrison v. Rudd, 19 Ill. 558. It served as a means of accommodation to a limited neighborhood for local convenience. 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 149. It is also to be observed that here the electric wires passing over and above the alley were so placed for the purpose of furnishing light to private persons, and not for the purpose of furnishing light to the public. It seems to be clear that the use of this alley for the purpose thus indicated imposed a new and additional burden upon the fee owned by the appellants, subject to the easement consisting in the use of the alley. The erection and use of telegraph poles in a public highway, where the abutting landowner is the owner of the fee in the highway, constitutes a new servitude, which entitles such owner to recover damages for the additional use thus created. Board of Trade Teleg. Co. v. Barnett, 107 Ill. 507, 47 Am. Rep. 453. The principle which is applied to the erection of telegraph poles on a public highway, where the fee of the highway, to the center thereof is in the abutting owner, and to the stringing of wires upon said poles over the highway, applies to a private alley, like that here under consideration, where the fee of the ground is in the owner of the property abutting upon the alley. It is immaterial to inquire whether the damages are great or small. It is sufficient that the property rights of the appellants are interfered with in a manner detrimental to their interests, as the owners of the fee. The taking possession of their land forcibly and against their will comes within the constitutional inhibition that private property shall not be taken or damaged without just compensation. Board of Trade Teleg. Co. v. Barnett, 107 Ill. 507, 47 Am. Rep. 453. Nor is it material that the telegraph wires are some 14 feet above the surface of the ground. The owner of land, unless restricted by covenant or custom, has the complete control of the soil, together with the space above and below, so far as he may choose to use it. Tanner v. Volentine, 75 Ill. 624. The uncontradicted evidence tends to show that the presence of the wires in the alley would operate as a hindrance to the fire department in case it should become necessary to extinguish a fire in the building of the appellants, and also that the presence of the wires in the alley would have a tendency to obstruct the conveyance of freight or other material to and from the second story or upper window in the rear part of the building of appellants.

It is laid down in some of the authorities that the erection of electric-light poles by city authorities for the purpose of lighting the public ways and places is not a taking of private property for public use, upon the ground that the use of the streets for this purpose is in the nature of an exercise of the police power by the city. But when an electric-light company erects poles or strings wires, not for the purpose of lighting public ways and places, but for the purpose of supplying light to private individuals and firms in the transaction of its own corporate and commercial business, such erection of poles and stringing of wires constitute an additional easement in the highway or private alley, for which the owner of the fee may demand compensation. Haverford Electric Light Co. v. Hart, 1 Pa. Dist. R. 571; Tiffany v. United States Illuminating Co. 19 Jones & S. 280; Crowell, Electricity, § 126. It has been held that the laying down of gas pipes or other pipes for the purpose of supplying the city and its inhabitants with light is a legitimate use of the streets, for which the abutting owner is not entitled to compensation. 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 601, note; Elliott, Roads & Streets, p. 305; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. West Chicago Street R. Co. 156 Ill. 255, 29 L. R. A. 485. And it has been said that the legal relations of electric-light wires through the streets of a city must be analogous to those of gas pipes, upon the ground that both the electric-light wires and the gas pipes are means of furnishing light from a central source of supply, and that, if the laying of gas pipes in a city street is not an additional servitude on the land of the abutting owner, the same should be true of laying tubes for electric-light wires, or placing posts in the ground for carrying the wires overhead. Keasbey, Electric Wires, p. 86. This doctrine, however, applies only to such public streets and alleys as are under the control of the municipality, and where the light to be transmitted by the wires or pipes is for the benefit of the public, as well as of property owners along the line of the street. The doctrine, however, can have no application to such a private alley as is that in the case at bar, where the fee of the ground in the alley is in the abutting owners, and where the easement consisting of the use of the alley, is confined to a limited number of property owners, whose lands abut upon the alley. When the strip of land in question was reserved in the original deeds for the purpose of an alley, it was intended for the ordinary purposes of passage and repassage and not for the erection of any such permanent obstruction as the stringing of wires in the manner shown in the present record.

It is said by the appellee that equity has no jurisdiction to entertain the present bill. We regard this contention as without force. Where a party has a right of way over, or an easement in, certain real estate, and the same is obstructed, equity has jurisdiction, as the injured party has no adequate remedy at law. McCann v. Day, 57 Ill. 101. Moreover, the injury complained of is one of a continuing or permanent nature, for which an action at law would not afford a complete and adequate remedy. Sterling's Appeal, 111 Pa. 35, 56 Am. Rep. 246.

The decree of the Circuit Court is reversed, and the cause is remanded to that court for further proceedings in accordance with the views herein expressed.

Lewis L. LEHMAN, Appt.,
v.

James H. CLARK, Receiver of Masonic Benevolent Association.

(174 Ill. 279.)

1. The contract of a member of a mutual benefit association is purely unilateral, and he may refuse to continue his payments at any time, in which event the association can only declare his interest forfeited, and cannot sue for unpaid assessments.
2. A suit by a mutual benefit association will not lie to recover assessments where the contract provides only for forfeiture of interest in case of nonpayment.
3. A receiver of a mutual benefit society cannot maintain a suit to recover assessments if the society itself could not do so.
4. No equitable principle exists to compel a member of a mutual benefit association to pay assessments on the ground that he has had the benefit of the insurance where the plan of the association is that all payments are in advance and entitle the member to protection until the next assessment is due.
5. The forfeiture is self executing, and requires no action on the part of the association under a by-law of a mutual benefit association providing that any member failing to pay assessments shall forfeit his membership and all benefits therefrom.
6. In case of the insolvency of a mutual benefit society the assets should be applied to unsettled death claims as far as they will go, leaving the balance unpaid and the living members to lose all they have paid in.

(June 23, 1898.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Court, Third District, affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court of Coles County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enforce an assessment upon defendant's benefit certificate. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Henley & Henley, J. W. Craig, and E. C. Craig, for appellant:

In the absence of statutory provisions courts of equity have no jurisdiction to decree the dissolution of a corporation by the forfeiture of franchises, either at the suit of an individual or at the suit of the state.

NOTE.—As to liability of a member of a benefit society to an action for assessments, see note to Ellerbe v. Barney (Mo.) 23 L. R. A. 435. 43 L. R. A.

Chicago Mut. L. Indemnity Asso. v. Hunt, 127 Ill. 274, 2 L. R. A. 549; Hunt v. Le Grand Roller Skating Rink Co. 143 Ill. 120.

Our statutes apply only to insurance corporations as such, and they have no application to corporations organized under § 31 of the corporation laws.

This association was not engaged in life insurance business within the meaning of the act of 1893 to incorporate companies to do the business of life or accident insurance upon the assessment plan. And the proceeding by the attorney general to dissolve this association is void.

Northwestern Life Asso. v. Stout, 32 Ill. App. 31; Commercial League Asso. v. People, 90 Ill. 166.

There is a distinction between beneficial societies and life insurance companies.

Com. v. Equitable Ben. Asso. 137 Pa. 412; Northwestern Masonic Aid Asso. v. Jones, 154 Pa. 99; Dickinson v. Ancient Order of U. W. 159 Pa. 258; Johnson v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 163 Pa. 127; Com. v. Keystone Ben. Asso. 171 Pa. 465.

